Ver. 20. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, &c.] When days are ſhort, and unfit for long journies, and roads are bad, and ſometimes unpaſſable, thro' large ſnows, or floods of water; and when to dwell in deſart places, and lodge in mountains, muſt be very uncomfortable: wherefore Chriſt directs to pray to God, who has the diſpoſal of all events, and of the timing of them, that he would ſo order things in the courſe of his providence, that their flight might not be in ſuch a ſeaſon of the year, when travelling would be very difficult and troubleſome. Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, from a Jewiſh writer [h], that it is remarked as a favour of God in the deſtruction of the firſt temple, that it happened in the ſummer, and not in winter; whoſe words are theſe: "God vouchſafed a "great favour to Iſrael, for they ought to have "gone out of the land on the tenth day of the "month Tebeth; as he ſaith, Ezek. xxiv. 2. ſon of "man, write thee the name of the day, even of this "ſame day: what then did the Lord, holy and "bleſſed? If they ſhall now go out in the winter, "ſaith he, they will all die; therefore he prolong-"ed the time to them, and carried them away in "ſummer." And ſince therefore they received ſuch a favour from him at the deſtruction of the firſt temple, there was encouragement to pray to him, that they might be indulged with the like favour when Jeruſalem ſhould be beſieged again: neither on the ſabbath-day: the word day is not in the Greek text; and ſome [i] have been of opinion, that the ſabbatical year, or the ſeventh year, is meant, when no fruits would be found in the fields, and a great ſcarcity of proviſions among people; who would not have a ſufficiency, and much leſs any to ſpare to ſtrangers fleeing from their native places; but rather the ſabbath-day, or day of the ſabbath, as the Perſic verſion reads it, is deſigned; and Beza ſays, four of his copies read it in the genitive caſe: and ſo four of Stephens's. And the reaſon why our Lord put them on praying, that their flight might not be on the ſabbath-day, was, becauſe he knew not only that the Jews, who believed not in him, would not ſuffer them to travel on a ſabbath-day more than two thouſand cubits; which, according to their traditions [k], was a ſabbath-day's journey; and which would not be ſufficient for their flight to put them out of danger; but alſo, that thoſe that did believe in him, particularly the Jeruſalem Jews, would be all of them fond of the law of Moſes, and ſcrupulous of violating any part of it, and eſpecially that of the ſabbath; ſee Acts xxi. 20. And tho' the Jews did allow, that the ſabbath might be violated where life was in danger, and that it was lawful to defend themſelves againſt an enemy on the ſabbath-day; yet this did not univerſally obtain; and it was made a queſtion of, after the time of Chriſt, whether it was lawful to flee from danger on the ſabbath-day; of which take the following account[l]. "Our Rabbins teach, that he that is purſued by Gentiles, or by thieves, may profane the ſabbath for the ſake of ſaving his life: and ſo we find of David, when Saul ſought to ſlay him, he fled from him, and eſcaped. Our Rabbins ſay, that it happened that evil writings (or edicts) came from the government to the great men of Tzippore; and they went, and ſaid to R. Eleazar ben Prata, evil edicts are come to us from the government, what doſt thou ſay? נברח, ſhall we flee? and he was afraid to ſay to them flee; but he ſaid to them, with a nod, why do you aſk me? go and aſk Jacob, and Moſes, and David; as it is written, of Jacob, Hoſ. xii. 12. and Jacob fled; and ſo of Moſes, Exod. ii. 15. and Moſes fled; and ſo of David, 1 Sam. xix. 18. and David fled, and eſcaped: and he (God) ſays, Iſ. xxvi. 20. come my people, enter into thy chambers." From whence, 'tis plain, 'twas a queſtion with the doctors in Tzippore, which was a town in Galilee, where there was an univerſity, whether it was lawful to flee on the ſabbath-day or no; and tho' the Rabbi they applied to was of opinion it was lawful, yet he was fearful of ſpeaking out his ſenſe plainly, and therefore delivered it by ſigns and hints. Now our Lord's meaning, in putting them on this petition, was, not to prevent the violation of the ſeventh day ſabbath, or on account of the ſacredneſs of it, which he knew would be aboliſhed, and was aboliſhed before this time; but he ſays this with reſpect to the opinion of the Jews, and judaizing Chriſtians, who, taking that day to be ſacred, and fleeing on it unlawful, would find a difficulty with themſelves, and others, to make their eſcape; otherwiſe it was as lawful to flee and travel on that day, as in the winter ſeaſon; tho' both, for different reaſons, incommodious.

Ver. 21. For then ſhall be great tribulation, &c.] This is urged as a reaſon for their ſpeedy flight; ſince the calamity that would come upon thoſe who ſhould remain in the city, what thro' the ſword, famine, peſtilence, murders, robberies, &c. would be ſuch as was not ſince the beginning of the world, to this time, no, nor ever ſhall be. The burning of Sodom and Gomorrha, the bondage of the children of Iſrael in Egypt, their captivity in Babylon, and all their diſtreſſes and afflictions in the times of the Maccabees, are nothing to be compared with the calamities which befel the Jews in the ſiege and deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Great deſolations have been made in the beſieging, and at the taking of many famous cities, as Troy, Babylon, Carthage, &c. but none of them are to be mentioned with the deplorable caſe of this city. Whoever reads Joſephus's account will be fully convinced of this; and readily join with him, who was an eye-witneſs of it, when he ſays[m], that "never did any city ſuffer ſuch things, nor was there ever any generation that more abounded in malice or wickedneſs." And indeed, all this came upon them for their impenitence and infidelity, and for their rejection and murdering of the ſon of God; for as never any before, or ſince, committed the ſin they did, or ever will, ſo there never did, or will, the ſame calamity befal a nation, as did them.

Ver. 22. And except thoſe days ſhould be ſhortened, &c.] That is, thoſe days of tribulation which commenced at the ſiege of Jeruſalem; and therefore cannot refer to the times before it, and the ſhortening of them by it, which were very dreadful and deplorable through the murders and robberies of the cut-throats and zealots; but to thoſe after the ſiege began, which were very diſtreſſing to thoſe that were within; and which, if they had not been ſhortened, or if the ſiege had been lengthened out further, there ſhould no fleſh be ſaved: not one Jew in the city of Jeruſalem would have been ſaved; they muſt every one have periſhed by famine, or peſtilence, or ſword, or by the inteſtine wars and murders among themſelves: nor indeed, if the ſiege had continued, would it have fared better with the inhabitants of the other parts of the country, among whom alſo many of the ſame calamities prevailed and ſpread themſelves; ſo that, in all likelihood, if theſe days had been continued a little longer, there had not been a Jew left in all the land. But for the elects ſake; thoſe who were choſen in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world, to believe in him, and to be ſaved by him with an everlaſting ſalvation; both thoſe that were in the city, or, at leaſt, who were to ſpring from ſome that were there, as their immediate offspring, or in future ages, and therefore they, and their poſterity, muſt not be cut off; and alſo thoſe choſen ones, and real believers, who were at Pella, and in the mountains, and other places, for the ſake of theſe, and that they might be delivered from theſe preſſing calamities, thoſe days ſhall be ſhortened: for otherwiſe, if God had not preſerved a ſeed, a remnant, according to the election of grace, that ſhould be ſaved, they had been as Sodom and as Gomorrha, not one would have eſcaped. The ſhortening of thoſe days is not to be underſtood literally, as if the natural days, in which this tribulation was, were to be ſhorter than uſual. The Jews indeed often ſpeak of the ſhortening of days in this ſenſe, as miraculouſly done by God: ſo they ſay[n], that "five miracles were wrought for our father Jacob, when he went from Beerſheba to go to Haran. The firſt miracle was, that אתקצרו ליה שעוי דיומא, the hours of the day were ſhortened for him, and the ſun ſet before its time, becauſe his word deſired to ſpeak with him." They alſo ſay[o], that "the day in which Ahaz died, was ſhortened ten hours, that they might not mourn for him; and which afterwards roſe up, and in the day that Hezekiah was healed, ten hours were added to it." But the meaning here is, that the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and the calamities attending it, ſhould be ſooner ended; not than God had determined, but than the ſin of the Jews deſerved, and the juſtice of God might have required in ſtrict ſeverity, and might be reaſonably expected, conſidering the aggravated circumſtances of their iniquities. A like manner of ſpeech is uſed by the Karaite Jews[p], who ſay, "if we walk in our law,

Ver. 23. Then if any man ſhall ſay unto you, &c.] Either at the time when the ſiege ſhall be begun, and the abomination of deſolation ſtanding in the holy place; or during the days of tribulation, whilſt the ſiege laſted; or after thoſe days were ſhortened, and the city deſtroyed, and the Roman army was gone with their captives; when ſome, that were ſcattered up and down in the country, would inſinuate to their countrymen, that the Meſſiah was in ſuch a place: ſaying, lo! here is Chriſt, or there, believe it not; for both during the time of the ſiege, there were ſuch that ſprung up, and pretended to be Meſſiahs, and deliverers of them from the Roman power, and had their ſeveral abettors; one ſaying he was in ſuch place, and another, that he was in ſuch a place; and ſo ſpirited up the people not to fly, nor to deliver up the city; and alſo, after the city was taken and deſtroyed, one and another ſet up for the Meſſiah. Very quickly after, one Jonathan, a very wicked man, led many into the deſert of Cyrene, promiſing to ſhew them ſigns and wonders, and was overthrown by Catullius, the Roman governor[q]; and after that, in the times of Adrian, the famous Barcochab ſet up for the Meſſiah, and was encouraged by R. Akiba, and a multitude of Jews[r].

Ver. 24. For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, &c.] Such as the above-mentioned: theſe falſe Chriſts had their falſe prophets, who endeavoured to perſuade the people to believe them to be the Meſſiah, as Barcochab had Akiba, who applied many prophecies to him. This man was called Barcochab, which ſignifies the ſon of a Star, in alluſion to Numb. xxiv. 17. he was crowned by the Jews, and proclaimed the Meſſiah by Akiba; upon which a Roman army was ſent againſt him, and a place called Bitter was beſieged, and taken, and he, and a prodigious number of Jews were deſtroyed. This deceiver was afterwards, by them, called Barcoziba, the ſon of a lye: and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders; make an appearance of doing them, tho' they really did them not: ſo that Jonathan, before mentioned, pretended to ſhew ſigns and ſights; and Barcochab made as if flame came out of his mouth; and many of the Jewiſh doctors in theſe times, and following, gave themſelves up to ſorcery, and the magic art; and are, many of them often ſaid[s] to be, מלומדים בנסים, expert in wonders, or miracles: if it were poſſible they ſhall deceive the very elect. By whom we are to underſtand, not the choiceſt believers, or the perſevering chriſtians: not but that ſuch who are truly converted, are choice believers in Chriſt, and perſevering chriſtians are undoubtedly the elect of God; but then the reaſon why they are elect, and why they are ſo called, is not becauſe they are converted, are choice believers, and perſevering chriſtians; but, on the contrary, the reaſon why they are converted, become true believers, and perſevere to the end, is, becauſe they are elected; converſion, faith, and perſeverance being not the cauſes or conditions, but the fruits and effects of election: beſides, to talk of the final ſeduction of a perſevering chriſtian, is a contradiction in terms. Such an interpretation of the phraſe muſt be abſurd and impertinent; for who knows not, that a perſevering chriſtian cannot be finally and totally deceived? But by the elect are meant, a ſelect number of particular perſons of Adam's poſterity, whom God, of his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, without reſpect to their faith, holineſs, and good works, has choſen, in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world, both to grace and glory: and to deceive theſe finally and totally, is impoſſible, as is here ſuggeſted; not impoſſible, conſidering their own weakneſs, and the craftineſs of deceivers, who, if left to themſelves, and the power of ſuch deception, and the working of ſatan with all deceivableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, might eaſily be ſeduced; but conſidering the purpoſes and promiſes of God concerning them, the proviſions of his grace for them, the ſecurity of them in the hands of Chriſt, and their preſervation by the mighty power of God, their final and total deception is not only difficult, but impoſſible. They may be, and are deceived before converſion; this is one part of their character whilſt unregenerate, fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, Tit. iii. 3. yea, they may be, and often times are, deceived after converſion; but then this is in part only, and not totally; in ſome leſſer, and not in the greater matters of faith; not ſo as to let go their hold of Chriſt their head, and quit the doctrine of ſalvation by him, or fall into damnable hereſies: they may be ſeduced from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, but not finally; for they ſhall be recovered out of the ſnare of the devil, and not be left to periſh in ſuch deceivings. This clauſe, as it expreſſes the power of deceivers, and the efficacy of ſatan, ſo the influence and certainty of electing grace, and the ſure and firm perſeverance of the ſaints, to the end, notwithſtanding the cunning and craft of men and devils; for if theſe, with all their ſigns and wonders, could not deceive them, it may be pronounced impoſſible that they ever ſhould be finally and totally deceived.

Ver. 25. Behold, I have told you before.] Meaning not before in this diſcourſe, tho' he had in ver. 5, 11. ſignified alſo, that falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets ſhould ariſe, but before theſe things came to paſs; ſo that they had ſufficient notice and warning of them, and would be inexcuſable if they were not upon their guard againſt them; and which, when they came to paſs, would furniſh out a conſiderable argument in proof of him, as the true Meſſiah, againſt all theſe falſe ones, ſhewing him to be omniſcient; and ſo would ſerve to eſtabliſh their faith in him, and be a means of ſecuring them from ſuch deceivers.

Ver. 26. Wherefore if they ſhall ſay unto you, &c.] Any of the falſe prophets, or the deluded followers of falſe Chriſts: behold, he is in the deſert, go not forth: that is, ſhould they affirm that the Meſſiah is in ſuch a wilderneſs, in the wilderneſs of Judæa, or in any other deſert place, don't go out of the places where you are to ſee, or hear, and know the truth of things; leſt you ſhould, in any reſpect, be ſtumbled, enſnared, and brought into danger. It was uſual for theſe impoſtors to lead their followers into deſerts, pretending to work wonders in ſuch ſolitary places: ſo, during the ſiege, Simon, the ſon of Giora, collected together many thouſands in the mountainous and deſert parts of Judæa[t]; and the above-mentioned Jonathan, after the deſtruction of the city, led great multitudes into the deſert: behold, he is in the ſecret chambers, believe it not; or ſhould others ſay behold, or for certain, the Meſſiah is in ſome one of the ſecret and fortified places of the temple; where, during ſome time of the ſiege, were John and Eleazar, the heads of the zealots[u]; don't believe them. Some reference may be had to the chamber of ſecrets, which was in the temple[w]; for "in the ſanctuary there were two chambers, one was "called לשכת חשאים, the chamber of ſecrets, and "the other the chamber of veſſels. Or elſe ſome reſpect may be had to the notions of the Jews, concerning the Meſſiah, which they imbibed about theſe times, and ever ſince retained, that he was born the day Jeruſalem was deſtroyed, but is hid, for their ſins, in ſome ſecret place, and will in time be revealed[x]. Some ſay, that he is hid in the ſea; others, in the walks of the garden of Eden; and others, that he ſits among the lepers at the gates of Rome[y]. The Syriac verſion here reads in the ſingular number, in the bed-chamber; in ſome private apartment, where he remains till a proper time of ſhewing himſelf offers, for fear of the Romans: but theſe are all idle notions, and none of them to be believed. The true Meſſiah is come, and has ſhewed himſelf to Iſrael; and even the giving out theſe things diſcovers a conſciouſneſs, and a conviction that the Meſſiah is come.

Ver. 27. For as the lightening cometh out of the eaſt, &c.] The eaſtern part of the horizon, and ſhineth even unto the weſt; to the weſtern part of it, with great clearneſs; in a moment; in the twinkling of an eye, filling the whole intermediate ſpace: ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the ſon of man be; which muſt be underſtood not of his laſt coming to judgment, tho' that will be ſudden, viſible, and univerſal; he will at once come to, and be ſeen by all, in the clouds of heaven, and not in deſerts and ſecret chambers: nor of his ſpiritual coming in the more ſudden, and clear, and powerful preaching of the Goſpel all over the Gentile world; for this was to be done before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: but of his coming in his wrath and vengeance to deſtroy that people, their nation, city, and temple: ſo that after this to look for the Meſſiah in a deſert, or ſecret chamber, muſt argue great ſtupidity and blindneſs; when his coming was as ſudden, viſible, powerful, and general, to the deſtruction of that nation, as the lightning that comes from the eaſt, and, in a moment, ſhines to the weſt.

Ver. 28. For wherefoever the carcaſs is, &c.] Not Chriſt, as he is held forth in the Goſpel, crucified and ſlain, thro' whoſe death is the ſavour of life, and by whom ſalvation is, and to whom ſenſible ſinners flock, encouraged by the miniſtry of the word; and much leſs Chriſt conſidered as riſen, exalted, and coming in great glory to judgment, to whom the word carcaſs will by no means agree, and but very illy under the former conſideration: but the people of the Jews are deſigned by it, in their fallen, deplorable, miſerable, and lifeleſs ſtate, who were like to the body of a man, or any other creature, ſtruck dead with lightning from heaven; being deſtroyed by the breath of the mouth, and brightneſs of the coming of the ſon of man, like lightning, juſt as antichriſt will be at the laſt day: there will the eagles be gathered together: not particular believers here, or all the ſaints at the day of judgment; tho' theſe may be, as they are, compared to eagles for many things; as their ſwiftneſs in flying to Chriſt, their ſagacity and the ſharpneſs of their ſpiritual ſight, ſoaring on high, and renewing their ſpiritual ſtrength and youth: but here the Roman armies are intended, whoſe enſigns were eagles; and the eagle ſtill is, to this day, the enſign of the Roman empire: formerly other creatures, with the eagle, were uſed for enſigns; but C. Marius, in his ſecond conſulſhip, baniſhed them, and appropriated the eagle only to the legions: nor was it a ſingle eagle that was carried before the army, but every legion had an eagle went before it, made of gold or ſilver, and carried upon the top of a ſpear[z]: and the ſenſe of this paſſage is this, that where-ever the Jews were, whether at Jeruſalem, where the body and carcaſs of them was, in a moſt forlorn and deſperate condition; or in any other parts of the country, the Roman eagles, or legions, would find them out, and make an utter deſtruction of them. The Perſic verſion, contrary to others, and to all copies, renders it vultures. Tho' this creature is of the ſame nature with the eagle, with reſpect to feeding on carcaſſes: hence the proverb, cujus vulturis hoc erit cadaver? what vulture ſhall have this carcaſs? It has a very ſharp ſight, and quick ſmell, and will, by both, diſcern carcaſſes at almoſt incredible diſtance: it will diligently watch a man that is near death; and will follow armies going to battle, as hiſtorians relate[a]: and it is the eagle which is of the vulture kind, as Ariſtotle[b] obſerves, that takes up dead bodies, and carries them to its neſt. And Pliny[c] ſays, it is that ſort of eagles only which does ſo; and ſome have affirmed, that eagles will by no means touch dead carcaſſes; but this is contrary not only to this paſſage of ſcripture, but to others; particularly to Job xxxix. 30. her young ones alſo ſuck up blood, and where the ſlain are, there is ſhe: an expreſſion much the ſame with this in the text, and to which it ſeems to refer; ſee alſo Prov. xxx. 17. Tho' Chryſoſtom[d] ſays, both the paſſage in Job, and this in Matthew, are to be underſtood of vultures; he doubtleſs means the eagles that are of the vulture kind, the Gypæetos, or vulture-eagle. There is one kind of eagles, naturaliſts ſay[e], will not feed on fleſh, which is called the bird of Jupiter; but, in common, the eagle is repreſented as a very rapacious creature, ſeizing, and feeding upon the fleſh of hares, fawns, geeſe, &c. and the rather this creature is deſigned here; ſince, of all birds, this is the only one that is not hurt with lightning[f], and ſo can immediately ſeize carcaſſes killed thereby; to which there ſeems to be an alluſion here, by comparing it with the preceding verſe: however, the Perſic verſion, tho' it is not literally a proper one, yet from the ſeveral things obſerved, it is not to be overlooked and ſlighted.

Ver. 29. Immediately after the tribulation of thoſe days, &c.] That is, immediately after the diſtreſs the Jews would be in thro' the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and the calamities attending it; juſt upon the deſtruction of that city, and the temple in it, with the whole nation of the Jews, ſhall the following things come to paſs; and therefore cannot be referred to the laſt judgment, or what ſhould befal the church, or world, a little before that time, or ſhould be accompliſhed in the whole intermediate time, between the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the laſt judgment: for all that is ſaid to account for ſuch a ſenſe, as that it was uſual with the prophets to ſpeak of judgments afar off as near; and that the apoſtles often ſpeak of the coming of Chriſt, the laſt judgment, and the end of the world, as juſt at hand; and that one day with the Lord is as a thouſand years, will not anſwer to the word immediately, or ſhew that that ſhould be underſtood of two thouſand years after: beſides, all the following things were to be fulfilled before that preſent generation, in which Chriſt lived, paſſed away, ver. 34. and therefore muſt be underſtood of things that ſhould directly, and immediately take place upon, or at the deſtruction of the city and temple. Shall the ſun be darkened: not in a literal, but in a figurative ſenſe; and is to be underſtood not of the religion of the Jewiſh church; nor of the knowledge of the law among them, and the decreaſe of it; nor of the Goſpel being obſcured by hereticks and falſe teachers; nor of the temple of Jeruſalem, ſenſes which are given into by one or another; but of the Shekinah, or the divine preſence in the temple. The glory of God, who is a ſun and a ſhield, filled the tabernacle, when it was reared up; and ſo it did the temple, when it was built and dedicated; in the moſt holy place, Jehovah took up his reſidence; here was the ſymbol of his preſence, the mercy-ſeat, and the two cherubim over it: and tho' God had for ſome time departed from this people, and a voice was heard in the temple before its deſtruction, ſaying, let us go hence; yet the token of the divine preſence remained till the utter deſtruction of it; and then this ſun was wholly darkened, and there was not ſo much as the outward ſymbol of it: and the moon ſhall not give her light; which alſo is to be explained in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe; and refers not to the Roman empire, which quickly began to diminiſh; nor to the city of Jeruſalem; nor to the civil polity of the nation; but to the ceremonial law, the moon, the church is ſaid to have under her feet, Rev. xii. 1. ſo called becauſe the obſervance of new moons was one part of it, and the Jewiſh feſtivals were regulated by the moon; and eſpecially, becauſe, like the moon, 'twas variable and changeable. Now, tho' this, in right, was aboliſhed at the death of Chriſt, and ceaſed to give any true light, when he, the ſubſtance, was come; yet was kept up by the Jews, as long as their temple was ſtanding; but when that was deſtroyed, the daily ſacrifice, in fact, ceaſed, and ſo it has ever ſince; the Jews eſteeming it unlawful to offer ſacrifice in a ſtrange land, or upon any other altar than that at Jeruſalem; and are, to this day, without a ſacrifice, and without an ephod: and the ſtars ſhall fall from heaven; which phraſe, as it elſewhere intends the doctors of the church, and preachers falling off from purity of doctrine and converſation; ſo here it deſigns the Jewiſh Rabbins and doctors, who departed from the word of God, and ſet up their traditions above it, fell into vain and ſenſeleſs interpretations of it, and into debates about things contained in their Talmud; the foundation of which began to be laid immediately upon their diſperſion into other countries: and the powers of the heavens ſhall be ſhaken; meaning all the ordinances of the legal diſpenſation; which ſhaking, and even removing of them, were foretold by Haggai, chap. ii. 6. and explained by the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, chap. xii. 26, 27. whereby room and way were made for Goſpel-ordinances to take place, and be eſtabliſhed; which ſhall not be ſhaken, ſo as to be removed, but remain till the ſecond coming of Chriſt. The Jews themſelves are ſenſible, and make heavy complaints of the great declenſions and alterations among them, ſince the deſtruction of the temple; for after having taken notice of the death of ſeveral of their doctors, who died a little before, or after that; and that upon their death ceaſed the honour of the law, the ſplendor of wiſdom, and the glory of the prieſthood, they add [g]; "from "the time that the temple was deſtroyed, the wiſe "men, and ſons of nobles, were put to ſhame; "and they covered their heads; liberal men were "reduced to poverty; and men of violence and "calumny prevailed; and there were none that ex-"pounded, or enquired, or aſked. R. Eliezer "the great, ſaid, from the time the ſanctuary were "deſtroyed, the wiſe men began to be like Scribes, "and the Scribes like to the Chazans, (or ſextons "that looked after the ſynagogues) and the Cha-"zans like to the common people, and the com-"mon people grew worſe and worſe, and there "were none that enquired, and aſked;" that is, of the wiſe men; there were no ſcholars, or very few that ſtudied in the law.

Ver. 30. And then ſhall appear the ſign of the ſon of man in heaven, &c.] Not the ſound of the great trumpet, mentioned in the following verſe; nor the clouds of heaven in this; nor the ſign of the croſs appearing in the air, as it is ſaid to do in the times of Conſtantine: not the former; for tho' to blow a trumpet is ſometimes to give a ſign, and is an alarm; and the feaſt, which the Jews call the day of blowing the trumpets, Numb. xxix. 1. is, by the Septuagint, rendered ημερα σημασιας, the day of ſignification; yet this ſign is not ſaid to be ſounded, but to appear, or to be ſeen, which does not agree with the ſounding of a trumpet: much leſs can this deſign the laſt trumpet at the day of judgment, ſince of that the text does not ſpeak; and, for the ſame reaſon, the clouds cannot be meant in which Chriſt will come to judgment; nor are clouds in themſelves any ſign of it: nor the latter, of which there is no hint in the word of God, nor any reaſon to expect it, nor any foundation for it; nor is any miraculous ſtar intended, ſuch as appeared at Chriſt firſt coming, but the ſon of man himſelf: juſt as circumciſion is called the ſign of circumciſion, Rom. iv. 11. and Chriſt is ſometimes called a ſign, Luke ii. 34. as is his reſurrection from the dead, Matt. xii. 39. and here the glory and majeſty in which he ſhall come: and it may be obſerved, that the other Evangeliſts make no mention of the ſign, only ſpeak of the ſon of man, Mark xiii. 26. Luke xxi. 27. and he ſhall appear, not in perſon, but in the power of his wrath and vengeance, on the Jewiſh nation; which will be a full ſign and proof of his being come: for the ſenſe is, that when the above calamities ſhall be upon the civil ſtate of that people, and there will be ſuch changes in their eccleſiaſtical ſtate; it will be as clear a point, that Chriſt is come in the fleſh, and that he is alſo come in his vengeance on that nation, for their rejection and crucifixion of him, as if they had ſeen him appear in perſon in the heavens. They had been always ſeeking a ſign, and were continually aſking one of him; and now they'll have a ſign with a witneſs; as they had accordingly. And then ſhall the tribes of the earth, or land, mourn; that is, the land of Judæa; for other lands, and countries, were not uſually divided into tribes, as that was; neither were they affected with the calamities and deſolations of it, and the vengeance of the ſon of man upon it; at leaſt not ſo as to mourn on that account, but rather were glad and rejoiced: and they ſhall ſee the ſon of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory. The Arabic verſion reads it, ye ſhall ſee, as is expreſſed by Chriſt, in ch. xxvi. 64. where the high-prieſt, chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, and the whole ſanhedrim of the Jews are ſpoken to: and as the ſame perſons, namely, the Jews are meant here as there; ſo the ſame coming of the ſon of man is intended; not his coming at the laſt day to judgment; though that will be in the clouds of heaven, and with great power and glory; but his coming to bring on, and give the finiſhing ſtroke to the deſtruction of that people, which was a dark and cloudy diſpenſation to them: and when they felt the power of his arm, might, if not blind and ſtupid to the laſt degree, ſee the glory of his perſon, that he was more than a mere man, and no other than the ſon of God, whom they had deſpiſed, rejected, and crucified; and who came to ſet up his kingdom and glory in a more viſible and peculiar manner, among the Gentiles.

[g] Miſn. Sotah, c. 9. § 15.

Ver. 31. And he ſhall ſend his angels, &c.] Not the angels, i. e. miniſtring ſpirits, ſo called, not from their nature, but their office, as being ſent forth by God and Chriſt; but men-angels, or meſſengers, the miniſters and preachers of the Goſpel, whom Chriſt would call, qualify, and ſend forth into all the world of the Gentiles, to preach his Goſpel, and plant churches there ſtill more, when that at Jeruſalem was broken up and diſſolved. Theſe are called angels, becauſe of their miſſion, and commiſſion from Chriſt, to preach the Goſpel; and becauſe of their knowledge and underſtanding in ſpiritual things; and becauſe of their zeal, diligence, and watchfulneſs. With a great ſound of a trumpet, meaning the Goſpel; ſee Iſa. xxvii. 13. ſo called, in alluſion either to the ſilver trumpets which Moſes was ordered to make of one piece, and uſe them for the calling of the aſſembly, the journeying of the camps, blowing an alarm for war, and on their ſolemn and feſtival days, Numb. x. 1.——10. The Goſpel being rich and precious, all of a piece, uſeful for gathering ſouls to Chriſt, and to his churches; to direct ſaints in their journey to Canaan's land; to encourage them to fight the Lord's battles; and is a joyful ſound, being a ſound of love, grace, and mercy, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life and ſalvation, by Chriſt: or elſe ſo called, in alluſion to the trumpet blown in the year of jubilee; which proclaimed reſt to the land, liberty to priſoners, a releaſe of debts, and reſtoration of inheritances; as the Goſpel publiſhes reſt in Chriſt, liberty to the captives of ſin, ſatan, and the law, a payment of debts by Chriſt, and a releaſe from them upon that, and a right and title to the heavenly inheritance. The Vulgate Latin reads it, with a trumpet, and a great voice; and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and ſo it was read in four of Beza's copies: and they ſhall gather his elect from the four winds, from one end of heaven to the other; that is, by the miniſtration of the Goſpel, the Spirit of God accompanying it with his power and grace, the miniſters of the word ſhould gather out of the world unto Chriſt, and to his churches, ſuch perſons as God had before the foundation of the world, choſen in Chriſt, unto ſalvation, through ſanctification of the Spirit, and belief of the truth; wherever they are under the whole heavens, from one end to another; or in any part of the earth, though at the greateſt diſtance; for in Mark, ch. xiii. 27. 'tis ſaid, from the uttermoſt part of the earth, to the uttermoſt part of the heaven. The Jews [h] ſay, that "in the after redemption (i. e. by the Meſſiah) all Iſrael ſhall be "gathered together by the ſound of a trumpet, "from the four parts of the world."

Ver. 32. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree, &c.] Take a ſimilitude, or compariſon from the fig-tree, which was a tree well known in Judæa; and the putting forth of its branches, leaves, and fruit, fell under the obſervation of every one: when its branch is yet tender; through the influence of the ſun, and the motion of the ſap, which was bound up, and congealed in the winter-ſeaſon: and putteth forth leaves; from the tender branches, which ſwell, and open, and put forth buds, leaves, and fruit: ye know the ſummer is nigh; ſpring being already come: the fig-tree putting forth her green figs, is a ſign that the winter is paſt, the ſpring is come, and ſummer is at hand; ſee Cant. ii. 11, 13.

Ver. 33. So likewiſe ye, when ye ſhall ſee all theſe things, &c.] That are mentioned above, relating to the ſigns of the deſtruction of the temple and city, and the deſtruction itſelf, with all thoſe ſeveral things that ſhould directly take place upon it; this is an accommodation of the above parable, ſimilitude, or compariſon: know that it is near, even at the doors; meaning, either that he is near, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it, the ſon of man is near, even at the doors; or as the Vulgate Latin renders it, in the gates, or doors, and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and ſignifies, that he was already come; for to be in the doors, or within the gates, is more than to be at the doors, or at the gates: and thus the fig-tree putting forth its leaves, is a ſign that ſummer is not only nigh, but is already come, even that part of it we call ſpring; for the ſcripture divides the whole year only into two parts, ſummer and winter; ſo theſe calamities and deſolations on the Jews, were a ſign that the ſon of man was come, was in the gates, diſplaying his power and his glory: or the redemption and deliverance of the people of God was at hand, from the perſecutions of the Jews; for till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the perſecutions of the chriſtians were chiefly from the Jews, or occaſioned by them; but now, they being deſtroyed, the ſummer of deliverance was at hand: or elſe the kingdom of God, or a more enlarged ſtate of the Goſpel diſpenſation was near; the winter of the legal diſpenſation was over, the ſpring of the Goſpel diſpenſation was come, through the preaching of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his apoſtles; and now the ſummer of it was at hand, through the general ſpread of it, all over the Gentile world. So the ſecond coming of Chriſt, will be a ſummer of joy and comfort to the ſaints: Chriſt will appear moſt lovely and amiable to them, he will be glorified by them, and admired in them; great grace will be brought unto them, and great glory will be put upon them; they'll then enjoy full redemption and ſalvation: the winter of ſorrows, afflictions, and perſecutions, and of coldneſs, darkneſs, and deſertion, will be over; the ſun ſhall no more go down, nor the moon withdraw itſelf, but the Lord will be the everlaſting light of his people.

Ver. 34. Verily I ſay unto you, this generation ſhall not paſs, &c.] Not the generation of men in general; as if the ſenſe was, that mankind ſhould not ceaſe, until the accompliſhment of theſe things; nor the generation, or people of the Jews, who ſhould continue to be a people, until all were fulfilled; nor the generation of chriſtians; as if the meaning was, that there ſhould be always a ſett of chriſtians, or believers in Chriſt in the world, till all theſe events came to paſs; but it reſpects that preſent age, or generation of men then living in it; and the ſenſe is, that all the men of that age ſhould not die, but ſome ſhould live till all theſe things things were fulfilled; ſee Matt. xvi. 28. as many did, and as there is reaſon to believe they might, and muſt, ſince all theſe things had their accompliſhment, in and about forty years after this: and certain it is, that John, one of the diſciples of Chriſt, outlived the time by many years; and, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, many of the Jewiſh doctors now living, when Chriſt ſpoke theſe words, lived until the city was deſtroyed; as Rabban Simeon, who periſhed with it, R. Jochanan ben Zaccai, who outlived it, R. Zadoch, R. Iſhmael, and others: this is a full and clear proof, that not any thing that is ſaid before, relates to the ſecond coming of Chriſt, the day of judgment, and end of the world; but that all belong to the coming of the ſon of man, in the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and to the end of the Jewiſh ſtate.

Ver. 35. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, &c.] This is either an aſſertion, which will be true at the end of time; not as to the ſubſtance of the heavens and earth, which will always remain, but as to the qualities of them, which will be altered: they will be renewed and refined, but not deſtroyed; the bad qualities, or evil circumſtances, which attend them through the ſin of man, will be removed and paſs away, but they themſelves will continue in being: or is a comparative expreſſion, and the ſenſe is, that the heavens and the earth, and the ordinances thereof, than which nothing can be more firm and ſtrong, being fixed and ſupported by God himſelf, ſhall ſooner paſs away, than any thing aſſerted and predicted by Chriſt ſhall: but my words ſhall not paſs away; be vain and empty, and unaccompliſhed; which is true of any thing, and every thing ſpoken by Chriſt; and eſpecially here regards all that he had ſaid concerning the calamities that ſhould befal the Jews, before, at, or upon the deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple; and the deſign of the expreſſion, is to ſhew the certainty, unalterableneſs, and ſure accompliſhment of theſe things; ſee Jer. xxxi. 36.

Ver. 36. But of that day and hour knoweth no man, &c.] Which is to be underſtood, not of the ſecond coming of Chriſt, the end of the world, and the laſt judgment; but of the coming of the ſon of man, to take vengeance on the Jews, and of their deſtruction; for the words manifeſtly regard the date of the ſeveral things going before, which only can be applied to that cataſtrophe, and dreadful deſolation: now, though the deſtruction itſelf was ſpoken of by Moſes and the prophets, was foretold by Chriſt, and the believing Jews had ſome diſcerning of its near approach; ſee Heb. x. 25. yet the exact and preciſe time was not known: it might have been calculated to a year by Daniel's weeks, but not to the day and hour; and therefore our Lord does not ſay of the year, but of the day and hour no man knows; though the one week, or ſeven years being ſeparated from the reſt, throws that account into ſome perplexity; and which perhaps is on purpoſe done, to conceal the preciſe time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction: nor need it be wondered at, notwithſtanding all the hints given, that the fatal day ſhould not be exactly known beforehand; when thoſe who have lived ſince, and were eyewitneſſes of it, are not agreed on what day of the month it was; for, as Dr. Lightfoot[i] obſerves, Joſephus[k] ſays, "that the temple periſhed the tenth "day of Lous, a day fatal to the temple, as hav-"ing been on that day conſumed in flames, by the "king of Babylon." And yet Rabbi Jochanan ben Zaccai, who was alſo at the deſtruction of it, as well as Joſephus, with all the Jewiſh writers, ſay it was on the ninth of Ab; for of this day they[l] ſay, five things happened upon it: "On the ninth of "Ab it was decreed concerning our fathers, that "they ſhould not enter into the land (of Canaan,) "the firſt and ſecond temple were deſtroyed, Bi-"ther was taken, and the city plowed up." Though the words of R. Jochanan, cited by the doctor, refers to the firſt, and not to the ſecond temple, and ſhould have been rendered thus: "If "I had been in the generation, (which fixed the "faſt for the deſtruction of the firſt temple) I "would not have fixed it but on the tenth (of Ab;) "for, adds he, the greateſt part of the temple was "burnt on that day; but the Rabbins rather regard-"ed the beginning of the puniſhment[m]." And ſo the faſting of Rabbi, and R. Joſhua ben Levi, on the ninth and tenth days, were on account of the firſt temple; for they were under the ſame difficulty about the one, as the other: no, not the angels of heaven; who dwell there, always behold the face of God, ſtand in his preſence ready to do his will, and are made acquainted with many of his deſigns, and are employed in the executing of them, and yet know not the time of God's vengeance on the Jews: to this agrees the ſenſe that is given of the day of vengeance in Iſ. lxiii. 4. 'tis aſked[n], "what's the meaning "of theſe words, the day of vengeance is in my heart? "Says R. Jochanan, to my heart I have revealed "it, to the members I have not revealed it: ſays "R. Simeon ben Lakiſh, to my heart I have revealed "it, למלאכי השרת לא גליתי, to the miniſtring an-"gels I have not revealed it." The Ethiopic verſion adds here, nor the ſon, and ſo the Cambridge copy of Beza's; which ſeems to be tranſcribed from Mark xiii. 32. where that phraſe ſtands; and muſt be underſtood of Chriſt as the ſon of man, and not as the ſon of God; for as ſuch, he lay in the boſom of the Father, and knew all his purpoſes and deſigns; for theſe were purpoſed in him: he knew from the beginning who would betray him, and who would believe in him; he knew what would befal the rejecters of him, and when that would come to paſs; as he muſt know alſo the day of the laſt judgment, ſince it is appointed by God, and he is ordained to execute it: but the ſenſe is, that as he, as man and mediator, came not to deſtroy, but to ſave; ſo it was not any part of his work, as ſuch, to know, nor had he it in commiſſion to make known the time of Jeruſalem's ruin: but my Father only; to the excluſion of all creatures, angels and men; but not to the excluſion of Chriſt as God, who as ſuch, is omniſcient; nor of the Holy Spirit, who is acquainted with the deep things of God, the ſecrets of his heart, and this among others.

Ver. 37. But as the days of Noe were, &c.] So Noah, is uſually called Noe by the Septuagint: the ſenſe is, as were the practices of the men of that generation, in which Noah lived, ſo will be the practices of the men of that age, in which the ſon of man comes; or as the flood, which happened in the days of Noah, was ſudden and unexpected; it came upon men thoughtleſs about it, though they had warning of it; and was univerſal, ſwept them all away, excepting a few that were ſaved in the ark: ſo ſhall alſo the coming of the ſon of man be; to take vengeance on the Jews, on a ſudden, at an unawares, when they would be unthoughtful about it; though they were forewarned of it by Chriſt and his apoſtles, and their deſtruction be as univerſal; all would be involved in it, excepting a few, that were directed a little before, to go out of the city of Jeruſalem to Pella; where they were ſaved, as Noah and his family were in the ark.

Ver. 38. For as in the days that were before the flood, &c.] Not all the days before the flood, from the creation of the world; but thoſe immediately preceding it, a century or two before it: they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage: not that theſe civil actions of life were criminal in themſelves, had care been taken that they were not abuſed. It is lawful to eat and drink, provided it be in moderation, and not to exceſs; and to marry, and give in marriage, when the laws, rules, and ends thereof, are obſerved: and therefore this muſt be underſtood, either of their wholly giving themſelves up to the pleaſures of life, and luſts of the fleſh, without any concern about the affairs of religion, the worſhip and glory of God, the welfare of their ſouls, and their approaching danger, of which Noah had given them warning; or of their luxury and intemperance, in eating and drinking, and of their libidinous and unlawful marriages; for the word here uſed for eating, ſignifies eating after the manner of brute beaſts: they indulged themſelves in a brutiſh way, in gluttony and drunkenneſs; and it is certain from the account given of them, in Gen. vi. 2, 4. that they entered into unlawful marriages, and unclean copulations: wherefore theſe things may be ſpoken of them, as what were really ſinful and wicked, and denote a courſe of ſinning, a conſtant practice of theſe ſins of intemperance and luſt, and which is ſtill more fully expreſſed, in the next clauſe: until the day that Noe entered into the ark. The Arabic verſion renders it, the ſhip; the veſſel which God directed him to make, for the ſaving of himſelf and family. Now the men of that generation perſiſted in their wicked courſe of living, after, and notwithſtanding, the warning God had given them by Noah, of the flood that would come upon them; and all the while the ark was building, even to the very day that Noah and his family, by the order of God, went into the ark.

Ver. 39. And knew not until the flood came, &c.] That is, they did not advert or give heed, to what Noah ſaid to them about it: they ſlighted and deſpiſed his warnings; they did not believe, that what he ſaid of the flood was true; they had notice of it, but they would not know it, and therefore God gave them up to judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart; and ſo they remained, until it came upon them at once: and took them all away; the whole world of the ungodly, every man, woman, and child, except eight perſons only; Noah and his wife, and his three ſons and their wives; for the deluge was univerſal, and reached to all the inhabitants of the world, who all periſhed in it, excepting the above perſons. So ſhall alſo the coming of the ſon of man be: ſuch ſhall be, as it was, the caſe of the Jews, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: they gave themſelves up to all manner of wickedneſs and uncleanneſs; they diſregarded the warnings of Chriſt and his apoſtles; they were careleſs and ſecure of danger; they would not believe their ruin was at hand, when it was juſt upon them; they buoyed themſelves up to the very laſt, that a deliverer would ariſe, and ſave them; they cried peace, peace, when ſudden deſtruction was nigh; even of them all, their nation, city, and temple, a few only excepted, as in the days of Noah: and though they were ſo much like the men of that generation, yet they themſelves ſay of them, that "the generation of the flood have no part in the world to come, nor ſhall they ſtand in judgment, according to Gen. vi. 3. [o]"

Ver. 40. Then ſhall two be in the field, &c.] About their proper buſineſs, of huſbandry, plowing, or ſowing, or any other rural employment: the one ſhall be taken; not by the preaching of the Goſpel, into the kingdom of God, or Goſpel diſpenſation; though ſuch a diſtinction God makes, by the miniſtry of the word, accompanied by his Spirit and power; nor by angels, to meet Chriſt in the air, and to be introduced into his kingdom and glory; but by the eagles, the Roman army, and either killed or carried captive by them: and the other left; not in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy, as many are, to whom the Goſpel is preached; nor with devils at the laſt day, to be thruſt down by them into the infernal regions; but by the Romans, being by ſome remarkable providence, or another, delivered out of their hands; which was the caſe of ſome few, and theſe of the meaner ſort; and therefore perſons of a rural life and occupation, are inſtanced in.

Ver. 41. Two women ſhall be grinding at the mill, &c.] Though the word women is not in the Greek text, yet it is rightly ſupplied by our tranſlators, as it is in the Perſic verſion; for the word rendered grinding, is in the feminine gender, and was the work of women, as appears both from the ſcripture, Exod. xi. 5. Iſa. xlvii. 1, 2. and from ſeveral paſſages in the Jewiſh writings, concerning which their canons run thus [p]: "Theſe are the works which a woman is to do for her huſband, טוחנת, ſhe muſt grind, and bake, and waſh, and boil, and make his bed, &c." And elſewhere 'tis aſked [q], "how does ſhe grind? ſhe ſits at the mill, and watches the flour, but ſhe does not grind, or go after a beaſt, that ſo the mill may not ſtop; but if their cuſtom is to grind at a hand-mill, ſhe may grind. The Sanhedrim order this to poor people; for if ſhe brings one handmaid, or money, or goods, ſufficient to purchaſe, ſhe is not obliged to grind, &c." Frequent mention is made, of women grinding together at the ſame mill: a caſe is put concerning two women grinding at an hand-mill [r], and various rules are given about it; as, that [s] "a woman may lend her neighbour that is ſuſpected of eating the fruits of the ſeventh year after time, a meal-ſieve, a fan, a mill, or a furnace, but ſhe mayn't winnow, nor grind with her." Which it ſuppoſes ſhe might do, if ſhe was not ſuſpected: again [t], "the wife of a plebeian, טוחנת, may grind with the wife of a learned man, in the time that ſhe is unclean, but not when ſhe is clean." Nor was this the cuſtom of the Jews only, for women to grind, but alſo of other countries, as of the Abyſſines [u], and of both Greeks and Barbarians [w]: the one ſhall be taken, and the other left; as before, one ſhall be taken by the Romans, and either put to death, or carried captive; and the other ſhall eſcape their hands, through the ſingular providence of God. The Ethiopic verſion, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel add, two ſhall be in one bed, one ſhall be taken, and the other left; but theſe words are not in the copies of Matthew in common, but are taken out of Luke xvii. 34. though they are in the Cambridge copy of Beza's, and in one of Stephens's.

Ver. 42. Watch therefore, &c.] Since the time of this deſolation is ſo uncertain, and ſince it will come upon the Jews unawares, and ſome will eſcape, whilſt others periſh; for the words are plainly an inference from what precedes, and clearly relates to things going before, and are not a tranſition to a new ſubject: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come; to avenge himſelf of the unbelieving Jews, and fulfill what he in perſon, and by his apoſtles, had predicted and warned them of: though I will not deny, but that what follows, may be much better accommodated and applied to the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and the laſt judgment, and the behaviour of men with regard to both, than any thing ſaid before; and it may be our Lord's intention, to lead his diſciples gradually, and as it were imperceptibly, to the laſt ſcene of things on earth, to make way for the parables and deſcription of the future judgment, in the next chapter; ſtill keeping in view, and having reference to, the ſubject he had been ſo long upon.

Ver. 43. But know this, &c.] Or you do know this: this may be illuſtrated by ſuppoſing a caſe well known to men, and in which common prudence would direct a man how to behave: that if the good man of the houſe, or houſholder, or maſter of the family, had known in what watch the thief would come; whether at the firſt, ſecond, third, or fourth watch; for the night was divided into four watches; had he any previous notice given by any of the aſſociates of the thief, or by thoſe that had overheard, or by any means had got intelligence of his deſign and meaſures, and the time of his purſuing them, he would have watched; in every watch, either in perſon, or by employing others, or both: and would not have ſuffered his houſe to be broken up, or dug through; ſee Job xxiv. 16. concerning which, there is a law in Exod. xxii. 2. and and is explained by the Jewiſh canoniſts thus: "He " that comes in by digging, whether by day or " by night, there's no blood for him, (i. e. to be " ſhed for him, if he is killed) but if the maſter " of the houſe, or any other man kill him, they " are free; and every man has power to kill him, " whether on a week day, or on a ſabbath day; " and with whatſoever death he can put him to, " as it is ſaid, there's no blood for him, Exod. xxii. " 2. And one that comes in, במחתרת, by digging, or a thief that is found in the midſt of a " man's roof, or in his court, or within his hedge, " whether in the day or in the night, (may be " killed;) and wherefore is it called digging? be- " cauſe it is the way of moſt thieves to come in by " digging in the night [x]." Wherefore no doubt ſince the maſter of the houſe had ſuch a law on his ſide, he would never ſuffer, if poſſible, his houſe to be entered by digging, when he had, eſpecially, any previous notice of it. Now the application of this caſe, or parabolical way of ſpeaking, is to the coming of Chriſt, and the watchfulneſs of every good man who has notice of it, that he mayn't be ſurprized with it, but be in a readineſs to receive him. The coming of the ſon of man, is here repreſented by the coming of the thief in the night: but when he is compared to a thief, this is not to be underſtood in a bad ſenſe, in which ſatan is called one, who comes to kill and to deſtroy the ſouls of men; and likewiſe hereticks and falſe teachers, and every one that climbs up, and gets into the church of God in a wrong way; but this only reſpects the manner of Chriſt's coming, which is like that of a thief, ſecretly, ſuddenly, and at unawares. The good man of the houſe, or houſholder, is every chriſtian, or believer in Chriſt, who has a houſe to look after, his own ſoul, the ſpiritual affairs and everlaſting ſalvation of it, things of moment and concern unto him: and as the chriſtians, before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, had notices of Chriſt's coming in that way, by our Lord's predictions, by the hints the apoſtles gave, to refreſh their memories with them, and by the ſigns of the times and voices that were heard; ſo the ſaints have of Chriſt's coming to judgment: wherefore as it became the one, ſo it does the other, to watch, to be upon their guard, to be in a readineſs, to have their loins girt about, and their lights burning, and they like men that wait for their Lord; that ſo when he comes, their houſes may not be broken up, may not be ſurprized, and the ſeveral powers and faculties of their ſouls may not be thrown into diſorder and confuſion; wherefore it follows,

Ver. 44. Therefore be ye alſo ready, &c.] Or prepared for the coming of the ſon of man; which as it is ſaid to be like a thief in the night, expreſſes the ſuddenneſs of it, may excite to watchfulneſs and readineſs; which readineſs is to be underſtood, not of a readineſs to do the will and work of God, though this is abſolutely neceſſary; as to watch and pray, to hear the word preached, to confeſs Chriſt, and give a reaſon of the hope that is in us, to communicate to the ſupport of the cauſe and intereſt of Chriſt, and to ſuffer for his ſake; but of a preparedneſs to meet the Lord in the way of his judgments, when deſolating judgments are coming on the earth, ſuch as theſe in Jeruſalem; by faith and truſt in the power, providence, and care of God; by humiliation before him, and reſignation to his will: and if this can be applied to a readineſs for a future ſtate after death, for the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and laſt judgment; this lies not in a dependance on the abſolute mercy of God; nor in an external humiliation for ſin; nor in an abſtinence from groſſer ſins, or in mere negative holineſs; nor in any outward, legal, civil, and moral righteouſneſs; nor in a ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances; nor in a mere profeſſion of religion; but in being in Chriſt, having on his righteouſneſs, and being waſhed in his blood; and alſo in regeneration and ſanctification, in having true knowledge of Chriſt, and faith in him; for all which it becomes men to be concerned, as alſo all believers to be actually, as well as habitually ready; being in the lively exerciſe of grace, and chearful diſcharge of duty, though without truſting to either. And ſuch a readineſs in either branch of it, is not of themſelves, but lies in the grace of God, which gives a meetneſs for glory; and in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the fine linnen, clean and white, which being granted by him, his people are made ready for him: and as for their faith, and the exerciſe of it, and their conſtant performance of duty, theſe are not from the ſtrength of nature and the power of free-will, but from the Spirit of God and his grace; who makes ready a people prepared for the Lord, and all according to the ancient ſettlements of grace, in which proviſion is made for the veſſels of mercy, afore prepared for glory: though there ſhould be a ſtudious concern in men for ſuch readineſs, for nothing is more certain than death, and nothing more uncertain than when it will be; and after death, no readineſs can be had, but he that is then righteous, eous, ſhall be righteous ſtill, and he that is filthy, ſhall be filthy ſtill, and a death-bed is by no means to be truſted to; and though a perſon may not be ſnatched away ſuddenly, but may have ſpace given him to repent, yet if grace is not given him, to repent and believe in Chriſt, he never will: the grave is ready for men, and in a little time all will be brought to this houſe, appointed for all living, where there is no wiſdom, knowledge, and device; and therefore whatever we are directed to do, ſhould be now done, with all that might, and ſtrength, and grace, that is given us; to which may be added, that after death comes judgment: the day is fixed, the judge is appointed, and all muſt ſtand before his judgment ſeat; and nothing is more ſure, than that Chriſt will come a ſecond time, to judge both quick and dead; and happy will thoſe be that are ready; they will be received by Chriſt into everlaſting habitations, and be for ever with him; and miſerable will thoſe be, who will not be ready, who will not have the oil of grace in their hearts with their lamps, nor the wedding garment on them; they'll be ſhut out, and bid to depart into everlaſting burnings: how fit and proper is ſuch an advice and exhortation as this, be ye alſo ready. A readineſs the Jews report Bath Kol, or the voice from heaven, gave out concerning the Iſraelites. “ Bath Kol, ſay [y] they, went out, and ſaid to them, “ כולכם מזומנין לחיי העולם הבא, ye are all of “ you ready for the life of the world to come.” And elſewhere 'tis ſaid of Bath Kol, that it went forth and affirmed of ſome particular Rabbins, that they were ready for eternal life; as of Ketiah bar Shalom, R. Eleazar ben Durdia, and R. Chanina [z]: for in ſuch an hour as ye think not, the ſon of man cometh: this is true of his coming in power to deſtroy Jeruſalem, and of his ſecond coming to judgment. The Jews ſay much the ſame of the coming of the Meſſiah, whom they expect: “ there are three things “ they ſay [a], which come, בהיסח הדעת, without “ knowledge, or unthought of, at an unawares; and “ they are theſe, the Meſſiah, any thing that is “ found, and a ſcorpion.”

Ver. 45. Who then is a faithful and wiſe ſervant, &c.] The Vulgate Latin adds, do you think? and is a queſtion put to the diſciples, which they might apply to themſelves: in Luke xii. 42. 'tis ſpoken in anſwer to a queſtion of Peter's, in relation to the above exhortation, whether it was ſpoken to them, or to all; and by this anſwer, it looks as if it was more eſpecially deſigned for them, though it may be applied to others. The ſervant is there called a ſteward, for ſuch a ſervant is meant; and a name that is very proper for the apoſtles and miniſters of the word, who are ſtewards of the myſteries of Chriſt, and of the manifold grace of God; and whoſe characters are, that they are faithful: for this is required in ſtewards, that they be faithful to the truſt repoſed in them; as miniſters are, when they preach the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, and the whole of it; conceal no part, nor keep back any thing of it; ſeek not to pleaſe men, but God; neither ſeek their own things, their eaſe, honour, and profit, but the glory of God, the honour of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls; and abide by the truths, cauſe, and intereſt of a Redeemer, at all hazards. And they are wiſe, who know and are well inſtructed in divine things; who make Chriſt the main ſubject of their miniſtry; who improve their talents and time for their maſter's uſe, and the advantage of thoſe that are under their care; who ſeek for, and deliver acceptable words and matter; and manage their whole truſt, ſo as to be able to give in a good account of their ſtewardſhip another day. The poſt that ſuch a perſon is put in, and the work he is to do, follow: whom his Lord hath made ruler over his houſhold; or family, the church of God, which is the houſhold of God, and of faith, in which are believers of various growths and ſizes; ſome fathers, ſome young men, ſome children; and over theſe, the miniſters are, by their Lord, made and placed as rulers; not as lords and tyrants over God's heritage, to govern them in an arbitrary way, but as over them in the Lord, to rule them according to the word of God, and the laws of his houſe; by preaching the Goſpel, adminiſtring ordinances, and keeping up his worſhip and the diſcipline of the church; and whoſe principal buſineſs it is, to give them meat in due ſeaſon; even their portion of it, as in Luke: for the word of God is to be cut and rightly divided, and every one in the family, according to his age, appetite, and digeſtion, is to have his proper part and portion given him: it muſt be meat, proper food, ſuch as is ſolid, ſubſtantial, and nouriſhing; even the wholeſome words of Chriſt Jeſus, that muſt be given them, and not huſks and empty traſh; and all in due ſeaſon, in its proper time, as their caſes and circumſtances require, and call for; as whether weary, or uncomfortable, or in the dark, or under temptations and afflictions; for a word fitly and ſeaſonably ſpoken, how uſeful is it!

Ver. 46. Bleſſed is that ſervant whom his Lord when he cometh, &c.] Whether in a way of judgment, as againſt Jeruſalem; or at death, when he comes to remove him out of time, into eternity; or at the day of judgment, when he, the righteous judge, will give the crown of righteouſneſs to him: ſhall find ſo doing; acting the faithful and wiſe part, ruling the houſhold of God well; giving to all wholeſome food, a proper portion of it, and that in the right time.

Ver. 47. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Nothing is a greater truth, more certain, or to be depended on, than this; all ſuch wiſe, faithful, diligent, and induſtrious ſervants may expect it: that he ſhall make him ruler over all his goods; will honour him with greater gifts, beſtow a larger degree of Goſpel light and knowledge on him, make him more uſeful in the church below, and at laſt cauſe him to inherit all things in the other world, all glory, happineſs, and bliſs.

Ver. 48. But and if that evil ſervant, &c.] Or ſhould there be an evil ſervant, an unwiſe and faithleſs one, who though he may have gifts and talents, yet deſtitute of the grace of God; and though he may be in the higheſt poſt and office in the church of God; for ſometimes wicked and graceleſs men are in ſuch places; yet if he ſhall ſay in his heart; ſecretly to himſelf, and with pleaſure to his mind, and ſtrengthen himſelf in a full perſuaſion of this, my Lord delayeth his coming; and begins to think that either he will not come at all, to call him to an account for the uſe of his time, gifts, and talents; or if he does, it will be long firſt e'er he will come, and viſit the people of the Jews, by deſolating calamities; or by death, to ſummon him to his bar; or at judgment, to give in his account of his ſtewardſhip.

Ver. 49. And ſhall begin to ſmite his fellow ſervants, &c.] By abuſing the power lodged in him, uſurping a dominion over their faith, and impoſing on their conſciences, things which Chriſt has never commanded; vexing and burdening them with trifling rites and ceremonies, and other unneceſſary things; wounding, grieving, offending weak minds by his conduct and example; or perſecuting the ſaints, ſuch of them as cannot come into every thing in his way of believing and practiſing: and to eat and drink with the drunken; giving himſelf up to luxury and intemperance; feeding himſelf inſtead of the family; ſerving his own belly, and not his Lord and Maſter Chriſt; living an ungodly and licentious life, altogether unbecoming the Goſpel of Chriſt: ſuch ſervants and ſtewards have been, and are in the church of God; but ſad will be their caſe, when their Lord comes, as follows. Reſpect ſeems to be had either to the eccleſiaſtical rulers among the Jews, who went under the name of the ſervants of the Lord, but perſecuted the apoſtles, and thoſe that believed in Chriſt; or the judaizing chriſtians, and falſe teachers, that were for impoſing the ceremonies of the law upon believers; or Simon Magus, and his followers, a ſett of licentious men; or all of them; who lived in this period of time, between the death of Chriſt, and the deſtruction of the temple.

Ver. 50. The Lord of that ſervant, &c.] Not by redemption and grace, but by creation and profeſſion; ſhall come in a day when he looked not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of: ſuddenly and unexpectedly: ſuch was his coming in wrath and vengeance on the Jewiſh nation; and ſuch is his coming oftentimes by death; and ſuch will be his coming at the day of judgment.

Ver. 51. And ſhall cut him aſunder, &c.] The Perſic verſion renders it, he ſhall ſeparate him from himſelf; he ſhall ſeparate ſoul and body by death; he ſhall take away all his gifts and talents from him; and remove him from his place and office, and from the church of God, and communion of the ſaints, and out of this world. Some think the alluſion is to the cutting up of the ſacrifices, and dividing them into pieces; and the ſenſe is, that this wicked ſervant ſhould have no ſhare in the ſacrifice of Chriſt; but ſhould fall himſelf a victim to divine juſtice, and be uſed as ſacrifices were; or, in other words, be ſeverely puniſhed for his ſins: tho' the alluſion ſeems rather to be to the manner of puniſhing treacherous and unfaithful perſons, by diſmembring them, cutting them in pieces, or in two: and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, he ſhall cut him in the middle: this was certainly a way of putting perſons to death; though ſome ſay it was not known to the Jews; but the following inſtances ſhew the contrary. Mention is made of ſome that were ſawn aſunder, Heb. xi. 37. and the Jews ſay[b], that Iſaiah was ſawn aſunder by Manaſſeh; and ſuch a kind of death is ſpoken of in the Targum[c]; where it is ſaid, that “the prieſts went before Mordecai, and pro- “claimed, ſaying, whoever does not ſalute, or “wiſh proſperity to Mordecai, and to the Jews, “הדמין יתעביד, he ſhall be cut into pieces, and his “houſe be made a dunghill.” And elſewhere[d] it is ſaid of a wicked man, that they put him upon a carpenter's block, and מנסרים בו, ſawed him aſunder; and he cried out, wo, wo, wo, that I have provoked my creator. This was alſo a puniſhment uſed among the heathens, as Gataker[e], and others out of heathen writers, have ſhewn. It muſt not here be underſtood literally, that this wicked ſervant ſhould be put to ſuch a corporal death; but that he ſhould be puniſhed in the ſevereſt manner, and ſhould be the object of the fierce wrath and ſore diſpleaſure of God; and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites. Luke ſays, with the unbelievers: very likely both phraſes were uſed by Chriſt; intimating, that ſuch as make a profeſſion of him, and have only a form of godlineſs, without the power of it, and are wicked and hypocritical men, will ſhare the ſame fate with thoſe that believe not; and the portion of theſe is the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; ſee Rev. xxi. 8. or all ſuch perſons are intended, who put on the maſk of religion, and do not anſwer to the character they bear; and are unfaithful to the truſt repoſed in them, and therefore will be made examples of righteous judgment, and have their part in the loweſt hell: there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 42.

CHAP. XXV.

Ver. 1. THEN ſhall the kingdom of heaven, &c.] The Goſpel church-ſtate; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 24. either as it would be a little before the coming of the ſon of man to take vengeance on the Jews; or as it will be a little before his ſecond coming to judgment; for the parable is manifeſtly connected with, and refers to the preceding chapter, which chiefly treats of Jeruſalem's deſtruction: but tho' the Jews were in great ſecurity before their utter ruin, yet it does not appear that the Chriſtian church was then in ſuch a lukewarm, drowſy, and ſleepy condition, as this parable repreſents: and ſince, in the latter part of the preceding chapter, there are ſome hints of Chriſt's ſecond and laſt coming; when the ſervant found doing his Lord's will, will be greatly honoured, and the wicked, cruel, and licentious ſervant will be ſeverely puniſhed; and ſince, at the cloſe of this, and the following parable, there is a very lively deſcription given of the laſt judgment; as alſo, becauſe it appears elſewhere, that ſuch will be the formal, lukewarm, cold, indifferent, ſecure, and ſleepy ſtate of the church, before the ſecond coming of Chriſt; it ſeems right and beſt to underſtand this parable, and the following, as having reſpect to that: and that the deſign of it is to ſhew, what will be the caſe of profeſſors at that time; the difference between nominal and real chriſtians; how far perſons may go in a profeſſion of religion, and yet, at laſt, be ſhut out of heaven; as alſo the ſuddenneſs of Chriſt's coming; the neceſſity of being ready for it; and how watchful the ſaints ſhould be, that they be not ſurprized with it. Now ſome time before this, the Goſpel church-ſtate, or the body of profeſſing Chriſtians, will be likened unto ten virgins; to virgins for quality; being betrothed ones to Chriſt, at leaſt in profeſſion; and becauſe of the ſingleneſs of their love, and chaſte adherence to him, however, as they will declare, and which, in ſome of them, will be fact; and for their beauty, comelineſs, and gay attire, being, as they will profeſs, clothed with the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; with that fine linen, clean and white, with cloth of gold, and raiment of needle-work, and ſo perfectly comely through his comelineſs; and for their purity and incorruptneſs of doctrine, worſhip, and converſation, at leaſt in appearance, and which will be true of many of them; and all, from their profeſſion, will bear the ſame character: theſe for their quantity and number, are compared to ten virgins; which may, perhaps, denote the ſmall number of profeſſors at this time; ſee Gen. xviii. 32. that there will be but few, that will then name the name of Chriſt, and fewer ſtill who will not have defiled their garments, and be virgins indeed. The number ten was greatly taken notice of, and uſed among the Jews: a congregation, with them, conſiſted of ten perſons, and leſs than that number did not make one[f]; and whereever there were ten perſons in a place, they were obliged to build a ſynagogue[g]. Ten elders of the city were witneſſes of Boaz's taking Ruth to be his wife, Ruth iv. 2, 9, 10. Now it may be in reference to the former of theſe, that this number ten is here expreſſed, ſince the parable relates to the congregated churches of Chriſt, or to Chriſt's viſible church on earth: moreover, they ſay, that "with leſs than ten "they did not divide the ſhema, (i. e. hear, O Iſrael, "and ſay any part of the bleſſings that went be-"fore it); nor did (the meſſenger of the congrega-"tion) go before the ark (to pray); nor did (the "prieſts) lift up their hands (to bleſs the people); "nor did they read in the law (in the congrega-"tion); nor did they diſmiſs (the people) with (a "paſſage out of one of) the prophets; nor did "they make a ſtanding, and a ſitting (when they "carried the dead to the grave, which uſed to be "done ſeven times, to weep over the dead); nor "did they ſay the bleſſing of the mourners, nor "the comforts of the mourners (when they re-"turn'd from the grave, and ſtood in a row to "comfort the mourner; and there was no row leſs "than ten); וברכת חתנים, nor the bleſſing of the "bridegrooms," which conſiſted of ſeven bleſſings, and this was not ſaid but in the preſence of ten perſons[h]; to which there may be an alluſion here: for the whole alludes to the ſolemnities of a marriage among the Jews, when the bridegroom fetched home his bride from her father's houſe, attended with his friends, the children of the bride-chamber, and which was uſually done in the night; and, at the ſame time, the bride was waiting for him, accompanied with virgins, or bride-maids; ſee Pſ. xlv. 14. who, when they perceived the bridegroom coming, went out with lamps, or torches, to meet him, and conduct him to her; hence it follows, which took their lamps, and went forth to meet the bridegroom. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions, add, and the bride, contrary to the Greek copies, excepting the Cambridge copy of Beza's. Nor do the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſo read; nor Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; nor does it agree with the above cuſtom. By the bridegroom is meant Chriſt, who ſtands in this relation to his church and people; he ſaw them in the glaſs of the purpoſes and decrees of God, and loved them, and aſked them of his father to be given him as his ſpouſe and bride; and who did give them to him, when he ſecretly betrothed them to himſelf, in the everlaſting covenant, as he does their particular perſons at converſion, and will conſummate the marriage of them all at the laſt day; and, in the mean while, acts the part of a bridegroom to them: he loves them as a bridegroom loves his bride, with a love prior to theirs, free and unmerited; with a love of complacency and delight; which is ſingle and chaſte, ſtrong and affectionate; conſtant and perpetual, wonderful, matchleſs, and unconceivable: he ſympathizes with them, nouriſhes, and cheriſhes them as his own fleſh; providing ſpiritual food, and rich clothing for them; and indulging them with intimate communion with himſelf, and intereſts them in all he has; and when he comes again a ſecond time, he'll appear under this character. His firſt appearance was mean, in the form of a ſervant, in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, in garments rolled in blood; but when he comes a ſecond time, he'll appear as a bridegroom in his nuptial robes: all his elect will be prepared for him, beautified and adorned as a bride for her huſband; when he'll come and take them home to himſelf, and will avow them to be his before his father, and his holy angels; and which will be a time of great glory, and great joy. Now theſe virgins are ſaid to take their lamps, and go forth to meet him: by their lamps are meant, either the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, particularly the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it; which, like a lamp, were lighted in the evening of the Jewiſh diſpenſation, and will ſhine the brighteſt towards the end of the world: theſe are like lamps both to walk by, and work by, and were a light to all theſe virgins: ſome were ſavingly enlightened into them, and by them; and others only notionally, but were taken up, owned, and profeſſed, as the rule of faith and practice, by them all; and that in order to meet and find the bridegroom, for they teſtify of him: or rather an external profeſſion of religion is deſigned by the lamps, which is diſtinct from the oil of grace, and the veſſel of the heart, in which that is; and is that into which the oil is put and burns, ſo as to become viſible; and muſt be daily recruited, and trimmed with freſh ſupplies of grace from Chriſt, without which it can't be kept up, nor will be of any uſe and ſervice; and is what may go out, or be dropp'd and loſt, as ſome of theſe lamps. Now this was what was taken up by them all: they all made a profeſſion of Chriſt, and his Goſpel; ſome of them took it up aright, upon an experience of the grace of God, and principles of grace wrought in their ſouls; others, without any experience, and without conſidering the nature, importance, and conſequences of a profeſſion; and ſo they all went forth to meet the bridegroom: ſome in the exerciſe of faith on him, and in his coming; in love to him, and his appearance; deſiring, and longing to ſee him; expecting, and waiting for him: others only in a way of a viſible profeſſion of religion, and an outward attendance on ordinances. The cuſtom here alluded to of meeting the bridegroom, and attending the bride home to his houſe in the night, with lighted torches, or lamps, and ſuch a number of them as here mentioned, was not only the cuſtom of the Jews, but of other eaſtern nations. Jarchi ſays[k], it was the cuſtom of the Iſhmaelites; his words are theſe: "it was a cuſtom, in the land of "Iſhmael, to bring the bride from her father's houſe "to her huſband's houſe, בלילה, in the night, be-"fore ſhe entered the nuptial-chamber; and to "carry before her בעשר קונדסין, about ten ſtaves; "and upon the top of the ſtaff was the form of a "brazen diſh, and in the midſt of it, pieces of "garments, oil, and pitch, which they ſet fire to "and lighted before her." Something like this is the cuſtom of the Eaſt-Indians now, which is thus related [l]: "on the day of their marriage, the huſband and wife being both in the ſame palki, or palanquin, (which is the ordinary way of carriage in the country, and is carried by four men upon their ſhoulders) go out between ſeven and eight o'clock at night, accompanied with all their kindred and friends; the trumpets and drums go before them; and they are lighted by a multitude of maſſals, which are a kind of flambeaus; immediately behind the palanquin of the new-married couple, walk many women, whoſe buſineſs is to ſing verſes, wherein they wiſh them all kind of proſperity.—The new-married couple go abroad in this equipage, for the ſpace of ſome hours; after which they return to their own houſe, where the women and domeſticks wait for them: the whole houſe is enlightened with little lamps, and many of theſe maſſals, already mentioned, are kept ready for their arrival, beſides thoſe that accompany them, and go before their palanquin. This ſort of lights are nothing elſe, but many pieces of old linen ſqueezed hard againſt one another, in a round figure, and forcibly thruſt down into a mould of copper: thoſe who hold them in one hand, have, in the other, a bottle of the ſame metal, with the mould copper, which is full of oil; and they take care to pour out of it, from time to time, upon the linen, which otherwiſe gives no light."

Ver. 2. And five of them were wiſe, &c.] The order of theſe words is inſerted in ſome verſions, as in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, which read, and five of them were fooliſh, and five of them were wiſe; but this is of no great conſequence. There is a parable of R. Jochanan ben Zaccai [m], who lived before, and after the deſtruction of the ſecond temple, which bears ſome likeneſs to this part of the parable, and others in it, and is this; "a certain king invited his ſervants, but did not fix any time for them; thoſe of them that were פקחים, wiſe, adorned themſelves, and ſat at the gate of the king's houſe, and ſaid, is there any want at the king's houſe? but thoſe of them that were טפשים, fools, went and did their work, and ſaid, is there any feaſt without trouble? on a ſudden, the king enquired after his ſervants: the wiſe went in before him, as they were, adorned; but the fools went in before him, as they were, filthy: the king rejoiced at meeting the wiſe, and was angry at meeting the fooliſh; and ordered, that thoſe who had adorned themſelves for the feaſt ſhould ſit and eat, and thoſe that had not adorned themſelves for the feaſt ſhould ſtand." The wiſe virgins are ſuch, who are wiſe, not in their own conceits, which is the caſe of natural men, and empty profeſſors; nor in the things of nature, or in the things of the world, of which the ſaints are oftentimes leſs knowing than others; nor in notional and ſpeculative knowledge, much leſs in things that are evil: but they are ſuch who are wiſe unto ſalvation; who not only know the ſcheme of it, but are ſenſible of their need of it; apply to Chriſt for it; venture their ſouls on him, and commit them to him: they truſt in his righteouſneſs for juſtification; in his blood for pardon; in his ſacrifice for atonement; in his fulneſs for daily ſupplies; in his grace and ſtrength to perform every duty; and expect eternal life in, and from him: they know him, prize him, and value him as their ſaviour; rejoice in him, and give him all the glory; and they are ſuch who are alſo wiſe in the buſineſs of a profeſſion, as well as in the affair of ſalvation; they are ſuch who take up a profeſſion of religion aright, upon principles of grace, and after mature thought and deliberation; and when they have ſo done, hold it faſt without wavering, walk becoming it in their lives and converſations; and yet do not depend on it, or truſt to it: and five were fooliſh; not in their own apprehenſion, in which they might be wiſe enough; nor in the judgment of others; nor in natural knowledge; or with reſpect to the things of the world; nor in ſpeculative notions of the Goſpel; nor merely ſo called, becauſe unconverted; every unconverted man being a fooliſh man: but they were ſo in the buſineſs of ſalvation; as all are who build their hopes of it on birth privileges; on a carnal deſcent from good men; on a religious education; on their own righteouſneſs; or on the abſolute mercy of God; and not on Chriſt, the one only, and ſure foundation: they are ſuch who know not themſelves; the impurity of their hearts, and nature; their impotency to that which is ſpiritually good; and the imperfection and inſufficiency of their own righteouſneſs: they know not Chriſt, and his ſalvation, neither the worth, nor want of him, or that; and are altogether ſtrangers to the power of godlineſs, and ſpiritual experience: and are alſo as fooliſh in the affair of a profeſſion, which they take up without a work of the Spirit of God upon their ſouls, and without conſidering the coſt and charge of it; and either in a little time wholly drop it, or, if they hold it, they fooliſhly depend upon it, or lead lives unſuitable to it. The number of wiſe and fooliſh virgins being equal, does not imply that there will be juſt the ſame number of nominal, as of real believers in the churches, in the latter day, a little before the coming of Chriſt; only that there will be a large number of ſuch among them.

Ver. 3. They that were fooliſh took their lamps, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, read, the five fooliſh, whoſe folly is here expoſed; and which lay not merely, or only in taking up the lamps of a profeſſion in a wrong way, and upon a wrong bottom, but chiefly in what follows; and took no oil with them: by oil is meant, not temporal bleſſings, nor ſpiritual ones, nor the Goſpel, nor the gifts of the Spirit, all which are ſometimes ſignified by oil; but either the Spirit of God himſelf, who is the oil of gladneſs, and the anointing which teacheth all things; or the regenerating and ſanctifying grace of the Spirit, even all the graces which are implanted by him in converſion: this is ſo called, in alluſion to the anointing oil under the law, in its excellent nature, its coſtly matter, its curious make, and particular application; and in the uſe of it to anoint both things, the tabernacle and its veſſels, and perſons, prophets, prieſts, and kings; ſee Exod. xxx. 23, &c. The grace of the Spirit being of an holy and ſanctifying nature, exceeding valuable and precious, and a curious piece of workmanſhip, and what is only applied unto, and beſtowed on the elect of God; and with which all the veſſels of mercy, ſmall and great, are anointed, and are made prophets, prieſts, and kings, and is what is, as that was, laſting and abiding: or elſe with reſpect to the precious oil, or ointment poured on Aaron's head, which was emblematical of the grace of the Spirit, which was poured forth, without meaſure, on Chriſt, and from him deſcends to all his members: or to the lamp-oil for the candleſtick in the tabernacle, which was oil-olive, oil-olive, pure, beaten, and was for light, to cauſe the lamp to burn always; and fitly repreſented grace, which comes from Chriſt, the true olive-tree; is pure, and of a purifying nature; and comes thro' a bruiſed, crucified Chriſt; and being put into the heart, cauſes the light of good works, and a becoming converſation, to ſhine forth: or elſe to oil in common, which is of a chearing and refreſhing nature, is beautifying and adorning, ſuppling and healing, feeding and fattening, ſearching and penetrating, and will not mix with any thing elſe; upon all which accounts grace may be compared to it. Now theſe fooliſh virgins, though they took up a lamp of a profeſſion, yet were unconcerned for the oil of grace, to fill, maintain, and trim this lamp: they were ignorant of the nature and uſe of true grace; they ſaw no need of it, and therefore did not aſk for it, or about it; they neglected it, made light of it, and denied it as uſeleſs; and being deſtitute of it, took up their profeſſion without it; and in this lay their folly.

[m] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 153. 1.

Vid. R. David Kimchi in Iſ. lxv. 13.

Ver. 4. But the wiſe took oil, &c.] They were concerned for the true grace of God, being enlightened by the Spirit of God; they ſaw their need of the grace of God, and being directed by him where it was to be had, went to Chriſt for it; and having received it from him, thro' the power of the Holy Ghoſt, exerciſed it on him; and herein lay their wiſdom: for a ſtock of this in the heart, daily renewed by Chriſt, will ſupply the lamp of a profeſſion well. This they had in their veſſels, their oil-veſſels; by which are meant their hearts; ſo called in alluſion either to the veſſels in which the oil was put, when preſſed out of the olives, Jer. xl. 10. or to the oil-veſſels of the candleſtick, Numb. iv. 9. Theſe are veſſels of God's making, tho' thro' ſin are become impure, and empty of all ſpiritual good: they are indeed large and capacious; here's room for Father, Son, and Spirit, and for abundance of grace; they are capable of comprehending much of the love of God, and beſides natural, a great deal of ſpiritual knowledge: here, in theſe veſſels, ſanctified by the Spirit of God, the wiſe virgins had the oil of grace, which is an internal thing: it is nothing in the head, in the tongue, or in the hand, but ſomething in the heart: it does not lie in notion, in talking, nor in doing; a man may know much, ſay a great deal, and do many external works, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God; nothing external is that: it is not a mere outward reformation of life, an external humiliation for ſin, an abſtinence from the groſſer ſins of life, or a conformity to the ordinances of the Goſpel, or a profeſſion of religion: it is a principle of light, life, love, and holineſs wrought in a man's heart; it has its ſeat in the mind, underſtanding, and judgment, in the will, conſcience, and the affections. This oil of grace was not naturally in them; nor was it obtained by the power of their free-will; but was freely given unto them, and powerfully wrought in them: the caſe is this; all grace was put into Chriſt's hands for them; the Spirit of God was ſent down to apply it to them, and work it in them; which is generally done by means, which they made uſe of by his direction and aſſiſtance, and ſo may be ſaid to take it: with their lamps, of an external profeſſion; they did not take up a profeſſion before they had grace, or without it; but when they received the one, they took up the other; and which was acting the wiſe part.

Ver. 5. While the bridegroom tarried, &c.] The ſpace of time here referr'd to, is either from the aſcenſion of Chriſt, to his coming to take vengeance on the Jews; or from thence to his ſecond coming; or rather from the time of ſome general expectation by the ſaints, of the near approach of Chriſt, till ſuch time he does come: for as there was a general expectation of the coming of Chriſt before he came in the fleſh, ſo there will be a general expectation of Chriſt being near at hand ſome time before his ſecond coming; and becauſe ſuch an expectation will not be anſwered, or Chriſt will not come ſo ſoon as was hoped for, and expected, a general drowſineſs, and ſecurity, and unconcernedneſs, eſpecially about the coming of Chriſt, will fall upon the churches. Thus, in the laſt century, there was among the people of God, in theſe kingdoms, a general expectation of Chriſt's ſpeedy coming; but being in this diſappointed, profeſſors of all ſorts are fallen aſleep, and do not at all, or very little, at leaſt very few, concern themſelves about it: in a word, this interval of time ſeems to regard that period which is pointed out by the Laodicean church-ſtate, which will uſher in the coming of Chriſt, and the laſt judgment. Now Chriſt, the bridegroom, may be ſaid to tarry, not with reſpect to the time fixed by the father and himſelf; for as this is ſettled, tho' unknown to man, it will not be paſſed by him; he does not, nor will he tarry beyond the appointed time: but either with reſpect to the time fixed by men; or with reſpect to the declaration of Chriſt, and his apoſtles, that he would come quickly, and the length of time ſince; or rather with reſpect to the expectations of the ſaints, and their impatience. The reaſon why he tarries is, becauſe his time is not come, and there are many things to be done firſt; there is to be a glorious ſpread of the Goſpel all over the world; all the elect muſt be gathered in, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the man of ſin muſt be deſtroyed; and the ungodly muſt fill up the meaſure of their iniquities; and Chriſt tarries to try the graces of his people, who ſhould exerciſe faith in his coming, by looking, watching, and waiting for it, deſirous of it, and haſtening unto it; being ready for him, prepared to receive him, and to go in with him to the nuptial-chamber; but inſtead of this they all ſlumbered and ſlept: which is not to be underſtood as if that one only ſlumbered, and the other ſlept; that is, that the wiſe virgins ſlumbered, and the fooliſh virgins ſlept; for the wiſe virgins, or true believers, are elſewhere ſaid to ſleep, and formal profeſſors to ſlumber; but both theſe are ſpoken of them all: and by this ſlumber, and ſleep, is not meant a natural death; tho' that is ſometimes called a ſleep, and to which true believers are ſubject, as well as others; yet all at the coming of Chriſt will not be aſleep in this ſenſe: and were this intended, their reſurrection would be deſigned by their ariſing, in the ſeventh verſe; and ſo the reſurrection of the ſaints, and of others, would be together, which is not true, for the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt; and would be alſo before the coming of Chriſt, whereas the reſurrection of the ſaints is not till at his coming; and it would look, by the account in ſome following verſes, as if grace might be had, or, at leaſt, be thought to be had, after the reſurrection: nor is this to be underſtood of the dead ſleep of ſin: a death in ſin may be ſignified by ſleeping, and be ſo called, and conviction be an awakening out of it; but the fooliſh virgins were always aſleep in this ſenſe, and were never truly and thoroughly awaked; and wiſe virgins never do, nor can, fall into this ſleep; for being quickened by Chriſt, they never die again: nor of a judicial ſlumber and ſleep, which the ſaints are never given up to; but a dead, lifeleſs, and ſleepy frame of ſpirit in the wiſe virgins: which lies in grace not being in exerciſe; in a ſlothfulneſs to perform religious duties; in taking up a ſatisfaction with the outward parts of religion; in an indifference about the intereſt of Chriſt; in an unconcernedneſs at the omiſſion of duty, or commiſſion of ſin; and in an entire eaſe of mind with regard to ſuch a frame and ſtate: the cauſes of it are a body of ſin; an anxious care of the world; a being weary of ſpiritual exerciſes, and a leaving them off; abſtaining from an awakening miniſtry, and ſpiritual converſation; and keeping company with ſleepy and ſlothful profeſſors, or the men of the world: and often it ariſes from eaſe, peace, and liberty; and ſometimes from long watchfulneſs, and waiting for the bridegroom's coming; in which, being diſappointed, ſuch a frame of ſpirit enſues: and alſo in the fooliſh virgins it intends great carnal ſecurity in themſelves; a reſt and confidence in their external profeſſion; and a laying aſide all thoughts of Chriſt, and his coming to judgment: for a difference there is between the ſleep and ſlumbering of the one and of the other; the wiſe virgins are children of the day, and not of the night; tho' they ſleep, their hearts wake, and they ſleep with grace in their hearts; neither of which can be ſaid of the fooliſh virgins, or formal profeſſors: as to the phraſeology here uſed, the Jews would diſtinguiſh upon it, for they make a difference between ſlumbering and ſleeping: "they do not diſmiſs (the company) after the paſſover with the ſweet-meats: if ſome "of them ſleep, they may eat, but if all of them, "they may not eat. R. Joſe ſays, נתנמנמו, if "they ſlumber they may eat; נרדמו, if they ſleep "they may not eat[n]:" which Maimonides thus[o] explains, "if they ſlumber; that is, if they begin to "ſleep, but are not yet over-whelmed with ſleep, "but hear when others ſpeak to them, and anſwer "immediately to them that call them: if they "ſleep; if they are oppreſſed with a deep ſleep." Tho' the phraſe ניים ושכיב, which I ſhould chuſe to render, he ſlumbered and ſlept, is often ſaid[p] of the ſame perſon, without any diſtinction, as here.

Ver. 6. And at midnight there was a cry made, &c.] Which is no other than the following notice of the bridegroom's coming, expreſſed in theſe words: behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him; which ſuppoſes that then all things will be ready for his coming: all things reſpecting this world; all the ſtrange and ſurprizing events that were to come to paſs, before the coming of Chriſt, will now be accompliſhed; an end put to all the monarchies of the earth; and all the preparations in nature, for the burning of the world finiſhed: all things reſpecting the ungodly of the world; they will have filled up the meaſure of their iniquities, and finiſhed their perſecutions of the ſaints: and all things reſpecting the elect of God, they will be all born, and born again; they will have gone thro' all their ſufferings for Chriſt, and have all their graces tried and perfected; for when the bridegroom comes, he will come to eſpouſe them openly to himſelf, for which they muſt be prepared and adorned, and to take them to himſelf, that they may be for ever with him. It alſo ſuppoſes, that his coming will be very nigh at hand; it was ſo repreſented long ago; it is greatly deſired by the ſaints to be quickly; and it will be in a very ſhort time after this notice: and it ſignifies that there will be ſome notice given of it, a little before he comes; and that partly for the glory of his majeſty; and that his own people, the wiſe virgins, may be ready; and that the fooliſh ones may be left without excuſe: and this being prefaced with a behold, ſhews the certainty of his coming, than which nothing is more certain, and to be depended on; as appears from Enoch's prophecy, and others of the Old Teſtament; from Chriſt's own promiſe; from the teſtimony of angels; from the words of the apoſtles; and from the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper: and alſo the importance of it; for things of the greateſt moment will follow on it; ſuch as the reſurrection of the dead, the judgment of the whole world, the compleat happineſs of the ſaints, and the deſtruction of the wicked: and likewiſe, that it will be wonderful and aſtoniſhing; Chriſt will come in amazing glory, in his own, in his father's, and in the glory of the holy angels, and of his power and authority, as the judge of quick and dead. And in this notice advice is given to the virgins, go ye out to meet him; ſee Cant. iii. 11. and may intend either a going forth internally, as the wiſe virgins did in the exerciſe of grace, of faith in the coming of Chriſt, of love of his appearance, and earneſt deſire after it; or a going forth externally, as all the virgins did in a way of viſible profeſſion, taking up and trimming their lamps; or literally and corporally, as the ſaints will, that will be found alive at Chriſt's coming. Now this notice is called a cry; and refers not to the voice of Chriſt in raiſing the dead, for this will be before the coming of Chriſt, whereas that will be when he is come; and for the ſame reaſon, not to the voice of the archangel, if he can be thought to be diſtinct from Chriſt. Some think it regards a ſecret general impulſe, that will be upon the ſpirits of the people of God, with reſpect to the bridegroom's coming, but this don't ſeem to anſwer to a cry; rather it ſhould intend ſome remarkable providence, as the earthquake in Rev. xi. 13. when a tenth part of the city ſhall fall, ſeven thouſand men of note be ſlain, and the reſt affrighted; or the ſounding of the ſeventh angel, ver. 15. or, what is moſt likely, the voice of a great multitude, as of many waters, and of mighty thunderings, declaring, that the marriage of the lamb was come, and the bride ready, ch. xix. 6, 7. and will be a very loud one: it will awaken all the virgins, and will be the cry, not of one, but of many; and will be very ſudden and ſurprizing, tho' joyful to the ſaints: this cry will be made, not by the virgins, for they'll be aſleep; nor by Chriſt himſelf, for he'll not be come; nor by the angels, for they'll come with him, and not before; rather by the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are the angels ſo often ſpoken of in the book of the Revelations, who ſound the trumpets at different times, and on different occaſions; who alſo will ſound this trumpet, and give this laſt and general notice of Chriſt's coming; who will be all at once apprized of it, and give an univerſal alarm of it together in all the churches: thus, as the notice of Chriſt's firſt coming was made by the prophets, the notice of his ſecond coming will be made by the miniſters of the Goſpel: and this will be at midnight; which expreſſes the ſtate of the church a little before the coming of Chriſt: it will be a night-ſeaſon with it, a time of darkneſs both with reſpect to Goſpel-light, and the preſence of God with his people; a time of coldneſs and lukewarmneſs, as to zeal for God, love to his people, and concern for the intereſt of Chriſt; a time of drowſineſs and ſleep, of inſenſibility and ſecurity, of indolence and inactivity: ſo as the coming of Chriſt will be later than was firſt expected; it will be ſudden, and at unawares, and like a thief in the night; but whether it will be literally in the night-ſeaſon, as his firſt coming, is not certain. The Jews expect[q], that at the end of the world Moſes and Meſſiah will come in the night, the one from the wilderneſs, and the other from Rome: and they make frequent mention of God's going into the garden of Eden, or paradiſe, at midnight, and there rejoicing with good men. It is ſaid[r], that R. Eliezer and R. Joſe, "were ſitting one night, and ſtudying in the law, and about midnight, a man cried (or the cock crowed), bleſs ye the bleſſing; ſays R. Eliezer, now is the time that the holy, bleſſed God goes into the garden of Eden, to rejoice with the righteous."

[o] In Miſn. ib.

Ver. 7. Then all theſe virgins aroſe, &c.] Not out of their graves; for the righteous and wicked will not riſe together; the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt, and this firſt reſurrection will not be till Chriſt is come; nor will grace be to be had, or be thought to be had after the reſurrection; nor will there be any trimming of lamps then, in order to meet the bridegroom, for he will be come: nor out of the graves of ſin; for the wiſe virgins were not in ſuch a ſtate, and the fooliſh virgins were never brought out of it: but the meaning is, that they aroſe out of their ſleepy and ſlumbering frame. True believers may fall into a very low condition, with reſpect to the exerciſe of grace, and diſcharge of duty; but they ſhall ariſe again, for they are held and upheld by the right hand of God: it is ſometimes midnight with them, and they are fallen faſt aſleep, but they ſhall be awaked, and ariſe; which ariſing here, as it reſpects them, ſignifies, that they were thoroughly awaked, that they quitted their former place and poſture, were upon their feet, and ready to meet the bridegroom. The fooliſh virgins alſo aroſe; which may intend ſome awakenings of conſcience, and reformation of life, and a more diligent attendance on duties and ordinances; all which they did to make them meet for Chriſt, and to obtain ſalvation; but after all it appears, they were deſtitute of the oil of grace: and trimmed their lamps; both wiſe and fooliſh: the former by removing what hindered the clear burning of them; by caſting off the works of darkneſs, and cauſing the light of good works to ſhine before men, in the diſcharge of them, from a principle of grace; and chiefly by applying to Chriſt for freſh ſupplies of the oil of grace, to fill their lamps, revive their light and heat, and keep them burning: and the latter, only by a few outward decorations, and external performances; to make their outward profeſſion of religion look as bright as poſſibly they could.

Ver. 8. And the fooliſh ſaid unto the wiſe, give us of your oil, &c.] A graceleſs perſon may be able to ſee the grace of God in others, be convinced of it, and acknowledge it, as theſe fooliſh virgins did: they ſaw that the wiſe virgins had oil, that is, grace; this they knew by the bright burning of their lamps, by their readineſs in trimming them, and that in a different way from them; by their ſedate compoſure of mind, and confidence of ſoul, notwithſtanding the midnight cry; and by their ardent and affectionate deſire to meet the bridegroom. A graceleſs perſon may alſo ſee a need of grace: theſe fooliſh virgins had no ſuch ſenſe, when they firſt took up their profeſſion; they went on a long time in a courſe of religion, without any thoughts of it; and the ſenſe they had now was not of the need of it, in the veſſels of their hearts, but in their lamps only; nor was it from the Spirit of God, but thro' the ſurprize and terror of the midnight cry. Such perſons may alſo be deſirous of the grace of God; not becauſe of the intrinſic nature and worth of it, nor for the ſervice and glory of God, but from a mere principle of ſelf-love; and when they can go on no longer with the lamp of profeſſion; and then they deſire to have it any where, rather than from Chriſt, as did theſe fooliſh virgins; and who betrayed their folly by applying to ſaints for it. Had they aſked their advice in this their diſtreſs, it would have been wiſely done; or had they deſired their prayers for them; or that they would impart ſome ſpiritual inſtructions to them; but to aſk their grace of them was exceeding fooliſh; when grace only comes from God, who is the God of all grace, thro' Chriſt as mediator, in whom the fulneſs of it dwells, and by the Spirit, who is a Spirit of grace and of ſupplication; but is never to be had from men, no, not from the beſt men on earth, nor from the angels in heaven. The reaſon of this their requeſt follows, for our lamps are gone out; which may be ſaid to be when profeſſors neglect the duties of religion, drop, or deny the doctrines of the Goſpel formerly profeſſed by them, become bad in their principles, and ſcandalous in their lives, or withdraw themſelves from the churches of Chriſt; tho' neither of theſe ſeem to be the caſe here: wherefore this going out of their lamps ſeems to intend the inſufficiency of an external profeſſion of religion to meet the bridegroom, and ſupport a perſon with confidence and intrepidity in his preſence: theſe fooliſh virgins now ſaw, when too late, that their lamps availed them nothing; they were gone out, and become uſeleſs and unprofitable, becauſe they had not the oil of grace with them; or what they had was only counterfeit grace, or only an appearance of it; a mere form of godlineſs, without its power; or only gifts which are periſhable, and now failed, ceaſed, and were vaniſhing away; wherefore this is no inſtance of the loſs of true grace, nor at all militates againſt the perſeverance of the ſaints.

Ver. 9. But the wiſe anſwered, ſaying, not ſo, &c.] A flat denial; and which ſprung not from want of compaſſion; for the ſaints are taught not only to compaſſionate one another, and to pity fallen profeſſors, but even to regard their very enemies in diſtreſs; nor from a narrow, niggardly ſpirit, ſince ſuch are directed and exhorted to communicate freely, both in things temporal and ſpiritual, they are capable of, to them that are in need, and even to lay down their lives for the brethren; nor from an uncivil, moroſe, and churliſh diſpoſition; or from a careleſs and indolent one, as being unconcerned what became of theſe perſons; but from an indignation at the honour put upon them, and the ſlight put upon God and Chriſt, and the Spirit of grace: ſaints know that all grace comes from Father, Son, and Spirit; and frankly own, that what they have is from thence; and they give God all the glory of it, and can't bear any ſuch application to them for it, as this; but ſhew the ſame ſpirit, as Paul and Barnabas did, when the Lyſtrians were going to ſacrifice to them. Moreover, this denial aroſe from a conſciouſneſs of inſufficiency to help them in this reſpect: it is the ſaints mercy that they can't loſe the grace they have, nor can any take it away from them, and it is not in their power to give it away; nor can any be ſanctified, or juſtified, or ſaved, by another man's grace: the reaſon alledged by them is, leſt there be not enough for us and you: ſaints have a large abundance of grace communicated to them; ſome have more, others leſs; at leaſt it ſo appears, as to exerciſe; but they that have the moſt, have none to ſpare, and ſee their need of more; and aſk for more, being ſenſible that preſent grace in them, is not ſufficient for time to come, but grace in Chriſt only; wherefore their anſwer, and the reaſon of it, were like themſelves, wiſe; and this deſtroys the notion of ſupererogation: but go ye rather to them that ſell, and buy for yourſelves. This advice is thought by ſome, to be ironical and ſarcaſtic; but it ſeems rather to be ſerious, and in good earneſt; directing them to go to proper perſons for grace; not to men, even miniſters of the Goſpel, nor to angels; but to God the Father, the Father of mercies, and God of all comfort, who ſits on a throne of grace, and gives it liberally to them that come to him for it through Chriſt, and aſk it of him; and to Chriſt the Mediator, who is full of grace and truth, and counſels perſons to buy of him gold tried in the fire, grace more precious than the pureſt gold; and to the Spirit of grace, who gives it to all ſeverally as he will: who are ſaid to ſell, and men to buy; not in a proper ſenſe, by giving any valuable conſideration for the grace of God, which is impoſſible to be done; but in an improper ſenſe, without money and without price; or in other words, by giving and receiving freely.

[q] Targum Hieroſ. in Exod. xii. 42.

[r] Zohar in Exod. fol. 76. 4. & in Lev. fol. 21. 1. & 28. 2.

Ver. 10. And while they went to buy, &c.] The fooliſh virgins ſo far took the advice of the wiſe, as to go forth to buy oil for themſelves: they not only had ſome thoughts about it, and reſolutions to do it, but they really did go out to buy; which may deſign their attendance on the word and ordinances, where they ſtopped: they did not go to Chriſt for grace, for if they had gone directly to him, they had met him; but they went another way, and miſſed him; they took buying in a proper ſenſe, and thought to have obtained grace by their own works: wherefore, though they went to buy, they did not, nor could they, their attempts were vain and fruitleſs; and while they were employing themſelves in this way, to no purpoſe, the bridegroom came; in perſon, to raiſe the ſaints that were dead, to change the living ones, to eſpouſe them all openly, and take them all to himſelf, and to judge the world; for this muſt be underſtood of his ſecond and perſonal coming: and they that were ready; not by a mere profeſſion of religion, or ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances, or by an external righteouſneſs, or negative holineſs, and abſtinence from the groſſer ſins of life, or an outward humiliation for them, or by a dependance on the abſolute mercy of God; but through being clothed with the wedding garment, waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, being regenerated and ſanctified, and having the oil of grace in their hearts, a ſpiritual knowledge of Chriſt, faith in him, and intereſt in him: ſuch are ready for every good work, and to give a reaſon of their faith and hope, to confeſs Chriſt, and ſuffer for his ſake; and are ready for death and eternity, and to meet the bridegroom, and for the marriage of the Lamb, to enter into the new Jeruſalem. The Jews ſay [s], that "the Jeruſalem of the world "to come, is not as the Jeruſalem of this world: "the Jeruſalem of this world, every one may go "into it that will; but the Jeruſalem of the world "to come, none may go into it, but המזומנין לה, "thoſe that are prepared for it." And theſe went in with him to the marriage: the Syriac reads it, into the wedding houſe, and the Perſic, the nuptial parlour; the marriage-chamber, where the bridegroom and bride celebrated their marriage; kept their marriage-feaſt; and where were received the bride-maids, and friends of the bridegroom, called in Talmudic language, בני עלייה, the children of the bride-chamber [t]. Such as were theſe that went in: and the marriage may here denote, either heaven, Chriſt's Father's houſe, and the manſions of glory in it, which the ſaints ſhall enter into along with Chriſt; or the act of celebrating the marriage between Chriſt and the Lamb, and the whole body of the elect; when theſe virgins will not be bare ſpectators and witneſſes, but parties concerned; and which will only be a publication before his Father and the holy angels, of what has been already done: for theſe were ſecretly betrothed to him from everlaſting, and were particularly eſpouſed to him, one by one, in converſion; but it now will be declared of them all together, that they are his ſpouſe and bride: or the marriage-feaſt, or ſupper, is here intended; and which deſigns not the proviſion of the Goſpel in Chriſt's houſe, or church on earth, in general, nor the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper in particular, nor the feaſt in the latter day, but the heavenly glory; and happy are thoſe, who are called to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb, and who will be ready when he comes: theſe ſhall partake of it; they'll go in with Chriſt, and be for ever with him, and never return more. And the door was ſhut; which expreſſes both the happy and comfortable caſe of the wiſe virgins, and the ſad and miſerable ſtate of the fooliſh ones. The door being ſhut, the wiſe virgins will at once be freed from the diſagreeable company of profane ſinners, and formal profeſſors; their ſtate and condition will be everlaſtingly ſettled, their communion with Chriſt will be free and uninterrupted, and that for ever; no enemy of their ſouls can follow them, to give them any diſturbance; and they ſhall never return to a ſtate of ſin, ſorrow, and imperfection: and it alſo repreſents, the woeful and miſerable condition of the fooliſh virgins, in whatſoever ſenſe the word door is taken. The church is a door, Cant. viii. 9. and an open one, to receive in proper perſons, and will be ſo more eſpecially in the latter day; but this will be ſhut, when all the elect of God are called and gathered in; there will be no longer a church-ſtate on earth, or ordinances.——Chriſt himſelf is called a door, John x. 7. he is the door into the church, and into the bleſſings of grace, and into heaven itſelf; and which ſtands open in the miniſtry of the word, to receive ſinners, but will now be ſhut; Chriſt will be no more preached, and held forth in the word, as God's ſalvation: and there is the door of faith, Acts xiv. 27. which is the Goſpel, ſo called, becauſe faith is hereby let into the ſoul, and ſouls are by it let into the doctrine of faith; and this is ſometimes an open door, when miniſters have a fair opportunity of preaching it, and have freedom and liberty in it; when attention is given to it, and many ſouls are gathered in by it; and this will be ſhut when Chriſt comes; there will be no more preaching: and there is alſo the door of hope, Hoſea ii. 15. which now ſtands open, whilſt the Goſpel church-ſtate laſts: whilſt Chriſt is preached, the word and ordinances adminiſtered, and whilſt there is life, and Chriſt not yet come, there is hope of ſalvation, pardon, and eternal life; but when Chriſt comes, either by death, or at judgment, ment, and finds perſons in a graceleſs ſtate, there's then no hope: add to all this, that the door of Chriſt's heart is now open, to receive all coming ſinners; but then will be ſhut, againſt all their cries, intreaties, ad importunities: it will be ſhut by himſelf, who opens and no man ſhuts, ſhuts and no man opens; and that againſt all wicked and profane ſinners, all hypocrites and formal profeſſors; even all without his righteouſneſs, and the grace of the Spirit of God.

Ver. 11. Afterwards came alſo the other virgins, &c.] The other five virgins, as the Perſic verſion reads. The other; that were only virgins in name, not in reality; they were different from the wiſe, they were fooliſh ones; they were other than thoſe that were ready, they were unprepared ones; and in another ſituation than thoſe that entered in; they were without, they were now ſeparated from the company of the wiſe virgins, with whom they had been ſo long; and what was worſt of all, they were to be ſo for ever. Theſe alſo came; from buying oil: they went about, and came juſt as they went, without any; they came to the door of the bride-chamber, being deſirous to be let in, and hoping to partake of the marriage-feaſt, and join in the ſolemnity: but alas! they came too late, they came afterwards; after the bridegroom was come, after they that were ready had entered in, and after the door was ſhut; ſaying, Lord, Lord, open to us. They do not call him their Lord, for they had no intereſt in him, nor could they claim any; though the Syriac verſion reads it, our Lord, our Lord: they give him the title, and the bare title, without having yielded that obedience, which was due unto him. They double the word, to ſhew their importunity, earneſtneſs, ſenſe of danger, and confuſion: this title or character is the rather uſed, becauſe Chriſt will then appear more clearly to be Lord and God, and every tongue ſhall confeſs him to be ſuch: their requeſt to him is, that he would open the door unto them, and let them in: they were ſenſible that the door was ſhut, and that none but Chriſt could open it; they did not at once conclude that their caſe was deſperate, but were willing to hope the door might be opened, through their intreaties, and what they had to ſay for themſelves; for though no pleas or arguments are here mentioned, yet, as elſewhere, ſuch as theſe will be made by the fooliſh virgins; namely, propheſying in the name of Chriſt, caſting out devils in his name, doing many wonderful works in his name, hearing his word preached, and eating and drinking in his preſence; but all in vain, and to no purpoſe.

Ver. 12. But he anſwered and ſaid, &c.] The Lord and Bridegroom from within, thought fit to give them an anſwer, but an unexpected and awful one to them: verily I ſay unto you, I know you not; which muſt be underſtood in conſiſtence with the omniſcience of Chriſt: he knew their perſons, conduct, and ſtate; he knew they were fooliſh virgins, graceleſs profeſſors, who had made no account of him and his righteouſneſs; but had truſted to, and depended upon, their external profeſſion of religion: they were none of the people whom he fore-knew, or knew as his own, and loved with an everlaſting love; he never knew them as his Father's choice in him, or as his Father's gift to him; he never knew them in the everlaſting covenant, or as his ſheep, for whom he died; he never knew them believe in him, or love him; nor ever exalt his perſon, blood and ſacrifice, at his table, nor do any good work with a ſingle eye to his glory; he never approved of them, liked their perſons, or their conduct; or ever owned them as the true companions, either of his bride, or of himſelf: which anſwer implies, that as the door was ſhut, ſo it ſhould remain; there was no admittance for them, nor any to be hoped for; and it is all one as if he had ſaid, be gone, and depart hence. The Perſic verſion adds ſuch a clauſe, be gone from my door.

Ver. 13. Watch therefore, &c.] In ordinances, in prayer, publick and private, in hearing the word, at the Lord's ſupper, and in every religious exerciſe; over the heart, the thoughts and affections of it; over words, actions, life, and converſation; and againſt all ſin and unbelief, ſatan's temptations, the world, and its charms and ſnares, falſe teachers and their doctrines, and for the bridegroom's coming. This is the uſe and application of the whole parable, and ſhews the general deſign of it: the reaſon to enforce watchfulneſs follows: for ye know neither the day nor the hour; of death, or of judgment, or of the coming of the Son of man, of one or the other; for 'tis added, wherein the Son of man cometh: that he will come is certain, and that quickly; the time is fixed, but when it will be is unknown; and therefore it becomes us to be on our watch and guard. This laſt clauſe is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and was wanting in three of Beza's copies, but is in moſt Greek copies, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and ſeems to be neceſſary.

Ver. 14. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man travelling, &c.] Our Lord adds another parable to illuſtrate the Goſpel diſpenſation, or its viſible church-ſtate; or the ſtate of things reſpecting the church of Chriſt, before, and at his ſecond coming, and during the interval between his aſcenſion and that: for by the man here, is meant Chriſt, who in the everlaſting covenant agreed to become man, was propheſied of as ſuch, frequently appeared in human form, under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation; and in the fullneſs of time, really became man; though he was not a mere man, but was God as well as man; having all the perfections and fullneſs of the godhead dwelling bodily in him: this man is ſaid to travel into a far country; by which heaven is deſigned, and is ſo called, not only becauſe of its great diſtance from the earth, and which is very great indeed; but becauſe the better country and land afar off, is out of ſight; and what views we have of it, are very diſtant ones; and is afar off, in reſpect of our ſtate of pilgrimage in this world, in which whilſt Chriſt was here, he was a pilgrim and a ſtranger too; who might be ſaid to be as a man travelling, whilſt he was in it, and when going out of it, and aſcending to heaven: he came from thence, and ſtaid here a while, walking up and down, and doing good; and when he had finiſhed what he came about, he aſcended on high, went to his God and Father, entered into heaven, where he is received until the times of the reſtitution of all things: who called his own ſervants; before he took his journey, to commit ſome things to their truſt and management; and to give them ſome inſtructions how to behave during his abſence: for, according to the Jewiſh [u] canons, "a maſter that had a mind to go out of the land (of Iſrael) could not take his ſervant with him, unleſs he pleaſed; and this is a rule at all times, even at this time, that the land is in the hand of the Gentiles." And here no mention is made of any going with him, only how they were to be employed whilſt he was gone: by his own ſervants are meant, not all mankind; for though they are all in ſome ſenſe his ſervants, or ought to be, yet they are not ſo called in ſcripture, much leſs with ſuch an emphaſis, his own ſervants; and beſides, more than what are in the kingdom of heaven, or Goſpel church-ſtate, cannot be intended; ſince the parable reaches to, and concerns no other: nor all the elect of God only, or all are not the elect of God that are deſigned; for though theſe are the ſervants of Chriſt, and his own peculiarly, yet all intruſted with talents, are not ſuch; one of theſe was wicked, ſlothful, graceleſs, and at laſt was eternally loſt, and periſhed; which is not true of any one of the elect: but miniſters of the word are here meant, who are eminently the ſervants of Chriſt, his own, whom he has called, qualified, commiſſioned, and ſent forth; for the miniſters of the word, whether faithful or ſlothful, good or bad, are in a very lively manner deſcribed in this parable, which is a diſtinct one from the former; for whereas that gives an account of the different members of the viſible church, this deſcribes the ſeveral miniſters of it: nor can it be any objection to this ſenſe of it, that theſe ſervants are all of them ſaid to be his own ſervants, and called, commiſſioned, and gifted by him; ſince Judas, as well as the reſt, was called, ordained, qualified, and ſent forth by Chriſt, as an apoſtle. And delivered unto them his goods; the Goſpel, that rich treaſure of divine truths, the diſpenſation of it, and gifts to preach it; all which are Chriſt's goods and his gifts, and not man's; and which was in a very eminent manner done, when Chriſt aſcended on high, and received gifts for, and gave them unto men. Juſt before it, as he was ready to go, he gathered his diſciples together; he renewed and enlarged their commiſſion to preach the Goſpel; and quickly after it, gave them greater and larger gifts of the Spirit than before; and has been ever ſince giving miniſterial gifts to men, to ſome more, others leſs, and which are ſignified by the talents following.

[u] Maimon Hilch. Abadim, c. 8. §. 9.

Ver. 15. And unto one he gave five talents, &c.] A talent with the Jews, if of ſilver, was according to Brerewood [w], of the value of 375 l. of our money; according to Biſhop Cumberland, 353 l. 11 s. 10 d. halfpenny; and if of gold, was equal to 4500 l. and according to the latter, 5075 l. 15 s. 7 d. halfpenny: ſo that five of theſe talents, if of ſilver, were 1875 l. and if of gold, 22,500 l. according to Brerewood; a very large ſum, for one ſervant to be intruſted with. The Perſic verſion reads pounds, as in Luke xix. 13. By theſe talents, ſpecial grace is not meant; for the parable ſpeaks not of what was wrought in theſe ſervants, but of what was committed to their truſt, and of what might lie uſeleſs by them, and be taken away from them; whereas ſpecial grace is internal, ſomething implanted in man, and is an incorruptible ſeed, that can never be loſt, or will be taken away; and it is certain, that one of theſe ſervants had not ſpecial and ſaving grace, but was wicked, ſlothful, and unprofitable, and was caſt into utter darkneſs: but outward gifts are deſigned by the talents; and theſe not merely the gifts of natural knowledge and riches, the gifts of nature and of providence; nor the external miniſtry of the word, Goſpel, ordinances, and opportunities of enjoying them; but miniſterial gifts, ſuch as fit and qualify men to be preachers of the Goſpel; as appears from their name, talents; they being the greateſt gifts for uſefulneſs and ſervice in the church, as talents were the greateſt of weights and coins among the Jews; from the nature of them, being what may be improved or loſt, and for which men are accountable; from the perſons to whom they were delivered, the ſervants of Chriſt; from the time of their delivery, when Chriſt went into a far country, to heaven, when he aſcended on high, and received gifts for men, and gave them to them; and from the unequal diſtribution of them, being given to ſome more, and others leſs; all which perfectly agree with miniſterial gifts: for it follows, to another two, and to another one; and theſe were given to every man, according to his ſeveral ability, or according to his own power; his proper power that belonged to him, as the Lord of theſe ſervants: for the ſenſe is, not that he gave theſe talents, or gifts, according to the different capacities, abilities, ſtations, and employments of theſe men; but according to that power and authority, which he, as Mediator, had, to diſpenſe theſe gifts ſeverally as he would; to ſome more, others leſs, as he knew would beſt ſubſerve his intereſt and kingdom: and ſtraightway took his journey; after he had ſignified, that all power in heaven and earth was given to him, by virtue of which he ordered them to go into all the world, and preach his Goſpel, and adminiſter his ordinances; for which he had, and would abundantly qualify them; with a promiſe of his preſence with them to the end of the world; he took his leave of them, bleſſed them, and was parted from them, and went up into heaven.

Ver. 16. Then he that had received the five talents, &c.] The largeſt meaſure of gifts; an account is firſt given of him, how he behaved, and conducted in his Lord's abſence, and what uſe he made of the gifts beſtowed upon him: this muſt be underſtood, not of a ſingle man, but of that ſort of the ſervants of Chriſt, who have the greateſt miniſterial gifts: he went; it denotes immediate application to buſineſs, and ſignifies that ſuch ſervants went according to their commiſſion, preached the Goſpel to every creature, and adminiſtred the ordinances to proper ſubjects; they went directly, as ſoon as they had their talents; they did not ſtay to conſult with fleſh and blood, whether it would be for their intereſt and credit or no; they did not ſtick at any difficulties and diſcouragements, nor were deterred by the croſs, reproaches, and perſecutions; but went forth with courage and boldneſs, not in their own name and ſtrength, but in the name and ſtrength of Chriſt, who ſent them, and promiſed them his preſence and aſſiſtance, on which they depended: and traded with the ſame; with the five talents, or their miniſterial gifts. The miniſters of the Goſpel are traders, not in their own name, nor on their own ſtock, and for themſelves, but for Chriſt, and for the good of immortal ſouls: they cloſely attend unto, and work at, their buſineſs and employment; by conſtant reading, and diligent ſearch into the word of God; by ſtudious meditation on it; by frequent prayer; and continual preaching the Goſpel, and adminiſtring ordinances; and their ſucceſs follows: and made them other five talents; that is, increaſed in ſpiritual knowledge; gifts were improved and enlarged; a greater ſtock of divine things were laid in; and many ſouls gained to Chriſt: ſuch are they whom Chriſt has ordained to go forth, and bear and bring forth fruit in their miniſtry, and whoſe fruit remain.

[w] De Nummis Jud. c. 4.

Ver. 17. And likewiſe he that received two, &c.] Talents, or a leſſer meaſure of miniſterial gifts: he alſo gained other two; he worked and laboured, and traded, in proportion to the gifts he had received; and his improvements and ſucceſs, under a divine bleſſing, were anſwerable.

Ver. 18. But he that received one, &c.] Talent, or the leaſt degree of gifts, for the miniſtry of the word: went and digged in the earth, and hid his Lord's money. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, ſilver, and the Ethiopic, gold; but whether theſe talents were ſilver or gold, is not certain. Where he buried it; that is, he neglected the gift that was in him, he made no uſe of it, either to his own advantage, or to the good of others, and the intereſt of his Lord; he either never went into the miniſtry, or if he did, he left it as Demas did, having too great affection for the world, and the things of it: he minded earth and earthly things, and employed himſelf in them, and not in his maſter's work and ſervice. The phraſe ſeems to point out the earthly mindedneſs of the man, his worldly diſpoſition, and his eager purſuit after the things of life; which were the reaſon why he diſregarded his talent, and made no uſe of his miniſterial gifts: he could not deny worldly ſelf, nor leave all to follow Chriſt; but rather than drop the world, he choſe to bury his talent in it: it was his Lord's money and not his own, and he was accountable to him for it, and ſhould have uſed it in another manner.

Ver. 19. After a long time, the Lord of theſe ſervants cometh, &c.] Either in a providential way, by a fit of illneſs, or in a time of perſecution, and awakens the conſcience, and calls them to give an account of their ſtewardſhip; or by death, when their trading or working time is over, and they become accountable for their whole conduct, throughout their miniſtrations; or rather, at the laſt judgment, when all muſt appear before the judge of quick and dead, miniſters as well as others, and give an account of their gifts, and the uſe of them, to their Lord, from whom they have received them, and whoſe ſervants they profeſs to be. Which coming of his is after a long time; for ſeventeen hundred years are now paſt, and he is not yet come; which is a long time in man's account, though not in God's account, with whom a thouſand years are as one day; and in the apprehenſion of the ſaints, who love, long for, and haſten to, the coming of Chriſt, are deſirous of it, and impatient for it. But though it may ſeem long, he'll certainly come: he ſtays long, to give time to his laborious miniſters to exerciſe all thoſe gifts he has beſtowed upon them, and to leave ſlothful ones without excuſe. It is not to be inferred from his delay, that he will not come: he is not unmindful of his promiſe, or ſlack concerning it; though he tarries long, he'll not tarry beyond the appointed time; at the end he will come, though it is long firſt: and reckoneth with them; what talents they received from him, what they had done with them, and what they had gained by them. The things that miniſters of the word are entruſted with, are things of value; the Goſpel is a pearl of great price, or rich treaſure, that is put into their earthen veſſels; it is the unſearchable riches of Chriſt; gifts to preach it are ſpiritual, and preferable to gifts of nature, and providence; and the ſouls of men committed to their care, are of great worth and eſteem with Chriſt; nor are any of theſe their own, but Chriſt's, and therefore muſt give an account of them: this ſhews both the awfulneſs and uſefulneſs of the Goſpel miniſtry.

Ver. 20. And ſo he that had received five talents, &c.] Or the greateſt gifts: as this man is the firſt to whom his Lord gave any talents, and the firſt that went and traded with them; he is alſo the firſt that is reckoned with; who came and brought other five talents: he came freely and chearfully, with a holy confidence and intrepidity of mind, and gave in his account very readily, both of what he had received, and of what he had gained; ſaying, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me five talents, behold I have gained beſides them five talents more. True miniſters of the Goſpel frankly own, that what gifts they have are delivered to them by Chriſt; and ſuch are willing that he ſhould have all returned to him, principal and increaſe: it is not to be imagined that this will be ſaid in ſo many expreſs words by them, nor will there be any need thereof; for Chriſt will not be ignorant of what they have been doing, and of what uſe they have been of; but the ſenſe is, that as all will be manifeſt to Chriſt the ſearcher of hearts, with whom they have to do, ſo the account will ſtand fair and open; and it will be ſeen and known by all, that ſuch and ſuch faithful miniſters of Chriſt, have behaved in this agreeable manner, and have been thus and thus ſerviceable in his intereſt.

Ver. 21. His Lord ſaid unto him, well done, &c.] Goſpel miniſters do not ſay ſo to themſelves; they know they can do nothing well of themſelves, and when they have done all they can, they own they are but unprofitable ſervants; they acknowledge all they do is owing to the grace of God, and ſtrength of Chriſt, and that no praiſe is due to them; nor do they expect or ſeek for ſuch eulogiums from men: but this is ſaid, to ſhew how acceptable a diligent laborious miniſtry is to Chriſt; and to encourage induſtry in the preachers of the word, whoſe works will follow them, though not go before them: thou good and faithful ſervant: ſuch may be ſaid to be good, who have the grace of God implanted in them, ſome good thing in them towards the Lord God; a good work begun in their hearts, without which men can never be good miniſters of Chriſt; and who have good abilities, not only natural and acquired parts, but miniſterial gifts; which are the good things committed to them, and that dwell in them, which they are to keep by the Holy Ghoſt; and who make a good uſe of them, and freely communicate and impart their ſpiritual gifts, as good ſtewards of the manifold grace of God; and who being employed in a good work, as that of the miniſtry is, do it well, and abide in it: and ſuch may be ſaid to be faithful, who preach the pure Goſpel of Chriſt, and the whole of it; who neither mix it with the inventions of men, nor keep back any part of it from the ſaints; who ſeek not to pleaſe men, but their Lord and Maſter; and not their own honour and applauſe, but his glory; and who abide by him and his cauſe, notwithſtanding all reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions. In ſuch language as this, the Jews uſed to praiſe their ſervants, "הוי איש טוב ונאמן, O man! good and "faithful, and from whoſe labour one had [x] profit." Thou haſt been faithful over a few things; not as conſidered in themſelves; for the truths of the Goſpel which miniſters are intruſted with, and in which they are faithful, are neither few, nor inconſiderable; they are the manifold grace of God, and the unſearchable riches of Chriſt: nor are their gifts mean and deſpicable; nor are their labours worthleſs, and of no account; but in compariſon of the unſeen and eternal things of glory, which are prepared and laid up for them; ſo that there's no proportion between their works, and the glory that ſhall be revealed in them: I will make thee ruler over many things; either on earth, where they ſhall reign with Chriſt a thouſand years; and when the kingdom, and the dominion, and the greatneſs of it, will be given to the ſaints of the moſt high; and when they who have turned many to righteouſneſs, ſhall ſhine as the ſtars in that kingdom: or elſe in heaven, where as kings, they ſhall inherit the kingdom prepared for them, ſit down with Chriſt in his throne, and wear the never fading crown of glory, life, and righteouſneſs: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord; not their own, or what was of their own procuring, but their Lord's; which Jehovah the Father has prepared for his people, and gives unto them; which the Son poſſeſſes for them, and will beſtow on them; and which the Holy Spirit makes them meet for; and which will chiefly lie in the enjoyment of Chriſt their Lord: this happineſs of theirs is expreſſed by joy, which will be full and perfect, and without any interruption or mixture; will be unſpeakable and glorious, and continue for ever; for when the ſaints ſhall enter into it, as into an houſe, or manſion, they ſhall take poſſeſſion of it, and abide in it for ever. It was uſual with the Jews to expreſs the happineſs of the world to come by joy; not only that which is from the Lord, but that with which he himſelf rejoices with his people; for they ſay [y], "there's no joy "before, or in the preſence of the holy bleſſed "God, ſince the world was created, כאותה שמחה "like that joy, with which he will rejoice with the "righteous, in the world to come."

Ver. 22. He alſo that had received two talents, &c.] A leſſer degree of miniſterial gifts; and who as he received next to the other, and was the next, who in proportion to what he had received, had traded and gained, he is mentioned in the next place, as giving in his account; who came and ſaid, Lord, thou deliveredſt unto me two talents, behold I have gained two other talents beſides them: his account, abating the ſum and gains, is given in, in the ſame form as the other.

Ver. 23. His Lord ſaid unto him, &c.] The ſame words as he did to the other ſervant, well done good and faithful ſervant, thou haſt been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord: where the ſame commendation is made, and the ſame characters are given, as before; for a man that has leſſer gifts, and is of leſs uſefulneſs, may be as good and as faithful in his ſervice, and as praiſeworthy, as a man of greater gifts, and more extenſive uſefulneſs; and the ſame happineſs is beſtowed on one, as the other, which in neither is of merit, but of grace; and whatever difference may be made between the ſaints, or between one miniſter and another in the Millennium ſtate, yet in the ultimate glory, their joy, bliſs, and happineſs, will be alike. It is not to be eſtabliſhed from this parable, that man has a power to improve the ſtock of ſufficient grace given him, and by his improvement procure eternal happineſs to himſelf; ſince ſuch a ſtock of grace is not deſigned by the talents; nor is that either gotten or improved, by the induſtry of man; nor does the parable ſuggeſt, that men by their improvement of the talents committed to them, do, or can, procure eternal happineſs: good and faithful ſervants are indeed commended by Chriſt, and he graciouſly promiſes great things to them, which are not proportioned to their deſerts; for whereas they have been faithful over a few things, he promiſes to make them rulers over many things; and bids them enter into the joy of their Lord; into the joy, which of his grace and goodneſs, he has provided for them, and not which they have merited and procured for themſelves: nor is it to be inferred from hence, that true grace once given, or implanted, may be taken away or loſt; for the parable ſpeaks not of what is wrought in men, but of goods and talents beſtowed on them, and committed to their truſt; which may be loſt or taken away, or be wrapped up in a napkin, and lie uſeleſs by them; when true grace is the incorruptible ſeed which never dies, but always remains; that good part which ſhall never be taken away nor loſt, but is inſeparably connected with eternal glory.

Ver. 24. Then he which had received the one talent came, &c.] For he that has the leaſt gifts, is accountable for them; and therefore ought to make uſe of them to the good of his fellow-creatures, and the intereſt of his Lord and Maſter; though theſe often lie neglected, and frivolous, and even wicked pretences are formed, to excuſe ſuch neglect, as here: and ſaid, Lord, I knew that thou art an hard man: he calls him Lord, though he had not ſerved him, and pretends he knew him; but if he had, he would have had a true affection for him, faith in him, and would have obſerved his commands; and he would alſo have appeared altogether lovely to him, and of an amiable character, and not in ſuch a light as he repreſents him; which makes it a clear caſe, that he was ignorant of him, or he would never have ſaid, that he was an hard, ſevere, or auſtere man; one very difficult of being pleaſed, cruel and uncompaſſionate to his ſervants, unjuſtly witholding from them what was due unto them, and rigorouſly exacting ſervice that could not be performed by them: all which is the reverſe of Chriſt's true character; who accepts of the meaneſt ſervices of his people; and takes what is done, though ever ſo little, as even a cup of cold water, given to the leaſt of his diſciples, as done to himſelf; is merciful and compaſſionate, both to the bodies and ſouls of men; and is not unrighteous to forget any labour of love, ſhewn to him or his; and makes his ſtrength perfect in the weakneſs of his ſervants, and his grace always to be ſufficient for them: but this wicked ſervant goes on to traduce him, and adds, reaping where thou haſt not ſown, and gathering where thou haſt not ſtrawed: which ſeem to be proverbial expreſſions; ſee John iv. 37. deſcribing either a covetous man, that is deſirous of that which does not belong to him; or an hard maſter, that requires work to be done, and gives neither tools nor matter to work with; like the Egyptian taſk-maſters, who demanded the full tale of bricks, but gave no ſtraw: whereas Chriſt is neither niggardly, nor exacting; he requires nothing that is not his, and gives his grace, and beſtows his gifts liberally, and upbraids not; nor does he call any to ſervice, of whatſoever ſort, but he gives them grace, ſtrength, and abilities, proportionate to it; and as he has promiſed, he makes it good, that as their day is, ſo ſhall their ſtrength be.

Ver. 25. And I was afraid, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, to negotiate with thy money: he was afraid, leſt by trading he ſhould not gain what his Lord expected; and moſt of all, leſt he ſhould loſe the talent itſelf; and dreaded his Lord's auſterity, ſhould that be the caſe, fearing that he would have no mercy on him. This was his pretence; but the true cauſes were ſloth and earthly-mindneſs: and went and hid his talent in the earth; that it might not be loſt, tho' it lay uſeleſs, and turned to no account. The Arabic verſion renders it, and buried thy goods in the earth: he owned the money to be his Lord's, and thought he did very well, and enough, that he preſerved it, tho' he had not improved it; and this he hoped would be a ſufficient excuſe, and on which he laid the greateſt ſtreſs: lo! there thou haſt that is thine: he again acknowledges, that the gifts he had were not his own, but his maſter's; and whereas he had kept them entire, as he had received them, and there was the full ſum he was intruſted with, he hoped no more would be required: but it is not ſufficient to retain what is given, it muſt be made uſe of and improved; for every ſpiritual gift is given to profit with: and beſides, there ſeems to be a degree of rudeneſs in theſe words; he does not bring the talent with him, and return it, but only ſignifies that he had hid it in the earth, in ſuch a place, and there it was, where his Lord might take it, and have it again, if he pleaſed.

Ver. 26. His Lord anſwered, and ſaid unto him, &c.] Reſenting, as he well might, not only his indolence and ſloth, his neglect of his duty, and his worldly diſpoſition, but the abuſive character he had given of him, in order to cover his own wickedneſs: thou wicked and ſlothful ſervant; a very juſt character of him: he was a wicked ſervant; all men in a ſtate of nature are wicked; they lie in wickedneſs, and are under the power of the wicked one; and there are many wicked men among profeſſors of religion, and many wicked miniſters, who, tho' not openly profane, yet either truſting to their works, or doing the work of the Lord deceitfully, or wholly neglecting it, juſtly merit this character. This man's wickedneſs lay in his ſlothfulneſs, in not doing the good he might, and had gifts and abilities for; and in entertaining wrong thoughts of, and in bringing falſe charges againſt his Lord: and he might be truly ſaid to be ſlothful; ſince he took no pains to improve in ſpiritual knowledge; and inſtead of digging for that, as for ſilver and hid treaſure, dug in the earth, and hid his talent there: he neglected the gift that was in him; did not ſtir it up, or ſtudy to ſhew himſelf a workman that needeth not to be aſhamed; did not give himſelf up to reading, meditation, and prayer; but truſted to, and depended on what other men had done; ſtole away his neighbour's words, reaped that for which he had not laboured, and entered into the labours of others; and being afraid of difficulties, indulged himſelf in eaſe and pleaſure, ſerved his own belly, and not the Lord Jeſus; he gratified his worldly luſts, and had no regard to his maſter's intereſt. Thou knoweſt that I reap where I ſowed not, and gather where I have not ſtrawed: not granting that he was ſuch an one, and that his ſervant knew him to be ſuch, and had given a true character of him; but ſuppoſing he was ſuch a perſon he had wickedly repreſented him to be; he turns the argument upon him, that therefore he muſt needs know, that he expected to have had his money improved, and to have received it with an increaſe; and that upon ſuch a conſideration he ought to have been the more diligent and induſtrious, in uſing and improving his talent, and not to have indulged ſloth and idleneſs; and thus he convicts, judges, and condemns him, as a wicked, ſlothful ſervant, by his own words.

Ver. 27. Thou oughteſt therefore to have put my money to the exchangers, &c.] Trapezites, or tablers, the ſame whom the Jews[z] call שולחנים, and is the ſame word which is here uſed in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; who were ſo called from the table that ſtood before them, on which they told, and paid their money, and the exchange and uſe: hence all the Oriental verſions here read, thou ſhouldſt have put my money to, or on the table; put it into the hand of theſe bankers, where it would have been not only ſafe, as in the earth, where it was hid, but alſo would have made ſome increaſe, and would have been returned with profit; and then at my coming I ſhould have received my own with uſury: this is ſaid not ſo much to encourage uſury, tho' it may be lawful; and it ſeems to have been a practice in thoſe times to put money out to uſe upon a reaſonable intereſt; but to reprove the ſloth and inactivity of this ſervant, upon his own reaſonings, and the character he had given of his maſter.

Ver. 28. Take therefore the talent from him, &c.] This ſhews it was not ſpecial grace, which is intended by the talent; for the gifts and calling of ſpecial grace are without repentance, and are that good part which ſhall not be taken away: but gifts may fail, ceaſe, and vaniſh; they may be taken away from men, and men from them; a right arm may be clean dried up, and a right eye be utterly darkened: and give it unto him which hath ten talents; for to diligent and laborious miniſters of the word, more ſpiritual light and knowledge is given: but this is not to be underſtood, as tho' other mens gifts are, properly ſpeaking, taken away from them, and beſtowed on them; but that their gifts appear the more illuſtrious through the ſlothfulneſs of others.

Ver. 29. For unto every one that hath ſhall be given, &c.] This ſeems to be a frequent ſaying of Chriſt's, or a common maxim of his, which he made uſe of on different occaſions; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 12. and accords with ſome uſual ſayings, and proverbial expreſſions of the Jews: who ſay[a], that "the bleſſed God does not give wiſdom, but "to him that has wiſdom;" and of a man, in other reſpects, they uſe this as a common proverb[b], "if he adds or increaſes, they add unto him, and "if he leſſens, they leſſen to him:" and ſo here; he that has gifts, and talents, ſhall have an addition to them. And he ſhall have abundance, of ſpiritual gifts and knowledge; but from him that hath not, ſhall be taken away, even that which he hath. The Vulgate Latin reads, that which he ſeemed to have, and ſo reads Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and ſo it is read in ſome Greek copies; tho' it ſeems to be taken out of Luke viii. 18.

Ver. 30. And caſt ye the unprofitable ſervant, &c.] All the ſervants of Chriſt are unprofitable with reſpect to God; for no man can be profitable to him, as he that is wiſe may be profitable to himſelf, or others; or in a way of merit, ſince when they have done the moſt and beſt, they have done but their duty: but this man was unprofitable with reſpect to himſelf, having not improved the gift and talent beſtowed on him; and with reſpect to men, being of no uſe for the converſion of ſinners, or the comfort of ſaints, or the edifying of the body of Chriſt; and brought no honour to his maſter, and was of no ſervice for the ſpreading of his Goſpel, and the enlargement of his kingdom and intereſt; and therefore, as one good for nothing, the miniſtring angels are bid to take him, and caſt him into outer darkneſs, there ſhall be weeping and gnaſhing of teeth: he ſhall be turned out of doors into outer darkneſs, to be a companion of other unhappy creatures; who are alſo without, bewailing their miſerable condition, and reflecting on their paſt conduct; whilſt faithful, diligent, and laborious ſervants will be within, partaking of a rich entertainment, prepared by their Lord, accompanied with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 12.

[z] Maimon. Hilch. Shekalim, c. 1. §. 9. & c. 2. §. 1.

[b] Vajikra Rabba, §. 30. fol. 170. 2.

[a] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 55. 1. Zohar in Exod. fol. 89. 4.

Ver. 31. When the ſon of man ſhall come in his glory, &c.] What is before ſignified in the two preceding parables, is here clearly and diſtinctly repreſented without a parable: and it ſhould be obſerved, that as the foregoing parables only regard the Goſpel church-ſtate, and the miniſters and members of it, good and bad, or all ſorts of Chriſtian profeſſors; ſo this account of the laſt judgment only concerns them; for tho' all men that ever have been, are, or ſhall be in every nation under heaven, from Adam to the laſt man that will be born, will be judged; yet the part of it here deſcribed, tho' it gives a general and lively idea of the whole, only regards the judgment and final ſtate of ſuch who have made a profeſſion of the Chriſtian religion. The judge himſelf is firſt deſcribed, who is ſaid to be the ſon of man; a name by which Chriſt is frequently called, and by which he ſtiles himſelf in his ſtate of humiliation; expreſſing both the truth of his human nature, and the meanneſs of it in that ſtate: but as deſpicable as he appeared then in human nature, in the form of a ſervant, a man of ſorrows, deſpiſed by men, and ſubject to ſufferings and death; yet when he comes again, it will be in another guiſe manner: he will appear in his glory; in the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, in the glory of his proper deity, in the glory of all the perfections of the divine nature; which glory was, in a great meaſure, and from moſt perſons, hid in the days of his fleſh, tho' he was in the form of God, and equal with him. He'll alſo come in his mediatorial glory, which he had with the father before the world was, and with all the honour, power, and authority of the judge of the whole earth, to execute judgment upon men; and in the glory of his human nature, of which his transfiguration on the mount was a pledge and emblem. And all the holy angels with him; which ſplendid retinue will add to the glory of his appearance; and who will accompany him not merely, or only as his attendants, to make the ſolemnity more grand, pompous, and magnificent; but as miniſtring ſpirits, who will be employed by him in gathering all before him, ſeparating the wicked from the good, and conducting each to their ſeveral apartments of bliſs or woe: and when he thus appears, then ſhall he ſit upon the throne of his glory; or glorious throne, upon the clouds of heaven, where he'll ſit as judge, and be viſible to all.

Ver. 32. And before him ſhall be gathered all nations, &c.] That is, all that have profeſſed the chriſtian religion in all the nations of the world, whether Jews or Gentiles, high or low, rich or poor, wiſe and fooliſh, ſuch as have had greater or leſſer talents; tho' it is alſo true of every individual of mankind of every nation, tribe and family, of every ſex, age, and ſtate, that ever has been, is, or will be. Yet chriſtian profeſſors ſeem only here intended, as the following diſtinction of them, their final ſtate, and the reaſons of it ſhew. This collection of them before Chriſt, the righteous judge, will be made by the holy angels, who will come with him for this purpoſe; and being mighty, as they are, will be able to accompliſh ſo great a work; and eſpecially as being under the direction, influence, and authority of ſo divine, glorious, and illuſtrious a perſon, as the ſon of man will then to all appear to be. And he ſhall ſeparate them one from another; as a ſhepherd divideth his ſheep from the goats: they ſhall be gathered before him, as they were together in their viſible church-ſtate, as being all under a profeſſion of religion; ſome wiſe, ſome fooliſh virgins; ſome ſheep, and others goats; ſome induſtrious, diligent, faithful, and laborious ſervants; others wicked, ſlothful, and unprofitable ones; many of whom paſs undiſtinguiſhed and undiſcovered now: but then the judge, who is of quick underſtanding, will eaſily diſcern the one from the other; ſuch as have the oil of grace in the veſſels of their hearts, together with their lamps, from ſuch as have only the outward viſible lamp of a profeſſion, but deſtitute of the grace of God; and good and faithful ſervants, who have made a right uſe of their gifts, from ſuch who have been negligent, careleſs, and remiſs; and tho' theſe have been folded together, ſheep and goats, in the ſheep-fold of the church, where they have all bore the character of the ſheep of Chriſt; yet now when the chief ſhepherd appears, who knows his own ſheep, and calls them by name, he'll as eaſily ſeparate the one from the other, and more ſo, than any ſhepherd, among men, can part a flock conſiſting of ſheep and goats. Hypocrites in Zion ſhall now be no more, nor ſinners ſtand any longer in the congregation of the righteous, nor both together as one body, and on one ſide in judgment.

Ver. 33. And he ſhall ſet the ſheep on his right hand, &c.] That is, the elect of God, and true believers, ſuch as have the grace of God truly implanted in them; the ſheep the father gave unto Chriſt, and made his care and charge, whom he, as the good ſhepherd laid down his life for; and who know his voice in effectual calling, and follow him in the way of his ordinances and appointments; and are comparable to ſheep for their meekneſs and innocence, their ſimplicity and uſefulneſs, and their harmleſs and inoffenſive lives, and converſations: theſe Chriſt will ſet on his right hand, as a token of his affection for them, and a mark of reſpect and honour ſhewn them, and as a pledge of that exaltation and glory he will be about to raiſe them to. But the goats on the left; that is, the fooliſh virgins, wicked, and ſlothful ſervants, graceleſs profeſſors, who, becauſe of the impurity of their hearts, the filthineſs of their lives, and their offenſiveneſs to Chriſt, are compared to goats: theſe he'll place at his left hand, in token of his diſaffection for them, as a brand of diſgrace upon them, and as an intimation of that diſhonour and miſerable condition they will quickly be in. Theſe different ſituations plainly pre-ſignify how things will go with each, that one will be acquitted, and made happy, the other will be condemned, and become miſerable. Agreeable to which the Jews ſay [c], that there is a right hand and a left hand with the Lord: they that are on the right hand, are ſuch as have done well, and are לזכות, for abſolution; and they that are on the left hand are criminals, and are לחובה.

[c] Jarchi in Gen. i. 26. Kimchi in 1 Kings xxii. 19. Lex. Cabaliſt. p. 132. Zohar in Numb. fol. 93. 4.

לחובה, for condemnation. Some think the alluſion is to the two Scribes in the ſanhedrim, who ſtood before the judges, one on the right hand, and the other on the left, and wrote the ſentences; the one of thoſe that were acquitted, and the other of thoſe that were condemned[d].

Ver. 34. Then ſhall the king ſay unto them on his right hand, &c.] Before Chriſt is called the ſon of man, now the king; who is not only king of ſaints, but king of the whole world; the king of kings, and lord of lords, the judge of all the earth; he appearing in glory and majeſty, ſitting on a throne of glory, being attended with his glorious angels, and all nations gathered before him, waiting for the final ſentence to be pronounced upon them by him; and who accordingly begins with thoſe on his right hand, his ſheep, the choſen, redeemed, and called of God, ſaying to them, come. The Arabic verſion adds, to me: by ſuch a phraſe he ſometimes had invited, and incouraged poor ſenſible ſinners to come and partake of his grace; and here by it he calls the righteous, and beſpeaks them in the moſt tender and endearing manner, and yet with the majeſty of a king, and the authority of a judge, to come near unto him, with intrepidity and confidence, and take poſſeſſion of a glorious kingdom; beſtowing on them this high and illuſtrious character, ye bleſſed of my father: ſo called, partly becauſe they were his father's, not only by creation, but by his choice of them to grace and glory, and therefore moſt happy and bleſſed; and partly, becauſe, as ſuch a choice ſhews, they were dear unto him, highly in his favour, and loved by him with an everlaſting love; as alſo, becauſe they were bleſſed by him as the father of Chriſt, and theirs, with all the ſpiritual bleſſings of the everlaſting covenant in him; with the pardon of their ſins, the juſtification of their perſons, the ſanctification of their nature, with adoption, and a right unto, and meetneſs for the eternal inheritance: hence it follows, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. The happineſs of the ſaints, in the other world, is here expreſſed by a kingdom, becauſe of the glory, riches, grandeur, and magnificence of it; as it is ſometimes by a crown, for the ſame reaſon, ſuitable to their character and dignity, who are made kings and prieſts by Chriſt: and is likewiſe repreſented as an inheritance, as it is elſewhere, being not acquired by induſtry, or obtained by merit; but is the gift of their heavenly father, and in right of adoption, as the children of God, being made ſuch by his free grace and favour, and denotes the ſtability and perpetuity of it: and this is ſaid to be prepared, not only appointed and deſigned in the council, purpoſes, and decrees of God, but got ready; 'tis a kingdom erected, an inheritance reſerved, and a crown of righteouſneſs laid up in heaven; a glory really provided and ſecured in an everlaſting covenant, and that for you: for ſome, and not others; for the ſheep on the right hand, and not the goats on the left; for the peculiar favourites of God, the objects of his love and choice, the redeemed of the Lamb, and that are born of the Spirit; and that for them, from the foundation of the world. The place itſelf, where this happineſs is to be enjoyed, was actually made on the firſt day of the creation, when the heavens were formed, and the foundations of the earth were laid, and the glory itſelf long before. The Ethiopic verſion here reads, before the world; and the Perſic, before the foundation of the world was laid; and Grotius himſelf owns, that the phraſe is the ſame as before the foundation of the world; and Dr. Hammond's paraphraſe is, before all eternity; for as early were theſe perſons, the beloved, the choſen, and bleſſed of the father: ſo that this glory muſt be of free grace, and not merit, or owing to any works of righteouſneſs done by men; ſince it was not only deſigned and appointed, but prepared and laid up for perſons before they had a being, and had done neither good or evil. The Jews[e] ſpeak of the law being an inheritance for all Iſrael, from the ſix days of the creation; but a much more glorious one is here ſpoken of: nearer to this is what they ſay[f], that Bathſheba was appointed to be David's wife from the day that the world was created; and add, but the myſtery of the thing is, מלכותא דלעילא, the kingdom that is above, which is called by her name. So in 2 Eſdras ii. 13. the kingdom is already prepared for you.

Ver. 35. For I was an hungred and ye gave me meat, &c.] This, and the following, are not mentioned as cauſes of the kingdom being prepared for them, or of their being entitled to it, or of their being put into the poſſeſſion of it; but as deſcriptive of their characters, and as teſtimonies and evidences of the grace of God in them; by which it appeared, that they were the bleſſed of his father, having his ſpecial grace vouchſafed unto them; and that they were the children of God, to whom the inheritance of the kingdom belonged, and for whom it was prepared: for what was done by them in time, could never be the cauſe of what was done for them in eternity, or before, or from the foundation of the world; nor is there any proportion between a kingdom, and ſuch ſervices as here mentioned: and beſides, this kingdom is by inheritance, and not merit; is prepared by God, and not procured by men, and was got ready for them before they had a being; and therefore could not be cauſed by any actions of theirs: what is here, and in the following inſtances, ſaid to be done to Chriſt, is not to be underſtood of him perſonally, but myſtically, of the members of his body, as he himſelf explains it, ver. 40. and the ſenſe is, that when ſome of the ſervants of Chriſt, miniſters, or private chriſtians, were in diſtreſs for want of the neceſſaries of life, theſe gracious ſouls ſupplied them with food; which to do, eſpecially in a time of perſecution, ſhewed not only love to Chriſt, but great faith in him, and that they were not aſhamed of him, and their profeſſion of him, nor of his poor miniſters and members; for this was done by them, not as the effect of mere humanity to the poor in general, but as an inſtance of affection to Chriſt's poor; and was done for his ſake, and becauſe they belonged to him, were preachers of his Goſpel, and profeſſors of his name; and therefore was conſidered as if done to himſelf perſonally: I was thirſty, and ye gave me drink; not gall and vinegar, as the Jews did, but a cup of cold water in the name of a diſciple, prophet, and righteous perſon, and becauſe belonging to Chriſt: this is taken notice of with acceptance by him; and ſuch ſhall not loſe the reward of grace. The Targumiſt[g] has a paſſage which may be compared with this: "Solomon ſaid, by a "ſpirit of prophecy from before the Lord; the "Lord of the world ſhall ſay to all the righteous in "the preſence of every one, go taſte, with joy, thy "bread which is returned unto thee, for thy bread "which thou haſt given to the poor and needy, "who were hungry; and drink with a good heart the wine which is laid up for thee in paradiſe, inſtead of thy wine, which thou haſt mingled for the poor and needy, who were thirſty; for, lo! now are thy works accepted before the Lord." I was a ſtranger and ye took me in, or gathered me; an Hebraiſm; ſee 2 Sam. xi. 27. and the Septuagint there. Such ſervants of Chriſt as were obliged to quit their habitations thro' the violence of perſecution, and were ſcattered abroad, or went about preaching the Goſpel; ſuch were by theſe righteous ones taken into their houſes, and provided for with food and lodging, and every convenience of life; as they were by Gaius, and others.

Ver. 36. Naked, and ye clothed me, &c.] For in ſuch a condition ſometimes are the dear children of God, and members of Chriſt; ſee 1 Cor. iv. 11. when others, who, Dorcas like, have made coats and garments for them, and clothed them with them; and which will be ſhewn another day, or taken notice of as the fruits, and ſo evidences of the grace of God in them. I was ſick and ye viſited me, or looked after me, or over me; or, as the Perſic verſion renders it, ye had the care of me; and which is the true ſenſe and import of the word: for it not only intends viſits paid to ſick perſons in a chriſtian manner, relieving them with their ſubſtance, giving good advice, or ſpeaking comfortable words to them; but attending them, and waiting on them, and doing ſuch things for them, which, in their weak ſtate, they are not capable of doing for themſelves. Viſiting of the ſick was reckoned, by the Jews, a very worthy action: they ſpeak great things of it, and as what will be highly rewarded hereafter. "Six things, they ſay [h], a man eats the fruit of them in this world, and there is a ſtable portion for him in the world to come:" and the two firſt of them are, הכנסת אורחין, the taking in of travellers, or ſtrangers, which is mentioned in the preceding verſe, and ביקור חולים, viſiting the ſick. One of their Rabbins [i] ſays, "he that does not viſit the ſick, is as if he ſhed blood: ſays another, he that viſits the ſick is the cauſe of his living; and he that does not viſit the ſick, is the cauſe of his death: and, ſays a third, whoever viſits the ſick ſhall be preſerved from the damnation of hell." I was in priſon, and ye came unto me; which has been often the lot of the ſaints, as it was frequently of the apoſtle Paul, who had this reſpect ſhewn him by many of the people of God, as by the houſe of Oneſiphorus, and by Epaphroditus, who brought him a preſent from the Philippians, when in bonds; and which will be remembered another day.

Ver. 37. Then ſhall the righteous anſwer him, &c.] From whence it appears, that only ſuch ſhall be at the right hand of Chriſt, who are righteous perſons, who have the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them; and, in conſequence of which, are created a-new unto righteouſneſs and true holineſs; and, under the influence of divine grace, live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: and thoſe, upon hearing ſuch works aſcribed unto them, will, with wonder and aſtoniſhment, reply, ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred, and fed thee? or thirſty, and gave thee drink? which anſwer ariſes partly from not attending to, or thoroughly underſtanding the words of Chriſt, which they ſeem to take in ſuch ſenſe, as if he meant theſe things were perſonally done to him; whereas the far greater part of them had never ſeen him in the fleſh, and much leſs in ſuch circumſtances as required ſuch things to be done to him; and partly from ſurprize and aſtoniſhment, that he ſhould take notice of ſuch mean actions, and ſo highly extol them, and graciouſly reward them; as alſo from a forgetfulneſs of them, their left hand not knowing what their right hand had done: which ſhews, that they had put no confidence in their works, or depended upon them for their juſtification before God, and acceptance with him; theſe were out of ſight, and mind; their only truſt being in the perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt.

Ver. 38. When ſaw we thee a ſtranger, and took thee in? &c.] As they had never ſeen him hungry and thirſty in his own perſon, tho' he was both in the days of his fleſh, and were miniſtred to both by angels, and by good women out of their ſubſtance; ſo they had never ſeen him a ſtranger, and took him into their houſes; yet they had ſeen him hungry and thirſty, and as a ſtranger in his members, and had done theſe good offices to him in them, and to them for his ſake: or naked, and clothed thee? for ſo Chrſt in perſon never was, until ſtripp'd of his raiment by the ſoldiers, and officers; but they had ſeen many of his poor ſaints without cloathing, and had covered their nakedneſs.

Ver. 39. Or when ſaw we thee ſick, or in priſon, and came unto thee?] For tho' he bore the ſickneſſes of his people, yet we never read of his being ſick himſelf, nor was he ever caſt into priſon; but this has been the caſe of many of his ſervants, as John the Baptiſt, Peter, and Paul, and multitudes of others, who have been tenderly and affectionately uſed by their fellow-chriſtians.

Ver. 40. And the king ſhall anſwer, and ſay unto them, &c.] Chriſt, tho' a king, and now appearing in great glory and majeſty, yet ſuch will be his goodneſs and condeſcenſion, as to return an anſwer to the queries of his people; bluſhing, and aſtoniſhed at his notice of their poor ſervices, which they know to be ſo imperfect, and are always ready to own themſelves unprofitable ſervants: and this he'll do in the following manner: verily I ſay unto you; a way of ſpeaking often uſed by him, when here on earth, when he, in the ſtrongeſt manner, would aſſeverate any thing as truth, and remove all doubt and heſitation about it. Inaſmuch as ye have done it unto one of the leaſt of theſe my brethren, ye have done it unto me: which is to be underſtood, not in ſo limited a ſenſe, as to regard only the apoſtles, and the leaſt of them, for theſe were not the only brethren of Chriſt; nor in ſo large a ſenſe, as to include all in human nature; but the ſaints only, the children of God, and houſhold of faith: for though acts of charity and humanity are to be done to all men, yet eſpecially to theſe; and indeed, theſe only can be conſidered as the brethren of Chriſt, who are born of God, and do the will of Chriſt; for ſuch he accounts his mother, brethren, and ſiſters; and who are not only of the ſame human nature, but in the ſame covenant with him, and the ſons of God, not by nature, as he is the ſon of God, but by adoption, and ſo are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt: now he that does any of the above acts of kindneſs to theſe brethren of Chriſt, and becauſe they ſtand in ſuch a relation to him, even the leaſt of them; though he is not an apoſtle, or a martyr, or a preacher of the Goſpel, or has any conſiderable gifts and abilities for uſefulneſs, but is a weak believer in ſpiritual things, as well as poor in temporals; and tho' it is but to one of theſe, opportunity and circumſtances not allowing it to be done to more; yet as ſuch is the humility and condeſcenſion of this great king, as to account ſuch mean perſons his brethren; ſuch alſo is his grace and goodneſs, as to reckon every inſtance of kindneſs and reſpect ſhewn to them, as done to himſelf in perſon; and will take notice of it, accept and reward it, as if it had been ſo done.

[h] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 127. 1.

[i] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 40. 1. Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Ebel, c. 14. §. 4, 5, 6.

Ver. 41. Then ſhall he alſo ſay unto them on his left hand, &c.] The goats, the fooliſh virgins, and ſlothful and wicked ſervants, depart from me: a like expreſſion is uſed by him to preachers of the word, and profeſſors of religion, that are mere nominal ones, Matt. vii. 23. and ſuch are intended here, who profeſſed to be on Chriſt's ſide, had been in his viſible church, and hoped to have been with him for ever; but having nothing but the lamp of a profeſſion, and ſome external works to truſt to, they are bid to be gone from him; they are baniſhed his preſence, which is what is commonly called the puniſhment of loſs; the loſs of the preſence of God, Father, Son, and Spirit, angels, and ſaints; and is thought to be greater than the puniſhment of ſenſe, hereafter expreſſed. The character given of them, which is the reverſe of the former, is, ye curſed; for having ſinned againſt God, and his righteous law, they are curſed by it, which curſes every one that is under its works, as theſe were, and do not perfectly fulfil whatſover it requires; and ſo were juſtly rejected of God, and hated by him; and therefore are adjudged and ſent, into everlaſting fire: by which is meant, the wrath of God; and the phraſe expreſſes the intolerable fierceneſs of it, and its perpetual continuance; the ſenſe of which, without intermiſſion, will ever be felt in the conſcience; and is the puniſhment of ſenſe, the wicked will for ever endure: it may alſo intend the pit and priſon of hell, where theſe torments will be for ever inflicted; and ſo hell is called by the Jews [k], the hell of, יקידות עלם, eternal fire, or everlaſting burning: and is here ſaid to be prepared for the devil and his angels; for ſatan, or Beelzebub, the prince of devils, and all his principalities and powers under him: it is not ſaid to be prepared for theſe perſons, though it was, and who were foreordained to this condemnation, but for the devil and his angels; ſhewing, that the ſame puniſhment will be inflicted on hypocrites and carnal profeſſors, as on the devils themſelves; and 'tis indeed of ſuch, that the devouring fire, and everlaſting burnings are ſpoken, in Iſa. xxxiii. 14. to which this paſſage ſeems to have ſome reſpect; for no where elſe is mention made of this everlaſting fire: it is not ſaid neither when it was prepared. It is a notion of the Jews [l], that the angels were created on the ſecond day; and it ſhould ſeem by them, that they fell the ſame day: hence it is a prevailing opinion among them [m], that hell was made on the ſecond day of the creation; though at other times, they reckon hell among the ſeven things which were created before the world was [n], and which may be reconciled together: for as heaven, the place of the ſaints happineſs, was prepared from the foundation of the world, or on the firſt day of its creation, though the happineſs itſelf was provided long before; ſo hell, the place of the torments of the devils and wicked, though it was not made or prepared until the ſecond day of the creation, when, according to this opinion, the angels were made and fell; yet the puniſhment they were to endure there, was appointed before the world was; and ſo hell is ſaid to, מסדרא מן עלמין, be ordained from eternity, becauſe of their ſins [o].

Ver. 42. For I was an hungred and ye gave me no meat, &c.] Hence it appears, that theſe were ſuch as dwelt among chriſtians, and profeſſed the chriſtian name, and yet diſregarded the poor members of Chriſt in diſtreſs, when it was in the power of their hands to help them; but when they were hungry and ready to ſtarve for want of food, did not communicate to them for Chriſt's ſake; which ſhowed that they had no true faith in him, and love to him, and therefore are juſtly condemned by him; whereas ſuch who never knew Chriſt, nor any of his people, or any obligation they were under to regard any for Chriſt's ſake, theſe will never be condemned for the non-performance of theſe things: I was thirſty, and ye gave me no drink; as not the leaſt morſel of bread to eat, ſo not ſo much as a cup of cold water to drink; which with what follows, are manifeſt tokens and evidences, that they did not belong to Chriſt, were not true believers in him, nor had they any real love to him: the grace of God was not in them, and therefore had neither right unto, nor meetneſs for, the kingdom of heaven; but were righteouſly baniſhed from the preſence of the Lord, and ſent to dwell among everlaſting burnings; for righteous it was, that ſuch as they who would not ſhew any love to him here, ſhould not dwell with him for ever hereafter.

Ver. 43. I was a ſtranger and ye took me not in, &c.] Did not take the poor members of Chriſt into their houſes, and take care of them in their families, when they were obliged to flee from their places of abode, or wandered about preaching the Goſpel; and who muſt have periſhed in the ſtreets, if others that bore the chriſtian name, had not been more compaſſionate than they: naked and ye clothed me not, ſick and in priſon and ye viſited me not: their conduct, behaviour, and character, are juſt the reverſe of the righteous, and therefore 'tis no wonder that their ſentence is different.

Ver. 44. Then ſhall they alſo anſwer him, &c.] As well as the righteous, being likewiſe aſtoniſhed at what he had ſaid, but on a different account; ſaying, Lord, when ſaw we thee an hungred or a thirſt, or a ſtranger, or naked, or ſick, or in priſon, and did not miniſter to thee? Hence it is clear again, that theſe men were nominal chriſtians, who had made a profeſſion of Chriſt: they own him as Lord, and ſuggeſt that they had ſeen him, and known him, though never in ſuch circumſtances; for if they had, ſuch was their love to him, and great reſpect and veneration for him, as they pretend, they would, to be ſure, have miniſtred unto him; and if ever they had ſeen him in ſuch a caſe, which they could not call to mind, they could not believe, but they muſt have ſupplied him with all things neceſſary and convenient.

Ver. 45. Then ſhall he anſwer them, &c.] With a ſtern countenance, in great reſentment, as one highly offended, and with the authority of a judge: ſaying, verily I ſay unto you, inaſmuch as ye did it not to one of the leaſt of theſe, ye did it not unto me: ſince they had given no food not to the leaſt of his brethren and friends, that ſtood at his right hand, no not to any one of them; not ſo much as the leaſt bit of bread to them when hungry, nor a drop of water to them when thirſty; had not taken them into their houſes, nor provided the meaneſt lodging for them, when they were expoſed in the ſtreets to the inclemency of the weather, and inſults of men; nor gave them the leaſt rag to cover them, when they were almoſt naked, and ready to periſh; nor did they miniſter to their wants, either phyſic, or food, or give attendance, when on ſick beds, and in priſon-houſes; therefore he reckoned this neglect of them, and want of compaſſion to them, all one as if he himſelf in perſon had been ſo treated: and if then judgment will righteouſly proceed againſt men for ſins of omiſſion, much more for ſins of commiſſion; and if ſuch will be dealt with in this manner, who have taken no notice, and ſhewn no reſpect to the members of Chriſt; what will the end be of thoſe, who are injurious to them, their perſons, and properties, and perſecute and kill them?

Ver. 46. And theſe ſhall go away into everlaſting puniſhment, &c.] Their excuſes will not be regarded, their pleas will be of no avail, their pretenſions to intereſt in Chriſt, and love to him, will be ſet aſide; the ſentence will remain irrevocable, and there will be no appeal from it, for there's no higher tribunal to bring the cauſe before; judgment having paſſed, the execution of it immediately follows: theſe goats, or formal profeſſors, ſhall be obliged, whether they will or no, to depart from the preſence of Chriſt; the angels will be ordered to take and caſt them into everlaſting burnings; they'll be driven by them into hell, the place appointed for them; where they ſhall endure, עונש נצחי, everlaſting puniſhment, as the Jews [p] alſo expreſs it; and that both in ſoul and body, as the juſt deſert of ſin; which being committed againſt an infinite God, cannot be ſatisfied for by a finite creature; who therefore muſt ever bear the puniſhment of it, becauſe its pollution and guilt will always remain: but the righteous into life eternal; ſuch as are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and who, though they have done works of righteouſneſs under the influence, and by the aſſiſtance of the grace of God, yet have not depended upon them, but upon Chriſt, for life and ſalvation: theſe ſhall go into heaven, the place appointed for them, to enjoy that eternal life in ſoul and body, which is the free gift of God, through Chriſt; and will be a life free from all the ſorrows of the preſent one; a life of perfect holineſs and knowledge, and inconceivable pleaſure; a life of viſion of God, and communion with him, and which will continue for ever; and which aſcertains the eternity of the puniſhment of the wicked: for as the happineſs of the righteous will be eternal, the puniſhment of the wicked will be ſo too; for no reaſon can be given why the word which is the ſame in both clauſes, ſhould be taken in the one for a limited time, and in the other for an eternal duration. The Jews have a ſaying [q] which agrees with this laſt clauſe, "the world to come is not made but for the "righteous."

CHAP. XXVI.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs when Jeſus had finiſhed all theſe ſayings, &c.] Meaning either all that are recorded by this Evangeliſt, all the ſermons and diſcourſes of Chriſt, delivered both to the people of the Jews, and to his diſciples; his converſation with the former, and his divine inſtructions and prudent advice to the latter, together with all his excellent parables, which are largely related in this book; or elſe what is ſaid in the two preceding chapters, concerning the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the end of the world, the ſtate of the church, and conduct of his ſervants to the end of time, expreſſed in the parables of the virgins and talents, and concerning the laſt judgment and final ſtate of all men: he ſaid unto his diſciples; who now were alone with him: having finiſhed his prophetic, and being about to enter on his prieſtly office, he gives his diſciples ſome intimations of its near approach.

Ver. 2. Ye know that after two days is the feaſt of the paſſover, &c.] Which was kept in commemoration of the deliverance of the Iſraelites from Egypt; and was typical of Chriſt the paſſover, who was now to be ſacrificed for his people. This was ſaid on Tueſday, and on the Thurſday following, the paſſover began. Chriſt ſpeaks of this as a thing well known to the diſciples, as it muſt be, ſince it always began on a certain day, the fourteenth of the month Niſan; which month anſwered to part of our March, and part of our April; and though there was very frequently an intercalation of a whole month in a year, made by the Sanhedrim, to keep their feſtivals regularly in the proper ſeaſon of the year; yet previous publick notice was always given of this, either by fixing a paper upon the door of the Sanhedrim [r], ſignifying ſuch an intercalation made, which ſerved for the inhabitants of Jeruſalem; or by ſending meſſengers with letters into all diſtant places [s], acquainting them with it. So that the time of theſe feſtivals were always well known; even to the common people: and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified; it muſt not be thought that this was equally known by the diſciples, as the former; for though they might know, or at leaſt remember, that Chriſt had told them that he ſhould ſuffer many things of the prieſts, Scribes, and elders, who would deliver him to the Gentiles, to be crucified; yet might not underſtand that this paſſover was to be the time, when this ſhould be done: by the Son of man, Chriſt means himſelf, who was truly and really man, the ſeed of the woman, the ſon of Abraham and of David; a character by which the Meſſiah is deſcribed in the Old Teſtament, Pſal. lxxx. 17. Dan. vii. 13. and hence frequently uſed by Chriſt of himſelf; which, as it expreſſes the truth of his human nature, ſo the weakneſſes and infirmities he bore in it; and is very properly uſed here, when he is ſpeaking of his being to be betrayed and crucified. What he ſays of himſelf is, that he is betrayed; that is, is to be betrayed, or will be betrayed, meaning at the paſſover, which was to be in two days time. Chriſt ſpeaks of his being betrayed, as if it was already done; not only becauſe it was ſo near being done, there being but two days before it would be done; but becauſe it was a ſure and certain thing, being determined in the purpoſe of God, and foretold in prophecy that it ſhould be; and beſides, Judas had now reſolved upon it within himſelf, and was forming a ſcheme how to bring it about. And this reſpects not only the act of Judas in betraying him into the hands of the chief prieſts, but alſo the delivery, as the word here uſed ſignifies, of him by them, to the Roman governors; for they, as Stephen ſays, were alſo his betrayers and murderers; yea, it may include the delivery of him by Pilate, to the Jews and Roman ſoldiers; and the rather, becauſe it follows, to be crucified; which was a Roman, and not a Jewiſh puniſhment. This was typified by the lifting up the brazen ſerpent on a pole, and foretold by the prophets of the Old Teſtament, Pſal. xxii. 16. Zech. xii. 10. and predicted by Chriſt himſelf, ſometimes more covertly, John xii. 32, 33. and ſometimes in expreſs words, Matt. xx. 19. and was a very painful and ſhameful death, and which ſhewed him to be made a curſe for his people. It appears from hence, that the crucifixion and death of Chriſt, were not caſual and contingent events, but were determined by the counſel of God, with all circumſtances attending: the betraying and delivery of him were by the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God; and not only his death, but the manner of it by crucifixion, was pointed out in prophecy, and was a certain thing; and the very time of his death was fixed; which ſhews the early concern of God for the ſalvation of his people, and his wonderful grace and mercy to them: and it is clear from hence, that Chriſt had perfect knowledge of all this: he knew not only that he ſhould be betrayed, but he knew from the beginning who would betray him; he not only knew that he ſhould die, but he knew what kind of death he ſhould die, even the death of the croſs; and he knew the exact time when he ſhould die, that it would be at the following paſſover, which was juſt at hand; and he had ſuggeſted this to his diſciples, and therefore he ſpeaks of it as a thing known unto them; at leaſt what they might have known, and concluded from what he had ſaid to them, Matt. xx. 18, 19. and the whole is a conſiderable proof of his being God omniſcient. And he thought fit to put his diſciples in mind of it, becauſe the time drew nigh; that their memories being refreſhed with it, they might be prepared for it, and not be ſurprized, ſhocked, and offended at it, when it came to paſs; which ſhows the tender concern our Lord had for them.

Ver. 3. Then aſſembled together the chief prieſts, &c.] About the ſame time, two days before the paſſover, that Jeſus ſaid theſe things to his diſciples, as is plain from Mark xiv. 1. By the chief prieſts are meant, either ſuch who had been high prieſts, or ſuch as were the heads of the twenty-four courſes of the prieſts; or rather, the principal men of the prieſthood, who were choſen out of the reſt, to be members of the great Sanhedrim: and the Scribes; the doctors of the law, who wrote out copies of the law for the people, and interpreted it to them in a literal way: this clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, but is retained in the Syriac verſion; and no doubt, but theſe men had a place in this grand council: and the elders of the people; theſe were the civil magiſtrates; ſo that this aſſembly conſiſted both of eccleſiaſticks and laymen, as the Sanhedrim did, of prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites [t]: theſe came unto the palace of the high prieſt, who was called Caiaphas; his name was Joſeph, but his ſurname Caiaphas; a word not of the ſame original with Cephas, as Camero thought; for theſe two words begin with different letters, nor are the reſt the ſame. Now, though a king of Iſrael might not ſit in the Sanhedrim, yet an high prieſt might, provided he was ſufficiently qualified with wiſdom [u]. The preſident of this grand council at this time, ſhould be Rabban Gamaliel, Paul's maſter; unleſs it was Caiaphas, at whoſe houſe they were: how they came to meet at the high prieſt's palace, deſerves enquiry; ſince their proper and uſual place of meeting, was a chamber in the temple, called Gazith [w], or the paved chamber: now let it be obſerved, that according to the accounts the Jews themſelves give, the Sanhedrim removed from this chamber, forty years before the deſtruction of the temple [x]; and which, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, was about a year and a half before the death of Chriſt; and as others ſay [y], four years; at leaſt three years and a half before that time: but then, though the Sanhedrim removed from the paved chamber, they met at Chanoth, the ſheds, which was a place within the bounds of the temple, in the mountain of the houſe; and the queſtion ſtill returns, how came it to paſs they did not meet there? To me the reaſon ſeems to be, that they choſe not to meet there, but at the high prieſt's palace, becauſe of privacy, that it might not be known they were together, and about any affair of moment; and particularly this: the high prieſt's houſe was always in Jeruſalem, and he never removed from thence; nor did he go from the temple thither only in the night, or an hour or two in the day; for he had an apartment in the temple, which was called the chamber of the high prieſt, where he was the whole day [z].

Ver. 4. And conſulted that they might take Jeſus by ſubtlety, &c.] The Jews had often attempted his life, but he eſcaped out of their hands; they had ſent officers to apprehend him, but to no purpoſe; they therefore meet and conſult together, to form ſome ſcheme, and make uſe of ſome ſtratagem, that they might lay hold on him, and keep him; they were for doing this in the moſt private manner they could: and kill him; not with their own hands, nor privately; but their ſcheme was to apprehend him privately, by ſome ſecret artifice, and then deliver him to the Roman governor, to put him to death, according to law, publickly, for crimes they had to charge him with; hereby Pſal. ii. 2. had its accompliſhment, at leaſt in part.

Ver. 5. And they ſaid, not on the feaſt day, &c.] Upon mature deliberation, it was an agreed point with them, at leaſt it was carried by a majority, that nothing of this kind ſhould be attempted to be done on the feaſt day, on any of the days of the feaſt of paſſover, which was now at hand; though this was contrary to their common rules and uſages: for, a perſon that ſinned preſumptuouſly, and ſuch an one they accounted Jeſus to be, they ſay [a], "they don't put him to death by the order of the "Sanhedrim of his own city, nor by the Sanhedrim "of Jabneh; but they bring him up to the great "Sanhedrim at Jeruſalem, and keep him until the "feaſt, and put him to death, ברגל, on a feaſt "day; as it is ſaid, Deut. xvii. 13. and all the "people ſhall hear and fear, &c." But what influenced them at this time to take another courſe, is the reaſon following; leſt there be an uproar among the people: they had no fear of God before their eyes, or in their hearts, only the fear of the people; many of whom believed in Chriſt, and others that did not, yet had a great veneration for him, having ſeen his miracles, and received favours from him; themſelves, or their friends and relations, being cured by him of various diſeaſes: beſides, at the feaſt, people from all parts came up to Jeruſalem; and they knew that large numbers from Galilee, where he had the greateſt intereſt, would be preſent; and they feared, ſhould they attempt any thing of this nature at this time, the people would riſe, and reſcue him out of their hands. But God had determined otherwiſe, and his counſel ſhall ſtand; 'twas his pleaſure, that he ſhould be put to death at this feaſt, that the truth might anſwer the type of the paſſover lamb; and that all Iſrael, whoſe males now met together, might be witneſſes of it: and ſo it was, that though theſe men had concluded otherwiſe in their council; yet an opportunity offering by Judas, to get him into their hands, they embrace it; and riſque the danger of the peoples riſing, who they found compliant enough to their wiſhes.

Ver. 6. Now when Jeſus was in Bethany, &c.] Which was about fifteen furlongs from Jeruſalem, John xi. 18. or about two miles from it. The time of Chriſt's death being at hand, he keeps nigh to Jeruſalem, where he was to ſuffer and die, in the room and ſtead of ſinners: in the houſe of Simon the leper; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from others of the name. This epithet was either a family one, ſome perſon of note in it having been a leper; or elſe he is ſo named, becauſe he himſelf had been one, but was now cured; though the reaſon interpreters give for this, that otherwiſe he would not have been ſuffered to live in a town, is not a good one; for lepers, according to the Jewiſh [b] canons, were only forbid Jeruſalem, and towns and cities that were walled around, and not others, ſuch as the village of Bethany. There were many lepers healed by Chriſt, which, among other things, was an evidence of his being the Meſſiah, and a proof of his deity, and this Simon was one of them; whether the ſame mention is made of in Matt. viii. 1. is not certain, nor very probable; ſince that man lived in Galilee, at, or near Capernaum, this at Bethany, near Jeruſalem: however, he was one of thoſe lepers that had a ſenſe of his mercy, and was grateful for it, as appears by his entertaining Chriſt at his houſe; and may teach us thankfulneſs to Chriſt, who has healed all our diſeaſes; and particularly, the ſpreading leproſy of ſin, with which all the powers and faculties of our ſouls were infected; and which was not in our own power, or any creatures, to cure, but his blood cleanſes from it: and it may be obſerved, that Chriſt goes in and dwells with ſuch whom he heals, and with ſuch he is always welcome.

Ver. 7. There came unto him a woman, &c.] By ſome thought to be the ſame that is ſpoken of in Luke vii. 37. and by moſt, to be Mary, the ſiſter of Lazarus, John xii. 3. which may be true; for 'tis poſſible that one and the ſame woman, might perform a like action at different times; for to neither of the above, at the ſame time, will the following agree: not to the former, for though that was done in the houſe of one Simon, yet not Simon the leper, but Simon the Phariſee; who though he had a particular reſpect for Chriſt, which few of that ſect had, yet appeared to be then of a Phariſaical ſpirit; that was done in Galilee, this near Jeruſalem in Bethany; the woman there anointed the feet of Chriſt, but this woman poured the ointment on his head; nor did any ſuch converſation as here follow upon it, between Chriſt and his diſciples; but what diſcourſe was had on that occaſion, was between Simon and Chriſt. Not to the latter, for that does not appear to be done in Simon's houſe, but rather in the houſe of Lazarus; no mention is made of the alabaſter box, nor was the ointment poured on his head, but on his feet; beſides, that was done ſix days before the paſſover, whereas this was but two; moreover, Judas only objected to that, but the diſciples in general, had indignation at this; and though the objections to it, and Chriſt's defence of it, are much in the ſame language, in one place as in the other, yet it was no unuſual thing with Chriſt, to make uſe of the ſame words on a like incident, or when the ſame objections were made. The fact here recorded, is the ſame as in Mark xiv. 3. where it ſtands in the ſame order as here, and ſeems to have been done at the ſupper, of which mention is made, John xiii. 2. when ſatan entered into Judas, and put it into his heart to betray his maſter, the account of which follows this here: having an alabaſter box of very precious ointment; Mark calls it, ointment of ſpikenard, which was very odorous, and of a very fragrant ſmell; ſee Cant. i. 12. Some there render it, pure nard; unadulterated, unmixed, ſincere and genuine; others, liquid nard, which was drinkable, and eaſy to be poured out; and ſome Piſtic nard, ſo called, either from Piſta, the name of a place in India, from whence it was brought, as ſome think; or as Dr. Lightfoot, from פיסתקא, Piſtaca, which is the maſte of a tree [c], and of which, among other things, Pliny ſays [d], the ointment of nard was made. The Perſic verſion in both places read it, ointment of Gallia; and the juſt now mentioned writer [e], ſpeaks of nardum Gallicum, Gallic nard, which is what may be meant by that interpreter; but be it what ointment it will, it was ointment, very precious: very coſtly, and of a very great price; for the diſciples obſerve, it might have been ſold for more than three hundred pence: and for the better preſerving of ſuch ointments incorrupt, they uſed to be put into veſſels made of alabaſter [f]; though ſome think not the matter, but the form of theſe veſſels is referred to; and obſerve, that veſſels of gold, ſilver, and glaſs, for this uſe, being made in the form of alabaſters, were called by that name; and that this might be made of the latter, ſince Mark ſays, that ſhe brake the box; not into pieces, for then ſhe could not be ſaid to pour it out; but either the top, or ſide of it: though ſome criticks obſerve, that the word ſignifies no more, than that ſhe ſhook it, that the thicker parts of the ointment might liquify, and be the more eaſily poured out. The Arabic verſion has omitted that clauſe, and the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic, read it, ſhe opened it; that is, as the Perſic adds, the top of the veſſel: ſhe took off the covering of the box, or took out the ſtopple, and poured it on his head, as he ſat at meat: which was uſually done at feſtivals, or at any conſiderable entertainments, as at weddings, &c. "Says Rab, they pour ointment on the heads "of the doctors; (the Gloſs is, the women put "ointment on the heads of the ſcholars;) ſays R. "Papa to Abai, does the doctor ſpeak of the oint-"ment of the bride-chamber? He replies, thou "orphan, did not thy mother cauſe for thee, that "they poured out ointment on the heads of the doctors, "at thy wedding? for lo! one of the Rabbins got "a wife for his ſon, in the houſe of R. bar Ula; "and they ſay, that R. bar Ula got a wife for “ his ſon in the houſe of one of the Rabbins, “ ודרדיג מישחא ארישא דרבנן, and poured oint“ment on the head of the doctors[g]:” to this cuſtom are the alluſions in Pſ. xxiii. 5. Eccl. ix. 8. The pouring of this ointment on the head of Chriſt was emblematical of his being anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows; of his having the holy Spirit, and his gifts and graces without meaſure; which, like the ointment poured on Aaron's head, that ran down to his beard, and the ſkirts of his garments, deſcends to all the members of his myſtical body: and was a ſymbol of the Goſpel, which is like ointment poured forth; and of the ſweet ſavour of the knowledge of Chriſt, which was to be diffuſed throughout all the world, by the preaching of it; and was done by this woman in the faith of him, as the true Meſſiah, the Lord's anointed, as the prophet, prieſt, and king of his church.

Ver. 8. But when his diſciples ſaw it, &c.] What the woman did, what a coſtly box of ointment it was, and with what profuſion ſhe uſed it, they had indignation: Mark ſays, within themſelves; either among themſelves, or their indignation was ſecret in their breaſts; their reſentment was private, tho' it might be betrayed by their looks, and afterwards ſhewed itſelf in words. This indignation was either at the woman, for the Evangeliſt Mark obſerves, that they murmured againſt her, that ſhe ſhould act ſuch an imprudent part, and be guilty of ſuch extravagance; or at Chriſt himſelf, for ſuffering ſuch an action to be done unto him; for ſo the Syriac verſion reads the above clauſe in Mark, and they murmured בה againſt him; ſo De Dieu obſerves it ſhould be rendered; tho' Tremellius, Boderianus, and others, tranſlate it, againſt her: or elſe their indignation was neither at Chriſt, whom they dearly loved; nor at the woman, they being taught to love their enemies, and much more the friends of Chriſt; but at the action, which they looked upon as an ill-judged thing, that ſprung from miſguided zeal, and which they thought could never be acceptable to their maſter, who was not uſed to encourage ſuch profuſeneſs and extravagance. Saying, to what purpoſe is this waſte, or loſs? They call that waſte, or loſs, which was ſpent on Chriſt himſelf; whereas, whatever is laid out for the honour of Chriſt, or the good of his intereſt, ought not to be reckoned loſs, for it will be returned with great increaſe and advantage; but they could not ſee what end was to be anſwered by this expence. It is eaſy to obſerve the variableneſs and inconſtancy of the diſciples: one time, becauſe the inhabitants of a certain village did not receive Chriſt, they were for calling for fire from heaven to deſtroy them; and here is a poor woman that exceeds, as they thought, in her reſpects to him, and they are filled with indignation.

Ver. 9. For this ointment might have been ſold for much, &c.] Mark ſays, for more than three hundred pence: now if this is to be underſtood of Roman pence, each penny being ſeven pence half-penny of our money, three hundred pence come to nine pounds, ſeven ſhillings, and ſix-pence; but if it is to be underſtood of the penny of the ſanctuary, which was one ſhilling and three-pence, they come to juſt as muſt more: it might well be called very precious and coſtly ointment; and this was the reaſon of the diſciples indignation, that ſo much coſt and expence ſhould be thrown away, as they thought, in ſuch a manner, which might have been applied, in their opinion, to a better purpoſe. For had it been ſold for its worth, ſo much might have been had for it, and given to the poor; which was a very plauſible objection to the action; and which they ſeem to have taken from Judas, who had made the ſame, on a like occaſion, about four days before this, and he might inſtigate the diſciples now; which ſhows what miſchief an hypocrite may do in a church, and what influence he may have over good men to draw them into his meaſures, under the ſpecious pretences of carefulneſs, frugality, and doing good to the poor. It ſeems our Lord inured his diſciples to this good work of relieving the poor: they kept one common purſe, and one of them, who was Judas, was appointed the bearer of it; whatever they collected, or was made a preſent to them, they put into this purſe; out of which they were provided with the neceſſaries of life; and the reſt expended on the poor.

Ver. 10. When Jeſus underſtood it, &c.] The indignation of his diſciples at this action of the woman's; which he might know, as man, partly by their looks, and partly by their words; tho' without theſe, as God, he knew the ſecret indignation, and private reſentment of their minds: he ſaid unto them, why trouble ye the woman? by blaming her, and cenſuring the action ſhe had done; as it muſt, no doubt, greatly trouble her to meet with ſuch treatment from the diſciples of Chriſt: had any of the Phariſees blamed her conduct, it would have given her no pain or uneaſineſs; but that Chriſt's own diſciples ſhould ſhew indignation at an action done by her from a ſincere love to Chriſt, and to do honour to him, muſt cut her to the heart: and ſo it is when either miniſters of the Goſpel, or private believers, are blamed for their honeſt zeal in the cauſe of Chriſt, by any that profeſs to love him; this grieves them more than all the enemies of religion ſay or do unto them: for ſhe hath wrought a good work upon me; upon his body, by pouring the ointment on it: the Perſic verſion reads it, according to my mind: it was done in the faith of him, as the Meſſiah; it ſprung from real and ſincere love to him, and was deſigned for his honour and glory; and ſo had the eſſentials of a good work in it. This is the firſt part of our Lord's defence of the woman: he goes on,

Ver. 11. For ye have the poor always with you, &c.] This is ſaid in anſwer to the objection of the diſciples, that the ointment might have been ſold, and the money given to the poor. Chriſt ſeems to have reſpect to Deut. xv. 11. and which, agreeable to the ſenſe of the Jews, refers to the times of the Meſſiah: for they ſay[h], “there is no difference “between this world (this preſent time) and the “times of the Meſſiah, but the ſubduing of king“doms only; as it is ſaid, Deut. xv. 11. for the “poor ſhall never ceaſe out of the land: the Gloſs “on it is, from hence it may be concluded, that “therefore, לעולם יש עניות, for ever there will be “poverty, and riches.” Our Lord's words alſo ſhew, that there will be always poor perſons in the world; that there will be always ſuch with his people, and in his churches; for God has choſen, and he calls ſuch by his grace; ſo that men may always have opportunities of ſhewing kindneſs and reſpect to ſuch objects: in Mark 'tis added, and whenſoever ye will ye may do them good; by relieving their wants, and diſtributing to their neceſſities: but me ye have not always; referring not to his divine and ſpiritual preſence, which he has promiſed to his people, churches, and miniſters, to the end of the world, but to his corporal preſence; for he was to be but a little while with them, and then go to the father; be taken up to heaven, where he now is, and will be until the reſtitution of all things; ſo that the time was very ſhort, in which any outward reſpect could be ſhown to him in perſon, as man.

Ver. 12. For in that ſhe hath poured this ointment, &c.] Which was ſo very precious, and coſt ſo much, upon my body: for being poured on his head, it ran down all over his body. She did it for my burial; not for the interment of his body, but for the embalming of it, previous to it: the Jews uſed to embalm their dead, to ſhew their conſtant reſpect to the deceaſed, and their belief of the reſurrection; at leaſt not only uſed to waſh them, but anoint them with oil; for ſo runs one of their canons[i]: "they do all things neceſſary to the dead, "(i. e. on the ſabbath-day) סכין, they anoint him; "that is, as Bartenora adds, with oil; and they "waſh him"; but the body of Chriſt, when dead, was not to be ſo uſed: the women intended it, and prepared materials for it, but the ſabbath coming on, they reſted according to the commandment; though, according to this canon, they might have anointed him, but they waited till the ſabbath was over; and early on the firſt day, in the morning, they came to the ſepulchre, in order to do it, but it was too late, Chriſt was riſen; ſee Luke xxiii. 56. and xxiv. 1. Mark xvi. 1. Now either this woman had ſome revelation made to her, that the death of Chriſt was near at hand, and ſhe feared, or knew, ſhe ſhould not be able to anoint him when dead; and therefore, as Mark has it, ſhe hath done what ſhe could; ſhe is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying: or if ſhe had no knowledge of all this, nor any ſuch intention, yet the Holy Ghoſt directed her to this action, with this view, as it were, for the performing of theſe funeral rites before he was dead; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, ſhe hath done it, איך דלמקברני, as it were, to bury me.

Ver. 13. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] The following words are prefaced in this manner, to excite attention, and command belief: whereſoever this Goſpel ſhall be preached in the whole world. The Syriac verſion reads it, סברתי, my Goſpel; and ſo the Perſic verſion; and has reſpect chiefly to the doctrine of his death, burial, and reſurrection, which this action of the woman had relation to; for tho' the incarnation of Chriſt, and all the actions of his life, and whatſoever he did for the good, and in the room and ſtead of his people, are good news and glad tidings to the ſons of men, and ſo the Goſpel; yet his dying for ſin, and making atonement for it, thereby ſatisfying juſtice, fulfilling the law, deſtroying death, and him that had the power of it, and his lying in the grave, and leaving the ſins of his people behind him, and riſing again for their juſtification, which were the ends of his coming into the world, make up the moſt glorious and principal part of the Goſpel: and theſe words of Chriſt ſhew that this Goſpel ſhould be preached; for which purpoſe he gave a commiſſion and gifts to his diſciples, and has done ſo, more or leſs, to men, ever ſince, for the converſion of ſinners, and the edification of ſaints, and the glory of his name; and that this Goſpel ſhall be preached all over the world, as it was by the apoſtles, agreeable to the commiſſion; and will be again, towards the cloſe of time, when the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord: and then there ſhall alſo this, that this woman hath done, be told for a memorial of her; of her faith, love, and gratitude; for the memory of the juſt is bleſſed, and the righteous are had in everlaſting remembrance. Chriſt ſuggeſts, that, tho' the diſciples blamed this action, it ſhould be ſpoken of by others to her praiſe and commendation, in all ſucceeding ages, throughout the world: a good name, the wiſe man ſays, is better than precious ointment. This woman got a good name, and obtained a good report by her precious ointment; and if this woman's action was to be told for a memorial of her, much more what Chriſt has done and ſuffer'd ſhould be told as a memorial of him.

Ver. 14. Then one of the twelve, called Judas Iſcariot, &c.] Who was provoked and exaſperated, to the laſt degree, by this action of the woman, and Chriſt's defence of it, and becauſe the ointment was not ſold, and the money put into his hand; and being inſtigated by ſatan, who had now entered into him, formed a ſcheme in his mind to betray his maſter, and was reſolved to put it in execution, whereby he might, in ſome meaſure, ſatisfy both his avarice, and revenge; and, as an aggravation of this his wickedneſs, he is deſcribed, as one of the twelve: of his twelve diſciples; ſo the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions: this is a way of ſpeaking uſed by the Jews[k]; they call the twelve leſſer prophets, שנים עשר, or תרי עשר, the twelve, without any other word added thereunto. He was not an open enemy, nor one of Chriſt's common hearers, nor one of the ſeventy diſciples, but one of his twelve apoſtles, whom he made his intimates and aſſociates; whom he ſelected from all others, and called, qualified, and ſent forth to preach his Goſpel, and perform miracles: it was one of theſe that meditated the delivery of him into the hands of his enemies, and never left purſuing his ſcheme till he had effected it, even Judas Iſcariot by name; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from another diſciple, whoſe name was alſo Judas. This man went to the chief-prieſts; of his own accord, unaſked, from Bethany, to Jeruſalem, to Caiaphas's palace, where the chief-prieſts, the implacable enemies of Chriſt, with the Scribes, and elders of the people, were met together, to conſult his death: Mark adds, to betray him unto them, which was manifeſtly his intent in going to them; and Luke, that he communed with them how he might betray him unto them; in the ſafeſt, and moſt private manner; and both obſerve that they were glad; for nothing could have fallen out more to their wiſhes, who were met together on this deſign. The Jews, in their blaſphemous account of Jeſus[l], ſay as much: they own, that Judas, or Juda, as they call him, offered to betray him into the hands of the wiſe men, ſaying to them; almoſt in the words expreſſed in the following verſe, "if you will hearken unto me, אמסור אותו, "I will deliver him into your hands to-morrow;" and which agrees very well with the time alſo: for it was two days before the paſſover that Jeſus was in Bethany, where he ſupped with his diſciples, and waſhed their feet, and had the box of ointment poured on his head; and on the night of the day after all this was done, Judas ſet out from thence to Jeruſalem; ſee John xiii. 30. ſo that it muſt be the next day before he could meet the high-prieſts, and on the morrow, at night, he delivered him into their hands; on the propoſal of which, they ſay, that Simeon ben Shetach, whom they make to be preſent at this time, and all the wiſe men and elders, שמחו שמחה גדולה, rejoiced exceedingly.

Ver. 15. And ſaid unto them, &c.] Tho' the words, to them, are not in the original text, they are rightly ſupplied; as they are by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and mean the chief-prieſts to whom Judas went, and to whom he made the following propoſal; what will ye give me, and I will deliver him to you? They did not aſk him to do it, he firſt made the motion; a barbarous and ſhocking one! to deliver his Lord and Maſter, with whom he had familiarly converſed, and from whom he had received ſo many favours, into the hands of thoſe that hated him; nor was he concerned what they would do to him, or what would become of him, when in their hands: all his view, and what he was intent upon, was, what they would give him for doing it. They did not tempt him, by firſt offering him ſo much money, if he would betray him; but he himſelf firſt moves it to them, and tempts them with it to offer him an handſome reward: and it is to be obſerved, that he does not mention the name of Jeſus, either becauſe they might be talking of him, when he came into their company; or elſe as ſuiting his language to theirs, who, when they ſpake of him, uſually ſaid, he, or that man, or this fellow. And in the ſame rude way Judas now treats his maſter: and they covenanted with him for thirty pieces of ſilver; that is, thirty ſhekels of ſilver; for it is a rule with the Jews, that when mention is made in ſcripture of pieces of ſilver, without expreſſing the ſpecies, ſhekels are meant: ſo Onkelos, and Jonathan ben Uzziel, in their Targums on Gen. xx. 16. and xlv. 22. render pieces of ſilver, by ſhekels of ſilver; ſo pieces of gold ſignify ſhekels of gold: thus the 1700 pieces of gold in Judg. viii. 26. are, in the Septuagint, Arabic, and Vulgate Latin verſions, called ſo many ſhekels of gold; and our verſion ſupplies the word ſhekels alſo, as it does in 2 Chron. ix. 15, 16. and yet ſome learned men have aſſerted[m], that there were no ſhekels of gold among the Jews, though expreſs mention is made of them in 1 Chron. xxi. 25. The value of a ſhekel of gold, according to Brerewood[n], was, of our money, fifteen ſhillings; and ſome make it to come to a great deal more; to one pound, ſixteen ſhillings, and ſix-pence ſterling: had theſe thirty pieces been pieces, or ſhekels of gold, they would have amounted to a conſiderable ſum of money; but they were pieces of ſilver, and not talents, or pounds, but ſhekels. The ſilver ſhekel had on one ſide enſtamped upon it, the pot of manna, or, as others think, a cenſer, or incenſe-cup, with theſe words around it, in Samaritan letters, ſhekel Iſrael, the ſhekel of Iſrael; and, on the other, Aaron's rod budding, with this inſcription about it, Jeruſalem Hakeduſhah, Jeruſalem the holy[o]. As for the weight and value of it, R. Gedaliah ſays[p], we know by tradition that the holy ſhekel weighs 320 grains of barley of pure ſilver; and the ſame writer obſerves[q], that the ſelah, or holy ſhekel, is four denarii, or pence; that is, Roman pence, each being of the value of ſeven pence half-penny of our money: and to this agrees what Joſephus[r] ſays, that a ſhekel is a coin of the Hebrews, which contains four Attic drachms, or drams; and an Attic dram is of the ſame value with a Roman penny: ſo that one of theſe ſhekels was worth about half a crown; and it uſually weighed half an ounce, as not only ſome Jewiſh writers affirm, who profeſs to have ſeen them, and weighed them themſelves, as Jarchi[s], Gerundenſis[t], Abarbinel[u], and Gedaliah ben Jechaiah[w]; but other writers alſo, as Maſius[x], Arias Montanus[y], Waſerus[z], and Biſhop Cumberland. Now thirty ſhekels of ſilver were the price of a ſervant, Exod. xxi. 32. So[b] Maimonides obſerves, that the "atonement of ſervants, whether great or ſmall, whether male or female, the fixed ſum in the law is thirty ſhekels of good ſilver, whether the ſervant is worth an hundred pound, or whether he is not worth but a farthing," and which was in value of our money about three pounds fifteen ſhillings. This was the goodly price, which Chriſt, who appeared in the form of a ſervant, was prized at, according to the prophecy in Zech. xi. 12, 13. and which the high-prieſts thought a very ſufficient one; and the wretch Judas, as covetous as he was, was contented with.

Ver. 16. And from that time he ſought opportunity to betray him.] Luke adds, in the abſence of the multitude; in the moſt private manner, when he was alone, and in ſome ſolitary place, that no tumult might ariſe, and that there might be no danger of a reſcue: for ſo he, and the chief-prieſts, had conſulted, and ſettled it, as what would be moſt prudent and adviſeable; and therefore, from that time forward, being prompted on by ſatan, and the lucre of the money he was to receive, he narrowly watched, and diligently obſerved, the beſt and moſt fitting ſeaſon to perform his enterprize, and which very quickly offered.

Ver. 17. Now the firſt day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, &c.] There were ſeven of theſe days, and this was the firſt of them, in which the Jews might not eat leavened bread, from the fourteenth, to the twenty-firſt of the month Niſan; in commemoration of their being thruſt out of Egypt, in ſo much haſte, that they had not time to leaven the dough, which was in their kneading-troughs: wherefore, according to their canons[c], on the night of the fourteenth day; that is, as Bartenora explains it, the night, the day following of which is the fourteenth, they ſearch for leaven in all private places and corners, to bring it out, and burn it, or break it into ſmall pieces, and ſcatter it in the wind, or throw it into the ſea. Mark adds, when they killed the paſſover; and Luke ſays, when the paſſover muſt be killed; which was to be done on the fourteenth day of the month Niſan, after the middle of the day; and this was an indiſpenſable duty, which all were obliged to: for ſo they ſay[d], "every man, and every woman, are bound to obſerve this precept; and whoever makes void this commandment preſumptuouſly, if he is not defiled, or afar off, lo! he is guilty of cutting off." The time of killing the paſſover was after the middle of the day; and 'tis ſaid[e], that "if they killed it before the middle of the day it was not right; and they did not kill it till after the evening ſacrifice, and after they had offered the evening incenſe; and after they had trimmed the lamps, they began to ſlay the paſſovers, or paſchal lambs, unto the end of the day; and if they ſlay'd after the middle of the day, before the evening ſacrifice, it was right." The reaſon of this was, becauſe the lamb was to be ſlain between the two evenings; the firſt of which began at noon, as ſoon as ever the day declined: and this was not done privately, but in the temple; for thus it is[f] affirmed,

"they don't kill the paſſover but in the court, as "the reſt of the holy things." The time and manner of killing the lamb, and by whom, of the ſprinkling of the blood, and of their fleaing it, and taking out the fat, and burning it on the altar, may be ſeen in the Miſna[g]. The diſciples came to Jeſus; that is, Peter and John, as may be learnt from Luke xxii. 8. for theſe only ſeem to have had any notion of Judas's betraying Chriſt, from what had been ſaid at the ſupper in Bethany, two days before: the reſt thought he was gone to prepare for the feaſt, and therefore were under no concern about it; but theſe two judged otherwiſe, and therefore came to Chriſt to know his mind concerning it; for it was high time that a preparation ſhould be made; for this was Thurſday morning, and the lamb was to be killed in the afternoon, and eat at even. Saying unto him, where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the paſſover? This queſtion in Luke follows upon an order which Chriſt gave to theſe diſciples: ſaying, go and prepare us the paſſover, that we may eat; for maſters uſed to give their ſervants orders to get ready the paſſover for them; and which were expreſſed in much ſuch language as this[h]: "he that ſays to his ſervant, "צא ושחוט עלי את פסח, go and ſlay the paſſover "for me: if he kills a kid, he may eat of it; if "he kills a lamb, he may eat of it." It is reported[i] of "Rabban Gamaliel, that he ſaid to his "ſervant Tabi, צא וצלה, go and roaſt the paſſover "for us upon an iron grate." The diſciples having received ſuch an order from their maſter, enquire not in what town or city they muſt prepare the paſſover, for that was always eat in Jeruſalem; ſee Deut. xvi. 5, 6, 7. Luke ii. 41, 42. where they were obliged, by the Jewiſh canon[k], to lodge that night; tho' they might eat the unleavened bread, and keep the other days of the feaſt any where, and in every place[l]; but they enquire in what houſe he would have it got ready: for they might make uſe of any houſe, and the furniture of it, where they could find room, and conveniency, without any charge; for they did not let out their houſes, or any of their rooms, or beds, in Jeruſalem; but, at feſtivals, the owners of them gave the uſe of them freely to all that came[m]: and it is[n] obſerved among the wonders and miracles done at Jeruſalem, that tho' there were ſuch multitudes at their feaſts, yet "a man could never ſay to his friend, I have "not found a fire to roaſt the paſſover-lambs in "Jeruſalem, nor I have not found a bed to ſleep "on in Jeruſalem, nor the place is too ſtrait for "me to lodge in, in Jeruſalem."

Ver. 18. And he ſaid, go into the city to ſuch a man, &c.] That is, to ſuch a man in the city of Jeruſalem; for, as yet, they were in Bethany, or at the mount of Olives however, without the city: he does not mention the man's name, but deſcribes him, as Mark and Luke ſay, and tells them, there ſhall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water, follow him into the houſe, where he entreth in; who ſeems to be not the maſter of the houſe, but a ſervant, that was ſent on ſuch an errand. This is a very conſiderable inſtance of our Lord's preſcience of future contingencies: he knew before-hand, that exactly at the time that the diſciples would enter Jeruſalem, ſuch a man belonging to ſuch a houſe, would be returning with a pitcher of water in his hand; and they ſhould meet him, and follow him, where he went, which would be a direction to them what houſe to prepare the paſſover in: and ſay unto him; not to the man bearing the pitcher of water; but, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, to the good man of the houſe, the owner of it, who probably might be one of Chriſt's diſciples ſecretly: for many of the chief rulers in Jeruſalem believed on Chriſt, though they did not openly confeſs him, for fear of the Phariſees, as Nicodemus, and Joſeph of Arimathea; and this man might be one of them, or ſome other man of note and wealth; ſince they were to find, as they did, a large upper room furniſhed and prepared. For, it ſeems, that without mentioning his name, the man would know him by their language, he dictates to them in the following clauſe, who they meant; the maſter ſaith; the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, our maſter; thine and ours, the great maſter in Iſrael, the teacher ſent from God: my time is at hand; not of eating the paſſover, as if it was diſtinct from that of the Jews, and peculiar to himſelf, for he eat it at the uſual time, and when the Jews eat theirs; and which time was fixed and known by every body, and could be no reaſon to move the maſter of the houſe to receive him: but he means the time of his death, that he had but a little while to live; and that this inſtance of reſpect would be the laſt he would have an opportunity of ſhewing him whilſt living, and the laſt time Chriſt would have an opportunity of ſeeing him; and he might ſay this to prepare him to meet the news of his death with leſs ſurprize: I will keep the paſſover at thy houſe with my diſciples; not with him and his family, but with his diſciples, who were a family, and a ſociety of themſelves, and a ſufficient number to eat the paſſover together; for there might be two companies eating their diſtinct paſſovers in one houſe, and even in one room: concerning which is the following rule, "שתי חבירות שהין אוכלים בבית אחד, two ſo- "cieties that eat in one houſe; the one turn their "faces this way and eat, and the other turn their "faces that way and eat, and an heating-veſſel (in "which they heat the water to mix with the wine) "in the middle; and when the ſervant ſtands to "mix, he ſhuts his mouth, and turns his face till "he comes to his company, and eats; and the "bride turns her face and eats[o]."

Ver. 19. And the diſciples did as Jeſus had appointed them, &c.] They went into the city of Jeruſalem; they met the man carrying a pitcher of water home; they followed him into the houſe he entred; they addreſſed the maſter of the houſe, in the manner Chriſt directed, who ſhewed them a large upper room, prepared with all proper furniture for ſuch an occaſion, as Chriſt had foretold: and they made ready the paſſover; they went and bought a lamb; they carried it to the temple to be ſlain in the court, where it was preſented as a paſſover-lamb for ſuch a number of perſons; they had it flead, cut up, the fat taken out, and burnt on the altar, and its blood ſprinkled on the foot of it; they then brought it to the houſe where they were to eat it; here they roaſted it, and provided bread, and wine, and bitter herbs, and a ſauce called charoſeth, into which the herbs were dipped; and, in ſhort, every thing that was neceſſary.

Ver. 20. Now when the even was come, &c.] The ſecond evening, when the ſun was ſet, and it was dark, and properly night; for "on the evenings

“ of the paſſovers near the Minchah, a man might “ not eat עד שתחשך, until it was dark [p].” This was according to the rule, Exod. xii. 8. he ſat down with the twelve, his twelve diſciples; ſo the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; and which alſo adds, at table; even all the twelve apoſtles, who were properly his family, and a ſufficient number for a paſſover-lamb [q]: for “ they don't kill the paſſover for a “ ſingle man, according to the words of R. Judah, “ though R. Joſe permits it; yea, tho' the ſociety “ conſiſts of an hundred, if they can't eat the “ quantity of an olive, they don't kill for them; “ nor do they make a ſociety of women, ſervants, “ and little ones.” Judas was now returned again, and took his place among the diſciples, as if he was as innocent, and as friendly, as any of them: this he might chuſe to do, partly to avoid all ſuſpicion of his deſigns; and partly that he might get intelligence where Chriſt would go after ſupper, that he might have the opportunity he was waiting for, to betray him into the hands of his enemies. He ſat, or lay down with them, as the word ſignifies; for the poſture of the Jews, at the paſſover-table eſpecially, was not properly ſitting, but reclining, or lying along on couches, not on their backs, nor on their right-ſide, but on their left; of which ſee the note on John xiii. 23. The firſt paſſover was eaten by them ſtanding, with their loins girt, their ſhoes on, and ſtaves in their hands, becauſe they were juſt ready to depart out of Egypt: but in after paſſovers theſe circumſtances were omitted; and particularly ſitting, or lying along, was reckoned ſo neceſſary to be obſerved, that it is ſaid [r], that “ the pooreſt man in Iſrael might not “ eat, עד שיסב, until he lies along, or leans;” that is, as ſome of their commentators [s] note, either upon the couch, or on the table, after the manner of free men, and in remembrance of their liberty: and another of them [t] ſays, “ we are bound to eat “ בהסבה, lying along, as kings and great men eat, “ becauſe it is a token of liberty.” Hence they elſewhere ſay [u], “ it is the way of ſervants to eat “ ſtanding; but here (in the paſſover) to eat, “ מסובין, ſitting, or lying along, becauſe they (the “ Iſraelites) went out of bondage to liberty. Says “ R. Simon, in the name of R. Joſhua ben Levi, that “ which a man is obliged to in the paſſover, tho' “ it be but the quantity of an olive, he muſt eat “ it, מוסב, lying along.” The account Maimonides gives of this uſage, is in theſe words [w]: “ even “ the pooreſt man in Iſrael may not eat until he “ lies along: a woman need not lie; but if ſhe is a “ woman of worth and note, ſhe ought to lie: a “ ſon by a father, and a ſervant before his maſter “ ought to lie; but a diſciple before his maſter does “ not lie, except his maſter gives him leave (as Chriſt “ did his); and lying on the right hand is not lying; and ſo he that lies upon his neck, or upon “ his face, this is not lying; and when ought they “ to lie? at the time of eating, the quantity of an “ olive, of unleavened bread, and at drinking of “ the four cups; but at the reſt of eating and “ drinking, if he lies, lo! it is praiſe-worthy; but “ if not, there is no neceſſity.” This cuſtom was ſo conſtantly and uniformly obſerved at the paſſover, that it is taken particular notice of in the declaration, or ſhewing forth of the paſſover by the maſter of the family, when he ſays [x], “ how different is this night from all other nights, &c.” and among the many things he mentions, this is one; “ in all other nights we eat either ſitting, or lying “ along; that is, which way we pleaſe, but this “ night all of us מסובין, lie along.”

Ver. 21. And as they did eat, &c.] The paſſover-lamb, the unleavened bread, and bitter herbs: he ſaid: it was uſual, whilſt they were thus engaged, to diſcourſe much about the reaſon and deſign of this inſtitution. What they talked of may be learnt from what follows [y]: “ it is an affirmative precept “ of the law, to declare the ſigns and wonders “ which were done to our fathers in Egypt, on the “ night of the fifteenth of Niſan, according to “ Exod. xiii. 3. remember this day, &c. and from “ whence on the night of the fifteenth? from ver. 8. “ and thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſon, &c. at the time that “ the unleavened bread, and bitter herbs lie before “ thee. And tho' he has no ſon, or tho' they are “ wiſe, and grown up, they are bound to declare “ the going out of Egypt; and every one that enlarges, or dwells long on the things that happened, and came to paſs, lo! he is praiſe-worthy. It is a command to make known to children, even tho' they do not aſk; as it is ſaid, “ and thou ſhalt ſhew thy ſon: according to the ſon's “ knowledge, his father teaches him; how if he is “ a little one, or fooliſh? he ſays to him my ſon, “ all of us were ſervants, as this handmaid, or this “ ſervant, in Egypt; and on this night the holy, “ bleſſed God redeemed us, and brought us into “ liberty: and if the ſon is grown up, and a wiſe “ man, he makes known to him what happened “ to us in Egypt, and the wonders which were done “ for us by the hands of Moſes, our maſter; all according to the capacity of the ſon. And it is “ neceſſary to make a repetition on this night, that “ the children may ſee, and aſk, and ſay, how “ different is this night from all other nights? “ until he replies to them, and ſays to them, ſo “ and ſo it happened, and thus and thus it was.— “ If he has no ſon, his wife aſks him; and if he “ has no wife, they aſk one another, how different “ is this night? and tho' they are all wiſe men, “ every one aſks himſelf alone, how different is “ this night? and it is neceſſary to begin with reproaches, and end with praiſe, how? he begins “ and declares, how at firſt our fathers were in the “ days of Terah, and before him, deniers (of the “ divine being), and wandring after vanity, and “ following idolatrous worſhip; and he ends with “ the law of truth, how that God brought us near “ to himſelf, and ſeparated us from the nations, “ and cauſed us to draw nigh to his unity; and ſo “ begins and makes known, that we were ſervants “ to Pharaoh in Egypt, and all the evils he recompenſed us with; and ends with the ſigns and “ wonders which were wrought for us, and with “ our liberties: and he that expounds from—a Syrian was my father, ready to periſh, till he has “ finiſhed the whole ſection; and every one that “ adds and enlarges in expounding this ſection, lo! “ he is praiſe-worthy. And every one that does “ not ſay theſe three words on the night of the “ fifteenth, cannot be excuſed from blame; and “ they are theſe, the paſſover, the unleavened “ bread, and the bitter herbs: the paſſover, becauſe “ God paſſed over the houſes of our fathers in “ Egypt, as it is ſaid, Exod. xii. 27. the bitter herbs, “ becauſe the Egyptians made bitter the lives of “ our fathers in Egypt: the unleavened bread, “ becauſe they were redeemed: and theſe things “ all of them are called the declaration, or ſhewing forth.” Chriſt now took up ſome part of the time, at leaſt, whilſt they were eating, in diſcourſing with his diſciples about the traitor: he ſaid, verily I ſay unto you, that one of you ſhall betray me; meaning, to the chief prieſts and Scribes, who ſhould condemn him to death, and deliver him to the Gentiles, to be mocked, ſcourged, and crucified, as he had told them ſome time before, Matt. xx. 18, 19. though he did not tell them as now, that it ſhould be done by one of them: he had indeed ſignified as much as this two days before, at the ſupper in Bethany, but none ſeemed to underſtand whom he meant, but Peter and John, and the thing wore off their minds; and therefore he mentions it again to them, with great ſeriouſneſs, and in the moſt ſolemn manner, declaring it as a certain and undoubted truth.

Ver. 22. And they were exceeding ſorrowful, &c.] Partly that Chriſt ſhould be betrayed at all, into the hands of his enemies, by whom they knew he would be ill uſed; and partly, that ſo vile an action ſhould be done, by one from among themſelves; and greatly, becauſe they knew not, nor could not conceive, who of them could be guilty of ſuch an horrid ſin: and began every one of them to ſay unto him, Lord, is it I? excepting Judas, who afterwards ſpoke for himſelf. This they ſaid, though conſcious to themſelves the thing had never entered into their hearts; nor had they taken any ſtep towards it, but with their whole ſouls abhorred it; yet, as knowing the treachery and deceitfulneſs of their hearts, which they could not truſt to; and fearing leſt ſhould they be left thereunto, they might commit ſuch a dreadful iniquity; and as deſirous of being cleared by Chriſt from any ſuch imputation, and even from all ſuſpicion of any thing of this kind.

Ver. 23. And he anſwered and ſaid, &c.] In order to make them eaſy, and point out the betrayer to them, he that dippeth his hand with me in the diſh, the ſame ſhall betray me. This ſeems to refer to the dipping of the unleavened bread, or bitter herbs, or both, into the ſauce called Charoſeth, which the Jews [z] ſay, “ was made of figs, “ nuts, almonds, and other fruits; to which they “ added apples; all which they bruiſed in a mortar, “ and mixed with vinegar; and put ſpices into it, “ calamus and cinnamon, in the form of ſmall long “ threads, in remembrance of the ſtraw; and it “ was neceſſary it ſhould be thick, in memory of “ the clay.” The account Maimonides [a] gives of it is, “ the Charoſeth is a precept from the words “ of the Scribes, in remembrance of the clay in “ which they ſerved in Egypt; and how did they “ make it? They took dates, or berries, or raiſins, and the like, and ſtamped them, and put “ vinegar into them, and ſeaſoned them with ſpices, “ as clay in ſtraw, and brought it upon the table, in “ the night of the paſſover.” And in this he ſays, the maſter of the family dipped both the herbs, and the unleavened bread [b], and that both ſeparately and conjunctly; for he ſays [c], that “ he rolled “ up the unleavened bread and bitter herbs together, ומטבל, and dipped them in the Charoſeth.” And this was twice done in eating the paſſover; for ſo it is obſerved [d] among the many things, which diſtinguiſhed this night from others: “ in all other “ nights we dip but once, but in this night twice.” By this action, Chriſt gave his diſciples a ſignal; whereby they might know the betrayer: for this is not a general deſcription of one, that ſat at the table, and eat of his bread with him, and ſo fulfilled the prediction, in Pſal. xli. 9. though this is true too; but then, this was ſaying no more than he had before done, when he ſaid, one of you ſhall betray me: though the phraſe is ſo [e] uſed; for inſtance, “ if a man goes and ſits at table with them, “ וטובל עמהן, and dips with them, though he does “ not eat the quantity of an olive, they bleſs for “ him.” But this refers to a particular action then performed by Judas, juſt at the time Chriſt ſpoke theſe words; and who might ſit near him, and dip into the ſame diſh he did; for ſince there were thirteen of them, there might be more diſhes than one; and two or three might have a diſh to themſelves, and Judas dip in the ſame diſh with Chriſt.

Ver. 24. The Son of man goeth, &c.] Meaning himſelf, not to the mount of Olives, or Gethſemane, or the garden, whither he went a little after this, but out of the world, to his Father: the phraſe is expreſſive of his death, as in Joſh. xxiii. 14. Pſal. xxxix. 13. and denotes the voluntarineſs of it, and which is no ways inconſiſtent with the divine determinations about it; nor the violence that was offered to him by his enemies. As it is written; in the book of God's eternal purpoſes and decrees; for Luke ſays, as it was determined: or as it was recorded in the books of the Old Teſtament; in the twenty-ſecond Pſalm, in the fifty-third of Iſaiah, and in the ninth of Daniel; for Chriſt died for the ſins of his people, in perfect agreement with theſe ſcriptures, which were written of him: but wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed; for God's decrees concerning this matter, and the predictions in the bible founded on them, did not in the leaſt excuſe, or extenuate the blackneſs of his crime; who did what he did, of his own free-will, and wicked heart, voluntarily, and to ſatisfy his own luſts: it had been good for that man if he had not been born. This is a Rabbinical phraſe, frequently uſed in one form or another; ſometimes thus; as it is ſaid [f] of ſuch that ſpeak falſe and lying words, and regard not the glory of their Creator, טב לין דלא ייתון לעלמא, it would have been better for them if they had never come into the world; and ſo of any other notorious ſinner, it is at other times ſaid [g], טב ליה דלא אברי, or [h], נוח לו שלא נברא, it would have been better for him if he had not been created; ſignifying, that it is better to have no being at all, than to be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; and which was the dreadful caſe of Judas, who fell by his tranſgreſſion, and went to his own place.

Ver. 25. Then Judas which betrayed him, &c.] Or that was about to betray him, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it: he had taken a ſtep towards it, was ſeeking an opportunity to do it, and at length effected it: the Perſic verſion reads, Judas Iſcariot; who after all the reſt had put the queſtion, anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, is it I? Who, though he knew what he had been doing, and what he further reſolved to do, and was conſcious to himſelf he was the man; nay, though he had been pointed out as the perſon, and the moſt dreadful wo denounced on him, that ſhould be the betrayer, in his hearing; yet all this did not at all affect his marble heart; but in the moſt audacious manner, and without any concern of mind, or ſhew of guilt, aſks if he was the perſon; ſuggeſting, that ſurely he could not mean him. It is obſerved by ſome, that the word Rabbi, uſed by Judas, is a more honourable name than that of Lord, uſed by the diſciples; thereby feigning to give Chriſt more honour, and exceed in his reſpect to him, than the reſt of the diſciples; in order if he could, to cover his wicked deſigns: he ſaid unto him, thou haſt ſaid: that is, ’tis as thou haſt ſaid; thou haſt ſaid right, thou art the man; a way of ſpeaking uſed, when what is aſked is aſſented to as truth: thus it being “ ſaid to a certain “ perſon, is Rabbi dead? He replied to them, “ אתון אמריתון, ye have ſaid; and they rent their “ cloaths [i].” Taking it for granted, by that anſwer, that ſo it was.

Ver. 26. And as they were eating, &c.] The paſchal lamb, and juſt concluding the whole ſolemnity, which was done by eating ſome of the [k] lamb: for “ laſt of all he (that kept the paſſover) eats of “ the fleſh of the paſſover, though it be but the “ quantity of an olive, and he does not taſte any “ thing after it; and at the ſame time he eats the “ quantity of an olive of unleavened bread, and “ does not taſte any thing after it: ſo that his meal “ endeth, and the ſavour of the fleſh of the paſſ- “ over, or of the unleavened bread, is in his “ mouth; for the eating of them is the precept.” So that the paſchal ſupper was now concluded, when Chriſt entered upon the inſtitution of his own ſupper: Jeſus took bread; which lay by him, either on the table, or in a diſh. Though this ſupper is diſtinct from the paſſover, and different from any ordinary meal, yet there are alluſions to both in it, and to the cuſtoms of the Jews uſed in either; as in this firſt circumſtance, of taking the bread: for he that aſked a bleſſing upon bread, uſed to take it into his hands; and it is a rule [l], that “ a man does “ not bleſs, עד שיתפוס הלחם בידו, until he takes “ the bread into his hand, that all may ſee that he “ bleſſes over it.” Thus Chriſt took the bread and held it up, that his diſciples might obſerve it: and bleſſed it; or aſked a bleſſing over it, and upon it; or rather bleſſed and gave thanks to his Father for it, and for what was ſignified by it; and prayed that his diſciples, whilſt eating it, might be led to him, the bread of life, and feed upon him in a ſpiritual ſenſe; whoſe body was going to be broken for them, as the bread was to be, in order to obtain eternal redemption for them: ſo it was common with the Jews, to aſk a bleſſing on their bread: the form in which they did it was this [m]: “ Bleſſed “ art thou, O Lord, our God, the king of the “ world, that produceth bread out of the earth.” What form our Lord uſed, is not certain; no doubt it was one of his compoſing, and every way ſuitable to the deſign of this ordinance. It was cuſtomary alſo when there were many at table, that lay down there, however, as Chriſt and his diſciples now did, for one to aſk a bleſſing for them all; for ſo runs the rule [n], “ if they ſit to eat, “ every one bleſſes for himſelf, but if they lie along, “ אחד מברך לכלם, one bleſſes for them all.” Moreover, they always bleſſed, before they brake: “ Says Rabba [o], he bleſſes, and after that he “ breaks:” this rule Chriſt likewiſe carefully obſerves, for it follows, and brake it. The rules concerning breaking of bread, are theſe [p]: “ The “ maſter of the houſe recites and finiſhes the bleſ- “ ſing, and after that he breaks:——no man that “ breaks, is allowed to break, till they have “ brought the ſalt, and what is to be eaten with “ the bread, before every one——and he does not “ break neither a ſmall piece, leſt he ſhould ſeem “ to be ſparing; nor a large piece, bigger than an “ egg, leſt he ſhould be thought to be famiſhed; “ ——and on the ſabbath day he breaks a large “ piece, and he does not break, but in the place “ where it is well baked: it is a principal com- “ mand to break a whole loaf.” Chriſt broke the bread, as a ſymbol of his body, which was to be broken by blows, and ſcourges, thorns, nails, and ſpear, and to be ſeparated from his ſoul, and die as a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people: and having ſo done, he gave it to the diſciples; which being a diſtinct act from breaking the bread, ſhews that the latter does not deſign the diſtribution of the bread, but an act preceding it, and a very ſignificant one; and which ought not to be laid aſide: according to the Jewiſh [q] uſages, “ He that broke “ the bread, put a piece before every one, and the “ other takes it in his hand; and he that breaks, “ does not give it into the hand of the eater, un- “ leſs he is a mourner; and he that breaks, ſtretches “ out his hand firſt and eats, and they that ſit, or “ lie at the table, are not allowed to taſte, until “ he that bleſſes, has taſted; and he that breaks, “ is not allowed to taſte, until the Amen is finiſhed “ out of the mouth of the majority of thoſe that “ ſit at table.” And ſaid, take, eat, this is my body: in Luke ’tis added, which is given for you; that is, unto death, as a ſacrifice for ſin; and by the apoſtle Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 24. which is broken for you; as that bread then was, and ſo expreſſive of his wounds, bruiſes, ſufferings, and death, for them. Now when he ſays, this is my body, he cannot mean, that that bread was his real body; or that it was changed and converted into the very ſubſtance of his body; but that it was an emblem and repreſentation of his body, which was juſt ready to be offered up, once for all: in like manner, as the Jews in the eating of their paſſover, uſed to ſay [r] of the unleavened bread, “ הא לחמא דעניא, this is “ the bread of affliction, which our fathers eat in “ the land of Egypt.” Not that they thought that was the ſelf-ſame bread, but that it reſembled it, and was a repreſentation of the affliction and diſtreſs their fathers were in at that time; to which ſome think our Lord here alludes: though rather, the reference is to the paſſover lamb, which is frequently, in Jewiſh writings, called the body of the lamb: thus mention being made of the bringing of the herbs, the unleavened bread, and the ſauce Charoſeth, with other things to the maſter of the houſe, ’tis added [s]; “ and in the ſanctu- “ ary (whilſt that ſtood) they bring unto him, “ גופו של פסח, the body of the lamb.” Again, elſewhere [t] ’tis ſaid, “ they bring a table furniſhed, “ and on it the bitter herbs, and other greens, “ and the unleavened bread, and the ſauce, “ וגופו של כבש הפסח, and the body of the paſchal “ lamb.” And a little further [u], “ he recites the “ bleſſing, bleſſed art thou, O Lord, &c. for the “ eating, " eating of the paſſover, and he eats, מגופו של פסח, " of the body of the paſſover." And now it is, as if Chriſt had ſaid, you have had the body of the lamb ſet before you, and have eaten of it, in commemoration of the deliverance out of Egypt, and as a type of me the true paſſover, quickly to be ſacrificed; and this rite of eating the body of the paſchal lamb is now to ceaſe; and I do here by this bread, in an emblematical way, ſet before you my body, which is to be given to obtain ſpiritual deliverance, and eternal redemption for you; in remembrance of which, you, and all my followers in ſucceſſive generations, are to take and eat of it, till I come. The words, take, eat, ſhew that Chriſt did not put the bread into the mouths of the diſciples, but they took it in their hands, and eat it; expreſſive of taking and receiving Chriſt by the hand of faith, and feeding on him in a ſpiritual manner.

Ver. 27. And he took the cup and gave thanks, &c.] For the Jews bleſſed, or gave thanks for their wine, as well as for their food, and generally did it in this form [w]: " Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, " our God, the king of the world, who haſt creat- " ed the fruit of the vine." Hence the phraſe, the fruit of the vine, in ver. 29. not that we are to ſuppoſe, that Chriſt uſed or confined himſelf to this form of words: and it is to be obſerved, that they not only gave thanks for their wine before food, and whilſt they were eating [x], but alſo after meat; and as this relates to the bleſſing of the cup after eating, or as the apoſtle Paul ſays, when he had ſupped, 1 Cor. xi. 25. I ſhall only tranſcribe what the Jews ſay [y] concerning that: " When " wine is brought to them after food, if there is " but that cup there, the houſe of Shammai ſay, " מברך על היין, he bleſſes, or gives thanks for " the wine, and after that gives thanks for the " food: the houſe of Hillell ſay, he gives thanks " for the food, and after that gives thanks for the " wine." And as this was uſual at ordinary meals, to bleſs or give thanks for the wine, ſo at the paſſover; and which our Lord continued in his ſupper, and is to be practiſed by us. It ſhould be further known, that the wine at the paſſover, and ſo what Chriſt uſed at his ſupper, was red. " Says R. Je- " remiah [z], it is commanded to perform this duty, " ביין אדום, with red wine." And elſewhere 'tis ſaid [a], " that it is neceſſary, that there ſhould be " in it (the wine) taſte, and look." The Gloſs on it is, שיהא אדום, that it ſhould be red: and which, as it moſt fitly repreſented the blood ſprinkled on the door-poſts of the Iſraelites, when the Lord paſſed over their houſes; ſo the blood of Chriſt, ſhed for the remiſſion of the ſins of his people. It is ſcarcely worth obſerving the meaſure of one of the cups, that was uſed at ſuch a time: they ſay [b], that the four cups which were drank at this feaſt, held an Italian quart of wine, ſo that one cup contained half a pint. More particularly, they aſk how much is the meaſure of a cup? the anſwer is, two fingers ſquare, and a finger and a half and the third part of a finger deep; or as it is elſewhere [c], the fifth part of a finger: and gave it to them, ſaying, drink ye all of it; for this is not to be reſtrained from one ſort of communicants, and only partook of by another; but all are to drink of the cup, as well as eat of the bread: whether here is not an alluſion to the cuſtom of the Jews at the paſſover, when they obliged all to drink four cups of wine, men, women, and children, and even the pooreſt man in Iſrael, who was maintained out of the almsdiſh [d], may be conſidered.

Ver. 28. For this is my blood of the New Teſtament, &c.] That is, the red wine in the cup, was an emblem and repreſentation of his precious blood, whereby was exhibited a new diſpenſation, or adminiſtration of the covenant of grace; and by which it was ratified and confirmed; and whereby all the bleſſings of it, ſuch as peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life, come to the people of God: the alluſion is to the firſt covenant, and the book of it being ſprinkled with the blood of bulls, and therefore called the blood of the covenant, Exod. xxiv. 8. But the ſecond covenant, or the new adminiſtration of the covenant of grace, for which reaſon it is called the New Teſtament, is exhibited and eſtabliſhed in the blood of Chriſt the teſtator. It was uſual, even among the heathens, to make and confirm their covenants by drinking human blood, and that ſometimes mixed with wine [e]. Which is ſhed for many, for the remiſſion of ſins; that is, was very ſhortly to be ſhed, and ſince has been, for all the elect of God; for the many that were ordained to eternal life, and the many that were given to Chriſt, the many that are juſtified by him, and the many ſons he'll bring to glory; whereby the full forgiveneſs of all their ſins was procured, in a way conſiſtent with, and honourable to the juſtice of God; full ſatisfaction being made to the law of God, for all their tranſgreſſions.

Ver. 29. But I ſay unto you, I will not drink henceforth, &c.] From whence it ſeems natural to conclude, that Chriſt had drank of the cup in the ſupper, as well as at the paſſover; and it is reaſonable to believe, that he alſo eat of the bread; ſince it appears from what has been obſerved above, ſee the note on ver. 26. that none might eat, till he that bleſſed and brake the bread, had taſted of it: the reaſon why wine is here called, the fruit of the vine, and not wine, ſee for in the note on ver. 27. The deſign of this expreſſion is to ſhew, that his ſtay would be very ſhort: the cup he had juſt drank of, was the laſt he ſhould drink with them: he ſhould drink no more wine at the paſſover; he had kept the laſt, and which now of right was to ceaſe; nor in the Lord's ſupper, for though that was to continue to his ſecond coming, he ſhould be no more preſent at it corporally, only ſpiritually; nor in common converſation, which is not contradicted by Acts x. 41. Since, though the apoſtles drank with him in his preſence, it does not neceſſarily follow, that he drank with them; and if he did, it was not in a mortal ſtate, nor in the ordinary manner and uſe of it, but to confirm his reſurrection from the dead; nor can it be proved, that he drank of the fruit of the vine: the deſign of the phraſe, as before obſerved, is to ſignify his ſpeedy departure from his diſciples. The alluſion is to an uſage at the paſſover, when after the fourth cup, they taſted of nothing elſe all that night, except water [f]; and ſo Chriſt declares, that he would drink no more, not only that night, but never after. Until the day I drink it new with you, in my Father's kingdom: Mark ſays, in the kingdom of God; and Luke, until the kingdom of God come; and both the Syriac and Perſic verſions read it here, in the kingdom of God; by which is meant, ſomething diſtinct from the kingdom of the Son, or of the Meſſiah, which was already come; and appeared more manifeſtly after the reſurrection of Chriſt, upon his aſcenſion to heaven, and the effuſion of the Holy Spirit, and the ſucceſs of the Goſpel, both among Jews and Gentiles; and which will be more glorious in the latter day: and when all the elect of God are gathered in, and have been preſented to Chriſt by himſelf, he'll then deliver up the kingdom to the Father, and God ſhall be all in all; and then the kingdom of the Father will take place here mentioned, and which is no other than the ultimate glory; ſo called, becauſe it is of the Father's preparing and giving, and in which he'll reign, and dwell, and the ſaints with him, to all eternity; which muſt not be underſtood to the excluſion of Chriſt, for it is called his kingdom alſo, Luke xxii. 30. in this ſtate, Chriſt will drink new wine, not literally, but ſpiritually underſtood; and which deſigns the joys and glories of heaven, the beſt wine which is reſerved whilſt laſt: which is ſometimes ſignified by a feaſt, of which wine is a principal part; by ſitting down as at a table, in the kingdom of heaven, with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, Matt. viii. 12. and expreſſed by wine, becauſe of its refreſhing and exhilarating nature, in God's preſence is fulneſs of joy; and by new wine, becauſe theſe joys are the moſt excellent, becauſe they are always new, and never change; they are pleaſures for evermore: to drink hereof, denotes the full enjoyment of them, which Chriſt, as man and mediator, and his people with him, ſhall be poſſeſſed of; and is different from the ſuperficial taſte of the powers of the world to come, Heb. vi. 5. which hypocrites have, and thoſe real prelibations of glory which ſaints have in this life; there being a difference between drinking and taſting, Matt. xxvii. 34. and this will be ſocial; Chriſt and his true diſciples ſhall be together, and drink this new wine together; or enjoy the ſame glory and felicity in the higheſt meaſure and degree, they are capable of; and which ſociety therein will yield a mutual pleaſure to each other, as the words here ſuggeſt. The Jews often expreſs the joys of the world to come, by ſuch like figurative phraſes: they make mention of, יין דעלמא דאתי, the wine of the world to come [g]; and of שכר רוחני, a ſpiritual drink, in the laſt days, which is called the world to come [h]: and ſo they explain [i] after this manner, Iſa. lxiv. 4. Neither hath the eye ſeen, O God, &c. זה יין, this is the wine, which is kept in the grapes from the ſix days of the creation; of which they often ſpeak in their writings [k].

Ver. 30. And when they had ſung an hymn, &c.] The Hallell, which the Jews were obliged to ſing on the night of the paſſover; for the paſſover they ſay [l], was טעון חלל, bound to a hymn. This Hallell, or ſong of praiſe, conſiſted of ſix Pſalms, the cxiiith, cxivth, cxvth, cxvith, cxviith, and cxviiith [m]: now this they did not ſing all at once, but in parts. Juſt before the drinking of the ſecond cup and eating of the lamb, they ſung the firſt part of it, which contained the cxiiith and cxivth Pſalms; and on mixing the fourth and laſt cup, they compleated the Hallell, by ſinging the reſt of the Pſalms, beginning with the cxvth Pſalm, and ending with the cxviiith; and ſaid over it, what they call the bleſſing of the ſong, which was Pſal. cxlv. 10, &c. and they might, if they would, mix a fifth cup, but that they were not obliged to, and ſay over it the great Hallell, or hymn, which was the cxxxvith Pſalm [n]. Now the laſt part of the Hallell, Chriſt deferred to the cloſe of his ſupper; there being many things in it pertinent to him, and proper on this occaſion, particularly Pſal. cxv. 1. and cxvi. 12, 13, 14, 15. and cxviii. 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27. and the Jews themſelves ſay [o], that חבלו של משיח, the ſorrows of the Meſſiah are contained in this part: that this is the hymn which Chriſt and his diſciples ſung, may be rather thought, than that it was one of his own compoſing; ſince not only he, but all the diſciples ſung it, and therefore muſt be what they were acquainted with; and ſince Chriſt in moſt things conformed to the rites and uſages of the Jewiſh nation; and he did not riſe up from table and go away, until this concluding circumſtance was over; though it was allowed to finiſh the Hallell, or hymn, in any place they pleaſed, even though it was not the place where the feaſt was kept [p]: however, as ſoon as it was over, they went out to the mount of Olives; he and his diſciples, excepting Judas: firſt he himſelf alone, and then the diſciples followed him, according to Luke xxii. 39. and the Perſic verſion here reads it, he went out. This ſeems to be contrary to a Jewiſh canon; for the paſſover was טעון לינה, bound to lodging a night [q]; that is, as the Gloſs explains it, "the firſt night (i. e. of the "paſſover) a man muſt lodge in Jeruſalem; thence-"forward it was lawful to dwell without the wall, "within the border." And a little after, the ſame phraſe, being bound to lodge, is explained, one night in the midſt of the city: but Chriſt had more important buſineſs to attend unto, than to comply with this rule, which was not obligatory by the word of God, though the Jews pretend to found it on Deut. xvi. 7 [r]. The place where he went with his diſciples, was the mount of Olives, which was on the eaſt ſide of Jeruſalem; and was the place where the high prieſt ſtood, and burnt the red heifer, and ſprinkled its blood [s]: now from the temple, or from the mountain of the houſe, there was a cauſeway, or bridge on arches, made to the mount of Olives, in which the high prieſt and the heifer, וכל מסעדיה, and all his aſſiſtants, (the prieſts that helped him in this ſervice) went to this mount [t]: in this ſame way 'tis very probable, went Chriſt the great high prieſt, who was typified by the red heifer, and his companions the diſciples, to the ſame place, where he had his bloody ſweat, and where his ſorrows and ſufferings began.

Ver. 31. Then ſaith Jeſus unto them, &c.] Either before they went out of the houſe, where they had been eating the paſſover, and the ſupper; or as they were going along to the mount of Olives; which latter rather ſeems to be the caſe: all ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night. The words are ſpoken to the eleven diſciples; for Judas was now gone to the high prieſts, to inform them where Jeſus was going that night, and to receive of them a band of men and officers to apprehend him; which is what would be the occaſion of all the reſt of the diſciples being offended: for when they ſhould ſee their maſter betrayed by one of themſelves, and the officers ſeize him and bind him, and lead him away as a malefactor, our Lord here ſuggeſts, that they would be filled with ſuch fear and dread, that every one of them would forſake him and run away, and provide for their own ſafety; yea, would be ſo ſtumbled at this unexpected event, that they would begin to ſtagger and heſitate in their minds, whether he was the Meſſiah, or no, as the two diſciples going to Emmaus, ſeem to intimate; they would be ſo ſhocked with this ſad diſappointment, and ſo offended, or ſtumble, as to be ready to fall from him; and their faith in him muſt have failed, had he not prayed for them, as he did for Peter; for they thought of nothing elſe but a temporal kingdom, which they expected would now quickly be ſet up, and they be advanced to great honour and dignity; but things taking a different turn, it muſt greatly ſhock and affect them: and it was to be the caſe not of one or two only, but of all of them; and that becauſe of him, whom they dearly loved, and with whom they had been eating the paſſover, and his own ſupper, and had had ſuch a comfortable opportunity together; and becauſe of his low eſtate, his being ſeized and bound, and led away by his enemies; as the Jews were before offended at him, becauſe of the meanneſs of his parentage and education: and this was to be that very night; and it was now very late, it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed to be midnight: for ſince the laſt evening, or ſunſetting, they had eat the paſſover, the ceremonies of which took up much time, and after that the Lord's ſupper; then the Hallell, or hymn was ſung, when Chriſt diſcourſed much with his diſciples, and delivered thoſe conſolatory and inſtructive ſermons, about the vine and other things, occaſioned by the fruit of the vine, they had been juſt drinking of, recorded in the xvth and xvith chapters of John; and put up that prayer to his Father for them, which ſtands in the xviith chapter; and indeed within an hour or two after, ſee Mark xiv. 37. this prediction of Chriſt's had its accompliſhment, and which he confirms by a prophetic teſtimony: for it is written, in Zech. xiii. 7. I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcattered. This text is miſerably perverted by the Jewiſh writers; though they all agree, that by the ſhepherd, is meant ſome great perſon, as a king; ſo the Targum renders it, kill the king, and the princes ſhall be ſcattered: one[u] of them ſays, that a wicked king of Moab is deſigned; another[w], a king of the Iſhmaelites, or of the Turks; and a third[x], that any, and every king of the Gentiles is meant; a fourth ſays[y], 'tis a prophecy of the great wars that ſhall be in all the earth, in the days of Meſſiah ben Joſeph; and a fifth[z], after having taken notice of other ſenſes, mentions this as the laſt: that "the words my ſhepherd, and the man my fellow, in the former part of the verſe, are to be underſtood of Meſſiah, the ſon of Joſeph; and becauſe he ſhall be ſlain in the wars of the nations, therefore the Lord will whet his glittering ſword againſt the nations, to take vengeance on them; and on this account ſays, awake, O ſword, for my ſhepherd, and for the man my fellow: as if the Lord called the ſword and vengeance to awake againſt his enemies, becauſe of Meſſiah ben Joſeph, whom they ſhall ſlay; and who ſhall be the ſhepherd of the flock of God, and by reaſon of his righteouſneſs ard perfection, ſhall be the man his fellow; and when the nations ſhall ſlay that ſhepherd, the ſword of the Lord ſhall come and ſmite the ſhepherd; that is, every ſhepherd of the Gentiles, and their kings; for becauſe of the ſlaying of the ſhepherd of Iſrael, every ſhepherd of their enemies ſhall be ſlain, and their ſheep ſhall be ſcattered; for through the death of the ſhepherds, the people that ſhall be under them, will have no ſtanding." Now though this is a moſt wretched perverſion of the paſſage, to make the word ſhepherd in the former part of it, to ſignify one perſon, and in the other part of it another; yet ſhews the conviction of their minds, that the Meſſiah is not to be excluded from the prophecy, and of whom, without doubt, it is ſpoken, and rightly applied by him, who is concerned in it, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; who feeds his flock like a ſhepherd, is the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, the chief ſhepherd, the good ſhepherd, that laid down his life for the ſheep; which is intended by the ſmiting of him: in the text in Zechary, it is read, ſmite the ſhepherd; being an order of Jehovah the Father's, to juſtice, to awake its ſword, and ſheath it in his Son, his equal by nature, his ſhepherd by office; and here, as his own act, and what he would do himſelf, I will ſmite the ſhepherd; for his ordering juſtice to ſmite, is rightly interpreted doing it himſelf. The Jews can't object to this, when their own interpreters in general explain it thus, השם יכרית, God ſhall cut off the ſhepherd[a]. The ſufferings of Chriſt, which are meant by the ſmiting him, were according, not only to the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God, the will of his good pleaſure, but according to his will of command; which juſtice executed, and Chriſt was obedient to, and in which Jehovah had a very great hand himſelf: he bruiſed him, he put him to grief, he made his ſoul an offering for ſin; he ſpared him not, but delivered him up into the hands of men, juſtice, and death, for us all: the latter clauſe, and the ſheep of the flock ſhall be ſcattered, reſpects the diſciples, and their forſaking Chriſt, and fleeing from him, when he was apprehended; for then, as was foretold in this prophecy, and predicted by Chriſt, they all forſook him and fled, and were ſcattered every man to his own, and left him alone. In Zechary 'tis only ſaid, the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered; here, the ſheep of the flock; though the Evangeliſt Mark reads it, as in the prophet, and ſo the Arabic here, and the ſenſe is the ſame; for the ſheep are the ſheep of the flock, Chriſt's little flock, the flock of ſlaughter, committed to his care; unleſs it may be thought proper, to diſtinguiſh between the ſheep and the flock; and by the flock underſtand, all the elect of God, and by the ſheep, the principal of the flock; the rams of his ſheep, or flock, as the Syriac verſion renders it; the apoſtles of Chriſt, who are chiefly, if not ſolely intended; though others of Chriſt's followers might be ſtumbled, offended, and ſtaggered, as well as they; as Cleophas was, one of the two that went to Emmaus.

Ver. 32. But after I am riſen again, &c.] This he ſays for their comfort, that tho' he, their ſhepherd, ſhould be apprehended, condemned, and crucified, ſhould be ſmitten with death, and be laid in the grave, yet he ſhould riſe again; and tho' they ſhould be ſcattered abroad, yet ſhould be gathered together again by him, their good ſhepherd; who would, after his reſurrection, appear to them, be at the head of them, and go before them, as a ſhepherd goes before his ſheep: for it follows, I will go before you into Galilee; the native place of moſt, if not all of them. This the women that came to the ſepulchre after Chriſt's reſurrection, were bid, both by the angel, and Chriſt himſelf, to remind the diſciples of, and ordered them to go into Galilee, where they might expect to ſee him: accordingly they did go thither, and ſaw and worſhipped him; ſee Matt. xxviii. 7, 10, 16, 17.

[z] Abarbinel, Maſhmia Jeſhua, fol. 74. 4.
[a] R. Aben Ezra, R. David Kimchi, & Miclol Yophi in loc.

Ver. 33. Peter anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Who was always a forward man, free to ſpeak his mind, and was often the mouth of the reſt; obſerving what Chriſt had affirmed concerning all of them, that that very night, in a very ſhort ſpace of time, they would be offended becauſe of him; and knowing the ſtrong love he had for Chriſt, and being perſuaded it could never be his caſe, thus addreſſes him; tho' all men ſhall be offended becauſe of thee, yet will I never be offended: his ſenſe is, that tho' all the men in the world, friends, and foes, though even all the reſt of the diſciples, who were his moſt intimate friends, moſt cloſely attached to him, and who dearly loved him, and ſincerely believed in him, ſhould be ſo ſtumbled at what ſhould befal him, as to flee from him, and be tempted to relinquiſh his cauſe, and intereſt; yet nothing ſhould ever cauſe him, in the leaſt, to ſtumble and fall, to deſert him, or heſitate about him, or cauſe him to take the leaſt umbrage and offence at what might come upon him; and this he was poſitive of would be the caſe, not only that night, but ever after. No doubt he ſaid this in the ſincerity of his heart, and out of his great fervour of affection for Chriſt; but what he failed in, was truſting to his own ſtrength, being ſelf-confident; and in entertaining a greater opinion of himſelf, and his ſteady attachment to Chriſt, than of the reſt of the diſciples; and in contradicting what Chriſt had ſo ſtrongly affirmed of them all, without any exception, and ſo of himſelf, and had confirmed by ſo glaring a prophecy concerning this matter.

Ver. 34. Jeſus ſaid unto him, verily I ſay unto thee, &c.] Chriſt, the more ſtrongly to aſſeverate what he was about to ſay, uſes the word verily, or prefixes his Amen to it, as being a certain truth, and what Peter might aſſure himſelf of would certainly come to paſs: that this night before the cock crow, thou ſhalt deny me thrice; which is, as if he ſhould ſay, thou wilt not only be offended becauſe of me, and flee from me, and be ſcattered with the reſt, as will be the caſe of all of you; but thou wilt deny that thou knoweſt me, that thou belongeſt to me, or haſt any concern with me; and this thou wilt do not only once, but again and again, even three times, one after another, and that this very night, before the cock has done crowing. In Mark it is ſaid, that this day, even in this night, before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice; which may be reconciled with the words of Matthew, and the other Evangeliſts, by obſerving, that the word twice is not in Beza's ancient copy, which he gave to the univerſity of Cambridge, nor is it in the Ethiopic verſion; which, if allowed to be the true reading, the difficulty is removed at once; but whereas it is in other copies, no ſtreſs muſt be laid on this, nor is there any need of it: for whereas the cock crows twice in the night, once at midnight, and again near break of day; and which latter crowing being louder, and more welcome, and moſt taken notice of, is, by way of eminence, called the cock-crowing; and is what Matthew here has reſpect to, and ſo deſigns the ſame as Mark does; and the ſenſe of both is, that before the cock crow a ſecond time, which is moſt properly the cock crowing, Peter ſhould three times deny his maſter, as he did; ſee Mark xiii. 35. where cock-crowing is diſtinguiſhed from midnight, the firſt time the cock crows, and means the ſecond time of crowing; and where Mark is to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe as Matthew, and both entirely agree. So cock-crowing and midnight are diſtinguiſhed by the Jews, who ſay [b], that "on all other days they remove the "aſhes from the altar, בקריאת הגבר, at cock- "crowing, or near unto it, whether before or after; "but on the day of atonement, מחצות, at mid- "night:" and who alſo ſpeak of the cock's crowing a firſt and ſecond, and even a third time [c]. "Says R. Shila, he that begins his journey before "cock-crowing, his blood be upon his head. R. "Joſiah ſays, he may not proceed, עד שישנה, "until he repeats; that is, until he crows twice: "and there are, who ſay, until he trebles it, or "crows a third time: of what do they ſpeak? of "a middling one, i. e. which neither crows too "ſoon, nor too late."

Ver. 35. Peter ſaith unto him, &c.] Mark ſays, he ſpake the more vehemently; his ſpirits were raiſed to a greater pitch of reſentment, and he expreſſed himſelf in ſtronger terms, and in more peremptory and ſelf-confident language; tho' I ſhould die with thee, yet will I not deny thee: he ſeems to have underſtood Chriſt, that he ſhould ſuffer death, and that he would be in great danger himſelf, and therefore rather than loſe his life would deny his maſter; wherefore he moſt confidently affirms, that ſhould this be the caſe, ſhould he be called to ſuffer death for his ſake, or along with him, he would moſt chearfully embrace it, rather than be guilty of ſo dreadful a crime, which he could not look upon but with the utmoſt deteſtation and abhorrence, as to deny his dear Lord and Saviour: likewiſe alſo ſaid all the diſciples; that they would never be offended becauſe of him, and would die with him rather than deny him. This they ſaid, being alſo ſelf-confident and ignorant of their own weakneſs, and drawn into theſe expreſſions thro' Peter's example; and that partly to ſhew their equal abhorrence of ſo horrible an iniquity, as denying Jeſus; and partly to remove all ſuſpicion from them, leſt they ſhould be thought to have leſs love and zeal for Chriſt than Peter had.

Ver. 36. Then cometh Jeſus with them, &c.] The eleven diſciples, unto a place called Gethſemane; the Syriac verſion calls it Ghedſiman; the Perſic, Gheſmani, ſo the Arabic; the Vulgate Latin, and the Ethiopic, Gethſemani: in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and in the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions, it is called a village; and, in the Ethiopic verſion, a village of wine; and in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, a place. Here, according to an Ethiopic writer, the virgin Mary was buried by the apoſtles [d]. Its etymology is very differently given: ſome read, and explain it, as if it was גי שמנים, a valley of fatneſs, or of olives, as it is called in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; ſee Iſ. xxviii. 1. others, as if it was גי דסמני, a valley of ſigns, or a very famous valley; ſo mount Sinai is called [e], הר סימנאי, Harſemanai, the mountain of ſigns: but, to take notice of no more; the true reading and ſignification of it is, גת שמני, an olive preſs, or a preſs for olives: ſo we read [f] of a chamber in the temple which is called the chamber, בית שמניא, Beth Semania, or Bethſemani, where they put their wine and oil for temple ſervice. It is very probable that at, or near this place, was a very publick olive preſs, where they uſed to ſqueeze the olives, for the oil of them, which they gathered in great plenty from off the mount of Olives; at the foot of which this place was; and a very ſignificant place it was for our Lord to go to at this time, when he was about to tread the wine-preſs of his father's wrath, alone, and of the people there were none with him: for it follows, and ſaith unto the diſciples, ſit ye here, while I go and pray yonder: perceiving a time of diſtreſs was coming upon him, he betakes himſelf to prayer, an example worthy of our imitation; in the performance of which duty he choſe to be retired and ſolitary, and therefore left eight of his diſciples at a certain place, whilſt he went to another at ſome diſtance, convenient for his purpoſe; who perhaps might be the weakeſt of the diſciples, and not able to bear the agonies and diſtreſs of their Lord and Maſter.

Ver. 37. And he took with him Peter, and the two ſons of Zebedee, &c.] James and John, who perhaps were the ſtrongeſt, and beſt able to bear the ſhocking ſight, and were his favourite diſciples; who were admitted to be with him at other times, when the reſt were not; as at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, Mark v. 37. and moreover, theſe were at his transfiguration on the mount, Matt. xvii. 1. which was a repreſentation and preſage of his glory; and ſo were very proper perſons to be witneſſes of his ſorrows and agonies, which were the way to it; and three of them were taken by him for this purpoſe, being a ſufficient number to bear teſtimony, ſince by the mouth of two or three witneſſes every thing is eſtabliſhed: and began to be ſorrowful; his ſoul was troubled on the ſame account ſix days before, John xii. 27. but was now ſorrowful. He was a man of ſorrows all his days, and acquainted with griefs, being reproached and perſecuted by men: but now a new ſcene of ſorrows opened; before he was afflicted by men, but now he is bruiſed, and put to grief by his father: his ſorrows now began, for they did not end here, but on the croſs; not that this was but a bare beginning of his ſorrows, or that theſe were but light in compariſon of future ones; for they were very heavy, and indeed ſeem to be the heavieſt of all, as appears from his own account of them; his vehement cry to his father; his bloody ſweat and agony; and the aſſiſtance he ſtood in need of from an angel; and the comfort and ſtrength he received from him in his human nature: all which, put together, the like is not to be obſerved in any part of his ſufferings: and to be very heavy; with the weight of the ſins of his people, and the ſenſe of divine wrath, with which he was ſo preſſed and overwhelmed, that his ſpirits were almoſt quite gone; he was juſt ready to ſwoon away, ſink and die; his heart failed him, and became like wax melted in the midſt of his bowels, before the wrath of God, which was as a conſuming fire: all which ſhews the truth, tho' weakneſs of his human nature, and the greatneſs of his ſufferings in it. The human nature was ſtill in union with the divine perſon of the ſon of God, and was ſuſtained by him, but left to its natural weakneſs, without ſin, that it might ſuffer to the utmoſt, and as much as poſſible for the ſins of God's elect.

Ver. 38. Then ſaith he unto them, &c.] The three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, who, by his looks and geſtures, might know ſomewhat of the inward diſtreſs of his mind; yet he choſe to expreſs it to them in words, ſaying, my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful, even unto death. That Chriſt had an human ſoul, as well as an human body, is clear from hence; and which was poſſeſs'd of the ſame paſſions as ours are, but without ſin, ſuch as joy, love, grief, ſorrow, &c. and at this time its ſorrows were exceeding great: his ſoul was beſet all around with the ſins of his people; theſe took hold on him, and encompaſſed him, which muſt, in the moſt ſenſible manner, affect his pure and ſpotleſs mind; the ſorrows of death and hell ſurrounded him on every ſide, inſomuch that the leaſt degree of comfort was not let in to him; nor was there any way open for it, ſo that his ſoul was overwhelmed with ſorrow; his heart was ready to break; he was brought even, as it were, to the duſt of death; nor would his ſorrows leave him, he was perſuaded, until ſoul and body were ſeparated from each other; ſee a like phraſe in Judg. xvi. 16. tarry ye here. The Ethiopic verſion adds, till I ſhall return, for he was going a little further from them, to vent his grief, and pour out his ſoul unto God. Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, expect me, or wait for me here, ſignifying, that he ſhould return to them ſhortly; and watch with me. It was night, and they might be heavy and inclined to ſleep: he knew it would be an hour of temptation both to him and them, and therefore adviſes them to watch againſt it; and to obſerve how it would go with him, and what ſhould befal him, that they might be witneſſes of it, and be able to teſtify what agonies he endured, what grace he exerciſed, and how ſubmiſſive he was to his father's will.

Ver. 39. And he went a little further, &c.] Luke ſays, ch. xxii. 41. about a ſtone's caſt, about fifty or ſixty feet from the place where they were, and fell on his face, and prayed; partly to ſhew his great reverence of God, the ſword of whoſe juſtice was awaked againſt him, the terrors of whoſe law were ſet in array before him, and whoſe wrath was pouring down upon him; and partly to ſignify how much his ſoul was depreſſed, how low he was brought, and in what diſtreſs and anguiſh of ſpirit he was, that he was not able to lift up his head, and look up. This was a prayer-geſture uſed when a perſon was in the utmoſt perplexity. The account the Jews give of it, is this[g], “ כשנופלין על פניהם, “ when they fall upon their faces, they don't ſtretch “ out their hands and their feet, but incline on “ their ſides.” This was not to be done by any perſon, or at any time; the rules are theſe[h]: “ no “ man is accounted fit, ליפול על פניו, to fall upon “ his face, but he that knows in himſelf that he is “ righteous, as Joſhua; but he inclines his face a “ little, and does not bow it down to the floor; “ and it is lawful for a man to pray in one place, “ and to fall upon his face in another: 'tis a cuſtom “ that reaches throughout all Iſrael, that there is “ no falling upon the face on a ſabbath-day, nor “ on feaſt-days, nor on the beginning of the year, “ nor on the beginning of the month, nor on the “ feaſt of dedication, nor on the days of purim, “ nor at the time of the meat-offering of the eves “ of the ſabbath-days, and good days, nor at the “ evening prayer for every day; and there are pri- “ vate perſons that fall upon their faces at the even- “ ing prayer, and on the day of atonement only: “ they fall upon their faces becauſe it is a time of “ ſupplication, requeſt, and faſting.” Saying, O my father; or, as in Mark, Abba, Father; Abba, being the Syriac word he uſed, and ſignifies, my father; and the other word is added for explanation's ſake, and to denote the vehemency of his mind, and fervour of ſpirit in prayer. Chriſt prayed in the ſame manner he taught his diſciples to pray, ſaying, our father; and as all his children pray under the influence of the Spirit of adoption, whereby they cry Abba, Father. God is the father of Chriſt, not as man, for as ſuch he was without father, being the ſeed of the woman, and made of a woman, without man; nor by creation, as he is the father of ſpirits, of angels, and the ſouls of men, of Adam, and all mankind; nor by adoption, as he is the father of all the choſen, redeemed, and regenerated ones; but by nature, he being the only-begotten of the father, in a manner unconceivable and inexpreſſible by us. Chriſt now addreſſes him in prayer in his human nature, as ſtanding in this relation to him as the ſon of God, both to expreſs his reverence of him, and what freedom and boldneſs he might uſe with him; what confidence he might put in him; and what expectation he might have of being heard and regarded by him; and what ſubmiſſion and reſignation of will was due from himſelf unto him. If it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me; meaning not only the hour, as it is called in Mark, the preſent ſeaſon and time of diſtreſs, and horror; but all his future ſufferings and death, which were at hand; together with the bearing the ſins of his people, the enduring the curſe of the law, and the wrath of God, all which were ingredients in, and made up this dreadful bitter cup, this cup of fury, curſing and trembling; called a cup, either in alluſion to the nauſeous potions given by phyſicians to their patients; or rather to the cup of poiſon given to malefactors the ſooner to diſpatch them; or to that of wine mingled with myrrh and frankincenſe to intoxicate them, that they might not feel their pain, ſee the note on Mark xv. 23. or to the cup appointed by the maſter of the family to every one in the houſe; theſe ſorrows, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt being what were allotted and appointed by his heavenly father: and when he prays that this cup might paſs from him, his meaning is, that he might be freed from the preſent horrors of his mind, be excuſed the ſufferings of death, and be delivered from the curſe of the law, and wrath of God; which requeſt was made without ſin, tho' it betrayed the weakneſs of the human nature under its inſupportable load, and its reluctance to ſufferings and death, which is natural; and yet does not repreſent him herein as inferior to martyrs, who have deſired death, and triumphed in the midſt of exquiſite torments: for their caſe and his were widely different; they had the preſence of God with them, Chriſt was under the hidings of his father's face; they had the love of God ſhed abroad in them, he had the wrath of God poured out upon him; and his prayer beſpeaks him to be in a condition which neither they, nor any mortal creature were ever in. Moreover, the human nature of Chriſt was now, as it were, ſwallowed up in ſorrow, and intent upon nothing but ſufferings and death; had nothing in view but the wrath of God, and the curſe of the law; ſo that every thing elſe was, for the preſent, out of ſight; as the purpoſes of God, his counſel and covenant, his own engagements and office, and the ſalvation of his people; hence it is no wonder to hear ſuch a requeſt made; and yet it is with this condition, if it be poſſible. In Mark 'tis ſaid, all things are poſſible unto thee; intimating, that the taking away, or cauſing the cup to paſs from him, was: all things are poſſible to God, which are conſiſtent with the perfections of his nature, and the counſel of his will: and all ſuch things, tho' poſſible in themſelves, yet are not under ſuch and ſuch circumſtances ſo; the removal of the cup from Chriſt was poſſible in itſelf, but not as things were circumſtanced, and as matters then ſtood; and therefore it is hypothetically put, if it be poſſible, as it was not; and that by reaſon of the decrees and purpoſes of God, which had fixed it, and are immutable; and on account of the covenant of grace, of which this was a conſiderable branch and article, and in which Chriſt had agreed unto it, and is unalterable; and alſo on the ſcore of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, in which it had been often ſpoken of; and therefore without it, how ſhould the ſcriptures be fulfilled that thus it muſt be? they would not have been the ſcriptures of truth. Beſides, Chriſt had foretold it himſelf once and again, and therefore conſiſtent with the truth of his own predictions, it could not be diſpenſed with: add to all this, that the ſalvation of his people required his drinking it; that could not be brought about no other way in agreement with the veracity, faithfulneſs, juſtice, and holineſs of God. This condition qualifies and reſtrains the above petition; nor is it to be conſidered but in connexion with what follows: nevertheleſs not as I will, but as thou wilt; which ſhows that the requeſt was far from being ſinful, or contrary to piety to God, or love to men, or to true fortitude of mind; the pure natural will of Chriſt, or the will of Chriſt's human nature, being left to act in a mere natural way, ſhews a reluctancy to ſorrows, ſufferings, and death; this ſame will acting on rational principles, and in a rational way, puts it upon the poſſibility of the thing, and the agreement of the divine will to it. That there are two wills in Chriſt, human and divine, is certain; his human will, tho' in ſome inſtances, as in this, may have been different from the divine will, yet not contrary to it; and his divine will is always the ſame with his father's. This, as mediator, he engaged to do, and came down from heaven for that purpoſe, took delight in doing it, and has compleatly finiſhed it.

[g] Gloſſ. in T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 34. 2.

[h] Maimon. Hilch. Tephilla, c. 5. §. 14, 15.

Ver. 40. And he cometh unto the diſciples, &c.] The three he took with him, Peter, James, and John, after he had finiſhed his prayer; and findeth them aſleep: many things might contribute to, and bring this drowſineſs upon them; as the great fatigue they had had in preparing the paſſover in the day, the plentiful meal they had eat at night, tho' without exceſs, and the lateneſs of the night, it being now probably midnight; but the chief reaſon of their ſleepineſs was their ſorrow, as is expreſſed in Luke xxii. 45. what Chriſt had ſaid to them of his ſoul-troubles, and what they ſaw in him, had filled their hearts with ſorrow, which brought on them an amazement and ſtupidity of mind; and this iſſued in ſleep. We have other inſtances of perſons in exceſſive grief and trouble falling aſleep, as Elijah in 1 Kings xix. 4, 5. and Jonah in Jon. i. 5. ſo that this did not ariſe from a ſecure, lazy, indolent frame of ſpirit; or from any diſregard to Chriſt, and neglect of him, and unconcernedneſs for him; but from their great ſorrow of heart; for, the trouble and diſtreſs that he was in, added to the cauſes above-mentioned. Tho' ſome have thought, that ſatan might be concerned in it, who induced this ſleepineſs, or increaſed it, that he might the more eaſily ſurprize them with his temptations, he was preparing for them, which I will not deny. Now, tho' this ſleep was natural bodily ſleep, which the diſciples fell into, yet was an emblem of, and carried in it a reſemblance to the ſpiritual ſleep and drowſineſs of the people of God; for as this was after a delightful entertainment and converſation with Chriſt at the paſſover and Lord's ſupper, ſo it ſometimes is, that the children of God fall into a ſleepy frame of ſoul, after much communion with Chriſt, as the church did in Cant. v. 1, 2. and as this ſleep befel them, when Chriſt was withdrawn a little ſpace from them; ſo it was with the church, when her beloved was abſent from her, Cant. iii. 1. and v. 2. and with the wiſe virgins when the bridegroom tarried, Matt. xxv. 6. and as this was not an entire thorough ſleep; they knew all the while what Chriſt was doing, and could relate, as they have done, the circumſtances of it; ſo the children of God, when aſleep, they are not like unregenerate perſons, in a dead ſleep of ſin, that hear, and ſee, and feel, and know nothing; but tho' they are aſleep, their hearts are awake, as was the church's, Cant. v. 2. yet as the diſciples were ſo much aſleep, that the bare words of Chriſt did not arouſe them from it for a while; ſo ſuch is the ſleep of the ſaints ſometimes, that they are not to be arouſed by the bare miniſtry of the word, tho' the moſt powerful arguments, and the moſt moving and melting language are made uſe of, as were with the church, Cant. v. 2, 3, 4. and ſaith unto Peter, what, could ye not watch with me one hour? This was ſaid particularly to Peter, becauſe he had ſo lately, in ſuch a confident manner, declared, that he would not be offended with Chriſt, but abide with him, ſtand by him, and even die with him, was there an occaſion for it; and yet, in ſo ſhort a ſpace of time, was fallen aſleep, as were the reſt who ſaid the ſame things alſo: and it is as if Chriſt ſhould ſay, how will you be able to ſtand by me throughout this night, when ye can't watch with me ſo much as one hour, tho' I ſo earneſtly deſired you to tarry here, and watch with me, and you ſaw in what diſtreſs I was in? how will you be able to withſtand the temptations, that will beſet you quickly, and perform your promiſes of love, fidelity, conſtancy, and cloſe attachment to me, in the greateſt dangers, when you can't keep yourſelves awake one hour for my ſake?

Ver. 41. Watch and pray, &c.] Theſe two are very juſtly put together. There is, and ought to be, a watching before prayer, and unto it; a watching all opportunities, the moſt ſuitable and convenient to perform it; and there is a watching in it, both over our hearts, thoughts, words, and geſtures, and after it, for a return of it, and anſwer to it: the reaſon of this exhortation follows, that ye enter not into temptation; not that they might not be tempted at all; for none of the ſaints have been, or are without temptations; and they are needful for them; and it is the will of God they ſhould be attended with them; and he has made gracious proviſions for their ſuccour and relief under them; but that they might not enter into them, throw themſelves in the way of temptation, be ſurprized by them at an unawares, fall into them headlong, be immerſed in them, fall by them, and be overcome with them, ſo as to forſake Chriſt, or to deny him: the ſpirit indeed is willing, but the fleſh is weak; meaning either that the evil ſpirit ſatan was very deſirous of having them in his hands, very forward and ready to make the onſet upon them; was chearful, alert, and confident of victory; and was ſtrong, robuſt, and powerful; and they were but fleſh and blood, very weak and infirm, and unequal to the enemy; which is a ſenſe not to be deſpiſed, ſeeing it carries in it a very ſtrong reaſon why they ought to watch and pray, leſt they fall into the temptations of ſuch a powerful adverſary; ſee Eph. vi. 12. 1 Pet. v. 8. or elſe by ſpirit may be meant the ſoul, as renewed and regenerated by the Spirit of God; particularly the principle of grace in it, which is born of the ſpirit, and is called by the ſame name, and which luſts againſt the fleſh, or corrupt nature: this was willing to watch and pray, and guard againſt falling into temptations; was willing to abide by Chriſt, and expreſs its love to him every way; but the fleſh, or body, ſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, is weak and infirm, prone to ſleep, indulges eaſe, and unfit to bear trouble, but ready to ſink under it, and is for fleeing from it: and ſo the words contain our Lord's excuſe of his diſciples in their preſent circumſtances. Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads the words thus, and indeed the ſpirit is, שוקדת, watchful, but the fleſh is weak. The Ethiopic verſion after this manner, the ſpirit deſires, and the body is fatigued. The Perſic verſion, contrary both to the letter and ſenſe of the words, renders them, my ſpirit is firm, but my body is infirm.

Ver. 42. He went away again the ſecond time, &c.] To the ſame place as before, or at ſome little diſtance; after he had reproved his diſciples for their ſleeping, and had exhorted them to watchfulneſs, and prayer, ſuggeſting the danger they were liable to, and the condition they were in: and prayed, ſaying, O my father, if this cup may not paſs away from me except I drink it, thy will be done. The ſenſe of this prayer to his God and Father is, that if his ſufferings and death could not be diſpenſed with; if it was not conſiſtent with the decrees of God, and the covenant of grace, that he ſhould be excuſed from them; or if the glory of God, and the ſalvation of his people required it, that he muſt drink up that bitter cup, he was content to do it; deſiring in all things to ſubmit unto, and to fulfil his father's will, tho' it was ſo irkſome and diſagreeable to nature.

Ver. 43. And he came and found them aſleep again, &c.] For they were arouſed and awaked, in ſome meaſure, by what he had ſaid to them; but no ſooner was he gone but they fell aſleep again, and thus he found them a ſecond time; or he came again and found them aſleep; ſo read the Vulgate Latin, the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel: for their eyes were heavy; with ſleep thro' fatigue, ſorrow, &c. Mark adds, neither wiſt they what to anſwer him: they were ſo very ſleepy, they knew not how to ſpeak; or they were ſo confounded, that he ſhould take them aſleep a ſecond time, after they had had ſuch a reproof, and exhortation from him, that they knew not what anſwer to make him; who probably rebuked them again, or gave them a freſh exhortation.

Ver. 44. And he left them, and went away again, &c.] At ſome little diſtance from them; they being ſo over-powered with ſleep, that he could have no converſation with them: and prayed the third time; as the apoſtle Paul did, when under temptation, he prayed thrice that it might depart from him, 2 Cor. xii. 8. ſaying the ſame words: the Arabic verſion renders it, in the words which he before expreſſed; and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads, he ſaid the ſame prayer; not in the ſelf-ſame words, or in the expreſs form he had before delivered it; for it is certain, that his ſecond prayer is not expreſſed in the ſame form of words as the firſt: but the ſenſe is, that he prayed to the ſame purpoſe; the matter and ſubſtance of his prayer was the ſame, namely, that he might be exempted from ſuffering; but if that could not be admitted of, he was deſirous to be reſigned to the will of his heavenly father, and was determined to ſubmit unto it.

Ver. 45. Then cometh he to his diſciples, &c.] The three that were neareſt to him, the third time, as Mark ſays, and as it was; and ſaith unto them, ſleep on now, and take your reſt. The Evangeliſt Mark adds, it is enough; which has induced ſome interpreters to think, that theſe words were ſpoken ſeriouſly by Chriſt: tho' the ſenſe cannot be that they had watched ſufficiently, and now might ſleep, and take their reſt, for they had not watched at all; but rather, that he had now no need of them, or their watching with him; the conflict was over for the preſent; or, as the Syriac verſion renders it, the end is come; and ſo the Arabic; and to the ſame purpoſe the Perſic, the matter is come to an end, or to an extremity; the ſenſe being the ſame with what is expreſſed in the following clauſe, the hour is at hand; and ſhews, that the words are to be underſtood in an ironical ſenſe, ſleep on and take your reſt, if you can: I have been exhorting you to watchfulneſs, but to no purpoſe, you'll be alarmed from another quarter; a band of ſoldiers is juſt at hand to ſeize and carry me away, and now ſleep if you can: that this is the ſenſe appears from the reaſon given, and from the exhortation in the following verſe, and the reaſon annexed to that: behold the hour is at hand, and the ſon of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners: by the ſon of man Chriſt means himſelf, and under this diminutive title expreſſes his Meſſiahſhip, this being a character of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament; and the truth of his human nature, and the weakneſs and infirmities of it: by the betraying, or delivery of him, is intended either the betraying of him by Judas into the hands of the high-prieſt, Scribes, and Phariſees; or the delivery of him, by them, into the hands of Pilate, and by him to the Roman ſoldiers; all which were by the determinate counſel and fore-knowledge of God. The high-prieſt, elders, Scribes, and Phariſees, notwithſtanding all their pretenſions to religion, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, were very wicked perſons; tho' the Gentiles, the band of Roman ſoldiers, Judas brought with him to take Chriſt, are here rather meant, it being uſual to call the Gentiles, ſinners. This betraying and delivery of Chriſt into the hands of theſe, was determined by God; the time, the very hour was fixed, and was now approaching; the laſt ſand in the glaſs was dropping; for as ſoon as Chriſt had ſaid theſe words, Judas, with his band of ſoldiers, appeared.

Ver. 46. Riſe, let us be going, &c.] Not to run away from the enemy, but to meet him: this was ſaid, partly to arouſe his ſleepy diſciples; and partly to ſhew his love to his father, and his ſubmiſſion to his will; as alſo to expreſs the fortitude of his mind as man; he was now rid of his fears, and free from thoſe agonies and dreadful apprehenſions of things, he was but a little while ago poſſeſſed of; and likewiſe to ſignify his willingneſs to be apprehended, and to ſuffer, and die, in the room of his people: he is at hand that doth betray me. This ſhews his omniſcience: he not only knew, as he did from the beginning, who ſhould betray him; but he knew when he would do it; and he knew where the betrayer now was, that he was juſt now coming upon him, in order to deliver him into the hands of ſinful men. And this he ſpake with intrepidity of ſoul, with greatneſs of mind, being no more concerned at it, than when he gave him the ſop, and bid him do what he did quickly: he does not mention his name; nor did he ever, when he ſpoke of him as the betrayer; either becauſe the diſciples, as yet, did not fully and certainly know who ſhould betray him, and he would not now ſurprize them with it; or becauſe they did, and therefore it was needleſs to mention his name; or rather, becauſe he was unworthy to be mentioned by name: a behold is prefixed to this, partly to awaken the attention of his diſciples; and partly to expreſs what an horrid, inſolent, and unparallell'd action that was, Judas was now about to be guilty of.

Ver. 47. And while he yet ſpake, &c.] While he was thus ſpeaking to his diſciples, before the laſt words, he is at hand that doth betray me, were well out of his mouth; ſuch an exact knowledge had Chriſt of every motion of Judas, of what he was about, and where he was: lo! Judas, one of the twelve, came. The Perſic verſion adds, in ſight of Chriſt, and the diſciples; they ſaw him, and knew him, tho' at ſome little diſtance: he came to Gethſemane, and into the garden, where they were, with a deſign to betray his maſter. He is deſcribed by his name Judas; that is, Iſcariot, as in ver. 14. for there was another Judas among the apoſtles; the Syriac and Perſic read, Judas the betrayer, to diſtinguiſh him from the other: and alſo by his office, one of the twelve; i. e. apoſtles, whom Chriſt called from the reſt of his diſciples and followers, and beſtowed extraordinary gifts upon, and ſent forth to preach the Goſpel, caſt out devils, and heal all manner of diſeaſes; and lo! one of theſe betrays him! an apoſtle, and yet a devil! one of the twelve, one of his ſelect company, and boſom friends, and yet a traitor! and with him a great multitude, with ſwords, and ſtaves, from the chief-prieſts and elders of the people. Judas was at the head of them, went before them to ſhew them where Chriſt was, and to deliver him into their hands: he had not been aſleep, he had been with the chief-prieſts, and acquainted them with the opportunity he had of making good his agreement with them: he had got the band of ſoldiers, and other perſons together, in order to make ſure work of it. Thus we ſee how diligent wicked men are in the accompliſhment of their evil deſigns, whilſt good men are aſleep and indifferent to godly and ſpiritual exerciſes. Judas is here deſcribed by his company; he who but a few hours ago was at table with his Lord, and the reſt of the apoſtles, is now at the head of a band of Roman ſoldiers, and other miſcreants, and blood-thirſty wretches, intent upon the death of his maſter. They may well be called a multitude, becauſe made up of various ſorts of perſons, and theſe, many of them; of Roman ſoldiers, of the officers and ſervants of the chief-prieſts; yea of the chief-prieſts themſelves, captains of the temple, and elders of the people, who were ſo eager upon this enterprize, that they could not forbear going in company with them, to ſee what would be the iſſue of it. And a great one; for the band of ſoldiers, if it was compleat, conſiſted of a thouſand men itſelf; and beſides this, there were many others, and all to take a ſingle perſon, and who had no more about him than eleven diſciples; tho' the [1] Jews pretend he had two thouſand men with him: and who came alſo with ſwords and ſtaves, or clubs; the Roman ſoldiers with their ſwords, and the ſervants of the chief-prieſts with their clubs: the reaſon of this poſſe, and of their being thus armed, might be either for fear of the people, who, ſhould they be alarmed, and have any notice of their deſign, might riſe and make an uproar, and attempt to reſcue him; or that by having a Roman band with them, and the chief-prieſts and their officers, it might appear, that what they did they did by authority; and that they ſeized him as a malefactor, as one guilty either of ſedition, or hereſy, or both. And this account is confirmed by the Jews themſelves, who ſay, ſay [k], that the citizens of Jeruſalem were מזוינים, armed, and accoutred, and ſo took Jeſus: and this multitude alſo came from the chief-prieſts and elders of the people. Mark joins the Scribes with them: theſe compoſed the ſanhedrim, or great council of the nation, who had been conſulting the death of Chriſt; had agreed to give Judas thirty pieces of ſilver to betray him into their hands; had obtained a band of ſoldiers of the Roman governor to apprehend him, and ſent their officers and ſervants to aſſiſt herein; theſe all acted under their direction, influence, and authority. The Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read, ſent, from them.

Ver. 48. Now he that betrayed him gave them a ſign, &c.] By which it might be known who he was; for it being night, tho' they had lanterns and torches, as John ſays, yet Judas himſelf might not be able to diſcern him, ſo as to point him out, until he came very near him: moreover, Chriſt and his apoſtles might be cloathed alike, ſo that a miſtake might be eaſily made, and one of them be took for him: and ſo the Jews ſay [l], that the two thouſand men, they pretend were with him, were cloathed with the ſame apparel; which ſtory may take its riſe from hence: add to this, that James, the ſon of Alpheus, called the brother of our Lord, is reported to be very like unto him. Beſides, it is very likely that the Roman ſoldiers, who were to be the principal perſons in apprehending, binding, and carrying him away, might never have ſeen him, and ſo could not know him without ſome ſign was given them; and which Judas gave them before he came out with them; and is as follows: ſaying, whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, that ſame is he, hold him faſt. Judas might the rather pitch upon this to be the ſign, partly becauſe it might be what had been uſual with the diſciples, when they had been at any time abſent from Chriſt, and which he admitted of; and partly becauſe he might think this would beſt cover his treacherous deſigns, who, with all his wickedneſs, had not effrontery enough to come ſword in hand and ſeize him in a violent manner; and beſides, might not judge ſuch a method adviſeable, had he impudence enough to proſecute it, leſt this ſhould put Jeſus upon taking ſome meaſures to make his eſcape. The reaſon of his advice, hold him faſt, was, becauſe he knew that once and again, when attempts were made to ſeize him, he eaſily diſengaged himſelf, paſſed thro' the midſt, and went his way; ſee Luke iv. 30. John viii. 59. and x. 39. and therefore gave them this caution, and ſtrict charge, leſt, ſhould he ſlip from them, he ſhould loſe his money he had agreed with the chief-prieſts for; or, to let them know, that when he was in their hands, he had made good his agreement, and ſhould expect his money; and that it lay upon them then to take care of him, and bring him before the ſanhedrim. The account the Jews themſelves give of the directions of Judas, is not very much unlike this; who repreſent him adviſing in this manner, only as on the day before: "gird yourſelves ready about this time to-morrow, and the man whom I ſhall worſhip and bow to, the ſame is he; behave yourſelves like men of war, fight againſt his company, and lay hold on him [m]."

Ver. 49. And forthwith he came to Jeſus, &c.] As ſoon as ever he appeared, before the reſt could come up; for he went before them, as Luke ſays, and that not only as their guide to direct them to the perſon they wanted, but he ſeparated himſelf from them, that it might not be thought that he came with them, or belonged to them: and ſaid, hail maſter, and kiſſed him. Juſt as Joab aſked Amaſa of his health, and took him by the beard to kiſs him, and ſmote him under the fifth rib; 2 Sam. xx. 9. The ſalutation he gave him was wiſhing him all health, proſperity, and happineſs. The Syriac verſion renders it, peace, Rabbi; and the Perſic, peace be upon thee, Rabbi; which was the very form of ſalutation the diſciples of the wiſe men gave to their Rabbins. "Says [n] Aba bar Hona, in the name of R. Jochanan, in what form is the ſalutation of a diſciple to his maſter? שלום עליך רבי, peace be upon thee, Rabbi." In Mark, the word Rabbi is repeated, this being uſual in the ſalutation of the Jewiſh doctors; and the rather uſed by Judas under a pretence of doing him the greater honour, and of ſhewing the higheſt reſpect, and ſtrongeſt affection for him. So this deceitful wretch ſtill addreſſes him as his maſter, tho' he was now ſerving his moſt implacable enemies; and wiſhes him all peace and joy, when he was going to deliver him into the hands of thoſe that ſought his life; and to cover all, kiſſed him, as a token of his friendſhip, and the ſincerity of it. It is rightly obſerved by Dr. Lightfoot, that it was uſual for maſters to kiſs their diſciples, particularly their heads; but then not for diſciples to kiſs their maſters: of the former there are many inſtances in the Jewiſh writings, but not of the latter: yet, I can hardly think that this was done out of open contempt and deriſion, but under a pretence of reſpect and love; and even as being concerned for his preſent caſe, and as condoling him under the circumſtances he was now likely to be in, thro' an armed band, which was juſt upon him; and which he, by this artifice, would have ſuggeſted he had no concern with.

Ver. 50. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, friend, &c.] Not in an ironical and ſarcaſtic way, but becauſe he pretended to be his friend, by ſaluting and kiſſing him, in the manner he had done; or rather, becauſe Chriſt had always uſed him as his friend, his familiar friend, who had been of his councils, and had eat at his table; and therefore this carried in it ſomething very cutting, had Judas had any conſcience, or ſenſe of gratitude: wherefore art thou come? The Ethiopic verſion reads, my friend, art thou not come? that is, art thou come as my friend? is thy coming as a friend, or as an enemy? if as a friend, what means this company with ſwords and ſtaves? if as an enemy, why this ſalutation and kiſs? or what is thine end in coming at this time of night? what is thy buſineſs here? thou haſt left my company, and my diſciples, what doſt thou do here? The Syriac verſion reads it, to that; and the Arabic, to this art thou come? to kiſs me, and by a kiſs to deliver me into the hands of my enemies? to which agrees what is ſaid in Luke, Judas, betrayeſt thou the ſon of man with a kiſs? This he ſaid, to let him know he knew him, and therefore he calls him by name; and that he knew his deſign in kiſſing him, and that what he was doing was againſt light and knowledge; he, at the ſame time, knowing that he was the ſon of man, the true Meſſiah. Then came they, and laid hands on Jeſus, and took him; that is, the multitude, the Roman band, the captains and officers of the Jews, when Judas had given the ſign; tho' not till Chriſt had given them a ſpecimen of his power, in ſtriking them to the ground; to let them know, that Judas could never have put him into their hands, nor could they have laid hold on him, had he not thought fit to ſurrender himſelf to them. The ſeizing and apprehending him is related by Luke and John as after the following circumſtance; tho' the Ethiopic verſion here reads, they lift up their hands, and did not lay hold on the Lord Jeſus.

[n] T. Hieroſ. Shebuot, fol. 34. 1.

Ver. 51. And behold one of them which were with Jeſus, &c.] Either one of the three that Jeſus took with him whilſt he was in his agony, leaving the other eight at ſome diſtance; or of the eleven, who might now be all with him: however, 'tis certain, Peter is the perſon meant; for though he is not named here, nor by Mark, nor Luke, he is by John; whoſe Goſpel being wrote laſt, and many years after the reſt, there was no danger like to accrue, by telling who it was that did the following action: he being now thorougly awaked with the reſt, by what Chriſt had ſaid to him; and more ſo by the ſurprize of the multitude of armed men about him; and remembring his ſolemn proteſtations of abiding by his maſter; and ſeeing him juſt now ready to be ſeized, and carried away; without knowing his maſter's mind, or waiting for his anſwer to the queſtion the other diſciples put, ſtretched out his hand, and drew his ſword, and ſtruck a ſervant of the high-prieſt's, and ſmote off his ear. It ſeems he had a ſword by his ſide, upon what account is not certain; this he drew, and ſtruck at a ſervant of the high-prieſt's, who might ſhew great malignity againſt Chriſt, and was foremoſt, and moſt buſy in apprehending him. The blow was levelled at his head, and with an intention, no doubt, to have cleaved him down, but ſloping on one ſide took off his ear. The ſervant's name was Malchus, as John ſays; and it was his right ear that was cut off, as both he and Luke relate.

Ver. 52. Then ſaid Jeſus unto him, &c.] That is, unto Peter, put up again thy ſword into its place, or ſheath. This Chriſt ſaid not only to rebuke Peter for his raſhneſs, but to ſoften the minds of the multitude, who muſt be enraged at ſuch an action; and which was ſtill more effectually done by his healing the man's ear: and indeed, had it not been for theſe words, and this action of Chriſt's; and more eſpecially had it not been owing to the powerful influence Chriſt had over the ſpirits of theſe men, in all probability Peter, and the reſt of the apoſtles, had been all deſtroyed at once. For all they that take the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword. This is not to be underſtood of magiſtrates who bear not the ſword in vain, are miniſters of God for good, and revengers of evil works; but of private perſons that uſe the ſword, and that not in ſelf-defence, but for private revenge; or engage in a quarrel, to which they are not called; and ſuch generally periſh, as Peter muſt have done, had it not been for the interpoſition of almighty power. Tho' this ſeems to be ſpoken not ſo much of Peter, and of the danger he expoſed himſelf to, by taking and uſing the ſword, and ſo to deter him from it, but rather of theſe his enemies; and as an argument to make and keep Peter eaſy and quiet, and exerciſe patience, ſince, in a little time, God would avenge himſelf of them; and that the Jews, who now made uſe of the ſword of the Roman ſoldiers, would periſh by the ſword of the Romans, as in a few years after the whole nation did.

Ver. 53. Thinkeſt thou that I cannot now pray to my father, &c.] Meaning, if he thought proper, or that there was any neceſſity for it, or that he was deſirous of being reſcued out of ſuch hands he was falling into. This muſt be underſtood of him as man; for, as God, the angels were his creatures, and miniſtring ſervants, whom he had the command of himſelf, and ſo had no need, as ſuch, to pray to his father to detach a number of them to his aſſiſtance, and which, as man, he could only want. And he ſhall preſently give me more than twelve legions of angels. A Roman legion conſiſted of about ſix thouſand ſoldiers, or upwards; ſome add ſix hundred ſixty-ſix; and others make the number far greater. Twelve are mentioned, either with reſpect to the twelve apoſtles; or in alluſion, as others think, to the Roman militia; a proper and full army with them conſiſting of ſuch a number of legions: and that there is an innumerable company of angels, thouſand thouſands, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand, is certain; and the Perſic verſion here reads, twelve myriads of legions; and that theſe are at the command of God, and he can diſpatch them at once, on any emergent occaſion, is very evident; and what is it that ſuch a company of angels is not capable of, when a ſingle angel flew in one night an hundred, fourſcore, and five thouſand men, 2 Kings xix. 35. wherefore had Chriſt had any inclination to have been reſcued from the preſent danger, he ſtood in no need of Peter's ſword.

Ver. 54. But how then ſhall the ſcriptures be fulfilled, &c.] That is, ſhould Chriſt make ſuch a requeſt to his father, and he ſhould grant it, and an hoſt of angels ſhould be ſent to reſcue him, and he ſhould be reſcued by them; how then ſhould the ſcriptures, which ſpeak of Chriſt's being taken, and led as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and of his various ſufferings, and the circumſtances of them, have their accompliſhment? declaring, as the Arabic verſion ſupplies, or as the Ethiopic verſion, which ſay, that thus it muſt be; that the Meſſiah muſt be apprehended, and ſuffer, and die. The ſeveral parts of the ſufferings of the Meſſiah are foretold in the writings of the Old Teſtament; the ſpirit of Chriſt, in the prophets, teſtified before hand of them; as that he ſhould be reproached and deſpiſed of men, Pſ. xxii. 6, 7, 8. Iſ. liii. 3. be ſpit upon, ſmote, and buffeted, Iſ. l. 5, 6. Mic. v. 1. be put to death, Pſ. xxii. 15. Iſ. liii. 12. and that the death of the croſs, Pſ. xxii. 15, 16. Zech. xii. 10. and be buried, Iſ. liii. 9. and alſo the ſeveral circumſtances of his ſufferings, which led on to them, or attended them; as the ſelling him for thirty pieces of ſilver, Zech. xi. 12, 13. the betraying him by one of his familiar friends, Pſ. xli. 9. the ſeizing and apprehending him, and which is particularly referr'd to here, Iſ. liii. 7, 8. his diſciples forſaking him, Zech. xiii. 7. and even his God and Father, Pſ. xxii. 1. his ſuffering between two thieves, Iſ. liii. 12. the parting of his garments, and caſting lots on his veſture, Pſ. xxii. 18. the giving him gall and vinegar when on the croſs, Pſ. lxix. 21. and not breaking any of his bones, Pſ. xxxiv. 20. yea, the ſcriptures not only declared, that theſe things ſhould be; but the neceſſity of them alſo, that they muſt be; becauſe of the purpoſes and decrees of God, which are eternal, immutable, and unfruſtrable; for as God had determined on the ſalvation of his people by Chriſt, and that thro' his ſufferings and death, theſe were determined by him alſo, even the time, nature, manner, and circumſtances of them; and which the ſcriptures declare, and therefore muſt be likewiſe: and becauſe of the covenant of grace, which is ſure, unalterable, and unchangeable; in which Chriſt agreed to aſſume human nature, to obey, ſuffer, and die in it, and ſo do his father's will, which was to bear the penalty of the law, and undergo the ſufferings of death; and which therefore muſt be, or Chriſt's faithfulneſs fail. Moreover, on account of the law and juſtice of God, which required his bearing the curſe, as well as fulfilling the precept of the law; and eſpecially on account of the ſalvation of his people, which could not be effected without them, they muſt be. Chriſt, in theſe words, diſcovers a very great concern for the fulfilling of ſcripture; and that becauſe it is the word of God, which muſt not be broken; and becauſe throughout it he is ſpoken of, in the volume of it, it is written of him, to do the will of God; even in the law of Moſes, and in the Prophets, and in the Pſalms: and beſides, he was the miniſter of the circumciſion, to confirm the promiſes made unto the fathers; and even agreeable to them, and upon the foundation of them, he had himſelf predicted his own ſufferings: and as thoſe were to be the rule of the faith and practice of his people in all ages, he was concerned for their accompliſhment in every punctilio; and which may teach us to value the ſcriptures, and to be confident of the fulfilment of them in things yet future.

Ver. 55. In that ſame hour ſaid Jeſus to the multitude, &c.] That is, to the heads and chief of them; the chief prieſts, captains of the temple, and elders, as Luke ſays, ch. xxii. 52. for though it was in the dead of the night, and the company ſuch, as they would not have choſe to have been ſeen in at another time; yet ſo intent were they upon this affair, that they could not ſatisfy themſelves without being in it, and ſeeing the iſſue of it; and this the Jews themſelves confirm in their account; for they ſay [o], that the elders of Jeruſalem took Jeſus, and brought him to the city. Now in that ſame hour, immediately, that very moment, that Chriſt had made an end of rebuking Peter for his raſh action, and reaſoning with him upon it, he turned and addreſſed himſelf to theſe men, ſaying; are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and ſtaves, for to take me? as an highwayman, or notorious robber, that had done great miſchief to the country; and being armed, and having aſſociates, was not eaſy to be taken: the Syriac renders it, as a cut-throat; and the Perſic, as a robber, and a cut-throat; a deſperate villain, that would by no means yield, unleſs overpowered by numbers, by force of arms, by the dint of the ſword, by knocks and blows: but how different from this, was the character of Jeſus! who never did any injury to any man's perſon or property, but ſaved both; was meek, lowly, and humble in his deportment, throughout the whole of his life; never ſtrove with men, or cried, and cauſed his voice, in any riotous manner, to be heard in the ſtreets; and even when reviled, reviled not again, but took every inſult patiently; and was now unarmed, and ready to ſubmit at once; nay, before they could well come up to him, he aſked them who they ſought; and on mentioning his name, declared he was the perſon; and ſignified he was ready to ſurrender himſelf, only deſired his diſciples might have leave to go away: he adds, I ſat daily with ou, teaching in the temple, and ye laid no hold on me. The buſineſs he was employed in, was not thieving nd ſtealing, but teaching; and that wholeſome octrine, which he, as man, had received from his ather, and as the great prophet in Iſrael taught; nd with ſuch power and authority, as the Scribes nd Phariſees did not: the place where he taught, as the temple; not a corner, or a private place, t a place of publick worſhip, and of publick reſort: the time when he taught there, was the day-time, and day by day; for ſome days paſt, it had been his cuſtom in the day-time to teach in the temple, and at night to go out, and abide in the mount of Olives; and his continuance day by day in the temple, or his conſtant teaching there, is ſignified by ſitting daily there, and teaching; unleſs it ſhould be thought, rather to have regard to the poſture in which he taught; ſee Matt. v. 1. And yet, though this had been his common practice for ſome days paſt, and at other times before, yet no man laid hands on him then; which was not wanting to a good will in them, who were very deſirous of it, and ſought every opportunity to do it, but were prevented; either through fear of the people, or through Chriſt's making his eſcape from them; and particularly, by the ſingular providence and power of God, which reſtrained them, becauſe his time was not yet come. However, Chriſt ſuggeſts by this, that they had no need to take ſuch extraordinary methods to apprehend him, as to make uſe of one of his diſciples to betray him; to come in the middle of the night to take him, and that in ſuch great numbers, and with ſwords and ſtaves, when he was every day with them in the temple.

Ver. 56. But all this was done, that the ſcriptures of the prophets might be fulfilled, &c.] Some have thought theſe to be the words of the Evangeliſt, making this remark upon what was ſaid and done; but by what both Mark and Luke record, Mark xiv. 49. Luke xxii. 53. they appear to be the words of Chriſt himſelf; who obſerves this, partly to make himſelf, as man, eaſy under the treatment he met with; and partly, to fortify the minds of his diſciples againſt offence at it; and alſo to throw conviction, or confuſion, into the minds of his enemies. The ſcriptures of the prophets he refers to, as having, or about to have, by this conduct, their accompliſhment, were ſuch, as regarded the betraying him by Judas, the taking him in this ſecret, private, inſidious, yet violent manner; in all which he ſhewed great meekneſs, calmneſs, and ſubmiſſion, as Pſal. xli. 9. Lam. iv. 20. Iſa. liii. 7, 8. As alſo what reſpected the ſcattering, and haſty flight of his diſciples from him, Zech. xiii. 7. which in the next clauſe is ſhewn to be accompliſhed. Then all the diſciples forſook him and fled; not only went away from him, and left him alone, as he foretold they would, John xvi. 32. but they ran away from him in a precipitant manner, like timorous ſheep, the ſhepherd being about to be ſmitten; and they fearing, leſt Peter's raſh action ſhould be imputed to them all, and they ſuffer for it; or leſt they ſhould be laid hold on next, and bound, as their maſter was, or about to be. Every thing in this account, is an aggravation of their puſillanimity, and ingratitude; as that they were the diſciples of Chriſt that forſook him, whom he had called, and ſent forth as his apoſtles to preach his Goſpel; and to whom he had given extraordinary gifts and powers; who had forſaken all and followed him, and had been with him from the beginning; had heard all his excellent diſcourſes, and had ſeen all his miracles, and yet theſe at laſt forſake him, and even all of them; John the beloved diſciple, that leaned on his boſom, and Peter, that profeſſed ſo much love to him, zeal for him, and faith in him; the three that had juſt ſeen him in his agony and bloody ſweat, and every one of them left him; not one ſtood by him, and this too, after they had had a freſh inſtance of his power, in ſtriking the men to the ground, that came to take him; and when he was ſuing for them with their enemies, to let them go peaceably and ſafely: ſo that they had no need to have fled in ſuch haſte; and to leave him then, in the midſt of his enemies, in his great diſtreſs and trouble, was very unkind and ungrateful: and to this account of the Evangeliſt, pretty much agrees what the Jews themſelves ſay of it; for they report [p], that "when his diſ-"ciples ſaw that he was taken, and that they could "not fight againſt them, ירוצו ברגליהם, they ran "away on foot, and lift up their voice and wept "greatly." Though they alſo pretend, that the citizens of Jeruſalem killed many of them, and that the reſt fled to the mountain, which is falſe.

Ver. 57. And they that had laid hold on Jeſus, &c.] Who were the band, and the captain, and the officers of the Jews, as John xviii. 12. or as the Jews themſelves ſay [q], the elders of Jeruſalem; who not only laid faſt hold on him, but bound him; and that both for greater ſecurity of him, ſome of them perhaps knowing how he had made his eſcape from them formerly; or at leaſt taking the hint from Judas, to hold him faſt, and lead him away ſafely; and by way of reproach and contempt, thereby ſhewing that he was a malefactor, and had done ſome crime worthy of bonds: and having him thus in faſt and ſafe cuſtody, they led him away to Caiaphas, the high prieſt; who was high prieſt that year; for the prieſtood was frequently changed in thoſe times, and men were put into it by the Roman governor, through favour or bribery. The year before this, Simeon, or Simon ben Cambith, was high prieſt; and the year before that, Eleazar, the ſon of Ananus; and before him, Iſhmael ben Phabi, who were all three, ſucceſſively, made high prieſts by the Roman governor; as was alſo this Caiaphas, this year; and who by Joſephus [r], and in the Talmud [s] likewiſe, is called Joſeph. From whence he had his name Caiaphas, is not certain: Jerom [t] ſays, it ſignifies a ſearcher, or a ſagacious perſon; but may be better interpreted, he adds, one that vomits at the mouth; deriving the word, as I ſuppoſe, from קוא, to vomit, and פי, the mouth; ſee the note on ver. 13. It was to the houſe, or palace of this man, the high prieſt, that Jeſus was led; where the Scribes and elders were aſſembled: a council was held about a week before this, in which Caiaphas aſſiſted, and then gave counſel to the Jews, that it was expedient, that one man ſhould die for the people, John xi. 47, 49, 50. whether that was held at his houſe, or elſewhere, is not certain, very probably it might; however, it is clear from ver. 2, 3. of this chapter, that two days ago, the chief prieſts, Scribes, and elders, were aſſembled together in his palace, to conſult about putting Jeſus to death; and here they were again met together on the ſame account, waiting to have him brought before them.

Ver. 58. But Peter followed him afar off, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, alone; and which ſeems to be the true caſe; for though there was another diſciple who alſo followed Jeſus, and is thought to be John, yet it looks as if they followed him ſeparately, and not together; for the other diſciple went into the palace with Jeſus, but Peter not till afterwards, being eſpied by his fellow diſciple, ſtanding without. Theſe two it ſeems, having a little recovered themſelves from the fright they had been put into, ſtopped and turned back, and followed after Jeſus, to ſee what would be the iſſue of things. Peter's following Chriſt, ſhewed love to him; he was loth to leave him, his bowels moved towards him, and he wanted to know how it would fare with him, and what would become of him; and yet keeping at a diſtance, following him afar off, betrayed fear, leſt he ſhould be obſerved, and taken up, and come into danger: however, he proceeded on his way in a ſlow pace, till he came unto the high prieſt's palace, and went in and ſat with the ſervants, to ſee the end; of the matter, or buſineſs, as the Ethiopic and Perſic verſions add; to ſee how it would go with him, whether he would exert his divine power, and deliver himſelf out of their hands, which he knew he was able to do, when he would again join him; or what puniſhment they would inflict upon him, whether they would ſcourge him, and then let him go; or whether they would ſentence him to death; that ſo he might know how to provide for his own ſafety: all which was indulging curioſity, and the carnal reaſonings of his mind; and it ſhowed want of integrity at that time, and ſome degree of hypocriſy, in placing himſelf among the ſervants of the high prieſt, as if he was none of the followers of Jeſus, but was of the ſame complexion and caſt with them: he had got into bad company, and was in the way of temptation; and though he had no deſign in following Jeſus, and in going into the high prieſt's palace, and ſeating himſelf among the ſervants to deny his Lord, yet all this led on to it; for which reaſon theſe ſeveral circumſtances are taken notice of, the account of which denial of his, is afterwards related.

Ver. 59. Now the chief prieſts and elders, and all the council, &c.] Or Sanhedrim, which conſiſted, as the Jewiſh writers ſay [u], of prieſts, Levites, and Iſraelites, of both eccleſiaſticks and laicks; the eccleſiaſticks were the prieſts and Levites, and the laicks the Iſraelites, or elders of the people; for if prieſts and Levites could not be found, a Sanhedrim might conſiſt of thoſe only; and ſo thoſe words in Deut. xxi. 2. thy elders, are thus interpreted [w], זה בית דין הגדול, this is the great Sanhedrim; and though a king of Iſrael might not ſit in the Sanhedrim, yet an high prieſt might, if he was a man of wiſdom [x]; and it ſeems as if Caiaphas was now at the head of this council, by its being aſſembled at his palace; which though it was not the uſual place where they met, yet might be choſe at this time for greater ſecrecy. Now theſe thus aſſembled together, ſought falſe witneſs againſt Jeſus, to put him to death; they firſt take him up, and then ſeek out for witneſſes againſt him; being determined, right or wrong, to put him to death, if poſſible; and falſe witneſſes too, even thoſe whoſe buſineſs it was, to examine and detect falſe witneſſes, and to inflict the ſame puniſhment upon them, which they b their falſe teſtimony intended to have brought o another, Deut. xix. 18, 19. And beſides, it wa in the night, when it was forbid by their canons t begin the trial of capital cauſes, or to receive an admit of witneſſes [y]. Indeed the Syriac and Perſi verſions read, only witneſſes, or witneſs, and leav out the word falſe; perhaps imagining, that me could never be ſo wicked, to ſeek out for falſe wi neſſes: but this need not be wondered at, when the men were bent upon the death of Chriſt at a rate; and were aware that nothing true could objected to him, that would legally take away li life; and beſides, their manner of procedure in judgment againſt a falſe prophet, a deceiver, and one that enticed to idolatry, and ſuch an one they would have Jeſus to be, was quite different from what they took with other perſons: their canon runs thus [z]: “ the judgment of a deceiver, is not as “ the reſt of capital judgments; his witneſſes are “ hid; and he has no need, or ought not to have “ any pre-monition, or warning, as the reſt of “ thoſe that are put to death; and if he goes out “ of the Sanhedrim acquitted, and one ſays I can “ prove the charge againſt him, they turn him “ back; but if he goes out condemned, and one “ ſays I can prove him innocent, they don’t return “ him.” So in the Miſna [a] ’tis ſaid, “ Of all “ that are condemned to death in the law, none “ have their witneſſes hidden but this (the deceiver, “ or one that entices to idolatry)——and they hide “ his witneſſes behind a wall, or hedge; and he, “ (whom he endeavoured to ſeduce) ſays to him, “ ſay what thou haſt ſaid to me privately; and if “ he repeats it to him, he muſt ſay, how ſhall we “ leave our God that is in heaven, and go and “ ſerve ſtocks and ſtones! if he repents, ’tis well; “ but if he ſhould ſay, ſo we are bound to do, “ and ſo it becomes us, they that ſtand behind the “ wall, or hedge, ſhall carry him to the Sanhedrim “ and ſtone him.” In the Gemara ’tis thus expreſſed [b], “ they light up a lamp in the innermoſt “ houſe, and ſet the witneſſes in the outermoſt “ houſe, ſo that they can ſee him and hear his “ voice, and he cannot ſee them.” And then follows what is ſaid before, to which is added, “ ſo “ they did to Ben Stada;” by whom they mean Jeſus of Nazareth. Moreover, this need not ſeem ſtrange, that they took ſuch a courſe with Chriſt, when in the caſe of Stephen, they ſuborned and ſet up falſe witneſſes againſt him. The Sanhedrim cannot be be thought to do this in perſon, but they ſent out their officers to ſeek for ſuch men, as could or would produce any thing againſt him, and no doubt promiſed them an handſome reward.

Ver. 60. But found none, &c.] That were fit for their purpoſe; yea, though many falſe witneſſes came, yet found they none; whoſe teſtimonies were ſufficient to put him to death, which was what they were reſolved upon, or whoſe witneſs were not alike and agreed; for according to their law, a man muſt not die by the mouth of one witneſs only, but by the mouth of two or three witneſſes agreed in a point; and tho’ they might be willing enough to diſpenſe with the law in this caſe, yet might have ſome regard to their own character and reputation; and eſpecially as they meant to deliver him to the Roman governor, in order to be condemned by him; they knew they muſt have a charge, and this ſupported with a proper evidence, or they could not hope to ſucceed; for which reaſon, they could not put up, as they otherwiſe willingly would, with any ſort of witneſſes: at the laſt came two falſe witneſſes; who were agreed in a point, and whoſe Teſtimonies were alike; at leaſt, had a greater appearance of truth and agreement than the reſt; though Mark ſays, ch. xiv. 59. neither ſo did their witneſſes agree together, as to prove the point, for which it was given.

Ver. 61. And ſaid, this fellow ſaid, &c.] Or ſaith, as De Dieu obſerves, the Syriac verſion of this place ſhould be rendered; that is, he has not only ſaid in times paſt, referring to John ii. 19. but continues to ſay it, and glory in it: I am able to deſtroy the temple of God, and to build it in three days; in which they did injury, both to his words and ſenſe: he did not ſay, I am able to deſtroy the temple, but only ſaid, deſtroy this temple; ſignifying neither his power, nor his will and inclination to it; but put it upon the Jews, and left it to them to do it: nor did he ſay one word about the temple of God, or as it is in Mark, this temple that is made with hands; the temple at Jeruſalem, which was made by the hands of men, and devoted to the worſhip of God; but only this temple, referring to his body, or human nature; in which he, the Son of God, dwelt, as in a temple; nor did he ſay that he was able to build it in three days, but that he would raiſe it up in three days; intending the reſurrection of his body by his own power, after it had been dead three days; and ſo they perverted his ſenſe, as well as miſ-recited his words; applying that to the material temple at Jeruſalem, what he ſpoke of the temple of his body, and of its reſurrection from the dead, on the third day; deſigning hereby to fix a charge, both of ſacrilege and ſorcery upon him: of ſacrilege, in having a deſign upon the temple of God to deſtroy it; and of ſorcery, or familiarity with the devil, and having aſſiſtance from him, or knowledge of the magic art, that he could pretend in three days to re-build a temple, which had been forty and ſix years in building; and was what could never be done, but by the help of Beelzebub, the prince of devils, by whom it was inſinuated he did all his miracles.

Ver. 62. And the high prieſt aroſe and ſaid unto him, &c.] He roſe up from his ſeat in great wrath and anger; partly being vexed, that they could get no other and better teſtimony; and partly becauſe of Chriſt’s contemptuous ſilence, giving no anſwer to the witneſſes, as judging they deſerved none; and which highly provoked the high prieſt, and therefore in paſſion ſaid, anſwereſt thou nothing? what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee? Is it true or falſe, right or wrong? The Vulgate Latin renders it, doſt thou anſwer nothing to thoſe things which theſe witneſs againſt thee? To which agree the Arabic verſion, and Munſter’s Hebrew Goſpel.

Ver. 63. But Jeſus held his peace, &c.] Knowing it would ſignify nothing, whatever he ſhould ſay, they being ſet upon his death, the time of which was now come; and therefore he quietly ſubmits, and ſays nothing in his own defence to prevent it. To be ſilent in a court of judicature, Apollonius Tyanæus [c] ſays, is the fourth virtue; this Chriſt had, and all others: and the high prieſt anſwered and ſaid unto him; though Chriſt had ſaid nothing, a way of ſpeaking very frequent among the Jews, and in the ſacred writings: I adjure thee by the living God, that thou tell us whether thou be the Chriſt, the ſon of God; the Chriſt, the anointed, that David ſpeaks of in the ſecond Pſalm, and who is there ſaid to be the Son of God, Pſal. ii. 2, 7. to which the high prieſt ſeems to have reſpect; ſince there is no other paſſage, in which both theſe characters meet; and which was underſtood by the ancient Jews of the Meſſiah, as is owned by modern ones [d]. Jeſus was given out to be the Meſſiah, and his diſciples believed him to be the Son of God, and he had affirmed himſelf to be ſo; wherefore the high prieſt, exerting his prieſtly power and authority, puts him upon his oath; or at leaſt with an oath made by the living God, charges him to tell the truth, and which when ever any heard the voice of ſwearing, he was obliged to do, Lev. v. 1.

Ver. 64. Jeſus ſaith unto him, thou haſt ſaid, &c.] That is, thou haſt ſaid right; or as Mark expreſſes it, I am, ch. xiv. 62. the Chriſt, the anointed of God; who was ſo from everlaſting, and in time; being before the world was, inſtalled into, and inveſted with the office of Mediator; and in the fulneſs of time, anointed with the Holy Spirit without meaſure: he might truly ſay he was the Meſſiah, ſince all the characters of him in the books of the prophets, met in him; and all the miracles he was to work in proof of his Meſſiahſhip, were wrought by him; as alſo that he was the Son of God, not by creation, as angels and men; nor by adoption, as ſaints; nor as man, or in the human nature, in which he was the Son of man, and not the Son of God; nor was he begotten as man, whereas he is called the only begotten Son, and the begotten of the Father; and was he the Son of God as man, not the firſt, but the third perſon muſt be his Father; beſides, he was the Son of God before his incarnation: nor as Mediator neither; he was the Son of God, antecedent to his office as Mediator; his Sonſhip is diſtinct from it, is an illuſtration of it, and what puts virtue into it; but he is ſo as God, as a divine perſon, by natural and eternal filiation; being begotten of the Father in the divine eſſence, and of the ſame nature; and having the ſame perfections with him, and in all things equal to him; and is the ſenſe in which he always affirmed God to be his Father, and himſelf to be his Son. For this phraſe, thou haſt ſaid, as anſwering to an affirmation, I am, ſee the note on ver. 35. Now, though Chriſt had ſo fully anſwered to the adjuration, and ſo ſtrongly affirmed himſelf to be the Meſſiah, the Son of God, yet he knew they would not believe; and therefore refers them to an after proof thereof, which whether they would or no, would oblige them to acknowledge the whole: nevertheleſs, I ſay unto you, hereafter ſhall ye ſee the Son of man, ſitting at the right hand of power: the Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, read the power of God, as in Luke xxii. 69. though it is not abſolutely neceſſary; for power deſigns God himſelf, who is all powerful; as appears by the creation of all things out of nothing, the upholding of all things in their being, the redemption of men, the converſion of ſinners, and the preſervation of his ſaints. In the Jewiſh writings [e], God is frequently called, הגבורה, the power: ſuch a thing ſay they, we have heard, מפי הגבורה, from the mouth of power, or might; that is, from God himſelf: and ſo he is by the Grecians called, δυναμις, power [f]: by the Son of man, is meant Chriſt in the human nature; who then appeared at their bar as a mere man, in a very deſpicable form and condition, but hereafter they ſhould ſee him in a more glorious one, and at the right hand of God: a phraſe expreſſive of his exaltation, above all creatures whatever: reſpect is had to the prophecy of him in Pſal. cx. 1. Sitting there, denotes his having done his work; and his continuance in his exalted ſtate, until all enemies are ſubdued under him: and when he ſays they ſhould ſee him, his meaning is not, that they ſhould ſee him at the right hand of God with their bodily eyes, as Stephen did; but that they ſhould, or at leaſt might, ſee and know by the effects, that he was ſet down at the right hand of God; as by the pouring forth of the Holy Spirit upon his diſciples, on the day of Pentecoſt; by the wonderful ſpread of his Goſpel, and the ſucceſs of it, notwithſtanding all the oppoſition made by them, and others; and particularly, by the vengeance he ſhould take on their nation, city, and temple; and which may be more eſpecially deſigned in the next clauſe; and coming in the clouds of heaven. So Chriſt's coming to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, as it is often called the coming of the Son of man, is deſcribed in this manner, Matt. xxiv. 27, 30. Though this may alſo be underſtood of Chriſt's ſecond coming to judgment, at the laſt day; when as he went up to heaven in a cloud, he will return, and come alſo in the clouds of heaven; ſee Acts i. 9, 11. Rev. i. 7. when he'll be ſeen by the eyes of all, good and bad; and when this Sanhedrim, before whom he now was, will ſee him alſo, and confeſs that he is Lord and Chriſt, and the Son of God. Though the former clauſe ſeems to have regard to what would quickly come to paſs, and what they ſhould ſoon obſerve, and be convinced of; for, απ' αρτι, rendered hereafter, may be tranſlated henceforwards; or as it is in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, from this time; meaning, that in a very little while, they ſhould begin to ſee the effects of his being ſet down at the right hand of God, and which would be full proofs of it, and ſhould ſee him come in the clouds of heaven, at the laſt day: reference ſeems to be had to Dan. vii. 13. where one like unto the Son of man is ſaid to come in the clouds of heaven, and which is underſtood of the Meſſiah by many, both of the ancient and modern Jews [g]; with whom one of his names is Anani [h], which ſignifies clouds.

Ver. 65. Then the high prieſt rent his cloaths, &c.] Both his outer and inner garments. This he did, to ſhew his zeal for the honour and glory of God, his grief and concern at the profanation of his holy name by a falſe oath, and his abhorrence of, and indignation at the blaſphemy he ſuppoſed Chriſt to be guilty of, in aſſerting himſelf to be the Son of God. Some have thought, that Caiaphas in this action, tranſgreſſed the law, in Lev. xxi. 10. where it is ſaid, that the high prieſt—ſhall not uncover his head, nor rent his cloaths: and it is one of the Jews negative precepts [i], that "an high prieſt is prohibited, לעולם, ever to rend his garments:" and that therefore being tranſported with paſſion at the greatneſs of the ſuppoſed crime, could not forbear expreſſing his deteſtation of it in this manner, though it was forbidden him: but it does not appear to have been unlawful: as for the law in Leviticus, it only regards the renting of garments at funerals, or in mourning for the dead, as the context ſhews; and ſo Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes the text, nor rent his cloaths, בשעת אניקי, in the time of mourning; and ſo the Jewiſh [k] interpreters in general, expound it; and beſides, this prohibition, according to them, only regards the manner of renting: their rule is this [l]; "an high prieſt "rents below, and a common perſon above:" the ſenſe of which, according to their commentators, is [m], "that if any one dies for whom an high prieſt "is obliged to rent his garments, he muſt rent below, at the extreme part of his garment, near his "feet; and as for what is written, nor rent his "cloaths; the meaning is, he ſhall not rent as other men do; above; over againſt the breaſt, near the ſhoulder, as the reſt of the people." Moreover, a prieſt might not go into the ſanctuary, nor perform any part of ſervice with his cloaths rent; the canon runs thus[n]; "the judgment, or the law of "them that rend their garment, and of thoſe that "uncover the head, is one and the ſame, as it is "ſaid, Levit. x. 6. lo! if he is in ſervice, and "rents his garments, he is guilty of death by the "hands of heaven; though his ſervice is right, "and not profaned." And indeed no man, whether a prieſt or an Iſraelite, might go into the temple with his cloaths rent; and a prieſt might not rend his ſacerdotal garments, on any account; yet ſuch were not theſe that Caiaphas now had on; but in caſe of hearing blaſphemy, every one, be he what he would, was obliged to rend his garments[o]: "Whoſoever hears the curſing of the name (of "God) is obliged to rend, even at the curſing of "the ſurnames he is obliged to rend; and he that "hears it from an Iſraelite, both he that hears, "and he that hears from the mouth of him that "hears, he is obliged to rend; but he that hears "from the mouth of a Gentile, is not obliged to "rend; and Eliakim and Shebna would not have "rent, but becauſe Rabſhakeh was an apoſtate." So when witneſſes expreſſed the blaſphemy of ſuch they teſtified againſt, the judges were obliged to riſe up and rend their garments; concerning which, take the following rule[p]: "a blaſ"phemer is not guilty, unleſs he expreſſes the "name (of God;) ſays R. Joſhua ben Korcha, all "the day the witneſſes are examined by the ſur"names; but when the cauſe is finiſhed, they "don't put to death becauſe of the ſurnames, but "they bring every man out, and aſk the chief "among them, and ſay to him, ſay expreſsly what "thou haſt heard, and he ſays it: then the judges "ſtand upon their feet, וקורעין, and rend their gar"ments, and do not ſow them up again; and then "the ſecond and the third ſay, I have heard the "ſame as he." From all which it appears, that Caiaphas did what was the cuſtom of the nation to do, in ſuch a caſe. The obſervation, that ſome learned men have made, that the high prieſt's rending his garments, was, though without his intention, an emblem and preſage, of the rending of the prieſthood from him, and his brethren, and the entire change of it; as the abolition of the whole ceremonial law, was ſignified by the rending of the vail of the temple in twain; and as the removing of the kingdom from Saul, was repreſented by Samuel's rending his mantle; and the revolt of the ten tribes to Jeroboam, by Abijah's rending his garment into twelve pieces, and giving ten to him; would have had a much better foundation to be built on, were theſe cloaths that Caiaphas rent, his prieſtly ones: but ſuch they were not; for both the high prieſt, and the other prieſts, only wore their ſacerdotal garments in the temple; nor was it lawful for them to go out in them elſewhere, for ſo the Jews ſay[q]; "it is forbidden to go out into the province, "city, or country, in the garments of the prieſt"hood; but in the ſanctuary, whether in the time "of ſervice, or not in the time of ſervice, it was "lawful." In the temple, there were cheſts on purpoſe for the garments of the prieſts[r]; from whence they took them, and where they laid them up when they had performed their ſervice: of theſe there were ninety-ſix in number; for as there were twenty-four courſes, there were four cheſts for every courſe; in which the garments were put by themſelves, the breeches by themſelves, the girdles by themſelves, the bonnets by themſelves, and the coats by themſelves; ſealed up with an inſcription on them, ſhewing what was in them: and when the men that belonged to ſuch a courſe, came to perform their ſervice in turn, they opened theſe cheſts, and cloathed themſelves; and when they went out of their ſervice, they put them up in them again, and ſealed them; and as for "the high prieſt, he "left his golden garments, בלשכה שלו, in his "chamber, (an apartment in the temple, peculiar to "him, and for this uſe) in the night, and at what"ſoever time he went out of the ſanctuary[s]." Nor might he go abroad with them, unleſs לצורך גדול, in great neceſſity[t]; as Simeon the juſt, went out in prieſtly garments, to meet Alexander the great, to appeaſe him, being warned of God ſo to do: hence the apoſtle Paul knew not Ananias the high prieſt, Acts xxiii. 5. which he muſt have done, had he had on his prieſtly garments: for when the prieſts were not in the temple, and out of ſervice, they wore no diſtinguiſhing habits, but were dreſſed as laicks, and as the common people were[u]. The reaſon of Caiaphas's rending his cloaths, is expreſſed in the next clauſe, ſaying, he hath ſpoken blaſphemy: not only becauſe Jeſus aſſerted that he was the Meſſiah, but alſo the Son of God; hereby making himſelf equal with God, which is the ſenſe in which the Jews always underſtood this phraſe; and he appearing to them to be but a mere man, they charged it as blaſphemy againſt God, to aſſume ſuch a character and relation to himſelf; what further need have we of witneſſes? of ſeeking after others, as they had done; or of further examining and taking the depoſitions of thoſe, who were before them: he was for putting a ſtop to the proceſs, and bringing the cauſe at once to an iſſue; and therefore addreſſes the court in the following manner; behold now, ye have heard his blaſphemy: out of his own mouth, as Luke, ch. xxii. 71. expreſſes it; and with their own ears, and at that very time; ſo that they had no need of recourſe to things paſt, or examine witneſſes about what they had heard from him formerly: and therefore he propoſes, that they would attend to, and take notice of his preſent words; and which, as he ſuggeſts, were ſhocking and aſtoniſhing; for the word, behold! may not only be a note of attention, but of aſtoniſhment.

Ver. 66. What think ye? &c.] Of the words juſt now ſpoken by him; do not they in your opinion amount to a charge of blaſphemy? and what puniſhment do you think ought to be inflicted on him? is he guilty of death, or no? This queſtion he put, as being preſident of the court: they anſwered and ſaid, he is guilty of death; they were unanimous in their vote, for Mark ſays, they all condemned him to be guilty of death; only Joſeph of Arimathea, muſt be excepted, who conſented not to their counſel and deed, Luke xxiii. 51. and ſo muſt Nicodemus, if he was preſent; who ſeeing what they were determined to do, withdrew themſelves before the queſtion came to be put, and ſo it paſſed nemine contradicente; and indeed, if he had been guilty of blaſphemy, as they charged him, the ſentence would have been right. But in this caſe, they begun the trial in the night, examined the witneſſes, finiſhed it, and paſſed the ſentence of condemnation, and that in the eve of a grand feſtival, their Chagigah.

Ver. 67. Then did they ſpit in his face, &c.] Not the judges, the members of the Sanhedrim, but the ſervants of the high prieſt, and the officers that had Jeſus in hold, and were the guard upon him; ſee Luke xxii. 63. who ſeeing him condemned as guilty of death, thought they might inſult him at pleaſure, and uſe him in the moſt indecent and barbarous manner; and therefore, in a way of contempt, ſpit in his face; than which nothing was more reproachful and diſgraceful: the Jews [x] ſay, that he that ſpits before, or in the preſence of his maſter, is guilty of death, ſo nauſeous and filthy was it accounted; and how much more muſt it be ſo, to ſpit in the face of any one? hereby a prophecy was fulfilled, Iſa. l. 6. I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting: and hereby, together with his ſweat and blood, his viſage was more marred than any man's, and his form than the ſons of men: and buffeted him; cuffed, or boxed him with their double fiſts: and others ſmote him with the palms of their hands; gave him many a ſlap on the face with their open hands, or ſtruck him on the face with rods, as the word will bear to be rendered: they rapp'd him with the wands they had in their hands, and ſtruck him on the head with the rods or ſtaves they had with them; whereby was accompliſhed the prophecy, in Mic. v. 1. they ſhall ſmite the judge of Iſrael with a rod upon the cheek. This was very injurious treatment, the Jews themſelves being witneſſes; who have in their canons enjoined [y], that "if a man ſtrikes his "neighbour with his double fiſt, he muſt give him "a ſhekel; R. Judah ſays, on account of R. Joſe "the Galilean, a pound: if he gives him a ſlap of "the face, he muſt pay him two hundred zuzim, "or pence; and if with the back of his hand "(which was accounted [z] the more ignominious) "four hundred zuzim: if he plucked him by his "ear, or plucked off his hair, or ſpit, ſo as that "the ſpittle came upon him, or took away his "cloak——he muſt pay four hundred zuzim, and "all according to his honour or dignity." All theſe indignities were done to Chriſt; ſee Iſa. l. 6.

Ver. 68. Saying, propheſie unto us, thou Chriſt, &c.] Not that they owned him to be the Meſſiah; but becauſe he aſſerted himſelf to be the Meſſiah, and his followers believed in him as ſuch, they call him ſo; and in an ironical and ſarcaſtic way, call upon him to divine, and tell them who the perſons were, that uſed him in this manner; ſuggeſting, that if he was the Chriſt, or Meſſiah, he would know all things, and what were done to him: who is he that ſmote thee? for they had covered his face, or blindfolded him, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, and then bid him tell them who ſmote him laſt. Chriſt did not think fit to give them an anſwer to this queſtion, but he will let them know hereafter, who the particular perſon, or perſons were, that ſmote him; and when it will appear to all the churches, and to all the world, that he is the Lord God omniſcient. Some learned men have obſerved [a], that there was a play formerly uſed, called by the antients, κολλαϐισμος, at which, one perſon having his face covered, the reſt ſmote him; or one put his hands over his eyes, and another ſmote, and aſked him who it was that ſmote? and ſuch an exerciſe is yet in being among us, which is commonly called Blind-man's Buff; and ſuch paſtime as this the Jews had with Chriſt; in this ludicrous way did they uſe him, and made him their ſport and diverſion, as the Philiſtines did Sampſon; but it will coſt them dear another day.

Ver. 69. Now Peter ſat without in the palace, &c.] Peter's denial of his Lord, the account of which follows, is related among the ſufferings of Chriſt; and indeed, the ill-uſage he met with from his enemies, their ſpitting in his face, buffeting him with their fiſts, ſmiting him on the cheeks with their hands, and rods, did not give him ſo much pain and grief, as to be denied by his own diſciple: we are before told, ver. 58. that Peter followed Chriſt afar off, and went into the high prieſt's palace, and ſat with the ſervants there, to ſee what would be the end and iſſue of theſe things: and here now he was in the apartment, where the council ſat, and were examining and trying Jeſus; though as Mark ſays, beneath in the palace; in the lower part of the room, in the great hall, in the midſt of which the ſervants had made a fire: the Arabic verſion reads it, in the area of the court: here Peter had placed himſelf, and here he ſat making his obſervations: and a damſel came unto him; one of the maids of the high prieſt, as Mark ſays; and according to the Evangeliſt John, was ſhe that kept the door, and had let him in, ſaying, thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Galilee. The Arabic and Perſic verſions read, Jeſus the Nazarene, or of Nazareth, as below. So ſhe called him, not ſo much to diſtinguiſh him from any other of that name, as by way of reproach; ſuggeſting, that he could not be the Meſſiah, or that prophet; ſince Chriſt comes not out of Galilee, nor does any prophet ariſe from thence: and when ſhe charges him with being with him, her meaning is not, that he was with him in the garden, when he was taken; where it can't be thought ſhe was to ſee him; nor with him in the temple, or in any part of Jeruſalem, where ſhe poſſibly might have ſeen him; but that he was a diſciple of his, one that believed in him, embraced him as the Meſſiah, had imbibed his principles and doctrines, and was of his party; and was only come thither as a ſpie, to ſee what would be done to him.

Ver. 70. But he denied before them all, &c.] Which was a very great aggravation of his ſin; for, as it is to a man's commendation to profeſs a good profeſſion of Chriſt before many witneſſes, ſo it is to his diſgrace, and is reſented by Chriſt, to deny him before men: he did not deny that Chriſt was God, or the Son of God, or that he was come in the fleſh, or that Jeſus was the Chriſt, or that he was the only Saviour of ſinners; but that he was with him, or one of his diſciples; ſaying, I know not what thou ſayeſt: which was a very great falſehood; he knew the ſenſe and import of her words; he denied that which was moſt true; he had been with him from the beginning, had heard all his diſcourſes, and ſeen his miracles; he had been with him at particular times, and in particular places, when and where ſome others of the diſciples were not admitted, as at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, at the transfiguration in the mount, and in the garden, very lately; and yet, O baſe ingratitude! now denies that he had been with him; or that he knew what was meant by ſuch an expreſſion. He denied that he was a diſciple of Chriſt, which was his greateſt character, and higheſt glory; and this denial did not ariſe from any diffidence of his being one, or from a ſenſe of his unworthineſs to be one, but from the fear of man, which brought this ſnare upon him; and the more his weakneſs is diſcovered in it, that he ſhould be intimidated by a ſervant-maid into ſuch a denial, who but a few hours before had confidently affirmed, that tho' he ſhould die with Chriſt, he would not deny him; and who had ſo courageouſly drawn his ſword in his maſter's cauſe, in the face of a band of ſoldiers, and a multitude of armed men with ſwords and ſtaves. This was his firſt denial; a ſecond follows.

Ver. 71. And when he was gone out into the porch, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the gate; and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but more rightly it is rendered, the porch: he did not attempt to go out at the door, and run away, tho' he could gladly have done it; but he feared to do this, leſt, as this would diſcover him, they ſhould purſue him, and overtake him, and bring him before the ſanhedrim: he choſe rather to keep his ground, but was very uneaſy; and therefore moved into the porch, where he ſat very penſive, conſidering what was proper for him to do; when another maid ſaw him, and ſaid unto them that were there, this fellow was alſo with Jeſus of Nazareth: ſhe ſpeaks of Chriſt in the ſame contemptuous manner, as her fellow-ſervant had done; for this appellation of Chriſt was commonly, if not always uſed by way of contempt; and ſhe means the ſame thing by his being with him, the other did, and is rather more ſpightful, and bent on miſchief; for, the other addreſſed him alone, and what ſhe ſaid, ſaid to himſelf; but this directs her ſpeech to the ſervants and officers that were near at hand, and uſes him in a very ſcurrilous manner: this ſorry fellow, that is ſauntring and lurking about here, is certainly one of this man's diſciples.

Ver. 72. And again he denied with an oath, &c.] He denied a ſecond time, that he had ever been with Jeſus, or was a diſciple of his; and to put it out of all doubt, and an end to all diſpute about it, and farther charge of this kind, as he hoped, he annexed an oath to it: he ſwore by the God of truth; made a ſolemn appeal to the omniſcient God, the ſearcher of hearts, that he was ſo far from being ever with Jeſus of Nazareth, or a diſciple of his, that, ſays he, I do not know the man: meaning not only that he had no perſonal knowledge of him, or acquaintance with him; but that he had never ſeen the man in his life, nor did he know what manner of man he was. This, as it was a downright falſhood, it was what he had no need to have ſaid; for there were multitudes that knew Chriſt in this ſenſe, who never joined with him, or became his diſciples. This was ſo much over-doing it, that it was much it had not given them a ſuſpicion of him. Thoſe that would excuſe Peter's ſin, by ſuppoſing that he meant, that he knew Chriſt to be God, and did not know him as a mere man, have no foundation for ſuch a ſuppoſition; and indeed, ſuch an ambiguous expreſſion, and mental reſervation, is no other than dealing fallaciouſly. Peter knew Chriſt in every ſenſe: he knew him ſpiritually, whom to know is life eternal; and he valued the knowledge of him above all things elſe: he knew him to be God, and the ſon of God; he knew him as mediator, and the ſaviour of loſt ſinners; he knew him as man, and had had perſonal intimacy and converſation with him of a long time, and yet now denies he knew him; and that with an oath, adding perjury to lying; and ſo it is, that one ſin leads on to another. This inſtance of Peter's ſhews the wickedneſs and deceitfulneſs of man's heart; and what the beſt of men are, or would be, when left to themſelves, and of God: they become like other men, even like the men of the world, whoſe mouths are full of curſing and bitterneſs.

Ver. 73. And after a while, &c.] Mark ſays, a little after, and Luke obſerves, that it was about the ſpace of one hour after: ſo that here was time to reflect upon what he had been ſaying, and to guard againſt another temptation, ſhould he be attacked; but, alas! as yet he was unmindful of his Lord's words, and perſiſts in the denial of him, and that with greater aggravation, than at his firſt ſurprize: and indeed his temptation was now more violent; for there came unto him they that ſtood by; the officers and ſervants of the high-prieſt, his attendants that waited upon him, and who ſtood by the fire, where Peter was warming himſelf: before he was attacked by ſingle maid-ſervants, now by a body of men, and one of them the kinſman of the man whoſe ear he had cut off, and who challenged him, as having ſeen him in the garden; and another confidently affirmed, and ſwore to it, that he was with Jeſus, and was a Galilean; and all of them agreed in this, and ſaid to Peter, ſurely thou alſo art one of them, for thy ſpeech bewrayeth thee: not his ſpiritual ſpeech, for he had not been ſpeaking in the language of a diſciple of Chriſt, like one that had been with Jeſus; nor his ſwearing neither, for this rather ſhewed him to be one of them; but his country language, the brogue of his ſpeech, the Galilean dialect which he ſpoke: for in Mark 'tis ſaid, thou art a Galilean, and thy ſpeech agreeth thereunto: for, tho' the ſame language was ſpoken in Galilee as at Jeruſalem, yet it was not ſo accurate and polite in Galilee, nor ſo well pronounced; words of different ſignification were confounded together. Hence the Talmudiſts ſay[b], that "the men of Judah, who were careful of their language, their law was confirmed in their hands; the men of Galilee, who were not careful of their language, their law was not confirmed in their hands——the men of Galilee, who do not attend to language, what is reported of them? a Galilean went and ſaid to them, אמר למאן אמר למאן, they ſaid to him fooliſh Galilean, חמר, Chamor is to ride upon, or Chamar is to drink, or Hamar is for clothing, or Immar is for hiding for ſlaughter." By which inſtances it appears, that a Galilean pronounced Chamor, an aſs, and Chamar, wine, and Hamar, wool, and Immar, a lamb, all one, and the ſame way, without any diſtinction; ſo that it was difficult to know which of theſe he meant. Many other inſtances of the like kind are given in the ſame place, which ſhew the Galilean to be a more groſs, barbarous, and impolite language, than what was ſpoken at Jeruſalem; and Peter uſing this dialect, was known to be a Galilean: juſt as the Ephraimites were known by their pronouncing Shibboleth, Sibboleth.

[b] T. Bab. Erubin, fol. 53. 1, 2. Vid. Buxtorf. Lex. Talmud. in rad. גלל.

Ver. 74. Then began he to curſe, and to ſwear, &c.] He ſwore before, and now he began to curſe; not Chriſt, as Saul compelled ſome to blaſpheme him, who profeſſed him, and as the Jews formerly curſed Chriſt, and his followers, in their ſynagogues: for Peter's crime was bad enough, it need not be made worſe than it was: he could never call Jeſus accurſed; in ſo doing he would have ſinned the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; but he curſed himſelf; he began to imprecate himſelf, as the Arabic verſion renders it; he made dreadful imprecations and wiſhes; wiſhed that all the miſeries and calamities he could think of might fall upon him, if he was one of the diſciples of Jeſus of Nazareth, or knew any thing of him: ſaying, I know not the man; if I do, God do ſo to me, or more alſo: let vengeance light upon me; may I be the moſt miſerable creature in the world, if I know any thing of him; and immediately the cock crew: as he was ſwearing and curſing in this manner; as ſoon as ever the words were out of his mouth, and he had in this ſad and ſolemn manner three times denied that he knew Chriſt, or was ever with him, or a diſciple of his. It is forbid, by a Jewiſh canon, to keep cocks at Jeruſalem; it runs thus[c]: "they do not bring up cocks in Jeruſalem, becauſe of the holy things, neither do the prieſts in all the land of Iſrael, becauſe of the purifications." Whether this canon was then in being, or how it was diſpenſed with, or whether there was any particular providence in the cock being here now, and ſo nigh the high-prieſt's palace, is not certain; but one there was: nor can the Jews deny that there were cocks at Jeruſalem; for they themſelves ſpeak of a cock, שנסקל בירושלים[d], that was ſtoned at Jeruſalem.

Ver. 75. And Peter remembred the words of Jeſus, &c.] Forgetfulneſs of God, of his works, of his words, and of his law, of his revealed mind and will, is often the cauſe of ſin; and a remembrance of things is neceſſary to the recovery of a fallen or back-ſliding profeſſor; as, of what he is fallen from, of the love and kindneſs of God formerly ſhewn to him, of his evil ways and works he is fallen into, and of the words and truths of Chriſt he has been very indifferent unto, and lukewarm about: which ſaid unto him, before the cock crow, or is done crowing, thou ſhalt deny me thrice; which he was put in mind of on hearing the cock crow. So by one means, or another, ſometimes by ſome remarkable providence, and ſometimes by the miniſtry of the word, God is pleaſed to alarm and awaken ſleepy profeſſors, back-ſliding believers, and remind them of their condition and duty, and reſtore them by repentance, as he did Peter: and he went out; of the high-prieſt's palace, either thro' fear, leſt he ſhould be ſeen weeping, and be ſuſpected; or rather thro' ſhame, not being able to continue where his Lord was, when he had ſo ſhamefully denied him; as alſo to leave the company he had got into, being ſenſible he was wrong in mingling himſelf with ſuch, and thereby expoſed himſelf to theſe temptations; as well as to vent his grief in tears privately: and wept bitterly; being thoroughly ſenſible what an evil and bitter thing the ſin was, he had been guilty of: his repentance ſprung from Chriſt's looking upon him, and from his looking to Jeſus, and was truly evangelical: it was a ſorrow after a godly ſort, and was increaſed by the diſcoveries of Chriſt's love unto him; and was attended with faith in him, and views of pardon thro' him: the Perſic verſion adds, and his ſin is forgiven; which, tho' not in the text, yet is a truth; for Peter's repentance was not like Cain's, nor Eſau's, nor Judas's; it was not the repentance of one in deſpair, but was a repentance unto life and ſalvation, which needed not to be repented of.

CHAP. XXVII.

Ver. 1. WHEN the morning was come, &c.] Or, as ſoon as it was day, as Luke ſays, ch. xxii. 66. The ſanhedrim had been up all night, which, after eating the paſſover, they had ſpent in apprehending, trying, and examining Jeſus, and the witneſſes againſt him; and had come to an unanimous vote, that he was guilty of death; upon which they either put Jeſus out of the room for a while, or went into another themſelves, to conſult what further ſteps ſhould be taken: or if they went home to their own houſes, they very quickly got together again, and met in the temple, where they ſeem to be, ver. 5. unleſs the ſtory of Judas is, by anticipation, inſerted here; and in their council-chamber, where they led Jeſus, and examined him again concerning his being the ſon of God; ſee Luke xxii. 66. all which ſhows how intent they were upon this buſineſs, and with what eagerneſs and diligence they purſued it; their feet ran to evil, and they made haſte to ſhed blood. This was the time of their morning prayers, of their ſaying their phylacteries, and reciting the ſhema, hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, according to their canon, which is this[e]: "from what time do they read the ſhema in the morning? from ſuch time that a man can diſtinguiſh between blue and white: ſays R. Eliezer, between blue and green; and he finiſhes it before the ſun ſhines out. R. Joſhua ſays, before three hours are elapſed:" but religion, rites, ceremonies, and canons, muſt all give way to the accompliſhment of what their hearts were ſo much ſet upon: all the chief-prieſts and elders of the people. The Syriac and Perſic verſions leave out the word all, but it is retained in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and that very rightly. The Scribes and elders met at Caiaphas's houſe before, ch. xxvi. 57. but it being in the night, they might not be all together; Annas particularly ſeems to have been abſent, John xviii. 24. but now they all aſſemble together, as in a caſe of neceſſity they were obliged to do: their rule was this[f]; "the ſanhedrim, conſiſting of ſeventy and one (as this was) are not obliged to ſit all of them as one, (or all, and every one of them) in their place in the temple; but at what time there is a neceſſity of their being gathered together, מתקבצין כולן, they are all of them aſſembled; but, at other times, he who has any buſineſs may go, and do his pleaſure, and return: yet ſo it is, that there may not be leſs than twenty-three ſitting continually all the time of their ſitting; (their uſual time of ſitting was from the morning daily ſacrifice, to the evening daily ſacrifice).

“ ſacrifice [g]) one that is under a neceſſity of going out; this looks upon his companions that remain, and if twenty-three remain, he may go out; but if not, he may not, until the other returns.” This being now a caſe of neceſſity, and great importance, they are all ſummoned and gathered together, unleſs we except Joſeph of Arimathea, and Nicodemus; who yet might be there, tho' they did not conſent to their counſel and deed, as is certain of the former, Luke xxiii. 51. theſe took counſel againſt Jeſus; God's holy child Jeſus, his anointed, the Meſſiah; and which was taking counſel againſt the Lord himſelf; and ſo the prophecy in Pſ. ii. 2. had its accompliſhment: what they conſulted about was to put him to death; it was not what puniſhment to inflict upon him, whether ſcourging or death; that was before determined; they had already adjudged him to death: but now they enter into cloſe conſultation what death to put him to, and in what manner; whether privately, he being now in their hands; or whether by the means of zealots, or by the Roman magiſtrate; or whether it ſhould be by ſtoning, which muſt have been the caſe, if they put him to death according to their law, and by their authority; or whether by crucifixion, which they choſe as the moſt ignominious and painful; and therefore determined to deliver him up to the Roman governor, and uſe their intereſt with him to put him to death, according to the Roman law.

Ver. 2. And when they had bound him, &c.] The captain, and officers, bound him when they firſt took him, and brought him to Annas, and Annas ſent him bound to Caiaphas, John xviii. 12, 24. Perhaps he might be unlooſed whilſt he was examining before the high-prieſt, under a ſhew of freedom to ſpeak for himſelf; or they might bind him faſter now, partly for greater ſecurity, as he paſſed thro' the ſtreets, and partly for his greater reproach; as alſo, that he might be at once taken to be a malefactor by the Roman judge: they led him away: the chief-prieſts and elders of the people led him, at leaſt by their ſervants, and they themſelves attending in perſon, that they might awe the people from attempting a reſcue of him, as they paſſed along; and that they might influence the Roman governor ſpeedily to put him to death; and leſt he ſhould be prevailed upon to releaſe him, thro' his own commiſeration, the innocence of Jeſus, and the intreaty of his friends. And delivered him to Pontius Pilate the governor; and ſo fulfilled what Chriſt had predicted, Matt. xx. 19. This they did, either becauſe the power of judging in caſes of life and death was taken away from them; or if it was not, they choſe that the infamy of his death ſhould be removed from them, and be laid upon a Gentile magiſtrate; and chiefly becauſe they were deſirous he ſhould die the death of the croſs. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions leave out the firſt name Pontius, and only call him Pilate: the Ethiopic verſion calls him Pilate Pontinæus; and Theophylact ſuggeſts, that he was ſo called becauſe he was of Pontus. Philo the Jew [h] makes mention of him: “Pilate, ſays he, was επιτροπος της Ιυδαιας, procurator of Judea; who, not ſo much in honour of Tiberius, as to grieve the people, put the golden ſhields within the holy city in the palace of Herod.” And ſo Tacitus [i] calls him the procurator of Tiberius, and Joſephus alſo [k]. It is ſaid [l] of him, that falling into many calamities, he ſlew himſelf with his own hand, in the times of Caligula, and whilſt Publicola and Nerva were conſuls; which was a righteous judgment of God upon him for condemning Chriſt, contrary to his own conſcience.

Ver. 3. Then Judas, which had betrayed him, &c.] Before he is deſcribed as he that ſhall, or ſhould, or doth betray him; but now having perpetrated the horrid ſin, as he that had done it. When he ſaw that he was condemned; that is, that Jeſus was condemned, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, either by the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, or by Pilate, or both: for this narrative concerning Judas may be proleptically inſerted here, tho' the thing itſelf did not come to paſs till afterwards; and the ſenſe be, that when he, either being preſent during the whole procedure againſt Chriſt; or returning in the morning after he had received his money, and had been with his friends; finding that his maſter was adjudged to death by the Sanhedrim, who were puſhing hard to take away his life; that they had delivered him bound to the Roman governor; and that he, after an examination of him, had committed him to the ſoldiers to mock, and ſcourge, and crucify him; and ſeeing him leading to the place of execution, repented himſelf: not for the ſin, as committed againſt God and Chriſt; but as it brought a load of preſent guilt and horror upon his mind, and expoſed him to everlaſting puniſhment: it was not ſuch a repentance by which he became wiſer and better; but an excruciating, tormenting pain in his mind, by which he became worſe; therefore a different word is here uſed than what commonly is for true repentance: it was not a godly ſorrow for ſin, or a ſorrow for ſin, as committed againſt God, which works repentance to ſalvation not to be repented of; but a worldly ſorrow, which iſſues in death, as it did in him. It did not ſpring from the love of God, as evangelical repentance does, nor proceed in the fear of God, and his goodneſs; but was no other than a foretaſte of that worm that dieth not, and of that fire which cannot be quenched: it was deſtitute of faith in Chriſt; he never did believe in him as the reſt of the diſciples did; ſee John vi. 64, 70, 71. and that mourning which does not ariſe from looking to Jeſus, or is not attended with faith in him, is never genuine. Judas's repentance was without hope of forgiveneſs, and was nothing elſe but horror and black deſpair, like that of Cain's, like the trembling of devils, and the anguiſh of damned ſouls. It looks as if Judas was not aware that it would iſſue in the death of Chriſt: he was puſhed on by ſatan, and his avarice, to hope, that he ſhould get this money, and yet his maſter eſcape; which he imagined he might do, either thro' ſuch a defence of himſelf, as was not to be gainſayed; or that he would find out ways and means of getting out of the hands of the Jews, as he had formerly done, and with which Judas was acquainted: but now, there being no hope of either, guilt and horror ſeize his mind, and gnaw his conſcience; and he wiſhes he had never done the accurſed action, which had entailed ſo much diſtreſs and miſery upon him: and brought again the thirty pieces of ſilver to the chief-prieſts and elders; which was the ſum he had covenanted for, and they had agreed to give him, on condition of delivering Jeſus into their hands, which he had done: and it appears from hence, that the money had been accordingly paid him, and he had received it. But he being filled with remorſe of conſcience for what he had done, feels no quietneſs in his mind; nor could he ſave of what he had deſired, but is obliged to return it; not from an honeſt principle, as in the caſe of true repentance, but on account of a racking and torturing conſcience.

Ver. 4. Saying, I have ſinned, &c.] Here was a confeſſion, and yet no true repentance; for he confeſſed, but not to the right perſons; not to God, nor Chriſt, but to the chief-prieſts and elders; nor over the head of the antitypical ſcape-goat, not ſeeking to Chriſt for pardon and cleanſing; nor did he confeſs and forſake ſin, but went on adding ſin to ſin, and ſo found no mercy. The ſame confeſſion was made by a like hardned wretch, Pharoah, Exod. ix. 27. He proceeds and points out the evil he had committed: in that I have betrayed innocent blood, or righteous blood; ſo the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel read, and ſome copies; that is, have betrayed an innocent and righteous perſon, and been the occaſion of his blood being about to be ſhed, and of his dying wrongfully. So God, in his all-wiſe providence, ordered it, that a teſtimony ſhould be bore to the innocence of Chriſt, from the mouth of this vile wretch that betrayed him; to cut off the argument from the Jews, that one of his own diſciples knew him to be a wicked man, and as ſuch delivered him into their hands: for tho' Judas might not believe in him as the Meſſiah, and the Son of God, at leaſt had no true faith in him, as ſuch; yet he knew, and believed in his own conſcience, that he was a good man, and a righteous and innocent one: and what he here ſays is a teſtimony of Chriſt's innocence, and what his conſcience obliged him to; and ſhews the terrors that now encompaſſed him about; and might have been a warning to the Jews to have ſtopped all further proceedings againſt him; but inſtead of that, they ſaid, what is that to us? ſee thou to that: ſignifying, that if he had ſinned, he muſt anſwer for it himſelf; it was no concern of theirs; nor ſhould they form their ſentiments of Chriſt according to his: they knew that he was a blaſphemer, and deſerving of death; and whatever opinion he had of him, it had no weight with them, who ſhould proceed againſt him as an evil doer, let him think or ſay what he would to the contrary; and ſuggeſt, that he knew otherwiſe than what he ſaid: ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, thou knoweſt, and the Arabic, thou knoweſt better.

Ver. 5. And he caſt down the pieces of ſilver in the temple, &c.] Upon the ground, in that part of the temple where they were ſitting; in their council-chamber, לשכת הגזית, the paved chamber, where the Sanhedrim uſed to meet [m]: for it ſeems they would not take the money of him; and he was determined not to carry it back with him, and therefore threw it down before them, left it, and departed; from the Sanhedrim: and went; out of the temple; not to God, nor to the throne of his grace, nor to his maſter, to aſk pardon of him, but to ſome ſecret ſolitary place, to cheriſh his grief and black deſpair, and hanged himſelf. The kind and manner of his death, as recorded by Luke in Acts i. 18. is, that falling headlong he burſt aſunder in the midſt, and all his bowels guſhed out: which account may be reconciled with this, by ſuppoſing the rope, with which he hanged himſelf, to break, when falling; it may be, from a very high place, upon a ſtone, or ſtump of a tree; when his belly burſt, and his guts came out: or it may be rendered, as is in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, he was ſtrangled; and that either by the devil, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks; who, having been in him for the ſpace of two or three days, caught him up into the air, and threw him down headlong; and daſhing him on the ground, he burſt in the midſt, and his bowels guſhed out, and the devil made his exit that way: or by a diſeaſe called the ſquinancy, or quinſie, a ſuffocation brought upon him by exceſſive grief, deep melancholy, and utter deſpair; when being choaked by it, he fell flat upon his face, and the rim of his belly burſt, and his entrails came out. This diſeaſe the Jews call אסכרא, Iſcara; and if it was what he was ſubject to from his infancy, his parents might call him Iſcariot from hence; and might be deſigned in providence to be what ſhould bring him to his wretched end: and what is ſaid of this ſuffocating diſorder, ſeems to agree very well with the death of Judas. They ſay [n], that "it is a diſeaſe "that begins in the bowels, and ends in the throat:" they call death by it, מיתה רעה, an evil death [o]; and ſay [p], that "there are nine hundred and three kinds of "deaths in the world, but that קשה שבכלן אסכרא, "the hardeſt of them all is Iſcara; which the Gloſs calls ſtrangulament, and ſays, is in the midſt of the "body:" they alſo reckon it, מיתה משונה, a violent death [q]; and ſay [r], that the ſpies which brought a bad report of the good land, died of it. Moreover, they affirm [s], that "whoever taſtes any thing "before he ſeparates (i. e. lights up the lamp on "the eve of the ſabbath, to diſtinguiſh the night "from the day) ſhall die by Iſcara, or ſuffocation." Upon which the Gloſs ſays, this is "meaſure for "meaſure: he that ſatisfies his throat, or appetite, "ſhall be choaked; as it is ſaid [t], he that is condemned to be ſtrangled, either he ſhall be drowned in a river, or he ſhall die of a quinſie, this is "Iſcara."

Ver. 6. And the chief-prieſts took the ſilver pieces, &c.] Off of the ground, after Judas was gone, no other daring to meddle with them; for in any other it would have been deemed ſacriledge; and they being the proper perſons to take care and diſpoſe of money brought into the temple; and if not, their covetous diſpoſition would have moved them to take up the money: and ſaid, one to another, it is not lawful to put them into the treaſury, or Corban; as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave the word untranſlated: and which is the place where the offerings for the repair and ſervice of the temple were put, and is the ſame into which Chriſt beheld the people caſting their money, Mark xii. 41. Joſephus [u] obſerves, that "there was, with the Jews, "an holy treaſure, which is called Corbonas;" and this is the לשכת הקרבן, the chamber of the Korban, of which the Jews make mention [w]: the reaſon the high-prieſts give why it was not lawful to put this money into the treaſury, or into any of the cheſts in the Corban chamber, was, becauſe it is the price of blood. Thus they ſtrained at a gnat, and ſwallowed a camel. It is highly probable, that they took this ſelf-ſame money out of the treaſury to buy this blood with, and yet ſcruple to put it in, having bought it: and beſides, they made no heſitation about ſeeking for, and ſhedding this innocen cent blood, and yet boggle at putting this money into the Corban, becauſe it was the price of it; proceeding upon the ſame reaſon as the law in Deut. xxiii. 18. does, pretending much religion, and great veneration for holy places and things, when they made no conſcience of committing the moſt flagitious crimes.

Ver. 7. And they took counſel, &c.] With one another, conſidered of the matter, and deliberated about it a while; and at laſt came to a reſolution, and bought with them the potter's field to bury ſtrangers in: a field of no great value, or it could not have been bought ſo near Jeruſalem for ſo ſmall a ſum as thirty pieces of ſilver. Grotius's conjecture ſeems to be a good one, that it was a field the potter had dug up for his uſe, and had made the moſt of it; ſo that it was good for nothing, but for the purpoſe for which theſe men bought it, to bury ſtrangers in: either ſuch as were not of their own nation, as the Roman ſoldiers, many of which were among them, and who they did not ſuffer to be buried among them; or proſelytes, or ſuch as came from diſtant parts, at their three feſtivals, many of whom may be ſuppoſed to die at ſuch times: now by this act of humanity in providing for the interment of ſtrangers, they deſigned, and hoped to have covered their wickedneſs in bargaining with Judas to betray innocent blood, for this ſum of money; but it was ſo ordered by divine providence, that this became a public and laſting memorial of their ſin and infamy: for it follows,

Ver. 8. Wherefore that field was called, &c.] Not by the prieſts and elders, but by the common people, who knew by what money it was purchaſed, the field of blood; or Aceldama, which ſo ſignifies, as in Acts i. 19. not called the field of the prieſts, the purchaſers; nor the field of the ſtrangers, for whom it was bought; but the field of blood, being purchaſed with that money, for which innocent blood was betrayed; and this name it bore unto this day; in which Matthew wrote his Goſpel, about eight years after, as is thought. Jerom[x] ſays, that in his time this field was ſhown on the ſouth-ſide of mount Sion.

Ver. 9. Then was fulfilled that which was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet, &c.] Thro' the purchaſing of the potter's field with the thirty pieces of ſilver, the price that Chriſt was valued at, a prophecy in the writings of the Old Teſtament had its accompliſhment: but about this there is ſome difficulty. The Evangeliſt here ſays it was ſpoken by Jeremy the prophet; whereas in his prophecy there is no mention of any ſuch thing. There is indeed an account of his buying his uncle Hanameel's ſon's field, in ch. xxxii. but not a word of a potter, or a potter's field, or of the price of it, thirty pieces of ſilver; and that as a price at which he, or any other perſon was valued; but the paſſage which is manifeſtly referr'd to, ſtands in Zech. xi. 12, 13. where are theſe words, and I ſaid unto them, if ye think good, give me my price, and if not, forbear; ſo they weighed for my price thirty pieces of ſilver: and the Lord ſaid unto me, caſt it unto the potter, a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of ſilver, and caſt them to the potter in the houſe of the Lord: for the removing of this difficulty, it might be obſerved, that the Syriac and Perſic verſions make no mention of any prophet's name, only read, which was ſpoken by the prophet; and ſo may as well be aſcribed to Zechariah, as to Jeremy, and better: but it muſt be owned, that Jeremy is in all the Greek copies, in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel. Various things are ſaid for the reconciling of this matter: ſome have thought that Zechariah had two names, and that beſides Zechariah, he was called Jeremy; but of this there is no proof. Jerom[y] affirms, that in an Hebrew volume, being an apocryphal work of Jeremy, which was ſhewn him by one of the Nazarene ſect, he read theſe words verbatim: ſo that tho' they do not ſtand in the writings of Jeremy, which are canonical ſcripture, yet in an apocryphal book of his, and which may as well be referred to, as the book of Maccabees, the traditions of the Jews, the prophecies of Enoch, and the writings of the Heathen poets. Moreover, Mr. Mede[z] has laboured, by various arguments, to prove, that the four laſt chapters of Zechariah were written by Jeremy, in which this paſſage ſtands; and if ſo, the reaſon is clear, for the citation in his name. But what ſeems beſt to ſolve this difficulty, is, that the order of the books of the Old Teſtament is not the ſame now, as it was formerly: the ſacred writings were divided, by the Jews, into three parts: the firſt was called the law, which contains the five books of Moſes; the ſecond, the prophets, which contains the former and the latter prophets; the former prophets began at Joſhua, and the latter at Jeremy; the third was called Cetubim, or the Hagiographa, the holy writings, which began with the book of Pſalms: now, as this whole third and laſt part is called the Pſalms, Luke xxiv. 44. becauſe it began with that book; ſo all that part which contained the latter prophets, for the ſame reaſon, beginning at Jeremy, might be called by his name; hence a paſſage, ſtanding in the prophecy of Zechariah, who was one of the latter prophets, might be juſtly cited under the name of Jeremy. That ſuch was the order of the books of the Old Teſtament, is evident from the following paſſage[a]: "it is a tradition of our Rabbins, that "the order of the prophets is, Joſhua and Judges, "Samuel and the Kings, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, "Iſaiah, and the twelve." Moreover, it is uſual with them to ſay[b], that the ſpirit of Jeremiah was in Zechariah; and it is very plain, that the latter prophets have many things from the former; and ſo might Zechariah have this originally from Jeremy, which now ſtands in his prophecy: all this would be ſatisfactory to a Jew: and it is to be obſerved, that the Jew[c], who objects to every thing he could in the Evangeliſt, with any appearance on his ſide, and even objects to the application of this prophecy; yet finds no fault with him for putting Jeremy for Zechariah. That the prophecy in Zechariah belongs to the Meſſiah, and was fulfilled in Jeſus, manifeſtly appears from the context, as well as the text itſelf. The perſon ſpoken of is in ver. 4. called to feed the flock of ſlaughter, which being in a very poor condition, ver. 5, 6. the ſtate of the Jews, at the time of Chriſt's coming, is hereby very aptly repreſented: he agrees to do it, ver. 7. and accordingly furniſhes himſelf for it; but he is deſpiſed, abhorred, and rejected by the ſhepherds, the principal men in church and ſtate; becauſe he ſeverely inveighed againſt their doctrines and practices, ver. 8. upon which he rejects them, and diſſolves both their civil and church-ſtate; which can ſuit with no other times than the times of Jeſus, ver. 9, 10, 11, 14. and leſt it ſhould be thought that he uſed them with too much ſeverity, he gives one ſingle inſtance of their ingratitude to him, which ſhews how little they eſteemed him; and that is, their valuing him at no greater a price than thirty pieces of ſilver, ver. 12, 13. which were afterwards caſt unto the potter. The Jews[d] themſelves own, that this prophecy belongs to the Meſſiah, tho' they interpret it of him in another manner. “Says R. Chanun, “the Iſraelites will have no need of the doctrine of “the king Meſſiah in the time to come; as it is “ſaid, Iſ. xi. 10. to him ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, and “not the Iſraelites: if ſo, for what does the king “Meſſiah come? and what does he come to do? “to gather the captives of Iſrael, and to give them “the thirty precepts, as it is ſaid, Zech. xi. 12. “and I ſaid unto them, if ye think good, &c. Rab “ſays, theſe are the thirty mighty men; and Jo“chanan ſays, theſe are the thirty commands.” Should it be objected, that ſuppoſing the Meſſiah is intended, the money is ſaid to be given into his hands, and not into the hands of him that was to betray him; if ye think good, give me my price: it may be replied, that the words הבו שכרי ſhould not be rendered, give me my price, but give my price; i. e. give what you think fit to value me at, into the hands of the betrayer; and accordingly they did: ſo they weighed for my price thirty pieces of ſilver; which is the very ſum the chief-prieſts agreed with Judas for, and which he received; ſee Matt. xxvi. 15. and if it ſhould be objected to the citation of the Evangeliſt, that it is conſiderably different from the words of the prophet, it being in the latter, I took the thirty pieces of ſilver; whereas in the former, the words are quoted thus, ſaying, and they took the thirty pieces of ſilver, the price of him that was valued, whom they of the children of Iſrael did value: it may be obſerved, that the word which Matthew uſes may be rendered, I took, as it is in the Syriac verſion; and that the thirty pieces of ſilver were the goodly price, at which the Meſſiah was valued by the children of Iſrael, is manifeſt enough; and is an inſtance of egregious ingratitude, that this ſhould be the price of the innocent one, as the Arabic verſion renders the phraſe, of him that was valued; of the honoured one, as the Ethiopic; of the moſt precious one, as the Syriac; he who in his perſon, and the perfections of his nature, is equal to his father, and his fellow; who has all the riches of grace and glory in him, as mediator; who is ſuperior to angels, and fairer than the ſons of men in human nature; is the chiefeſt among ten thouſands, and more precious than rubies; and all the things that can be deſired are not to be compared with him, and yet ſold for a ſum of money, the price of a ſlave, Exod. xxi. 32. and that by the children of Iſrael, to whom the Meſſiah was promiſed; who expected him, and deſired his coming; and who ſprung from among them, and was ſent unto them, and yet they received him not, but under-valued him in this exceeding mean way. Wicked men have no value for Chriſt; they ſell him and themſelves for nought; but gracious ſouls can't value him enough, nor ſufficiently expreſs their eſteem of him.

Ver. 10. And gave them for the potter's field, &c.] In the prophet it is, and I caſt them to the potter in the houſe of the Lord; whereas here it is, they gave them; but the word Matthew uſes may be rendered, I gave, as it is by the Syriac; and as the laſt words require it ſhould, as the Lord commanded me; otherwiſe there will be no coherence between them: and whereas the thirty pieces of ſilver are, in the prophet, ſaid to be caſt, or given to the potter, and here, for the potter's field, there is no contradiction: the plain ſenſe is, that they were given to the potter, as a valuable conſideration for his field: and whereas 'tis added, in the houſe of the Lord, which the Evangeliſt does not cite; the reaſon is, becauſe this money was firſt caſt down in the temple by Judas, and after being taken up by the prieſts, they covenanted with the potter for his field, and paid him for it with this money in the ſanctuary. The Evangeliſt, inſtead of this laſt clauſe, puts, as the Lord commanded me; which have made ſome think, that there ſhould be a different reading; and that inſtead of בית, the houſe, it ſhould be read כדת, according to the commandment: but there is no need to ſuppoſe this; the Evangeliſt is juſtified in the uſe of this phraſe, by what is ſaid in the prophet in the beginning of ver. 13. and the Lord ſaid unto me: and this is only a tranſpoſition and explanation, according to a rule the Jews have, סרס המקרא ודרשהו, invert, or tranſpoſe the ſcripture, and explain it[e]. Should it be ſaid that the Meſſiah, and not the betrayer, nor the prieſts, is ſaid to caſt this money to the potter, or give it for the potter's field; it may be replied, that Jeſus may be ſaid to do that which Judas, and the chief-prieſts did; becauſe, by his almighty power and providence, he over-ruled thoſe things for good, which in themſelves were evil. Judas thought to have converted the money to his own uſe, and the prieſts would have been glad to have taken it again to themſelves; but Chriſt obliged Judas to carry back the money to the prieſts, and caſt it into the temple, and worked upon the minds of the prieſts, not to put it into the treaſury, but to buy the potter's field with it, whereby the prophecy, in its literal ſenſe, was fully accompliſhed.

Ver. 11. And Jeſus ſtood before the governor, &c.] Pilate who ſat; for ſo was the cuſtom for the judge to ſit, and thoſe that were judged, to ſtand, eſpecially whilſt witneſs was bore againſt them[f]. “Says “R. Ba, in the name of Rab Hona, the witneſſes “ought to ſtand whilſt they bear witneſs. Says “R. Jeremiah, in the name of R. Abbu, alſo “הנידונין צריכן להיות עומדין, thoſe that are judged “ought to ſtand, whilſt they receive their witneſs.” And again[g], “how do they judge? the judges ſit, “והנידונין עומדין, and they that are judged ſtand.” Think what a ſight was here, the eternal ſon of God in human nature, the Lord of life and glory, the prince of the kings of the earth, ſtanding before an Heathen governor! he before whom Pilate muſt ſtand, and even all men, ſmall and great, another day; all muſt appear, and ſtand before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt; he himſelf ſtands at the bar of men! the reaſon of this was, becauſe he ſtood in the law-place, and ſtead of his people: he became their ſubſtitute from everlaſting, was made under the law in time, and was ſubject to its precept, and its penalty: and tho' he had no crimes of his own to anſwer for, he had the ſins of his people on him; on account of which he ſtood before the governor, to receive the ſentence of condemnation on himſelf; that ſo ſin being condemned in his fleſh, the whole righteouſneſs of the law might be fulfilled in them: he ſtood here, that they might ſtand before God, and at the throne of his grace with boldneſs and intrepidity; a new, and living way to it being opened for them, thro' his blood and ſacrifice; and that they might ſtand before him, the judge of all the earth, with confidence, and not be aſhamed at his coming. And the governor aſked him, ſaying, art thou the king of the Jews? for the Jews had ſuggeſted to Pilate, that Jeſus had given out that he was Chriſt a king; and he being Cæſar's procurator, it became him ſtrictly to enquire into this matter, leſt there ſhould be any encroachment made on his maſter's dignity, authority, and dominions, and he himſelf ſhould ſuffer blame; wherefore, he does not aſk Jeſus, whether he ſaid he was the king of the Jews, or others ſaid ſo of him, but whether he was their king: he knew he was not in fact; but his queſtion was, whether he was ſo in right; or if he thought he was, what claim he made, and what he had to ſupport it: and Jeſus ſaid unto him, thou ſay'ſt; which is all one as if he had ſaid, I am; ſee Matt. xxvi. 25, 64. compared with Mark xiv. 62. and that this was the ſenſe of his anſwer is clear from John xviii. 36, 37. though, at the ſame time, he let him know that his kingdom was not of this world; that he was not a temporal king, nor did he lay any claim to any earthly dominions; and therefore neither he, nor his maſter Cæſar, had any thing to fear from him: he was only a king, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, over the Iſrael of God; ſuch as received him, as the Meſſiah, and believed in his name.

Ver. 12. And when he was accuſed of the chief-prieſts and elders, &c.] As, that he was a perverter of the people, a ſtirrer up of ſedition, diſcord, and rebellion among them; that he taught them not to give tribute to Cæſar, and ſet up himſelf for a king; all which he had done not in one place only, but throughout all the land of Judea, from Galilee to Jeruſalem; ſee Luke xxiii. 2, 5. he anſwered nothing; the things laid to his charge being notoriouſly falſe, and known to be ſo by all the people; and the evidence with which they were ſupported being ſo ſlender, the judge could never receive it; he therefore judged it unneceſſary, and not worth a while to return an anſwer to them: beſides, he knew they were bent upon his death, and that, ſhould he ſet aſide theſe charges, as he eaſily could, they would invent new ones, and ſo increaſe their ſin, and their condemnation: but the chief reaſon of all, of his ſilence, was, he had the ſins of his people to anſwer for, and the time of his dying for them was now come, and for which he was ready; and therefore would ſay nothing to remove theſe falſe charges, and retard his death.

Ver. 13. Then ſaith Pilate unto him, &c.] Obſerving he made no reply to the accuſations of the chief-prieſts and elders, and in order to draw ſomething out of him, heareſt thou not how many things they witneſs againſt thee? art thou deaf? or doſt thou not take in what is alledged againſt thee? doſt thou not conſider the nature of theſe charges? how many, and of what kind the depoſitions are now made by perſons of ſuch rank and figure? art thou under no concern to make anſwer to them?

Ver. 14. And he anſwered him to never a word, &c.] He made no reply to any one thing which Pilate ſuggeſted to him, tho' it ſeems to have been in a kind and friendly way, and with a view to his good: inſomuch that the governor marvelled greatly; that a man, who at other times, had ſuch fluency of ſpeech, and readineſs of expreſſion; who both for matter and words, and alſo weight and authority, ſpake as never man did; and who had ſo often ſilenced the Scribes and Phariſees, men of the greateſt learning among the Jews, of which Pilate doubtleſs, had knowledge, ſhould ſay nothing in his own defence; and eſpecially when the charges brought againſt him were of a capital nature, and touched his life, and yet were ſo eaſy to be refuted, and proved to be falſe ones: and what might increaſe his wonder, was, that he ſhould take no notice of them, nor return an anſwer to them, conſidering by whom they were brought; not by the common people, but by the Sanhedrim of the nation, and that before him the Roman governor, who had power to crucify or releaſe him: and above all, he marvelled at the patience of Jeſus, that he could hear ſuch notorious falſities, and which ſo affected his character, and his life, and ſay nothing to them; and at the fortitude of his mind, at his being ſo regardleſs of his life, and fearleſs of death.

Ver. 15. Now at that feaſt, &c.] The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, at every feaſt; which looks as if the authors of theſe verſions thought the ſenſe was, that the following cuſtom was uſed at each feaſt in the year, at the feaſts of pentecoſt, and tabernacles, and paſſover; whereas it was only at the feaſt of the paſſover; and which is meant by the feaſt here, as is clear from John xviii. 39. It was but once a year that this was done; at every returning paſſover; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, every year on the day of the feaſt; that is, of the paſſover, and which was frequently called, by way of emphaſis, חג, the feaſt: the governor was wont to releaſe unto the people a priſoner, whom they would. It was not a law, but a cuſtom; it was not enjoined by the law of Moſes; for they that ſinned againſt that, died without mercy: nor is it agreeable to ſtrict juſtice, that there ſhould be ſuch a releaſe of criminals; nor was it a Jewiſh cuſtom, as an emblem of their deliverance out of Egyptian bondage. I have not met with the leaſt trace of any ſuch cuſtom of theirs at the time of the paſſover in any of their writings; but it ſeems to be a Roman one: and from all the accounts of the Evangeliſt, it appears to be peculiar to the Roman governor, who, either by the order of Cæſar, or of himſelf, introduced ſuch a cuſtom to get the favour of the people; for it was to them the releaſe was made, and the perſon, whom they pleaſed; and this being repeated annually for ſome time, was expected by them, and at laſt became neceſſary.

Ver. 16. And they had then a notable priſoner, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads, he had; that is, Pilate, who had committed him to priſon, and under whoſe power he was: for the Jews had loſt all authority of this kind, at leaſt in capital caſes. This priſoner is called a notable one; that is, a famous, or rather an infamous one: he was a thief, and a robber, and had been guilty of ſedition; had made, or joined with others in an inſurrection, and had committed murder in it; and ſo, on more accounts than one, was deſerving of death: nor could it be otherwiſe expected by himſelf, or others, but that he ſhould die: his name was called Barabbas; that is, as the Syriac verſion reads it, בר אבא, which ſignifies the ſon of a father; a father's child that was ſpoiled and ruined, and a child of his father the devil. This was a name common among the Jews. Frequent mention is made of R. Abba[h], and Bar Abba is the ſon of Abba: hence we read of Abba Bar Abba[i], and of R. Samuel Bar Abba[k], and of R. Simeon Bar Abba[l], and of R. Chijah Bar Abba[m]. In Munſter's ſter's Hebrew Goſpel it is read, בר רבה, Bar Rabbah, the ſon of a maſter; and ſo Jerom ſays, that in the Goſpel according to the Hebrews it is interpreted, the ſon of their maſter; but the former is the right name, and the true ſenſe of the word. The Ethiopic verſion adds, the prince, or chief of robbers, and all knew him; and the Arabic, inſtead of a priſoner, reads, a thief, as he was.

Ver. 17. Therefore when they were gathered together, &c.] Meaning not the chief-prieſts and elders; for theſe were together before, but the common people; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders the words, when the people increaſed into a multitude: for it was to them the releaſe of a priſoner was to be made, and ſo the propoſal of one; and it was at their option, who ſhould be the perſon; for it was whom they would, as in ver. 15. and where the Ethiopic verſion adds, and ſhould chuſe. Pilate ſaid unto them, whom will ye that I ſhould releaſe unto you? Barabbas, or Jeſus, which is called Chriſt? He puts it to them, whom they would chuſe to have releaſed, Barabbas, the thief and robber, the ſeditious perſon and murderer, or Jeſus, whom ſome called the Chriſt, the Meſſiah, the king of the Jews. Pilate on purpoſe propoſed ſuch an infamous perſon along with him, not doubting but they would have preferred him, whatever were their prejudices againſt him, before ſuch a ſcandalous perſon as Barabbas; and whatever good-will they might ſecretly have to put Jeſus to death, and releaſe Barabbas, yet he thought they could not, for ſhame, ſpeak out their ſenſe, and deſire him, and not Jeſus. His view was not to reproach Chriſt, by joining him with ſo wicked a man, but in order to ſave him.

Ver. 18. For he knew that for envy they had delivered him. He ſaw in their countenances, and by their charges againſt him, and by the whole of their conduct, that it was not out of any regard to Cæſar, or to the peace and tranquillity of the civil government, or to ſtrict juſtice; but from envy, at his popularity, at his fame and credit, the honour, glory, and applauſe he had among the people, on account of his doctrine, and miracles, that they had delivered him up into his hands; and therefore Pilate might the rather hope to ſucceed in this ſcheme of his to releaſe him, by propoſing him with ſo notorious a perſon to the populace, when the one, as he might reaſonably judge, was abhorred by them, and the other had got great credit and eſteem among a large number of them. The Perſic verſion here adds the peoples anſwer; they anſwered, releaſe Barabbas, but deliver Jeſus to us.

Ver. 19. When he was ſet down on the judgment-ſeat, &c.] That is, when Pilate the governor, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, was ſet down upon the bench, and while he was ſitting there, and trying of Jeſus: his wife ſent unto him; her name, according to the Ethiopians, was Abrokla [a]; who might be a Jeweſs, as the wife of Felix was, Acts xxiv. 24. and a favourer of Jeſus, or, at leaſt, a religious perſon; and if only a mere Heathen, yet had ſome notion of juſtice being to be done; and however, preſſed by her dream, ſent a meſſenger to her huſband, as he was trying this cauſe: ſaying, have thou nothing to do with that juſt man; meaning Jeſus, whom ſhe either knew to be ſo, or concluded from her dream that he was one: and her ſenſe is, that her huſband would have no hand in his condemnation and death, but rather do all he could to releaſe and ſave him. She might know that he had gone ſome lengths already againſt him; that he had the night before granted a band of ſoldiers to the chief-prieſts to apprehend him; and knew he roſe early that morning, at the requeſt of the ſame, to try him; and he was now before him, and ſhe might be apprehenſive that he was forward to adjudge him to death, and therefore ſends this cautionary meſſage; alledging this for a reaſon, for I have ſuffered many things this day, in a dream, becauſe of him. The Arabic and Perſic verſions read, this night. Pilate might riſe that morning before ſhe was awake, and had an opportunity of telling her dream; or ſhe might dream it after he was gone; in which ſhe was ſadly diſtreſſed about Jeſus, and might have ſome hints given her of the miſerable conſequences of his death, not only to the Jewiſh nation, but to her huſband and family; which gave her great uneaſineſs and diſquietude. Some have thought, that this dream was from the devil, willing to hinder the death of Chriſt, and ſo mans redemption and ſalvation by it; but had he had any ſuch intention, the moſt effectual method would have been to have perſuaded the chief-prieſts and elders off of it, and from attempting it; whereas, on the contrary, they were inſtigated by him to it: and whatever natural cauſes there might be of this dream, as the chief-prieſts coming over-night to deſire a band of ſoldiers to take Jeſus, and the diſcourſe they might have with Pilate about him; which things might run in her mind in her ſleep; yet, doubtleſs, this was of God, and with a deſign that a teſtimony ſhould be bore to the innocency of Chriſt every way; as by Judas that betrayed him, by Pilate his judge, and by his wife.

Ver. 20. But the chief-prieſts and elders perſuaded the multitude, &c.] Among whom the choice lay who ſhould be releaſed. This they did not by haranguing them, or making a public oration to them; but by ſending their ſervants, or proper perſons among them, telling them that Jeſus had been examined before the Sanhedrim that morning, and was found to be a blaſphemer; and that the whole court had unanimouſly condemned him to death, and therefore it became them to act according to their decree: and beſides, ſhould this man be ſet free, they might ſuggeſt to them, ſince he has given out that he is the king Meſſiah, the Romans hearing of it, will be jealous of ſuch a perſon, and come and take away both our place and nation, or deprive us of the few privileges we have remaining: with ſuch ſort of arguments as theſe, it may be ſuppoſed they worked upon the common people. The Perſic verſion reads, commanded, inſtead of perſuaded, that they ſhould aſk Barabbas to be releaſed to them, and deſtroy Jeſus; for nothing ſhort of that would ſatisfy them: they thirſted after his blood, and were bent upon his death: to releaſe Barabbas, if Jeſus was not deſtroyed, would not anſwer their end: they deſired Barabbas's liberty for no other reaſon, but for the ſake of the deſtruction of Jeſus.

Ver. 21. The governor anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] A ſecond time, after ſome time had been allowed and taken up to conſider of the matter, and which the chief-prieſts and elders improved among the people againſt Jeſus. Whether of the twain will ye that I releaſe unto you? for as theſe two were propoſed, one of them muſt be releaſed; and it lay in the breaſt of the people to chuſe which they would: they ſaid, Barabbas; ſo that Chriſt was not only numbered among, and reckoned with tranſgreſſors, but he was accounted worſe than the worſt of them; a ſeditious perſon, a robber, and a murderer was preferred before him; ſee Acts iii. 14.

Ver. 22. Pilate ſaith unto them, &c.] As one aſtoniſhed at their choice: he could not have thought they would have aſked the life of ſo vile a wretch, that had been guilty of ſuch capital crimes, crimes to be abhorred by all men: what ſhall I do then with Jeſus, which is called Chriſt? Surely you would not have me put him to death, and that for no other reaſon but this, becauſe he is called either by himſelf or others, Chriſt, or the Meſſiah, or the king of the Jews! they all ſay unto him, let him be crucified; which was a Roman puniſhment, inflicted on the meaneſt and worſt of men; as wicked ſervants, thieves, robbers, and cut-throats [o]; and ſo was not only a torturing and painful death, but a very ſhameful and ignominious one; yea, an accurſed one: in this they all agreed, being inſtigated to it by the chief prieſts and elders.

Ver. 23. And the governor ſaid, why, what evil hath he done? &c.] What reaſon can be given, why he ſhould be crucified? what ſin has he committed, that deſerves ſuch a death? From whence 'tis clear, that of all the things they had accuſed him, they had not, in Pilate's account, given proof of one ſingle action, that was criminal, nor had he done any: he came into the world without ſin, he did none in it; he knew no ſin, nor could any be found in him, by ſatan, nor his accuſers, nor his judge: but they cried out the more, ſaying, let him be crucified: the more they ſaw Pilate inclined to favour him, and pleaded for him, and atteſted his innocence; the more clamorous, outragious, and urgent they were to have him crucified.

Ver. 24. When Pilate ſaw he could prevail nothing, &c.] That it was to no purpoſe to talk to them, and in favour of Jeſus; he ſaw they were determined upon his crucifixion, and that nothing elſe would ſatisfy them: but that rather a tumult was made; there was an uproar among the people, and he might fear the conſequences of it, ſhould he not grant their requeſt; otherwiſe, as Philo the [p] Jew ſays of him, he was την φυσιν ακαμπης ϗ μετα τȣ αυθαδȣς αμειλικτος, naturally inflexible, rigid, and ſelf-willed: but he knew the temper of theſe people, and had had experience of their reſoluteneſs, when they were determined on any thing; as in the caſe of his introducing the golden ſhields into the holy city, of which the ſame author ſpeaks; and was then obliged, though ſore againſt his will, as now, to yield unto them. He took water, and waſhed his hands before the multitude; either in conformity to a cuſtom among the Jews, whereby they teſtified their innocence as to the commiſſion of murder; ſee Deut. xxi. 6, 7. Pſal. xxvi. 6. or to a Gentile one, uſed when murder was committed, for the luſtration or expiation of it [q]: ſaying, I am innocent of the blood of this juſt perſon; though this did not clear him from all guilt in this matter: he ought to have acted the part of an upright judge, and not have yielded to the unrighteous requeſts of the people; he ought not to have ſcourged an innocent man, and much leſs have condemned and delivered him to be crucified; as he did; though in this he bore a teſtimony to the innocence of Chriſt, and which is ſomewhat remarkable in him; who was, as Philo ſays [r], notoriouſly guilty of receiving bribes, of injuries, rapine, and frequent murders of perſons uncondemned: ſee ye to it; you muſt be anſwerable for this action, and all the conſequences of it. The Syriac verſion renders it, you have known; and the Perſic verſion, you know; and the Arabic verſion, you know better; ſee the note on ver. 4.

Ver. 25. Then anſwered all the people, &c.] They were as unanimous in their imprecations upon themſelves, as in deſiring the crucifixion of Chriſt: and ſaid, his blood be on us and on our children; not for the cleanſing of them from ſin, which virtue that blood has; but if there were any ſtain, blot, or pollution, through the ſhedding of it, they wiſhed it might be on them and theirs: nor for the forgiveneſs of ſins, which that blood was ſhed for; but on the contrary, if there was any ſin and guilt in it, they deſired it might be imputed to them: nor for their juſtification before God, and ſecurity from wrath to come, both which are by his blood; but all the reverſe of this, that if there were any puniſhment, and condemnation, and death, due for the ſhedding of it, they imprecated it all upon themſelves, and their poſterity: ſo this phraſe is uſed in Joſh. ii. 19. 2 Sam. i. 16. and in other places, and in the Talmud [s]: and it is a notion of the Jews, that the guilt of innocent blood, and the blood of that innocent man's children, lie not only upon the perſons immediately concerned, but upon their children to the end of the world: and ſo the judges uſed to addreſs the witneſſes upon a trial, after this manner [t]; "know ye, that capital cauſes, "are not as pecuniary ones: in pecuniary cauſes, "a man gives his money, and it atones for him; "but in capital cauſes, דמו ודם זרעו תלויין בו, "his blood, and the blood of his ſeed, hang upon "him, to the end of the whole world: for lo! of "Cain 'tis ſaid, the voice of the blood of thy brother "crieth, &c. his blood, and the blood of his "ſeed." And this imprecation of theirs, has been notoriouſly verified in them; for though this blood was ſhed for many of them, and Chriſt prayed for the forgiveneſs of them, and they had the Goſpel, and the doctrine of remiſſion of ſins firſt preached among them, which was made the power of God unto ſalvation to ſome of them, even of thoſe who were concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt; yet, on the generality of them, his blood was in the ſenſe they wiſhed it; and for the ſhedding of it, wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt, in the entire deſtruction of their nation, city, and temple: and very remarkable it is, that great numbers of them were put to death by crucifixion; and very likely ſome of thoſe very perſons, that were ſo clamorous for the crucifying of Chriſt; and if not, at leaſt their children: five hundred of the Jews and more, were ſometimes crucified in a day, whilſt Titus was beſieging the city; till at length there wanted room for croſſes, ϗ ϛαυροι τοις σωμασι, and croſſes for bodies, as Joſephus [u] ſays, who was an eye witneſs of it: and to this day, this dreadful wiſh of the blood of Chriſt upon them, is to be ſeen in their miſerable, abject, and captive ſtate; and will be, until ſuch time that they look to him whom they have pierced, and mourn.

Ver. 26. Then releaſed he Barabbas unto them, &c.] The ſeditious perſon, robber, and murderer, for which crimes he was in priſon. This man was an emblem of the perſons for whom Chriſt ſuffered, both in his character and in his releaſe: in his character; for they are ſuch as have rebelled againſt God, robbed him of his glory, and deſtroyed themſelves; many of them are notorious ſinners, the chief of ſinners, and all of them by nature, children of wrath, as others; and as the deſcendants of Adam, under the ſentence of condemnation and death; and yet in Chriſt, they are children of Abba, Father; being of God predeſtinated by him, to the adoption of children: and in his releaſe; for when Chriſt was apprehended, they were let go; when he was bound, they were looſed; when he was condemned, they were releaſed, and acquitted; and when the ſword of juſtice was awaked againſt him, the hand of grace and mercy was turned upon them. And when he had ſcourged Jeſus; which was done ſome time before his examination, trial, and condemnation were over, though mentioned here, as appears from John xix. 1. and was done by Pilate, in order to move the pity and compaſſion of the Jews; hoping they would have been ſatisfied with it, and not have inſiſted upon his death: and he indeed moved it to them, that he might chaſtize him, and let him go, Luke xxiii. 22. but nothing would do but crucifixion. Whether the previous ſcourging ſufficed, or whether he was not ſcourged again upon his condemnation, is not certain: if he was ſcourged twice, John may be thought to relate the one, and Matthew the other; for certain it is, that it was uſual with the Romans to ſcourge either with rods or whips, juſt before crucifixion [w]: our Lord was ſcourged with whips, as the word here uſed ſhews. Perſons of birth and blood, and freemen of Rome, were beaten with rods; but ſuch as were ſervants, which form Chriſt had taken, were ſcourged with whips; to which, ſometimes were faſtened, the huckle bones of beaſts [x]; ſo that this kind of whipping, was very ſevere and cruel. The Jews themſelves own this ſcourging of Jeſus, only they aſcribe it to the elders of Jeruſalem, and relate it thus [y]: "the elders of Jeruſalem took Jeſus, and brought him "to the city, and bound him to a marble pillar in "the city, ויכוהו בשוטים, and ſmote him with "whips, or whipped him; and ſaid unto him, "where are all thy miracles which thou haſt done?" Hereby the prophecy in Iſa. l. 6. and our Lord's prediction in Matt. xx. 19. had their accompliſhment. This ſcourging of Chriſt, was an emblem of the ſcourges and ſtrokes of divine juſtice, which he endured in his ſoul, as the ſurety of his people; being ſmitten of God by the ſword of juſtice, as he ſtood in their place and ſtead, and ſtricken for their tranſgreſſions; and may furniſh out ſeveral inſtructions: as that it is no wonder, if any of the followers of Chriſt have, do, or ſhall, meet with ſuch like treatment from men; and that it becomes them to bear patiently the ſcourges of their heavenly Father, ſince theſe are in love; and that they need not fear being trodden down, or carried away by the overflowing ſcourge of God's wrath, ſince Chriſt has endured this in their room. This being done, he delivered him to be crucified; either into the hands of the Jews, to their will and at their requeſt; or into the hands of his ſoldiers, to execute the ſentence he had paſſed upon him; which was done in a judicial way, and according to the determinate counſel and foreknowledge of God.

Ver. 27. Then the ſoldiers of the governor, &c.] Thoſe that were about him, his attendants and guards, took Jeſus into the common-hall; the prætorium, or judgment-hall, as it is ſometimes called; the governor's palace, into which the Jews would not enter, leſt they ſhould defile themſelves: Pilate therefore came out to them, and went into the pavement called Gabbatha, and ſat upon a judgment-ſeat there; ſee John xviii. 28, 29. and xix. 13. where he paſſed ſentence on Chriſt; which being done, the ſoldiers took him into the hall of judgment; which being both magnificent and large, was fit for the ſcene they intended to act there. Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel reads it, they took him in the houſe of judgment; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, out of the court of judicature; both wrong. And gathered unto him the whole band of ſoldiers; the ſame that Judas had with him to take him, conſiſting of five hundred, and ſome ſay more: theſe their fellow-ſoldiers, to whom Jeſus was committed, got together to him, or againſt him, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, to make themſelves ſport and diverſion with him. Think in what hands and company our dear Lord now was: now was he encompaſſed with dogs, and incloſed with the aſſembly of the wicked indeed; ſee Pſal. xxii. 16. The Perſic verſion renders it, multitudes of knaves being gathered together to him.

Ver. 28. And they ſtripped him, &c.] Of his cloaths; at leaſt of his upper garment: for one man to ſpit upon another, as theſe ſoldiers afterwards did on Chriſt, or to ſtrip him of his garment, according to the Jewiſh canons, were puniſhable with a fine of four hundred pence [z], which amounted to twelve pounds and ten ſhillings of our money; but the ſoldiers were in no danger of being proſecuted, for ſtripping Chriſt. This is one part of the low eſtate Chriſt ſubmitted to: his cloaths on his back ſeem to be all he had in this world, and of theſe he is ſtripped: and put on him a ſcarlet robe, or a red coat, as the Perſic verſion renders it; very likely an old coat of one of their officers. The Evangeliſts Mark and John, ſay it was purple, and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it here: whether there were two garments put upon him, the one a purple veſt, and the other a ſcarlet robe over it; or whether ſcarlet was uſed inſtead of purple, is not certain; which was a colour wore by kings, and a ſign of imperial dignity [a]; and therefore put upon Chriſt by way of mockery, upbraiding him with the character he bore, as king of the Jews. This was an emblem of his being cloathed, as it were with our ſins, which are as ſcarlet, and of his bloody ſufferings in the human nature.

Ver. 29. And when they had platted a crown of thorns, &c.] What ſort of thorn this crown was made of, whether of the bramble, or of the white thorn, is not very material [b]: the word uſed in the Syriac verſion, is rendered by interpreters, white thorns, and which were common in Judæa: theſe, be they what they will, they made into the form of a crown, and they put it upon his head; both to reproach him as a king, and to torture him as a man: however, it had its ſignificancy, and was an emblem of men, comparable to thorns; either of wicked men, and of his being encompaſſed with them at this time; or of good men, choſen out from among them, redeemed by him, and accounted as a royal diadem with him [c]: or it might repreſent the ſins of his people, which, like thorns, pierced him, and like a crown of them ſurrounded him on every ſide; or elſe the many troubles he wa exerciſed with, and through which he did, as hi members do, enter the kingdom; and eſpecially his being made a curſe for us, thorns and briers be ing the curſe which was inflicted on the earth, fo the ſin of man: in this Chriſt was the antitype o th the ram, caught by his horns among the thickets, which Abraham ſacrificed in the room of his ſon. This may teach us many uſeful leſſons: we may ſee what a curſe ſin brought upon man, and upon the earth for man's ſake; and even upon the Meſſiah, in the ſtead of men: we may obſerve the difference between us and Chriſt: we are a crown of glory, and a royal diadem in his hand; we are crowned with loving kindneſs and tender mercies, and have a crown of righteouſneſs, life, and glory, laid up for us, and he was crowned with thorns; as alſo the difference between Chriſt in his ſtate of humiliation wearing ſuch a crown, and his ſtate of exaltation, in which he is crowned with glory and honour. The Jews acknowledge this circumſtance of the ſufferings of Jeſus, though they aſcribe it to the elders of Jeruſalem; who, they ſay [d], "took "thorns and made a crown of them, and put it "upon his head." Which are the very words of the Evangeliſt: and a reed in his right hand; or cane; and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel uſes the word, קנה, a cane, ſuch as men walk with; and this may be confirmed from the barbarous uſe they afterwards made of it, by ſmiting him on the head with it: a reed indeed may fitly expreſs the weakneſs of his kingdom in the eye of the world; but any cane or common ſtaff, or ſtick, put into his hands in the room of a ſceptre, would alſo ſignify the meanneſs of his kingdom, which was not of this world, and came not with obſervation: they meant to reproach him with it, but they'll find one time or another, that he has another ſceptre, even a ſceptre of righteouſneſs, a ſtaff of ſtrength, a rod of iron, with which he'll rule and break in pieces, all the wicked of the earth. However, we may learn from hence, Chriſt does not diſdain to hold a reed in his hand; nor will he break the bruiſed reed, or diſcourage, or cruſh the weakeſt believer. And they bowed the knee before him, and mocked him, ſaying, Hail, king of the Jews: being thus clad in a ſcarlet, or purple robe, or both; and having a crown of thorns on his head, and a reed inſtead of a ſceptre in his hand, they carry on the mockery ſtill further, and bend the knee to him, as to a prince juſt come to his throne, and ſalute him as ſuch; and in a mock way, wiſh him long life and proſperity: thus deriding him in his kingly office, as all ſuch do, who call him Lord, Lord, but diſregard his commands.

Ver. 30. And they ſpit upon him, &c.] The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, upon his face, which he did not hide from ſpitting; ſee Iſa. l. 6. and ſo what with ſweat, by being hurried from place to place, and with blood trickling down from his temples, ſcratched with thorns, and with the ſpittle of theſe filthy ſoldiers, his viſage was more marred than any man's, and his form than the ſons of men, Iſa. lii. 14. And took the reed, or cane, which was put into his right hand, and ſmote him on the head; whereby they drove the ſharp points of the thorns into it, which muſt give him inexpreſſible pain and torture.

Ver. 31. And after that they had mocked him, &c.] Gone through the whole farce, and glutted themſelves with deriſion of him, and with ſport and diverſion with him, they took the robe off from him; it belonging to one of their company, and put his own raiment on him; partly that he might be known to be the ſelf-ſame perſon that was condemned and committed to them, which they now brought forth to crucify; and partly, that the four ſoldiers that were appointed to be the executioners, might have the perquiſite of his cloaths, which belonged unto them: and led him away to crucify him; for a condemned perſon was always executed the ſame day: their canon is [e], "after that his judg- "ment, or ſentence is finiſhed, they don't tarry "with him, but ſlay him, ביומו, that very day." And their cuſtom was this; "he whoſe ſentence "for death is finiſhed, they bring him out from "the houſe of judgment; and one ſtands at the "door of it, and linen clothes in his hand, and a "horſe at ſome diſtance from him; and a crier "goes out before him, ſaying, ſuch an one is going "to be executed with ſuch a death, becauſe he has "committed ſuch a ſin, in ſuch a place, at ſuch a "time, ſuch and ſuch being witneſſes; whoever "knows him to be innocent, let him come, and "ſpeak in his favour: if one ſays, I have ſome- "thing to ſay in his favour, this waves with the "linen clothes, and the other rides upon the horſe, "and runs and brings back him that is judged, to "the Sanhedrim; and if he is found innocent, they "diſmiſs him; but if not, he returns, and goes to "execution [f]." The Jews pretend [g], that a crier went out before Jeſus of Nazareth, forty days before his execution, and made ſuch a proclamation, but found none that had any thing to ſay in his favour, and therefore hanged him on the evening of the paſſover. But this is falſe; Chriſt had no ſuch length of time, or his friends any liberty granted them to ſpeak for him. They led him out of the common hall, through Jeruſalem, and through one of the gates of it, without the city, in order to crucify him, to which he was adjudged, when that prophecy was fulfilled in Iſa. liii. 7. He is brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before her ſhearers is dumb, ſo he openeth not his mouth: as he made no oppoſition or ſtruggle, but quietly went along with them, where they led him; ſo he took every thing patiently from them, uttered not one complaint, or any murmuring and repining word, or any thing by way of reviling; but became meekly ſubject to them, and ſubmitted himſelf to him that judgeth righteouſly.

Ver. 32. And as they came out, &c.] Of the city; for no execution was made, neither in the court of judicature, nor in the city, but at ſome diſtance; as it was at ſtoning, ſo at crucifixion [h]: "when judgment was finiſhed, they brought him "out to be ſtoned; the place of ſtoning was with- "out the Sanhedrim, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxiv. 14. "bring forth him that hath curſed without the camp." Upon which the Gloſs and Gemara ſay [i], without the three camps; which were theſe, the court which was the camp of the Shekinah, or the divine preſence; and the mountain of the houſe, the camp of the Levites; and the city, the camp of Iſrael; ſo that he that was executed, was had without the city. Maimonides [k] ſays, "the place in which the "Sanhedrim executed, was without it, and at a "diſtance from it, as it is ſaid, Lev. xxiv. 14. and "it appears to me, that it was about ſix miles "diſtant; for ſo far it was between the Sanhedrim "of Moſes our maſter, which was before the door "of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the "camp of Iſrael." So Jeſus went without the camp, and ſuffered without the gate, as the antitype of the red heifer; ſee Numb. xix. 3. compared with Heb. xiii. 11, 12, 13. and the notes there: They found a man of Cyrene; a place in Libya, and one of the five cities called Pentapolis; which were theſe, Berenice, Arſinoe, Ptolemais, Apollonia, and Cyrene [l]; Kir in Amos i. 5. and ix. 7. is rendered by the Targum, קירני, Cyrene, as it is alſo by the Vulgate Latin. There were many Jews dwelt here, as appears from Acts ii. 10. as this man was a Jew, as his name ſhews; and beſides, there was a ſynagogue of the Cyrenian Jews at Jeruſalem, Acts vi. 9. ſo that though he was a native of Cyrene, he might now dwell there, and ſome of theſe were converted to the faith of Chriſt; for of thoſe that were ſcattered abroad at the death of Stephen, ſome were men of Cyrene, Acts xi. 19, 20. And it is very likely, that this man was a favourer of Chriſt, which might be one reaſon why they laid hold on him, and obliged him to bear the croſs of Chriſt; ſince he was the father of Alexander and Rufus, who were men of note among the firſt chriſtians: Simon by name; of which name was one of the apoſtles, and a common name among the Jews, and ſignifies hearkening and obedient: and none are fit to bear, or will bear the croſs of Chriſt, but ſuch who hearken to his voice, and are obedient to him, being made willing in the day of his power: him they compelled to bear his croſs; which they did, not out of good-will to Chriſt, but fearing leſt through his faintneſs and weakneſs, he ſhould die before he got to the place of execution, and they be diſappointed of their end, the crucifixion of him; or becauſe they were in haſte to have him executed, and he was not able to go ſo faſt as they deſired; for when they firſt came out, the croſs was laid upon Chriſt, and he bore it, as John relates; but he being weak and ready to faint under it, and not able to go the pace they would have him, and meeting with this man, they preſs him to bear it after him; which he might be unwilling to do, partly becauſe it was ſcandalous and ignominious; and partly, becauſe if a favourer of Jeſus, he did not chuſe to be any ways acceſſary to his death: but he was obliged to it; and it may be obſerved from hence, that taking up the croſs and following Chriſt, is diſagreeable to fleſh and blood: though the ſpirit may be willing, the fleſh recoils; none care for it, or chuſe to bear it, unleſs conſtrained to it.

Ver. 33. And when they were come to a place called Golgotha, &c.] The true pronunciation is Golgoltha, and ſo it is read in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel. It is a Syriac word, in which language letters are often left out: in the Syriac verſion of this place, the firſt l is left out, and the latter retained, and it is read Gogoltha; and ſo in the Perſic, Gagulta; and in the Arabic, Gagalat. The Ethiopic verſion reads it, Golgotha; and ſo Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, it is read by the Samaritan interpreter, of the firſt chapter of Numbers: that is to ſay, a place of a ſkull: ſome ſay Adam's ſkull was found here, and from thence the place had its name; this is an ancient tradition, but without foundation [m]: it ſeems to be ſo called, becauſe it was the place where malefactors were executed, and afterwards buried; whoſe bones and ſkulls in proceſs of time might be dug up, and ſome of them might lie ſcattered about in this place: for, one that was executed as a malefactor [n], “ they “ did not bury him in the ſepulchres of his anceſ-
“ tors; but there were two places of burial ap“ pointed by the Sanhedrim; one for thoſe that were “ ſtoned, and for thoſe that were burnt; and ano“ ther for thoſe that were killed with the ſword, “ and for thoſe that were ſtrangled; and when their “ fleſh was conſumed, they gathered the bones, and “ buried them in their place;” i. e. in the ſepulchres of their anceſtors. This place was as infamous as our Tyburn, and to be crucified at Golgotha, was as ignominious as to be hanged at Tyburn; which ſhows to what ſhame and diſgrace our Lord was brought, and what he condeſcended to bear on our account.

Ver. 34. They gave him vinegar to drink, &c] It was a cuſtom with the Jews [o], when “ a “ man went out to be executed, to give him to “ drink a grain of frankincenſe in a cup of wine,
“ that his underſtanding might be diſturbed, as it
“ is ſaid, Prov. xxxi. 6. Give ſtrong drink to him
“ that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of “ heavy hearts; and the tradition is, that the ho“ nourable women in Jeruſalem gave this freely;
“ but if they did not, it was provided at the charge
“ of the congregation.” The deſign of it was to chear their ſpirits, and intoxicate their heads, that they might not be ſenſible of their pain and miſery. But ſuch a cup was not allowed Chriſt at the publick expence, nor were the honourable women ſo compaſſionate to him; or if it was ſent him, the ſoldiers did not give it him, but another potion in the room of it; indeed Mark ſays, they gave him wine mingled with myrrh: which was either a cordial provided by his friends, and given him, and is different from what the ſoldiers gave him here; or the ſenſe is, that they gave him the cup, that was ſo called, but not the thing; but inſtead of it, vinegar mingled with gall. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopia verſions, inſtead of vinegar, read wine; and ſo does Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, and ſo it is read in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in another exemplar, and in one of Stephens's; and which may be eaſily reconciled with the common reading, and that with Mark; for the wine they gave him was flat and ſour, and no other or better than vinegar; and real vinegar may be ſo called, as this ſeems to be; and the rather, becauſe vinegar was a part of the Roman ſoldiers allowance, and ſo they had it ready at hand; ſee the note on John xix. 29. As alſo, becauſe it was thought that vinegar was uſeful to prolong the life of a man ready to die; and therefore they might chuſe to give it to Chriſt, that he might live the longer in miſery: ſo the Jews [p] write, that “ if a man ſwallows a waſp or hornet alive, he “ can't live; but they muſt give him to drink a “ quarter, דחלא שמגז, of vinegar of Shamgaz, “ (which the Gloſs ſays is ſtrong vinegar) and it is “ poſſible he may live a little while, until he hath “ given orders to his houſe.” The Arabic verſion inſtead of gall, reads myrrh; nor are we to ſuppoſe that this drink was mixed with the gall of a beaſt itſelf, but with ſomething that was as bitter as gall; as wormwood, or myrrh, or any other bitter, to make it diſtaſteful. This potion of vinegar with gall, was an aggravating circumſtance in our Lord's ſufferings, being given to him when he had a violent thirſt upon him; and was an emblem of the bitter cup of God's wrath, he had already taſted of in the garden, and was about to drink up: the Jews had a notion of vinegar's being expreſſive of the chaſtiſements of the Meſſiah; the words in Ruth ii. 14. they ſay [q], “ ſpeak of the king Meſ“ ſiah; come thou hither, draw nigh to the king“ dom; and eat of the bread, this is the bread of “ the kingdom, and dip thy morſel in the vinegar, “ אלו הייסורין, theſe are the chaſtiſements, as it is “ ſaid in Iſ. liii. 5. he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions.” By this offer was fulfilled the prophecy in Pſ. lxix. 21. and which he did not altogether refuſe; for it follows, and when he had taſted thereof, he would not drink: not becauſe it was the vinegar of Gentiles, which was forbidden by the Jewiſh canons [q], leſt it ſhould have been offered to idols; but becauſe he would make uſe of no means either to prolong his life, or diſcompoſe his mind; and that it might appear he knew what he did, and that he was not afraid nor unwilling to die; tho' he thought fit to taſte of it in a ſuperficial way, to ſhew he did not deſpiſe nor reſent their offer; and that he was really a-thirſt, and ready to drink a more diſagreeable potion than that.

Ver. 35. And they crucified him, &c.] That is, the ſoldiers: they laid the croſs upon the ground, and ſtretched Chriſt upon it; they extended his two arms as far as they could, to the tranſverſe part of it, and nailed his hands unto it: his two feet they fixed by each other on a baſis, in the body of the croſs, thro' which they alſo drove nails; and then raiſing it up, fixed it in the earth, and left him hanging on it till he expired. This death was not only painful and cruel, but exceedingly ſhameful and ignominious: it was what was inflicted on the meaneſt of perſons, as ſervants, whoſe form Chriſt had taken; and upon the worſt of men, as murderers, cut-throats, thieves, and the vileſt of men [r], among whom Chriſt was now numbered: and parted his garments, caſting lots: for they ſtripped him of his clothes before they fixed him to the croſs, and crucified him naked, as was the cuſtom of the Romans [s]; as it was of the Jews to ſtone and hang perſons naked: their canons run thus [t]; “ when he “ is four cubits off of the place of ſtoning, they “ ſtrip off his garments; a man they cover before, “ a woman both behind and before; the words “ of R. Judah: but the wiſe men ſay, a man is “ ſtoned naked, and a woman is not ſtoned naked: “ a man, they hang him with his face to the people; a woman, with her face to the tree. R. “ Eliezer, and the wiſe men ſay, a man is hanged, “ but a woman is not hanged.” On which the Gemara [u] ſays, “ what is the ſenſe of the Rabbins? “ the ſcripture ſays, thou ſhalt hang him; him, and “ not her: and, ſays R. Eliezer, him, בלא כסיתו, “ without his clothes.” So our Lord was crucified; his clothes were a perquiſite of the ſoldiers; there were four of them, as we learn from John xix. 23. and they parted them into four parts, and then caſt lots whoſe each part ſhould be; or rather, they divided his garments into four parts, and each took his part; but his veſture, or coat, being ſeamleſs, and woven from top to bottom, they did not chuſe to tear it into pieces, but caſt lots for it, who ſhould have it: that it might be fulfilled which was ſpoken by the prophet, by David, in Pſ. xxii. 18. they parted my garments among them, and upon my veſture did they caſt lots. All this, Beza ſays, is not in any of the ancient copies; nor is it in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, but ſtands in the Vulgate Latin, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; ſee the note on John xix. 24.

Ver. 36. And ſitting down, they watched him there.] That is, the ſoldiers, after they had crucified Jeſus, and parted his garments, ſat down on the ground, at the foot of the croſs, and there watched him, leſt his diſciples ſhould take him down; tho' there was no need to fear that, ſince they were few, and weak, and wanted courage, and were in the utmoſt dread and conſternation themſelves; or leſt the people, who were very changeable with reſpect to Chriſt, one day ſaying Hoſanna to the ſon of David, and another day crucify him, crucify him, ſhould once more change their ſentiments of him, and thro' pity to him riſe and take him down; or rather, leſt Jeſus himſelf, ſhould by his miraculous power, unlooſe himſelf, come down, and make his eſcape. It was uſual with the Romans to ſet a ſoldier, or ſoldiers, to watch thoſe that were crucified, not only before they expired, but after they were dead, leſt they ſhould be took down and buried; as appears from Petronius, Plutarch, and others [w]. This ſeems to be the watch Pilate refers to, ver. 65. and over which there was a centurion, ver. 54.

Ver. 37. And ſet up over his head his accuſation written, &c.] The Evangeliſt John calls it a title, and Luke, a ſuperſcription, and Mark, the ſuperſcription of his accuſation: it was what contained the ſum and ſubſtance of what he was accuſed, and for which he was condemned, and ſuffered. The Syriac and Perſic verſions here render it, the cauſe of his death. It was written by Pilate in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, that all might read it; and by his orders it was put upon the croſs, and over the head of Jeſus by the ſoldiers. This title, or inſcription, ſetting forth the perſon's crime, uſed to be carried before him, or put upon him, as he was led to execution [x]: but here it was ſet upon the croſs, and perhaps nailed unto it; to which the apoſtle ſeems to allude in Col. ii. 14. the ſubſtance of it was, this is Jeſus the king of the Jews. This was what the chief-prieſts accuſed him of to Pilate, and and about which he queſtioned him, and for which they deſired he might be crucified; urging, that ſhould he let him go, he could not be Cæſar's friend. Hence Pilate wrote his accuſation in this form, not ſo much in deriſion of Jeſus; for by converſation with him he underſtood what ſort of a king he was, as to the reproach of the Jews for crucifying him who was their king; being the perſon that was propheſied of in their books, as king of Zion, and whom they expected as ſuch, tho' now they denied and rejected him.

Ver. 38. Then were there two thieves crucified with him, &c.] Which ſeems contrary to one of their canons, which runs thus; אין דנין שנים ביום אחד, they don't judge two in one day [y], unleſs they were both in the ſame crime, and died the ſame death: but here were three perſons, Jeſus, and theſe two malefactors, condemned and executed in one, and the ſame day: theſe two thieves were led out with Jeſus, to be put to death with him, according to Luke xxiii. 32. and were crucified with him upon the ſame ſpot of ground; their death was the ſame, but not their crime: one on the right hand, and another on the left; and Jeſus in the midſt, as John relates, chap. xix. 18. and hereby was fulfilled, as Mark obſerves, chap. xv. 28. a prophecy in Iſ. liii. 12. If this was ſo ordered by Pilate, it might be done in order to cover the ſin, and take off the reproach of putting an innocent perſon to death, ſuggeſting hereby he was one of them; tho' this ſeems rather to be done by the Jews, the ſoldiers agreeing to it, for the greater reproach of Jeſus; intimating, that he was the worſt of theſe malefactors, and a ringleader of ſuch ſort of perſons: and whereas they had obſerved, he took it ill at their hands that they ſhould come to apprehend him with ſwords and ſtaves, as if he was a thief and a robber; to vex and diſtreſs him the more, they crucify him between two ſuch perſons: but the grand reaſon why it was ſo ordered, was, that tho' Chriſt was no tranſgreſſor, he was accounted one, and ſtood in the room and ſtead of ſinners, and was numbered with them, and as ſuch was treated by divine juſtice, and accordingly died for them.

Ver. 39. And they that paſſed by, &c.] In the road to or from Jeruſalem; for, it ſeems, the croſſes were placed by the way-ſide; or they who paſſed by the croſs, the populace that came from Jeruſalem, on purpoſe to ſee the ſight, reviled him, or blaſphemed him; they ſpoke all manner of evil of him, they could think of, to which he anſwered not a word; and which may teach us patience under the revilings of men: this was foretold of him, Pſ. lxxxix. 51. they have reproached the footſteps of thine anointed, or Meſſiah; and which Jarchi explains by סופי, the ends of the king Meſſiah; his laſt times, towards the cloſe of his days; and cites that paſſage in the Miſna[z], "in the heels, or, as Buxtorf renders it, in the end of the days of the Meſſiah impudence ſhall be multiplied," as it now was exceedingly: wagging their heads; in deriſion of him, and as exulting in his miſery; ſee Iſ. xxxvii. 22. Lam. ii. 15. This alſo was propheſied of him in Pſ. xxii. 7.

Ver. 40. And ſaying, thou that deſtroyeſt the temple, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, read, the temple of God; and add ah here, as in Mark xv. 29. and ſo Beza ſays 'tis read in a certain copy. They refer to the charge of the falſe witneſſes againſt him, who miſrepreſenting his words in John ii. 19. declared that he gave out that he was able to deſtroy the temple of Jeruſalem, and rebuild it in three days time; wherefore it is added, and buildeſt it in three days, ſave thyſelf. They reproach him with it, and ſuggeſt, that theſe were vain and empty boaſts of his; for if he was able to do any thing of that kind, he need not hang upon the tree, but could eaſily ſave himſelf: if thou be the ſon of God, come down from the croſs. The Jews themſelves ſay[a], that the following words were ſaid to Jeſus on the croſs, "if thou be the ſon of God, why doſt thou not deliver thyſelf out of our hands?" As ſatan before them, they put an if upon the ſonſhip of Chriſt; and ſeeing his followers believed in him as the ſon of God, and he had owned himſelf to be ſo before the Sanhedrim, they require a ſign of it by his power, and to do that which they believed no mere man in his ſituation could do; which ſhows, that they had no other notion of the ſon of God, but that he was a divine perſon: but his ſonſhip was not to be declared by his coming down from the croſs, which he could have eaſily effected, but by a much greater inſtance of power, even by his reſurrection from the dead; and no other but that ſign was to be given to that wicked and perverſe generation.

Ver. 41. Likewiſe alſo the chief-prieſts, &c.] Who as they attended at his apprehenſion, and in their own council condemned him to death unanimouſly, and were very buſy at his arraignment, examination, and trial before Pilate, and perſuaded the people to be urgent for his crucifixion; they follow him to the croſs to exult over him, and inſult him, and to ſee that the execution was ſtrictly performed: and forgetting their character, office, and education; and laying aſide all humanity, decency, and good manners; inſtead of rebuking and reſtraining the populace from uſing him in an ill and unkind manner, they themſelves ſtood mocking him, with the Scribes and elders; who compoſed the whole Sanhedrim of the nation. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, and ſeveral copies, read, and the Phariſees; of which, no doubt, there were great numbers preſent, who had been indefatigable and implacable enemies of Chriſt every where, and to whom it muſt be a pleaſing ſight to ſee him hanging on the croſs: theſe ſcoffed at him, jibed, and reproached him; and ſaid, as follows;

Ver. 42. He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave, &c.] This was not ſo much a conceſſion of theirs, that he had done many ſaving works, as healing the ſick, cleanſing lepers, cauſing the blind to ſee, and the lame to walk, and raiſing the dead; but rather a ſuggeſtion, that theſe were only pretenſions and illuſions; that either they were not really done, or done by the help of the devil; ſince now he himſelf was in the utmoſt extremity, he could not ſave himſelf: but of this they might have been convinced by his ſtriking many of them to the ground, that came to apprehend him in the garden, and of which theſe men were eye-witneſſes; and he, as man, could eaſily have obtained of his father more than twelve legions of angels that would have reſcued him out of their hands: but ſo it muſt not be; he came not to ſave himſelf, but others, and to ſave them ſpiritually and eternally by dying himſelf. If he be the king of Iſrael; that is, the Meſſiah, who was promiſed and expected as a king, as Zion's king, or king of Iſrael; ſee John i. 49. hence in Mark xv. 32. 'tis Chriſt the king of Iſrael. Let him now come down from the croſs, and we will believe him. The Perſic verſion reads, that the people may ſee, and believe in him; and the Syriac and Arabic verſions, that we may ſee, and believe in him, as in Mark xv. 32. But, alas! they had ſeen greater things already than this, and yet had not believed. He could eaſily have cauſed the nails to have given way, and unlooſed himſelf, and come down, who had done ſuch mighty works among them; and if he had, there is no reaſon to conclude they would have believed him to be the ſon of God, and the true Meſſiah; for tho' after this he did a much greater work, raiſed himſelf from the dead, of which they had the fulleſt evidence, yet they remained unbelieving.

Ver. 43. He truſted in God, &c.] That is, he pretended to claim an intereſt in him, to be high in his favour and eſteem, and to have great faith and confidence in him: let him deliver him now; directly, from the croſs, and the death of it: if he will have him; or if he is well pleaſed with him as his own ſon, or delights in him as ſuch, and will ſhew him any favour and good-will; ſee Pſ. xxii. 8. where are theſe very words, and which are predicted ſhould be ſaid by theſe men to Chriſt; and are a wonderful confirmation of the truth of that pſalm and prophecy belonging to him: for he ſaid, I am the ſon of God; not only in his miniſtry, but he had ſaid ſo in their grand council, before them all.

Ver. 44. The thieves alſo, &c.] One or other of them, not both; an Hebrew way of ſpeaking, as Druſius[b] has obſerved: ſo it is ſaid of Jonah, ch. i. 5. that he was gone down into the ſides of the ſhip; not into both ſides, but into one or other of them: ſo here the thieves, one or other of them, not naming which, railed at Jeſus, for it was but one of them; ſee Luke xxiii. 39. unleſs it can be thought, as it is by ſome, that they both at firſt reviled him; but one being quickly convinced of his evil, ceaſed, and rebuked his fellow-ſufferer, confeſſed his ſin, bore a teſtimony to the innocence of Chriſt, and deſired to be remembered by him in his kingdom. This was an aggravation of the ſufferings of Chriſt, that he ſhould be vilified by thoſe, which were crucified with him; who ought to have been, conſidering the condemnation they were in, and the future ſtate they were juſt entering into, lamenting and confeſſing the ſins they had been guilty of, inſtead of adding ſin to ſin, and ſo aggravating their condemnation. Theſe, at leaſt one of them, caſt the ſame into his teeth; as the populace, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, elders, and Phariſees had done; twitted him with his pretenſions of being the ſon of God, the Meſſiah, and king of Iſrael; and urged, that if he was, why did not he ſave himſelf, and them alſo?

[b] Quæſt. Heb. l. 1. qu. 5.

Ver. 45. Now from the ſixth hour, &c.] Which was twelve o'clock at noon, there was darkneſs over all the land unto the ninth hour; till three o'clock in the afternoon, the time the Jews call between the two evenings; and which they ſay[c] is from the ſixth hour, and onwards. Luke ſays, the ſun was darkned, ch. xxiii. 45. This darkneſs was a preter-natural eclipſe of the ſun; for it was at the time when the moon was in the full, as appears from its being at the time of the paſſover; which was on the fourteenth day of the month Niſan, the Jews beginning their months from the new moon: and moreover, it was over all the land, or earth, as the word may be rendered; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the whole world was dark; at leaſt it reached to the whole Roman empire, or the greateſt part of it; tho' ſome think only the land of Judæa, or Paleſtine, is intended: but it is evident, that it is taken notice of, and recorded by Heathen hiſtorians and chronologers, as by Phlegon, and others, referred to by Euſebius[d]. The Roman Archives are appealed unto for the truth of it by Tertullian[e]; and it is aſſerted by Suidas, that Dionyſius the Areopagite, then an Heathen, ſaw it in Egypt; and ſaid, "either the divine being ſuffers, or ſuffers "with him that ſuffers, or the frame of the world "is diſſolving." Add to this the continuance of it, that it laſted three hours; whereas a natural eclipſe of the ſun is but of a ſhort duration; ſee Amos viii. 9. The Jews[g] have a notion, that in the times of the Meſſiah "the ſun ſhall be darkned, "בפלגות יומא, in the middle of the day, (as this "was) as that day was darkned when the ſanctuary "was deſtroyed." Yea, they ſpeak[h] of a darkneſs that ſhall continue a long time: their words are theſe: "the king Meſſiah ſhall be made "known in all the world, and all the kings ſhall "be ſtirred up to join together to make war with "him; and many of the profligate Jews ſhall be "turned to them, and ſhall go with them, to make "war againſt the king Meſſiah; ſo יתחשך כל עלמא, "all the world ſhall be darkned fifteen days, and "many of the people of Iſrael ſhall die in that "darkneſs." This darkneſs that was over the earth at the time of Chriſt's ſufferings, was, no doubt, an addition to them; the ſun, as it were, hiding its face, and refuſing to afford its comforting light and heat to him; and yet might be in deteſtation of the heinouſneſs of the ſin, the Jews were committing, and as expreſſive of the divine anger and reſentment; for God's purpoſes and decrees, and the end he had in view, did not excuſe, nor extenuate their wickedneſs; as it ſhews alſo their wretched ſtupidity, not to be awakened and convinced by the amazing darkneſs, with other things attending it, which made no impreſſion on them; tho' it did on the Roman centurion, who concluded Chriſt muſt be the ſon of God. It was an emblem of the judicial blindneſs and darkneſs of the Jewiſh nation; and ſignified, that now was the hour and power of darkneſs, or the time for the prince of darkneſs, with his principalities and powers, to exert himſelf; and was a repreſentation of that darkneſs that was now on the ſoul of Chriſt, expreſſed in the following verſe; as well as of the eclipſe of him, the ſun of righteouſneſs, of the glory of his perſon, both by his incarnation, and by his ſufferings.

Ver. 46. And about the ninth hour, &c.] Or three o'clock in the afternoon, which was about the time of the ſlaying and offering of the daily ſacrifice, which was an eminent type of Chriſt. The Jews ſay[i], that "every day the daily ſacrifice was ſlain "at eight and a half, and was offered up at nine "and a half:" about which time alſo the paſſover was killed, which was another type of Chriſt; and, as they ſay[k], "was offered firſt, and then the daily "ſacrifice." Tho' the account they elſewhere[l] give of theſe things, is this; "the daily ſacrifice was ſlain "at eight and a half, and was offered up at nine "and a half; (that is, on all the common days of "the year) on the evenings of the paſſover it was "ſlain at ſeven and a half, and offered at eight and "a half, whether on a common day, or on a ſabbath day: the paſſover eve, that happened to be "on the ſabbath eve, it was ſlain at ſix and a half, "and offered at ſeven and a half, and the paſſover "after it." At this time, Jeſus cried with a loud voice, as in great diſtreſs, having been ſilent during the three hours darkneſs, and patiently bearing all his ſoul-ſufferings, under a ſenſe of divine wrath, and the hidings of his father's countenance, and his conflicts with the powers of darkneſs; but now, in the anguiſh of his ſoul, he breaks out, ſaying, Eli, Eli, lama ſabachthani: which words are partly Hebrew, and partly Chaldee; the three firſt are Hebrew, and the laſt Chaldee, ſubſtituted in the room of Azabthani; as it was, and ſtill is in. The Chaldee paraphraſe of the text in Pſ. xxii. 1. from whence they are taken; that is to ſay, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? He calls him his God, not as he was God, but as he was man; who, as ſuch, was choſen by him to the grace of union to the ſon of God; was made and formed by him; was anointed by him with the oil of gladneſs; was ſupported and upheld by him in the day of ſalvation; was raiſed by him from the dead, and highly exalted by him at his own right hand; and Chriſt, as man, prayed to him as his God, believed in him, loved him, and obeyed him as ſuch: and tho' now he hid his face from him, yet he expreſſed ſtrong faith and confidence of his intereſt in him. When he is ſaid to be forſaken of God; the meaning is not, that the hypoſtatical union was diſſolved, which was not even by death itſelf; the fulneſs of the Godhead ſtill dwelt bodily in him: nor was he ſeparated from the love of God; he had the ſame intereſt in his father's heart and favour, both as his ſon, and as mediator, as ever: nor was the principle and habit of joy and comfort loſt in his ſoul, as man, but he was now without a ſenſe of the gracious preſence of God, and was filled, as the ſurety of his people, with a ſenſe of divine wrath, which their iniquities he now bore, deſerved, and which was neceſſary for him to endure, in order to make full ſatisfaction for them; for one part of the puniſhment of ſin is loſs of the divine preſence. Wherefore he made not this expoſtulation out of ignorance; he knew the reaſon of it, and that it was not out of perſonal diſreſpect to him, or for any ſin of his own; or becauſe he was not a righteous, but a wicked man, as the Jew [m] blaſphemouſly objects to him from hence; but becauſe he ſtood in the law-place, and ſtead of ſinners: nor was it out of impatience, that he ſo expreſſed himſelf; for he was entirely reſigned to the will of God, and content to drink the whole of the bitter cup: nor out of deſpair; for he at the ſame time ſtrongly claims and aſſerts his intereſt in God, and repeats it; but to ſhew, that he bore all the griefs of his people, and this among the reſt, divine deſertion; and to ſet forth the bitterneſs of his ſorrows, that not only the ſun in the firmament hid its face from him, and he was forſaken by his friends and diſciples, but even left by his God; and alſo to expreſs the ſtrength of his faith at ſuch a time. The whole of it evinces the truth of Chriſt's human nature, that he was in all things made like unto his brethren; that he had an human ſoul, and endured ſorrows and ſufferings in it, of which this of deſertion was not the leaſt: the heinouſneſs of ſin may be learnt from hence, which not only drove the angels out of heaven, and Adam out of the garden, and ſeparates, with reſpect to communion, between God and his children; but even cauſed him to hide his face from his own ſon, whilſt he was bearing, and ſuffering for, the ſins of his people. The condeſcending grace of Chriſt is here to be ſeen, that he, who was the word, that was with God from everlaſting, and his only-begotten ſon that lay in his boſom, that he ſhould deſcend from heaven by the aſſumption of human nature, and be for a while forſaken by God, to bring us near unto him: nor ſhould it be wondered at, that this is ſometimes the caſe of the ſaints, who ſhould, in imitation of Chriſt, truſt in the Lord at ſuch ſeaſons, and ſtay themſelves on their God; and which may be ſome ſupport unto them, they may be aſſured of the ſympathy of Chriſt, who having been in this ſame condition, cannot but have a fellow-feeling with them. The Jews themſelves own [n], that theſe words were ſaid by Jeſus when he was in their hands. They indeed apply the paſſage to Eſther; and ſay [o], that “ſhe ſtood in the innermoſt court of the “king's houſe; and when ſhe came to the houſe “of the images, the Shechinah departed from her, “and ſhe ſaid, Eli, Eli, lama Azabthani? my God, “my God, why haſt thou forſaken me?” Tho' others apply the pſalm to David, and others to the people of Iſrael in captivity [p]: but certain it is, that it belongs to the Meſſiah; and ſo many things in it were fulfilled with reſpect to Jeſus, as moſt clearly ſhew him to be the Meſſiah, and the perſon pointed at: the firſt words of it were ſpoken by him, as the Jews themſelves allow, and the very expreſſions which his enemies uſed concerning him while ſuffering, together with their geſtures, are there recorded; and the parting his garments, and caſting lots on his veſture, done by the Roman ſoldiers, are there propheſied of; and indeed there are ſo many things in it which agree with him, and cannot with any other, that leave it without all doubt that he is the ſubject of it [q].

Ver. 47. Some of them that ſtood there, &c.] Near the croſs, looking on, and mocking at him, when they heard that; the words Eli, Eli, ſpoken by Chriſt, ſaid, this man calleth for Elias. Theſe could not be the Roman ſoldiers that ſaid ſo, who had no notion of Elias; rather the Helleniſtical Jews, who not ſo well underſtanding the Hebrew language, hearing the above words, and having ſome notion of the prophet Elias, fancied he was calling for him; though it ſeems moſt likely to be the Jews, who either thro' the nearneſs of the ſound of the words, and miſtake of them, and not near enough to hear and diſtinguiſh them, really thought he called for that prophet; or rather wilfully miſtook him, with an intent to banter and ridicule him.

Ver. 48. And ſtraightway one of them ran and took a ſponge, &c.] Which was not far from the croſs, where a veſſel full of vinegar was ſet, John xix. 29. and filled it with vinegar; dipping it into it, it ſucked it up. Some of theſe ſponges had leathern handles to them [r]. And put it on a reed; a ſtalk of hyſſop; ſee the note on John xix. 29. and gave him to drink; not to revive his ſpirits, or haſten his death, as ſome have thought, but in contempt of him, and to mock him, he having ſignified that he was a-thirſt.

Ver. 49. The reſt ſaid, let be, &c.] The others to whom he belonged, that fetched the ſponge, ſaid to him, let him alone, keep at a diſtance from him, give him nothing to drink: let us ſee whether Elias will come to ſave him; whom the Jews looked upon to be the fore-runner of the Meſſiah, and therefore ſuggeſt, that ſhould he come to ſave him, they would believe he was the Meſſiah; and they had a mighty notion of Elias appearing to perſons frequently [s], and talking, and converſing with them; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 3. tho' they did not believe he would come, and appear to Chriſt; for they were perſons of great note for piety and learning, to whom he appeared, as they pretend, whereas they had no ſuch opinion of him. The Ethiopic verſion here adds, and one took a ſpear and pierced his ſide with it, and blood and water flowed out: but this circumſtance is only recorded by the Evangeliſt John, ch. xix. 34. tho' Beza ſays the ſame is read here in two ancient copies.

Ver. 50. Jeſus when he had cried again, &c.] A ſecond time, as the Perſic verſion; for he had cried once before, and expreſſed the words he did, as in ver. 46. what he now delivered were, father, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, Luke xxiii. 46. and it is finiſhed, John xix. 30. which he ſaid with a loud voice; which ſhewed the vehemency of his affection, his ſtrong confidence in God, and his being fearleſs of death; as alſo he thus ſpoke, that he might be heard, and his words attended to, ſince they contained things of the greateſt importance and conſequence: moreover, being able to expreſs himſelf in ſuch a manner, this declared him to be more than a mere man; for after ſuch agonies in the garden, and ſo much fatigue in being hurried from place to place, and ſuch loſs of blood by being buffeted, ſcourged, crowned with thorns, and nailed to the accurſed tree, where, being ſtretched, he had hung for ſome hours; to ſpeak with ſo loud a voice was more than human, and was a conviction to the centurion, that he was a divine perſon: for when he ſaw that he ſo cried out, and gave up the ghoſt, he ſaid, truly this man was the ſon of God, Mark xv. 39. and likewiſe it ſhows, that he died freely and voluntarily, and not thro' force and neceſſity: it was not all that men had done, or could do to him, that could have forced his life from him: he died willingly, and when nature was in its full ſtrength; and which is ſignified in the next phraſe, yielded up the ghoſt, or diſmiſſed the ſpirit, as the Syriac verſion truly renders it; he ſent it away. It was not taken from him, he laid down his life of himſelf, as the Lord of it, and gave himſelf freely to be an offering and ſacrifice in the room of his people; which is a proof of his great love, and amazing grace unto them.

Ver. 51. And behold, the vail of the temple was rent in twain, &c.] Juſt at the time that Chriſt ſpake with ſo loud a voice, and expired, and which was at the time of the offering up of the evening incenſe; and ſo muſt be ſeen by the prieſt that was then offering, and thoſe that aſſiſted him, for the incenſe-altar was near the vail; and which muſt be a very aſtoniſhing ſight unto them: the vail was of a very great thickneſs; it was made of fine twined linen, Exod. xxvi. 31. and it is a rule with the Jews[t], that "where-ever mention is made in the law of fine linen, or fine twined linen, it means a thread ſix times doubled:" and whereas this was made of blue, and purple, and ſcarlet, Jarchi's note on the place is, that "every kind was doubled with each thread of ſix threads." His ſenſe is more clearly expreſſed in his note on ver. 1. "lo! here are four ſorts to every thread; one of linen, and three of wool, and every thread is ſix times doubled; behold four ſorts when they are twiſted together, make twenty-four doubles to a thread." Yea, ſome of them make it to be forty-eight doubles[u]. What a thick piece of tapeſtry muſt this be! and this makes the rending of it the more amazing; for no doubt but that the vail of the ſecond temple was made after the manner of the firſt; and this was rent from top to bottom; and which was no leſs than forty cubits in length, which was the height of the holy of holies in the ſecond temple; and which made the rent the more aſtoniſhing. The account the Jews give of the vail, is this[w]: "R. Simeon ben Gamaliel ſaid, on account of R. Simeon, the ſon of the Sagan, the thickneſs of the vail is an hand's breadth, and it is woven of ſeventy-two threads, and every thread has twenty-four threads in it: it is forty cubits long, and twenty broad, and is made of eighty-two myriads; (which is either the number of the threads in it, or the ſum of the golden pence it coſt. Some copies read, is made by eighty-two virgins[x];) two are made ever year; and three hundred prieſts waſh it." The Syriac verſion renders it, the face of the gate of the temple; by which may be meant, perhaps, the vail of the gate of Ulam, or of the porch[y]. The Jews have a tradition[z], that "forty years before the deſtruction of the temple, the gates of it opened of themſelves. R. Jochanan ben Zaccai reproved them, ſaying, O temple! temple! wherefore doſt thou fright thyſelf? I know thy end is to be deſtroyed; for ſo propheſied of thee Zechariah, the ſon of Iddo, open thy gates, O Lebanon, &c. Zech. xi. 1." But whether this may be referred to in the above verſion, or has any reference to the evangelic hiſtory, I will not ſay. Other writers, as Joſephus[a], and Egeſippus[b], ſpeak of the eaſtern gate of the city, which was of braſs, and as much as twenty men could ſhut, opening of its own accord, before the deſtruction of the temple; which perhaps the Jewiſh tradition rather regards. This rending of the vail was done, as ſome think, in token of mourning for, and teſtifying abhorrence at the crucifixion of Chriſt; the temple rending its garments, the vail, at the death of its Lord, proprietor and type, as the high-prieſt did his at ſuppoſed blaſphemy; or to ſhew that the Lord, who had taken up his reſidence in the moſt holy place between the cherubim, over the mercy-ſeat, in thick darkneſs, was now about to remove, and leave the houſe deſolate; or it ſignified the rending of Chriſt's fleſh, the breaking of his body for us, which was typified by the vail; ſee Heb. x. 20. and may alſo denote both the fulfilment and abrogation of the ceremonial law, which had its end in the death of Chriſt; and likewiſe the more clear diſcoveries of the myſteries of grace under the Goſpel, in which they are laid to open view, and are beheld with open face: to which may be added, that this pointed out, that the way to the holieſt of all, to heaven, of which this was a figure, was now made manifeſt; and was plain and acceſſible, as it was, firſt to Chriſt, who entered by his own blood, as the fore-runner; and alſo to his people, who likewiſe have boldneſs to enter by the ſame. And the earth did quake: whether this earthquake reached only to the ſpot of ground where Chriſt was crucified, and on which the city and temple of Jeruſalem ſtood; or whether it extended to other parts of the earth; ſince, in the reign of Tiberius Cæſar, as Pliny[c] relates, there was an earthquake, in which twelve cities in Aſia fell, is not certain. However, it was an indication of the divine anger and reſentment, and in deteſtation of the ſin of crucifying Chriſt; ſee Pſ. xviii. 7. and was an emblem of the ſhaking and removing of the Jewiſh church-ſtate and ordinances, Heb. xii. 26, 27. And the rocks rent; which were near mount Calvary, and about Jeruſalem; and, as we are told, the clefts are to be ſeen to this day, and which appear to be ſupernatural. This was alſo a token of divine wrath and fury, Nahum i. 5, 6. and a rebuke of the ſtupidity and hardneſs of the Jews, who were unmoved when rocks were rent aſunder, being harder than they; and an emblem of the future converſion of many thro' the powerful miniſtry of the word, and in conſequence of Chriſt's death; when hearts, as hard as rocks, were broke in pieces, ſtony hearts taken away, and hearts of fleſh given; of which the three thouſand being pricked to the heart under Peter's ſermon, were an inſtance.

Ver. 52. And the graves were opened, &c.] Which were near the city of Jeruſalem: this was a proof of Chriſt's power over death and the grave, by dying; when he through death, deſtroyed him that had the power of it, and aboliſhed death itſelf; and became the plague of death and the deſtruction of the grave, taking into his hands the keys of hell and death: and many bodies of ſaints which ſlept, aroſe; not that they aroſe at the time of Chriſt's death: the graves were opened then, when the earth quaked, and the rocks were rent; but the bodies of the ſaints did not ariſe, till after Chriſt was riſen, as appears from the following verſe; but becauſe the other event now happened, they are both recorded here: theſe were ſaints, and ſuch as ſlept in Jeſus; and of whom he is the firſt fruits, that now roſe; and not all, but many of them, as pledges of the future reſurrection, and for the confirmation of Chriſt's, and the accompliſhment of a prophecy in Iſa. xxvi. 19. And they roſe in the ſame bodies in which they before lived, otherwiſe they could not be called their bodies, or known by thoſe to whom they appeared: but who they were, is not to be known; ſome have thought them to be the ancient patriarchs, as Adam, Noah, Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, &c. In the Septuagint on Job xlii. 17. Job is ſaid to be one of them, and a tradition is there recorded, which runs thus: "it "is written, that he roſe with whom the Lord roſe." But it ſhould ſeem rather, that they were ſome later ſaints, ſuch as Zechariah, the father of John the Baptiſt, John the Baptiſt himſelf, good old Simeon, Joſeph the huſband of Mary, and others, well known to perſons now alive. Some think they were ſuch, as had been martyrs in the cauſe of religion; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders the words, and the bodies of many ſaints who ſuffered martyrdom, roſe out of the graves.

Ver. 53. And came out of the graves after his reſurrection, &c.] The reſurrection of Chriſt; for he roſe as the firſt fruits, as the firſt begotten of the dead, and the firſt born from the dead; for he was the firſt that was raiſed to an immortal life; for though others were raiſed before him, by himſelf, and in the times of the prophets, yet to a mortal life; but theſe ſaints came forth to the reſurrection of life, and therefore it was neceſſary that Chriſt the firſt fruits, ſhould riſe firſt. The Arabic verſion indeed reads, after their own reſurrection; and the Ethiopic verſion, after they were raiſed; both wrong, and ſcarcely ſenſe: and went into the holy city; the city of Jeruſalem, which though now a very wicked city, was ſo called, becauſe of the temple, and the worſhip of God, and his reſidence in it: the burying places of the Jews were without the city [d], and therefore theſe riſen ſaints, are ſaid to go into it: and appeared unto many; of their friends and acquaintance, who had perſonally known them, and converſed with them in their life-time. Theſe ſaints I apprehend, continued on earth until our Lord's aſcenſion, and then joining the retinue of angels, went triumphantly with him to heaven, as trophies of his victory over ſin, ſatan, death, and the grave.

Ver. 54. Now when the centurion, &c.] That was over the band of ſoldiers, that mocked Chriſt in Pilate's hall, and who was particularly over the guard of ſoldiers, ſet about the croſs of Chriſt: and they that were with him, watching Jeſus: the ſoldiers that were with him, who were ſet to watch the croſs of Chriſt, leſt he ſhould come down, or any ſhould take him down from thence; ſee the note on ver. 36. Saw the earthquake, and thoſe things that were done; as beſides that, the darkening of the ſun, the rending of the rocks, and particularly heard with what a loud voice Chriſt ſpoke, and then at once expired: they feared greatly; not with a true godly fear, but with a fear of puniſhment; leſt divine vengeance ſhould light on them, for their concern in this matter: ſaying, truly this was the Son of God; which they concluded, not from any mediatorial performances, which they were utter ſtrangers to, but from effects of divine power; and which to them ſhewed him to be a divine perſon, what he ſaid he was, and the Jews charged him with blaſphemy, on account of, and condemned him for, as theſe ſoldiers might have ſeen and heard.

Ver. 55. And many women were there, &c.] At the croſs of Chriſt, at ſome little diſtance from it; but where was Peter, who had declared he would never be offended, though all men were; and would die with Chriſt, rather than deny him? and where were the reſt of the diſciples, who ſaid the ſame things? None were preſent excepting John, as can be learnt from the Evangeliſts; but many women, thoſe of the weaker ſex, were there; which was a rebuke of the former vanity and confidence of the diſciples, and of their preſent puſillanimity and cowardice: beholding afar off; Chriſt upon the croſs, in all his agonies, the chief prieſts and people mocking him, the darkneſs upon the earth, the quaking of it, and the rending of the rocks: they were witneſſes of all this, being at ſome little diſtance, by reaſon of the crowd of people and ſoldiers about the croſs; and they beheld with an eye of faith, their bleeding, dying Lord, as crucified for them, and as bearing and taking away their ſins: a ſight which at once ſtirred up their affection and love to Chriſt, their concern for him, and ſorrow for ſin; and yet joy and peace, in believing in him: which followed Jeſus from Galilee; where they had ſeen his miracles, heard his doctrines, and had been ſavingly converted by him; and therefore followed him wherever he went, though an hundred miles or more, and through many difficulties and diſcouragements: they attended him in his triumphant entry into Jeruſalem, and now at his croſs; nor did they leave him when dead, and in his grave: miniſtring unto him: not now, for he ſtood in no need of their aſſiſtance, nor could they give him any; but this reſpects what they had done heretofore, in their journey with him from Galilee to Jeruſalem; when they miniſtred to him of their worldly ſubſtance, as a token of their affection for him; and which expreſſes the low eſtate and mean condition he was in, and is an inſtruction to his followers, how to behave towards the faithful preachers of his Goſpel; ſee Luke viii. 3.

Ver. 56. Among which was Mary Magdalene, &c.] Out of whom Chriſt had caſt out ſeven devils; and who having received much from him, loved much, which ſhe ſhowed by her zealous and conſtant attachment to him. She was called Magdalene, either becauſe ſhe was an inhabitant of Magdala, Matt. xv. 39. ſo we read [e] of R. Iſaac, מגדלאה, of Magdala, or Magdalene; and the rather, becauſe that Magdala was famous, or rather infamous, for whoredom; for which reaſon the Jews [f] ſay, it was deſtroyed: or elſe ſhe was ſo called, becauſe ſhe was, גדלת, a tonſtrix, or plaiter of womens hair, as the word ſignifies [g]; and ſo we often read of Mary, מגדלא שיער נשייא, the plaiter of womens hair [h]; by whom the Jews ſeem to deſign Mary, the mother of Jeſus, whom they confound with this Mary Magdalene. Jerom ſays [i], her name ſignifies towered, or fortified, becauſe of her care and diligence, and the ardour of her faith; and Migdal in Hebrew, does ſignify a tower: and Mary the mother of James and Joſes; the ſame with the wife of Cleophas, and ſiſter to Mary, the mother of Jeſus: inſtead of Joſes, the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic opic verſions, read Joſeph: יוםי, Joſe in Hebrew, is the ſame with Joſeph, the laſt letter being cut off; the Arabic verſion reads Mary, the mother of James, and the mother of Joſes, John xix. 25. And the mother of Zebedee's children; that is, of James and John; her name was Salome, Mark xv. 40.

Ver. 57. When the even was come, &c.] The ſecond evening, when it was juſt on ſun-ſetting; at which time the Jewiſh ſabbath began, and when the bodies of thoſe that were crucified, muſt be taken down; and if not dead, their bones muſt be broken, and they diſpatched, in order to be interred in the common burying-place of malefactors: there came a rich man of Arimathea: not from thence now, for he lived at Jeruſalem; but this was the place of his nativity, or former abode, and from whence he originally came; and is the ſame with Ramathaim Zophim, and Ramah, and was the birth-place of Samuel the prophet, 1 Sam. i. 1, 19. and is by the Septuagint called Armathaim, in 1 Sam. i. 1, 3, 19. and viii. 4. and xv. 34. and xvi. 13. and xxviii. 3. His character, as a rich man, is particularly mentioned, not merely to ſhow that ſuch men may be, and ſometimes are, inſtances of the grace of God; much leſs in a way of boaſting, that ſuch a man was attached to Jeſus; but rather to point out the reaſon, how he came to have ſuch eaſy acceſs to Pilate, and to ſucceed in his buſineſs with him; as well as to obſerve the accompliſhment of a prophecy, in Iſa. liii. 9. named Joſeph; the ſame name with one of the patriarchs, the ſons of Jacob; between whom there was a reſemblance, not only as good men, but in their obſervance of funeral rites and obſequies; the one in thoſe of his father, the other in thoſe of his dear Lord and Maſter. Some think [k] he is the ſame with Joſeph ben Gorion, the brother of Nicodemus ben Gorion, often ſpoken of as a prieſt, and one of the richeſt of them in Jeruſalem: who alſo himſelf was Jeſus's diſciple; though he was only a ſecret one, as Nicodemus was: he had not as yet, or till now publickly profeſſed him, for fear of the Jews, who had made a law, that whoever did, ſhould be caſt out of the ſynagogue; ſee Luke xix. 38.

Ver. 58. He went to Pilate, &c.] To his houſe where he lived, and went in, as Mark ſays, ch. xv. 43. boldly; not being aſhamed of Chriſt crucified, or afraid to own him, and ſhew his reſpect to him as dead, though he knew he ſhould incur the diſpleaſure, reproach, and perſecution of the Jews: and begged the body of Jeſus; which could not be taken down and interred, without the leave of the Roman governor; and which was generally granted to the friends of the deceaſed, when aſked; otherwiſe they were buried in places [l] appointed for ſuch perſons; ſee the note on ver. 33. And this would have been the caſe of Chriſt, had not Joſeph craved his body; and which he did, to prevent its being abuſed by the Jews, and interred in ſuch an ignominious manner: then Pilate commanded the body to be delivered; to Joſeph, after he had underſtood by the centurion that Jeſus was dead, which he at firſt could not tell how to believe, and marvelled at it, Mark xv. 44, 45. Joſeph might the more eaſily obtain his requeſt, as he was a perſon of character and riches; and becauſe Pilate himſelf had a good opinion of Jeſus, and of his innocence, as well as his wife was much in his favour; ſo that Joſeph had no difficulty to obtain the body of Chriſt; but as ſoon as he aſked, he had the favour granted, and orders were given to the centurion and his ſoldiers, to deliver it to him.

Ver. 59. And when Joſeph had taken the body, &c.] Down from the croſs, with the aſſiſtance of others, or from the hands of thoſe who had orders to deliver it to him: he wrapped it in a clean linen cloth; that is, he wound up the body in it round and round, as was the cuſtom of the Jews; ſee Acts v. 6. John xi. 44. Nor was it uſual to bury in any thing but linen: ſo 'tis ſaid [m], "let the "wrappings, or grave cloaths, be של פשתן לבנים, "of white linen; and let not the price of them be "dear, for it is forbidden to bury in wrappings "of ſilk, or broidered garments, even to a prince "of Iſrael; for this is pride and deſtruction, and "the work of the Gentiles." This clean linen cloth, in which the dead body of Chriſt was wrapped, may be an emblem of his purity and innocence, who did no ſin; nor did he die for any of his own, but for the ſins of others; and alſo of his pure and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs, which is compared to fine linen, clean and white, and which he now had wrought out, and brought in; ſee Rev. xix. 8.

Ver. 60. And laid it in his own new tomb, &c.] Chriſt was laid not in his own, but in another's tomb; for as in his life-time he had not where to lay his head; ſo when he was dead, he had no ſepulchre of his own to put his body in: and moreover, this ſhews that as he was born for others, and ſuffered and died not for himſelf, but them; ſo he was buried for them, as well as roſe again for their juſtification: and it was a new tomb in which he was laid, in which none had been laid before; and was ſo ordered by providence, for the confirmation of the truth of his reſurrection; for had another body been laid there, it might have been ſaid that it was that, and not his that was raiſed. The Jews diſtinguiſh between a new grave, and an old grave [n]: "a new grave may be meaſured, and ſold, and "divided; an old one may not be meaſured, nor "ſold, nor divided: there is a new grave, which "is as an old one; and an old one, which is as a "new one; an old grave, in which are ten dead "bodies, which is not in the power of the owners, "lo! this is as a new grave." Which he had hewn out in the rock; it was uſual with the Jews to make their ſepulchres in rocks: "in the midſt (of the "court of the ſepulchre, they ſay [o]) two caves are "opened, one on one ſide, and the other on the "other; R. Simeon ſays, four on the four ſides; "Rabban Simeon ben Gamaliel ſays, all are, "לפי הסלע, according to the rock;" i. e. according to the nature of the rock, out of which the ſepulchre is hewn; ſee Iſa. xxii. 16. And he rolled a great ſtone to the door of the ſepulchre; for the ſepulchres were made with doors to go in and out at: hence we often read [p] of הפתח הקבר, the door of the ſepulchre; and this was not only the cuſtom of the Jews, but of other nations alſo [q]: the ſtone rolled to the door, was what the Jews call, גולל, from its being rolled to, and from the door of the ſepulchre; and which they ſay [r], was a large and broad ſtone, with which the mouth of the ſepulchre was ſtopped above: and it was at the ſhutting up of the ſepulchre with this ſtone, that mourning began [s]; and after it was ſhut with this ſepulchral ſtone, it was not lawful to open it[t]: now this was done by Joſeph, to preſerve the body from any injury, either from beaſts, or from the Jews: and when he had ſo done, he departed to his own houſe; for the ſabbath drew on, and there was no more time to do any thing more in this affair. The Syriac verſion reads theſe laſt clauſes in the plural number; they rolled a great ſtone, and they put it, &c. and they went away; intimating, that Joſeph did not do this himſelf; the ſtone was too great; but by others, or with their aſſiſtance. It may be obſerved, that all this was done on a feaſt-day; on one of the days of the feaſt of the paſſover, when no ſervile work was to be done; and yet this was agreeable to the Jewiſh canons, which ſay[u], "they "do all things needful for the dead on a feaſt-day; "they ſhave his head, and waſh his cloaths, and "make him a coffin; and if they have no boards, "they bring timber and ſaw boards of it, ſilently "within doors; and if the perſon is a man of note, "they do it even in the ſtreet; but they don't cut "wood out of the foreſt, to ſaw planks of it for "the coffin; nor do they hew ſtones, to build a "tomb with them." In this caſe, there was no need for the latter, becauſe the ſepulchre in which the body of Chriſt was laid, had been hewn out of a rock before; but the body was wrapped in a clean linen cloth, and wound up in it with myrrh and aloes to preſerve it, and was interred; and ſo the women on this day, prepared ſpices and ointments, to anoint it with; though they reſted on the ſabbath-day according to the commandment; but then as ſoon as that was over, though it was a feaſt-day, they came to the ſepulchre with their ſpices and ointments, Luke xxiii. 56. and xxiv. 1.

Ver. 61. And there was Mary Magdalene and the other Mary, &c.] The wife of Cleophas, and the mother of James and of Joſes: ſitting overagainſt the ſepulchre; obſerving where the body of Chriſt was put, and how it was laid; for they intended to prepare ſpices and ointments to anoint it with; and were mourning for the death of Chriſt: for ſitting was a mourning poſture, which now they were allowed, the body being taken down from the croſs, and interred by leave of the governor; for for one that died as a malefactor, they might not uſe the outward ſigns of mourning: the canon is this[w]; for ſuch "they don't mourn, but they grieve; and "there is no grieving but in the heart:" hence theſe women before ſtood, John xix. 25. but now they ſat.

Ver. 62. Now the next day that followed the day of preparation, &c.] Which was the ſabbath-day; for the day of preparation was the day before the ſabbath, Mark xv. 42. in which they prepared every thing neceſſary for the ſabbath, and therefore was ſo called: and as this introduces the account of the chief prieſts and Phariſees, making application to Pilate, to ſecure the ſepulchre; and which by his leave they did, by ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a guard about the ſepulchre; it ſhows what conſciences theſe men had, who accuſed the diſciples of Chriſt of a violation of the ſabbath, for plucking a few ears of corn on that day; and ſought to kill Jeſus, becauſe he healed a man on it, and bid him take up his bed and walk; and yet they themſelves could leave their devotions, and firſt meet together and agree upon an addreſs to Pilate, and then go in a body to his palace; and having obtained their requeſt, march to Joſeph's garden, and make the ſepulchre ſure, ſealing the ſtone, and ſetting a watch, which were ſervile works, and, according to their laws and traditions, not to be done on the ſabbath-day; and yet they ſcrupled them not, notwithſtanding their characters and profeſſion, which follow: the chief prieſts and Phariſees came together unto Pilate; theſe were the inveterate and implacable enemies of Chriſt; they took counſel how to put him to death; they employed Judas to betray him, and ſent a band of ſoldiers with him to take him; they ſuborned falſe witneſſes againſt him; they moved the people to prefer Barabbas to him; they got him condemned to death, and followed him to the croſs, where they mocked him; and ſtill, like the troubled ſea, they were reſtleſs and uneaſy; for though he was dead, they feared his reſurrection; and though they could not prevent the thing, they conſult to hinder the credit of it.

Ver. 63. Saying, Sir, we remember that that deceiver ſaid, &c.] Meaning Jeſus; for no better name could they give him alive or dead, and they chuſe to continue it; and the rather to uſe it before Pilate, who had a good opinion of his innocence; and to let him ſee, that they ſtill retained the ſame ſentiments of him: מסית, a deceiver, is with the Jews[x], "a private perſon, that deceives "a private perſon; ſaying to him there is a God in "ſuch a place, ſo it eats, and ſo it drinks; ſo it "does well, and ſo it does ill." But which can never agree with Jeſus, who was not a private perſon, but a publick preacher; and who taught men, not privately, but openly, in the temple and in the ſynagogues; nor did he teach idolatry, or any thing contrary to the God of Iſrael, or to the unity of the divine being; or which ſavoured of, and encouraged the polytheiſm of the Gentiles. The Ethiopic verſion renders theſe words thus; Sir, remember, &c. as if Chriſt had ſaid this to Pilate in their hearing, and therefore put him in mind of it. While he was yet alive; ſo that they owned that he was dead; and therefore could not object this to the truth of his reſurrection, that he was taken down from the croſs alive, and did not die: after three days I will riſe again: now, though he ſaid this to his diſciples privately, Matt. xvi. 21. and xvii. 23. yet not clearly and expreſly to the Scribes and Phariſees; wherefore they muſt either have it from Judas, and lyed in ſaying they remembered it: or they gathered it either from what he ſaid concerning the ſign of the prophet Jonas, Matt. xii. 40. or rather from his words in John ii. 19. and if ſo, they acted a moſt wicked part, in admitting a charge againſt him, as having a deſign upon their temple, to deſtroy it, and then rebuild it in three days; when they knew thoſe words were ſpoken by him concerning his death, and reſurrection from the dead: they remembered this, when the diſciples did not: bad men have ſometimes good memories, and good men bad ones; ſo that memory is no ſign of grace.

Ver. 64. Command therefore that the ſepulchre be made ſure, &c.] By this alſo they own, that he was buried; and they knew in what, and whoſe ſepulchre he was laid, and where it was; and requeſt of Pilate, that as he had given leave to Joſeph to take the body and inter it, that he would alſo give orders that the ſepulchre might be watched, that no body might come near it, and remove the body, and that until the third day: not from the time they made this requeſt, but from the time of Chriſt's death; for, no longer did they deſire the ſepulchre to be guarded; for if he did not riſe, and no pretenſions could be made to it in that time, they then very likely intended to expoſe his dead body, and triumph over him as an impoſtor; and after that time, they cared not what became of it, and were in no concern about watching the ſepulchre; but till then they judged it neceſſary and deſired it, leſt his diſciples come by night and ſteal him away: but of this there was no danger; they were too fearful and timorous to do ſuch an action, had they been ever ſo much inclined to it; they all forſook him and fled, immediately upon his apprehenſion; nor durſt any of them appear at the time of his crucifixion, but John; and were now ſhut up for fear of the Jews; and beſides, they had forgot what Chriſt ſaid to them about his reſurrection, though theſe men remembered it, and even diſbelieved it when it was told them: the phraſe by night, is not in two copies of Beza's, nor in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, nor in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel; but is in other copies, and in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: and ſay unto the people, he is riſen from the dead; to the common people, that were illiterate, credulous, and eaſily impoſed on: as for themſelves, who were the learned, the wiſe and knowing, they were in no danger of being carried away with ſuch a deception; but the populace, for whom they pretend a great concern, were: ſo the laſt error ſhall be worſe than the firſt; either their own error and miſtake, ſhould the ſepulchre be neglected, and an opportunity given for ſuch a report; this would be of more fatal conſequence than their firſt miſtake, in ſuffering him and his followers to go on ſo long: or rather, the error of the people, in believing that Jeſus was the Meſſiah; which would be greatly ſtrengthened and received by greater numbers, ſhould it be given out, and there was any proof of it, that he was riſen from the dead: nor were they miſtaken in this, for the number of the diſciples and followers of Chriſt, greatly increaſed after his reſurrection; to an hundred and twenty, which was their number upon Chriſt's reſurrection, three thouſand were added at one time; being converted under one ſermon, and that the firſt preached after Chriſt was riſen.

Ver. 65. Pilate ſaid unto them, ye have a watch, &c.] Meaning either the watch of the temple, ſaid to be placed in the tower of Antonia, for the ſervice of it: hence mention is made of the captain of the temple, Acts iv. 1. but it is not likely they would remove the temple guards, to watch a ſepulchre night and day: or rather, therefore, the ſoldiers that had had the care of the crucifixion of Chriſt, and watched him on the croſs, are deſigned: the words may be read imperatively, have ye a watch, or take a watch, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and which ſeems beſt; for if they had a watch already, what occaſion had they to have applied to Pilate for one? but having none, he gives them leave to take one; or ſuch a number of ſoldiers as were ſufficient: go your way; as faſt as you can, take the watch as ſoon as you pleaſe, make no ſtay, but ſatisfy yourſelves in this point: make it as ſure as you can; or, as you know how to do it; and what will be proper and neceſſary.

Ver. 66. So they went, &c.] From Pilate's palace, to the garden of Joſeph, and to the ſepulchre there; which whether more than a ſabbath-day's journey, or two thouſand cubits, may be enquired; and if ſo, then they broke one of their own traditions, which allowed a perſon to go no further on a ſabbath-day; ſee the note on Acts i. 12. And made the ſepulchre ſure; in the following manner, ſealing the ſtone; that was rolled to the door of it, it may be with ſome publick ſeal, with Pilate's, or with the Sanhedrim's; as the ſtone at the mouth of the lion's den, in which Daniel was put, was ſealed with the king's ſignet, and with the ſignet of his lords, Dan. vi. 17. that there might be no change of the ſentence upon him, and by which it appeared, that his deliverance was by no human aſſiſtance: ſo the ſtone at Chriſt's ſepulchre was ſealed, that it could not be removed without breaking it; which would ſhew, whether any fraudulent methods were taken to remove the body: and ſetting a watch; a guard of ſoldiers, to obſerve and prevent any perſon coming near it; or with the watch: they made ſure the ſepulchre with the watch; or ſealed the ſtone, the watch being preſent; all which was overruled by the providence of God, for the greater confirmation of the truth of Chriſt's reſurrection: by the methods taken, it clearly appears, there could be no fraud in the caſe; the body was laid in a tomb, where no corpſe had ever been before; in a tomb hewed out of a rock, to which there was no acceſs, but at the door; where a great ſtone was rolled; and this had a ſeal upon it, and a guard of ſoldiers about it; and hereby there were more witneſſes of Chriſt's reſurrection, than otherwiſe would have been; as the ſoldiers, though they were afterwards bribed to tell another ſtory; and even the chief prieſts and Phariſees, were convicted that he was riſen, or they would never have taken ſuch a method with the ſoldiers, as they did.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Ver. 1. IN the end of the ſabbath, &c.] This clauſe is by ſome, joined to the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter, but ſtands better here, as appears from Mark xvi. 1. and intends not what the Jews call the ſabbath-eve, for that began the ſabbath; but what they call, מוצאי שבת, the goings out of the ſabbath; and as Mark ſays, ch. xvi. 1. when the ſabbath was paſt: that is, when the ſun was ſet, and any ſtars appeared. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel render it, the evening of the ſabbath; and the Perſic verſion, the night of the ſabbath; but muſt mean, not the evening and night, which preceded the ſabbath, and was a part of it, but what followed it, and belonged to the firſt day. As it began to dawn; not the day, but the night; a way of ſpeaking uſed by the Jews, who call the night, אור, light: thus they ſay[y], אור לארבעה עשר, on the light, or night of the fourteenth (of the month Niſan) they ſearch for leavened bread, &c. And ſo the word is uſed, in Luke xxiii. 54. of the eve of the ſabbath, or the beginning of it, as here of the going out of it: towards the firſt day of the week, or ſabbaths; ſo the Jews uſed to call the days of the week, the firſt day of the ſabbath, the ſecond day of the ſabbath, &c. take an inſtance or two[z]. [y] Miſn. Peſachim, c. 1. §. 1. Vid. Maimon. & Bartenora in ib.

[z] Miſn. Taanith, c. 4. §. 3.

“ glory of the ſabbath; nor באחד בשבת, on the firſt day of the ſabbath, or week, that they may not go from reſt and delight, to labour and faſting, and die.” On which the Gemara has theſe words [a]; “ the ſtationary men go into the ſynagogue, and ſit four faſtings; בשני בשבת, on the ſecond of the ſabbath, or week; on the third, and on the fourth, and on the fifth.” Came Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, the wife of Cleophas, and mother of James and Joſes, with whom alſo was Salome, the mother of Zebedee's children, Mark xvi. 1. There ſeems to be ſome difference between the Evangeliſts about the time of the womens coming to the ſepulchre. Matthew ſays, it was at the end of the ſabbath, when it began to dawn; towards the firſt day of the week. John ſays, that Mary Magdalene came when it was yet dark, John xxi. 1. and yet Mark ſays, that they came at the riſing of the ſun, Mark xvi. 2. Tho' they all agree it was early in the morning: all they ſay is no doubt true, and may be reconciled thus. As ſoon as the ſabbath was ended, the women ſet out on their journey, and as they went, bought ſpices and ointment to anoint the body with: they paſſed thro' the gates of the city before they were ſhut, and might ſtay ſome time in the ſuburbs; when Mary Magdalene, eager to be at the ſepulchre, ſet out firſt, whilſt it was dark, and came back and reported to Peter what ſhe had ſeen, and returned again by ſuch time the other women came, which was at ſun-riſing. From all the accounts it is clear, that he roſe, as is expreſsly ſaid, Mark xvi. 9. on the firſt day of the week, and which was the third from his death: on the ſixth day, which was Friday, he was crucified, and buried that evening; he lay in the grave all ſabbath-day, or Saturday; and roſe early on the firſt day of the week, before the women got to the ſepulchre; who came thither, as it is here ſaid, to ſee the ſepulchre: not merely to ſee it, for they had ſeen it before, and where, and how the body of Chriſt was laid in it; but to ſee whether they could enter into it, and anoint the body with the ſpices and ointments, which they had prepared and brought with them for that purpoſe.

Ver. 2. And behold there was a great earthquake, &c.] Or there had been one; which, how far it reached, and whether further than the ſpot of ground in which the ſepulchre was, is not certain: it was an emblem of the ſhaking of the earth by the preaching of the Goſpel, the ſound of which was now to go after Chriſt's reſurrection to the ends of the world; and a prelude of the general reſurrection, when the earth ſhall be ſhaken, and the graves opened, and the dead come forth; and was a ſymbol and token of the preſence and majeſty of Chriſt, at whoſe riſing, as at his death, the earth ſhook and trembled. Think whether the watch could now be aſleep, as they afterwards gave out, ver. 13. The Perſic verſion renders it very wrongly; and there was great conſternation and fear; which was the conſequence of the earthquake, and the deſcent of the angel, and was ſo great that it was not poſſible for the keepers to ſleep, if ever ſo much inclined: for the angel of the Lord deſcended from heaven; perhaps Gabriel, who brought the news of the conception of Chriſt to the virgin, and of his incarnation to the ſhepherds, and might be the ſame angel that ſtrengthened him in the garden: nor is this any contradiction to the other Evangeliſts, which ſpeak of two angels, Luke xxiv. 4. John xx. 12. for Matthew does not ſay there were no more than one, tho' he makes mention but of one. And came and rolled back the ſtone from the door; of the ſepulchre, which by Joſeph, or his orders, was put there, and was ſealed by the Jews. This might be done, that way might be made for the riſen body of Chriſt to paſs out of the ſepulchre; for to ſuppoſe, as ſome do, that he penetrated thro' this ſtone with his riſen body, is not to be credited: 'tis true, he could have cauſed the ſtone to have given way, or removed it himſelf, and put it in the place again; as he cauſed the doors of the houſe in which the diſciples were, to open and ſhut ſo quick, that they could not diſcern it when he appeared in the midſt of them, John xx. 19. ſee Acts xii. 10. but he might chuſe to do it by the miniſtry of an angel, which is no ways derogatory to his power and majeſty, but rather agreeable. Moreover, this might be done, that the women might have acceſs to the ſepulchre, and enter into it, which was the thing they were concerned about by the way, who ſhould roll away the ſtone for them. Beſides, this the angel did, as a token that Chriſt was riſen, and to let the guard know as much, who, if they thought fit, might come and ſee what was done; but chiefly the ſtone was rolled away by the angel, as an emblem of the acquittance and diſcharge of Chriſt, as the ſurety of his people. He had taken upon him their ſins; he had bore them in his body on the tree; he had ſuffered and died for them, and was laid as a priſoner in the grave; and now full ſatiſfaction being made, an angel is ſent from heaven to roll away the ſtone; thereby ſignifying, that the debt was fully paid, and he was now legally diſcharged. 'Tis added, and ſat upon it; thereby ſhewing who it was that rolled it away; that it was done by him, not by the earthquake, nor by any human power: he ſat there defying the guard of ſoldiers to come nigh; and waiting for the coming of the women, to tell them the good news, that their Lord was riſen; and as the keeper of the ſepulchre, that no corpſe might be brought and laid in the room of Chriſt, and it be ſaid that he was not riſen. This poſture of the angel does not contradict what other Evangeliſts ſay of this, and the other angel, that they ſtood by the women, and alſo were ſitting in the ſepulchre, Mark xvi. 5. Luke xxiv. 4. John xx. 12. for each was true: when the women firſt came, the angel ſat upon the ſtone; after that, with the other, ſtood by them; when having invited them to the grave, placed themſelves, ſitting the one at the head, and the other at the feet, where the body of Chriſt had lain.

Ver. 3. His countenance was like lightning, &c.] There was ſuch a luſtre and brightneſs in his face, that it glittered like lightning: ſuch a deſcription is in Dan. x. 6. and his raiment white as ſnow: the word white is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel: the angel appeared clad in white, as a token of the purity and innocence of his nature; and becauſe of the victory and triumph of Chriſt over death and the grave; and that he might be known and taken by the women for a good angel, it being a commonly received notion of the Jews, that miniſtring angels were clothed in white [b]. “ Said R. Ame to R. Levi, ſhew me the Perſians; he ſaid to him, they are like to the mighty men of the houſe of David: ſhew me the Chaberin, (another nation near the Perſians) they are like to deſtroying angels: ſhew me the Iſhmaelites, they are like to devils of the houſe of Hacſa: ſhew me the diſciples of the wiſe men in Babylon, they are like to the miniſtring angels.” Upon which the Gloſs ſays, “ to the devils, becauſe

[b] T. Bab. Kidduſhin, fol. 72. 1.

“they are clothed in black, and are like to devils; to the miniſtring angels, לבושי לבנים, they are clothed in white, and veiled like the miniſtring angels; as it is written in Ezek. ix. 2. and the man was clothed with linen: and it is ſaid [c] of R. Judah, that he was veiled, and ſat in fine linen fringed, and was like to an angel of the Lord of hoſts: and elſewhere [d] it is ſaid, who are the miniſtring angels? the Rabbins: and why are they called miniſtring angels? becauſe they are fringed, as the miniſtring angels, in beautiful garments.”

Ver. 4. And for fear of him the keepers did ſhake, &c.] Tho' they were ſoldiers, Roman ſoldiers and veterans, who had been uſed to terrible ſights in the field of battle; were men of courage, and fearleſs of danger; and yet were ſeized with a panic, and every limb of them ſhook and trembled at the ſight of the angel, for fear he was come as an executioner of divine vengeance upon them; who had been concerned in the crucifixion of Chriſt, had watched him as he hung upon the croſs, and now his body in the ſepulchre: and even ſuppoſing no conſciouſneſs of guilt in them, or dread of puniſhment from him; yet ſuch was the glory and majeſty in which he appeared, of which they had never ſeen the like before, that it had this effect upon them: and became as dead men: they turned pale, as dead men, and had ſcarce any life, or ſpirit, left in them.

Ver. 5. And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto the women, &c.] Who being come up, were alſo affrighted at the ſight of the angel. The Arabic verſion leaves out the firſt part, and the angel anſwered; which is a Jewiſh way of ſpeaking, when nothing goes before, to which it is a reply; and renders the other part thus, and ſaid to the two women: but from the other Evangeliſts it appears, that there were more women than two; ſee Mark xvi. 1. Luke xxiv. 10. fear not ye: ſome put an emphaſis upon the word ye, as if uſed in oppoſition to the keepers, who had reaſon to be afraid, but not theſe good women. It was very common with gracious perſons to be filled with fear at the ſight of an angel, as Zacharias, and the ſhepherds; but without reaſon; they are their friends, their fellow-ſervants, and miniſtring ſpirits to them. The Perſic verſion adds, but come near before, for ye are his familiars: the reaſon alledged, by the angel, why they had no reaſon to fear, is, for I know that ye ſeek Jeſus which was crucified: the knowledge which angels have of ſaints is very conſiderable, and which ariſes from their frequent embaſſies to them, care and guardianſhip of them, the good offices they perform, and their ſeveral miniſtrations to them; and the knowledge which the angel had of theſe good women, might not be from immediate revelation, but from the obſervations he had made of them: they had followed Jeſus from Galilee, they had attended him all the while he was on the croſs, and were now come to his grave to anoint him; and from their words and geſtures, the angel might know that they were the diſciples of Chriſt, and now ſought him; and therefore had no reaſon to fear, as thoſe who were his adverſaries: and indeed, ſuch as ſeek a crucified Chriſt, and life and ſalvation by him, have no reaſon to be afraid of any thing; not of ſin, and its damning power, ſince Chriſt ſaves, his blood cleanſes, and his righteouſneſs juſtifies from all ſin; nor of the law, its menaces, curſes, and condemnation, for Chriſt has redeemed them from it; nor of ſatan, and his principalities and powers, who are ſpoiled by Chriſt, and out of whoſe hands he has ranſomed his people; nor of the world, ſince Chriſt has overcome it, and delivered his people from it; nor of death, whoſe ſting is taken away, and that aboliſhed as a penal evil; nor of hell, and wrath to come, from which he has ſaved them; and much leſs of good angels, who are kindly diſpoſed to them: and ſuch are they that ſeek a crucified Chriſt, whom Chriſt has firſt ſought, and looked up, and found in redemption and effectual vocation; who are made ſenſible of their loſt and dangerous ſtate by nature, to whom Chriſt has been manifeſted; and who ſee both their need of him, and his worth and value: theſe ſeek to him in the firſt place, and with all their hearts, for cleanſing, pardon, righteouſneſs, reſt, food, ſalvation, and eternal life: they ſeek for him where he is, and is revealed, in the ſcriptures, in the Goſpel, in the ordinances, and at the father's right hand.

Ver. 6. He is not here, &c.] In the grave, where he was laid, and theſe women ſaw him laid: he was dead, but is now alive; he was laid in the grave, but God would not leave him there, nor ſuffer him to ſee corruption: for he is riſen, as he ſaid; not ſtolen away, as the chief-prieſts hired the ſoldiers to ſay he was; nor removed to another place, as Mary Magdalene firſt thought, when ſhe found him gone; but he was riſen from the dead, by the power of his father, and by his own power, as he had before ſaid he ſhould. In one of Beza's exemplars 'tis added, to you; for the words that Chriſt ſaid in Galilee, that he ſhould be delivered into the hands of ſinſul men, and be crucified, and riſe again, the third day, were ſaid in the preſence and hearing of theſe women, and to them, as well as to the diſciples; ſee Luke xxiv. 6, 7, 8. This clauſe is left out in the Perſic verſion: it follows, come ſee the place where the Lord lay; the Lord both of angels and men: the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, our Lord. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions leave out the word Lord, and only read he. Chriſt, as the ſon of God, lay in the boſom of his father, and in the arms of his love, from all eternity; as mediator, he lay in the womb of God's purpoſes and decrees, being his elect, in whom his ſoul delighted; as man, he lay in the womb of the virgin; and, as an example to his people, he lay, when baptized, in the waters of Jordan; and as the language of the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper is, come ſee my hands, and my feet; that of baptiſm is, come ſee the place where the Lord lay: but here it regards the grave, in which the body of Chriſt had been laid; and the women are invited by the angel to go along with him, into the ſepulchre, to ſee the place where he had lain; to aſſure them the more of the truth of his reſurrection, that they might, with their own eyes, ſee that he was gone, who before had beheld where, and how he was laid; as alſo to affect them with the condeſcending grace of Chriſt, in making his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; as well as to ſtrengthen their faith in their diſcharge from ſin and condemnation by Chriſt, who was riſen for their juſtification; as alſo to let them ſee that the grave was perfumed and ſanctified by him; and he was riſen as the firſt-fruits and pledge of them that ſlept.

Ver. 7. And go quickly and tell his diſciples, &c.] Who were mourning and weeping for the death of Chriſt; deſpairing of his reſurrection, of which, at leaſt, they had but little hope, nor indeed much thought, tho' Chriſt had ſo often told them of it; and therefore a quick diſpatch was neceſſary to remove their ſorrow, revive their faith, and relieve their ſouls, to which the errand theſe women were ſent upon, and the news they were to bring, had a tendency; namely, that he is riſen from the dead: than which nothing could be more joyful news unto them, as it is to all believers; for on this depend the juſtification and ſalvation of God's elect; their ſecurity from condemnation, and their reſurrection from the dead. This news was firſt brought to the apoſtles by women, who were greatly honoured hereby; that as the woman was firſt in the tranſgreſſion, and the cauſe of death, ſo the firſt news of the reſurrection of Chriſt to life, and of life and immortality being by him, who was firſt ſhewed the path of life, were brought by women; and to a woman it was that Chriſt firſt appeared after his reſurrection, Mark xvi. 9. The Vulgate Latin only reads, that he is riſen, as in the former verſe. And behold he goeth before you into Galilee. Theſe are ſtill the words of the angel to the women, telling them what they ſhould ſay to the apoſtles, that he ſhould go before them into Galilee; and which might ſerve to confirm the reſurrection to them, and to give the greater credit to the report of the women, ſince this very thing Chriſt had promiſed them before; ſee ch. xxvi. 32. tho' it was alſo true, that he ſhould go before theſe women into Galilee, and who alſo ſhould ſee him there: for the next words, there ſhall ye ſee him; tho' they may chiefly deſign the apoſtles, who ſhould have a ſight of Chriſt in Galilee, yet may include theſe women alſo: lo! I have told you; I Gabriel, who am an angel of the Lord, ſent by him to inform you of theſe things; and you may depend upon the truth of them, that Jeſus is riſen, and that he is about, in a very little time, to go before his diſciples into Galilee, where they ſhall ſee him with their bodily eyes, and have a free and familiar converſation with him. The reaſons why this place was pitched upon for Chriſt and his apoſtles to meet in, were, becauſe here he firſt preached, and chiefly converſed, and had the largeſt number of diſciples there, to whom he meant to ſhow himſelf, as he did, 1 Cor. xv. 6. as well as to his apoſtles: moreover, the apoſtles were of Galilee, and ſo were theſe women; and to go into their own country, and there meet with Jeſus, muſt be very agreeable; and beſides, there they would be ſafer and freer from the moleſtations and perſecutions of the Jews; and might follow their former calling, as they did, until the time they were to be further employed in preaching the Goſpel.

[d] T. Bab. Nedarim, fol. 20. 2.

Ver. 8. And they departed quickly from the ſepulchre, &c.] Or they went out from it, as it may be rendered, and as it is in Mark xvi. 8. which ſhows, that they went into the ſepulchre upon the invitation of the angel, and ſaw the place where the Lord lay; and here it was the angel gave them their inſtructions, and errand to the diſciples; which as ſoon as they received, they quitted the ſepulchre in all haſte, partly in obedience to the angel's orders, and partly thro' ſurprize and fear; for Mark ſays, they fled from the ſepulchre, as perſons terrified and affrighted: and 'tis added here, with fear and great joy: a mixture of both theſe; with fear and dread, becauſe of the viſion they had ſeen, and with joy at the news of Chriſt's reſurrection; and yet in this their faith might not be ſo confirmed, as to have no doubt about it: they might fear the body was taken away, and removed to ſome other place, and that this they had ſeen might be a deception and a deluſion. However, between both joy and fear, they ſet out, and did run to bring his diſciples word; as Mary Magdalene ran to Peter, John xx. 2. nor is running unuſual for women, or unbecoming them on certain occaſions; ſee Gen. xxiv. 20, 28. and xxix. 12. Their fright, as well as their joy, and their regard to the angel's order, might cauſe them to run, and make the quicker diſpatch.

Ver. 9. And as they went to tell his diſciples, &c.] This clauſe is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, and in Beza's moſt ancient copy; but it ſtands in the Ethiopic verſion, and in Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel, behold, Jeſus met them; that they might be confirmed in what the angel had told them, and their fear might be removed, and their joy increaſed; and alſo be capable of reporting to the diſciples not only what they had heard from the angel, but what they had ſeen themſelves; they being now eye-witneſſes, as well as ear-witneſſes of his reſurrection: ſo ſouls in the way of their duty, as theſe women were, oftentimes meet with Jeſus, and he with them, as they may expect, and indeed not otherwiſe: ſaying, all hail; all health of ſoul and body, all happineſs and proſperity, both temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, attend you. The Syriac and Perſic verſions, and Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel render it, peace be to you; which, 'tis highly probable, was the phraſe uſed by Chriſt, ſince it was the common form of ſalutation among the Jews, and what Chriſt made uſe of at other times; ſee John xx. 19, 26. and they came; near unto him, being encouraged by the above ſalutation, and knowing who he was by his voice, habit, and geſture: and held him by the feet; they threw themſelves proſtrate at his feet, in token of reverence and humility; and they laid hold on his feet, that they might know, and be aſſured that he was really riſen, and that it was not a ſpirit, or a mere phantom and appearance; and they held him in affection to him, and as deſirous of his continuance with them: and worſhipped him; with divine adoration, expreſſing their love to him, their faith and hope in him, owning him to be their Lord and God; he being, by his reſurrection from the dead, declared to be the Son of God, with power; and ſo the proper object of religious worſhip.

Ver. 10. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, be not afraid, &c.] Of me, or what you have ſeen; or leſt there ſhould be any deception in the caſe. In other reſpects the ſaints are ſubject to fears; as leſt they ſhould have no ſhare in the love of God, nor intereſt in Chriſt, or the work of God is not begun in their hearts; and by reaſon of ſin, leſt that ſhould get the aſcendant over them, and they periſh by it, and ſo fall ſhort of eternal glory; when it is the will of Chriſt to have theſe fears removed, by ſhedding abroad his love in their hearts, by affording his gracious preſence, views of intereſt in him, and promiſes of his grace, by ſending his ſpirit, word, and miniſters to comfort them, by diſcovering and applying pardoning grace to them, and ſhewing his power to keep them. Go tell my brethren; meaning not his kinſmen according to the fleſh, but his diſciples, who were in this relation to him, as all the elect of God are; not only thro' his incarnation, he being their Goel, their near kinſman, and redeemer, and of the ſame nature, fleſh, and blood with them, and like unto them in all things, excepting ſin; but on account of their divine adoption, to which they were predeſtinated, and which they received thro' his redemption, and under the witneſſings of the Spirit: he that is his God being theirs; and he that is his father being theirs alſo:

and which was made manifeſt in their regeneration, by their faith in him, and obedience to him, and his father; ſee Matt. xii. 49, 50. A very conſiderable relation this is, that the diſciples ſtood in to Chriſt, who is the eternal Son of God, and heir of all things; and wonderful grace and condeſcenſion it was in Chriſt to own the relation, when they had ſo lately forſaken him; and now he was raiſed from the dead, and had glory given him: that they go into Galilee, and there ſhall they ſee me: he does not ſay they ſhould not ſee him before; for they ſaw him, all but Thomas, that very evening, and all of them eight days after; and both times were before they went into Galilee: but this he ſaid, to put them in mind of what he had promiſed them, ch. xxvi. 32. and to confirm the words of the angel; and which might ſerve for a confirmation of the truth of theſe things, both to the women, and to the diſciples, when they obſerved the exact agreement between the words of Chriſt, and of the angel. Moreover, it may be remarked, that wherever Chriſt has appointed to meet his people, they may expect, and be ſure to ſee him at one time or another; as in his houſe and ordinances, where they are ſometimes indulged with a ſight of him by faith, which is an appropriating, aſſimilating, ſoul-rejoicing, and ſatisfying one; when with pleaſure they behold the glory of his divine perſon, and of his offices, the tranſcendent excellencies and perfections of his nature, his love and his lovelineſs, the beauty and amiableneſs of him, the fulneſs of grace, life, and righteouſneſs in him, and ſo the ſuitableneſs of him as their ſaviour and redeemer; and when they are favoured with communion with him, and the joys of his ſalvation.

Ver. 11. Now when they were going, &c.] Or were gone from the ſepulchre; that is, the women, Mary Magdalene, and the other Mary, and their companions, when they were going, or gone, and before they could come to the diſciples, to inform them of what they had ſeen and heard, and deliver the meſſage both of the angel, and of Chriſt, unto them: behold, ſome of the watch came into the city; that is, of Jeruſalem. The word behold is left out in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; but ought to be retained as expreſſive of what is wonderful, and worthy of obſervation and attention; that the very perſons who were placed to prevent every thing, that might be the foundation of a report, that Chriſt was riſen, ſhould be the firſt perſons that ſhould relate it to the chief-prieſts and elders, that employed them: not all the watch, for ſome ſtill ſtayed behind, till they had orders to come away; but ſome of them, the principal of them, or who were deputed by the reſt, came. The Perſic verſion, rather commenting than tranſlating, has theſe words: "moreover, the rulers "and governors, who watched the ſepulchre, "coming to themſelves, returned to the city with "a pale and frighted countenance." And ſhewed unto the chief-prieſts all the things that were done; how that there had been a very great earthquake, and a very ſurprizing appearance; one like a young man deſcended from the clouds, whoſe countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as ſnow, which filled them with aſtoniſhment and dread; that he rolled away the ſtone from the ſepulchre, and then ſat upon it; and that ſome women coming to the ſepulchre, were ſhown by him where the body had been laid, but was now gone; and how, that after they had recovered themſelves from the fright, they had themſelves examined the ſepulchre, and the body was certainly gone; and ſure they were that the women did not carry it away, nor any other: all which they thought proper to relate to the chief-prieſts; partly on their own account, to clear themſelves from the charge of bribery and corruption, and ſloth and negligence; and partly that the chief-prieſts might conſider what was proper to be done at ſuch a juncture.

Ver. 12. And when they were aſſembled with the elders, &c.] Upon this the grand Sanhedrim was convened together, which conſiſted of the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders; and had taken counſel among themſelves what ſteps to take to ſtifle this matter, that it might not ſpread and be believed by the people; they agreed upon this, as the beſt expedient, to bribe the ſoldiers to give a falſe account of it, as they did: they gave large money unto the ſoldiers, or ſufficient money; they gave large ſums of money, as were enough to ſatisfy the ſoldiers: they gave them whatever they would have; for tho' theſe men were very covetous, yet upon this occaſion gave liberally; and that perhaps which were for the ſacrifices, or for the repair of the temple, or for the ſupply of the poor.

Ver. 13. Saying, ſay ye his diſciples came by night, &c.] They charged them to tell every one that ſhould aſk them about this affair; and even publiſh it every where, that the diſciples of Chriſt came in the dead of the night, and ſtole him away while we ſlept; which was a very unlikely thing, and a fooliſh ſcheme this, for ſuch a body of men to form. There is no ſhew of probability in it, that the diſciples, who were intimidated by the taking and putting Chriſt to death, and were now ſhut up in a houſe, for fear of the Jews, that theſe ſhould venture out in the night, to take away the body of Chriſt, which was decently and honourably interred in a garden of one of his diſciples; and when they knew it was guarded by a company of Roman ſoldiers; and who beſides had no notion of his reſurrection from the dead, nor never thought of it till he was riſen, and therefore would never attempt any thing of this kind, in order to give out ſuch a report. Moreover, had they took it away by ſtealth, it is not reaſonable to think that they would afterwards have reported ſuch a lye every where, that he was riſen from the dead, when they were ſure to obtain nothing by it, but reproach, afflictions, perſecutions, and death: add to this, that this was never objected to them by their worſt enemies, when they moſt ſtrongly aſſerted his reſurrection: nor was it a feaſible account, or well put together, with reſpect to the watch. It can hardly be thought that they ſhould be all of them aſleep at once; and if they were, 'tis much they were not awaked by the coming up of the diſciples, and the rolling away of the ſtone, and the buſtle there muſt be in taking up the body, and carrying it away; and beſides, if they were aſleep, and continued ſo, what is their evidence good for? for how could they know that his diſciples came and took him away? if they awaked, tho' too late, and ſaw them at a diſtance, why did not they purſue them, who might eaſily have been overtaken with ſuch a burden? at leaſt, why did not they ſearch their houſes for the body? and take up both the women and the diſciples, and proſecute them for it? and yet nothing of this was done. Beſides, how came the linen clothes to be left behind? why did they take the napkin from his head, and give themſelves all that trouble to unwrap the body, and carry it away naked? It is clear the chief-prieſts themſelves were convinced in their own minds, that he was truly riſen, or they would have puniſhed the ſoldiers ſeverely for their ſleep and negligence, and would never have given them money to ſpread ſuch a ſtory.

Ver. 14. And if this come to the governor's ears, &c.] Not the governor of the watch, but Pontius Pilate the governor of Judæa: if this ſhould be told him, and ſhould be heard by him; or this matter ſhould come before him, and be under his examination, and there ſhould be any danger of puniſhment; for to ſleep on the watch was ſeverely puniſhed by the Romans: we will perſuade him; that this is the true ſtate of the caſe, and intercede with him, and make uſe of all our intereſt, not to puniſh for it; or will perſuade him, that tho' this is a falſe account, yet it will be much better that it ſhould go in this way, for his own peace, and the peace of the nation, and the ſecurity of the Roman government; ſince, ſhould it ſpread among the people, that this perſon was really raiſed from the dead, they would, one and all, believe he was the true Meſſiah, and would ſet him up as a king, and ſeize upon the government in favour of him: and will ſecure you; indemnify you, bear you harmleſs, keep you from puniſhment; ſo that you need not be under any care, or concern, on this account.

Ver. 15. So they took the money, and did as they were taught, &c.] Tho' they had been juſt now in the greateſt fright and conſternation imaginable, at the ſight of the angel, and knew what was done; yet being men of no religion or conſcience, were tempted with the money, and took it, and reported every where what had been put into their mouths by the chief-prieſts and elders. And this ſaying is commonly reported among the Jews unto this day; to the time that Matthew wrote this Goſpel; which, according to the ſubſcriptions to a moſt ancient copy of Beza's, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions of De Dieu, was in the eighth year after our Lord's aſcenſion; tho' others make it to be the ninth; and others the fifteenth. The ſenſe is, not that this narrative the Evangeliſt gives, that the Sanhedrim bribed the ſoldiers to give out ſuch a lying ſtory, was known to the Jews, and commonly reported by them; tho' ſome take this to be the ſenſe; but that it was reported and believed among the Jews in common, to that time, that the diſciples of Chriſt did really come in the night, and ſteal away the body of Chriſt, while the watch ſlept: to ſuch judicial blindneſs, and hardneſs of heart, were they given up, as to believe a lye, and which had no appearance of truth in it. They have ſince contrived a more monſtrous and ridiculous ſtory than this. They ſay [e], that Judas, ſeeing where the body was laid, and the diſciples ſitting upon the tomb, and mourning over it, in the middle of the night, took his opportunity to take away the body, and buried it in his own garden, under a current of water; having firſt turned the water another way, and then put it in the ſame courſe as before; and which he afterwards diſcovered to the Jews; and the body was taken up and expoſed, and inſulted in the moſt ignominious manner: but, alas! Judas had hanged himſelf ſome days before; and had he been living, would not have been capable of doing what they aſcribe unto him.

Ver. 16. Then the eleven diſciples, &c.] For Judas was not only gone from them, but was dead; ſo that there were now but eleven of them: went away into Galilee; not directly, as ſoon as the women had delivered their meſſage; for Chriſt appeared to them the ſame day at Jeruſalem; and ſo he did at the ſame place that day ſennight; ſee John xx. 19, 26. but ſome time after this they went together into Galilee, according to Chriſt's direction both before and after his reſurrection, Matt. xxvi. 32. and xxviii. 10. into a mountain where Jeſus had appointed them; either before his death, or ſince he was riſen; and very likely at one of the above interviews he had with them. This is generally thought to be mount Tabor; but of this there is no proof, nor certainty: it might be the mountain near Capernaum, on which he taught, Matt. v. 1. or that, if not the ſame with the other, near the ſea of Galilee, where Chriſt fed four thouſand with ſeven loaves, and a few fiſhes, Matt. xv. 29. A mountain was appointed for this meeting, both for ſolitarineſs and for ſight; for here it was he was ſeen by above five hundred brethren at once, 1 Cor. xv. 6.

Ver. 17. And when they ſaw him, they worſhipped him, &c.] With divine adoration, as the eternal Son of God; for ſo he was now declared to be by his reſurrection from the dead, Rom. i. 4. but ſome doubted; or ſome of them, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; that is, ſome of the eleven diſciples: not that they doubted now that Chriſt was riſen from the dead; ſince he had appeared ſeveral times to them before this, and had given them all the proofs of the truth of his reſurrection they could deſire; but they, who worſhipped him now in Galilee, had doubted before in Jeruſalem; not only Thomas, but all of them: they looked upon the words of the women as idle tales; nor did the reſt believe the two diſciples, with whom Chriſt travelled to Emmaus: wherefore he upbraids them for their unbelief, Luke xxiv. 11. Mark xvi. 11, 13, 14. or elſe the ſenſe is, that ſome of them, tho' they believed Chriſt was riſen from the dead, of which they had had the ſtrongeſt aſſurance; yet they doubted whether what they then ſaw on the mountain was he, or whether it was not a ſpirit, or a mere phantom; and therefore, as in the next verſe, he came nearer to them, when they knew him: or elſe this may be underſtood of ſome of the ſeventy diſciples, or of the five hundred brethren, who ſaw him at this time, and at firſt had ſome doubts of his reſurrection, but were afterwards fully ſatisfied.

Ver. 18. And Jeſus came and ſpake unto them, &c.] To the eleven diſciples and apoſtles; for tho' there might be ſo large a number as before obſerved, yet the following words were only ſpoken to the apoſtles: ſaying, all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth; which is to be underſtood of him, not as God, who has the ſame original and underived power and authority over all creatures, and things in heaven and earth, as the father has; but as mediator, to whom all things are delivered by the father; and not of a power of doing this, or the other thing, or of omnipotence, being the almighty; nor of doing miracles, and forgiving ſins, which he had, and exerciſed before his death and reſurrection, but of governing: he was king before, but his kingdom was not with obſervation; but now he was declared, and made manifeſt, to be both Lord and Chriſt; he had all power and authority for the ſettling the affairs of his church and kingdom, to appoint offices and officers in it, and to beſtow gifts upon men, to qualify them for the ſame, and to inſtitute ordinances to be obſerved till his ſecond coming: and this power of his reached to things in heaven; he having the angels in heaven ſubject to him, as miniſtring ſpirits to be ſent forth by him at his pleaſure; and all the gifts of the Spirit to diſpoſe of as he thought good; and to things on earth, not only to the ſaints, whoſe king he is, and who are made willing to ſerve him; but to all fleſh, to kings and princes, who rule and reign by him; and even to all the wicked of the world, who in ſome ſhape or another are made to ſubſerve the ends of his mediatorial kingdom and government: and this is not uſurped power, but what is given him, and what he has a right to exerciſe; having finiſhed ſin, aboliſhed death, overcome the world, and deſtroyed the devil; and muſt reign till all enemies are ſubject to him: and this he ſays, and it was neceſſary to ſay it at this time, partly on account of his late ſufferings and death, which were attended with weakneſs and reproach; and partly on account of the following commiſſion he gives to his diſciples, that it might be ſeen and believed, he had power and authority ſufficient to give them ſuch an one; as alſo to animate and encourage them under all the weakneſs, contempt, and perſecution that ſhould attend them in their miniſtry. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, as the father hath ſent me, even ſo I ſend you, as in John xx. 21. from whence theſe words ſeem to be taken.

[e] Toldos Jeſu, p. 18, 19, 21.

Ver. 19. Go ye therefore, &c.] Into all the world; ſome into one place, and ſome into another; ſince his power and authority, and ſo now the commiſſion he gave them, reached every where: before it was confined to Judæa, but now it is extended to all the nations of the world; see Matt. x. 6, 7. Mark xvi. 15. and teach all nations; Jews and Gentiles, firſt the one, and then the other, the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it; whatever they had learned from Chriſt, or were ordered by him; or diſciple all nations: make them diſciples by teaching them; or, as the Perſic verſion, by way of explanation, adds, bring them to my religion and faith: not that they were able to do this of themſelves, but they were to teach men externally, or outwardly miniſter the word, whilſt the Spirit of God internally applied it, and taught, and made men true diſciples of Chriſt: and they are ſuch, who have learned to know themſelves, their ſin, and loſt eſtate by nature; to deny themſelves, both ſinful and righteous ſelf; who have learnt to know Chriſt, and the way of righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, life, and ſalvation by him; and who are taught and enabled to part with all for Chriſt, and to bear all for his ſake, and to believe in him, and give up themſelves to him, and follow him whitherſoever he goes: baptizing them; not all nations, for the antecedent to the relative them, cannot be all nations; ſince παντα τα εθνη, the words for all nations, are of the neuter gender, whereas αυτους, them, is of the maſculine: nor can it be thought that it ſhould be the mind of Chriſt, that all the individuals of all nations ſhould be baptized, as Heathens, Turks, and Jews; but μαθητας, diſciples, ſuppoſed and contained in the word μαθητευσατε, teach, or make diſciples; ſuch as are taught, and made diſciples by teaching, or under the miniſtry of the word by the Spirit of God: Chriſt's orders are to baptize; טבלו, dip them, as Munſter's Hebrew Goſpel renders it; that is, in water, which, tho' not expreſſed, is implied; for with no other baptiſm could the apoſtles baptize: not with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; for this was Chriſt's peculiar prerogative; but with water, which they in obedience to this commiſſion practiſed, Acts viii. 36, 38. and x. 47. and which was to be done in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; by the authority of theſe three divine perſons, who all appeared, and teſtified their approbation of the adminiſtration of this ordinance, at the baptiſm of Chriſt: and as they are to be invocated in it; ſo the perſons baptized not only profeſs faith in each divine perſon, but are devoted to their ſervice, and worſhip, and are laid under obligation to obedience to them. Hence a confirmation of the doctrine of the Trinity, there are three perſons, but one name, but one God, into which believers are baptized; and a proof of the true deity both of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; and that Chriſt, as the Son of God, is God; ſince baptiſm is adminiſtred equally in the name of all three, as a religious ordinance, a part of divine inſtituted worſhip, which would never be in the name of a creature. This is the firſt, and indeed the only place in which the Trinity of perſons is expreſſed in this order, and in the ſelf-ſame words. Galatinus [f] pretends, that the ancient Jews uſed the ſame way of ſpeaking. It would be well if proof could be made of it: he aſſerts it to be in Zohar on Deut. vi. 4. and in the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel on Iſ. vi. 3. In the former he ſays, it is expreſſed thus, hear, O Iſrael; the Lord, he is called the father; our God, he is called the ſon; is one Lord, this is the Holy Ghoſt, who proceeds from both; and again, by the ſame R. Simeon, it is ſaid, holy, this is אב, the father; holy, this is בן, the ſon; holy, this is רוח הקדש, the Holy Ghoſt: and in the latter after this manner, "Holy Father, Holy Son, and Holy Holy Ghoſt;" but no ſuch words are now to be found in either of theſe places. He affirms, that he himſelf ſaw a copy of Jonathan's Targum that had theſe words. The Jews often ſpeak of the Tetragrammaton, or name of four letters, the name Jehovah, which they ſay is not lawful to be pronounced; and alſo of the name of twelve letters, which the above writer [g] makes to be "Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt;" and of forty-two letters, which from a book called Gale Razia, he ſays is, "Father God, Son God, Holy Ghoſt "God, three in one, and one in three;" which in the Hebrew language make up ſo many letters; but this wants better authority.

Ver. 20. Teaching them to obſerve all things, &c.] All ordinances, not only baptiſm, but the Lord's ſupper; all poſitive inſtitutions, and moral duties; all obligations, both to God and men; all relative duties that reſpect the world, or one another, thoſe that are without, and thoſe that are within; and theſe are to be taught them, and therefore to be inſiſted on in the miniſtry of the word; and not merely, in order, that they may know them, and have the theory of them, but that they may put them into practice: whatſoever I have commanded you; every thing that Chriſt has commanded, be it what it will, and nothing elſe; for Chriſt's miniſters are not to teach for doctrines the commandments of men; or enjoin that on the churches, which is of their own, or other mens deviſing, and was never ordered by Chriſt; and for their encouragment he adds, and lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world: meaning, not merely to the end of their lives, which would be the end of the world to them; nor to the end of the Jewiſh world, or ſtate, which was not a great way off, tho' this is ſometimes the ſenſe of this phraſe; but to the end of the world to come, the Goſpel church-ſtate, which now took place; or to the end of the preſent world, the univerſe: not that the apoſtles ſhould live to the end of it; but that whereas Chriſt would have a church and people to the end of the world, and the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it ſhould be adminiſtred ſo long, and there ſhould be Goſpel-miniſters till that time; Chriſt's ſenſe is, that he would grant his preſence to them, his immediate diſciples, and to all that ſhould ſucced them in future generations, to the end of time: and which is to be underſtood not of his corporal preſence, which they ſhould not have till then, but of his ſpiritual preſence; and that he would be with them, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to aſſiſt them in their work, to comfort them under all diſcouragements, to ſupply them with his grace, and to protect them from all enemies, and preſerve from all evils; which is a great encouragement both to adminiſter the word and ordinances, and to attend on them.

The Goſpel according to St. MARK.

THIS is the title of the book, the ſubject of which is the Goſpel; a joyful account of the miniſtry, miracles, actions, and ſufferings of Chriſt: the writer of it, was not one of the twelve apoſtles, but an Evangeliſt; the ſame with John Mark, or John, whoſe ſurname was Mark: John was his Hebrew name, and Mark his Gentile name, Acts xii. 12, 25. and was Barnabas's ſiſter's ſon, Col. iv. 10. his mother's name was Mary, Acts xii. 12. The apoſtle Peter calls him his ſon, 1 Pet. v. 13. if he is the ſame; and he is thought to have wrote his Goſpel from him[a], and by his order, and which was afterwards examined and approved by him[b]: it is ſaid to have been wrote originally in Latin, or in the Roman tongue: ſo ſay the Arabic and Perſic verſions at the beginning of it, and the Syriac verſion ſays the ſame at the end; but of this there is no evidence, any more, nor ſo much, as of Matthew's writing his Goſpel in Hebrew. The old Latin copy of this, is a verſion from the Greek; it is moſt likely that it was originally written in Greek, as the reſt of the New Teſtament.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. THE beginning of the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Not that the Goſpel firſt began to be preached at this time, for it was preached by Iſaiah, and other prophets before; and long before that, was preached unto Abraham; yea, it was preached as early as the times of our firſt parents, in Eden's garden; and is indeed that myſtery, which was hid in God before the creation of the world; and was ordained before that was, to the glory of the ſaints: but the ſenſe is, that this narrative Mark was about to write, began with the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt; which was a Goſpel one, and was the beginning of the Goſpel diſpenſation, in diſtinction from the legal one: the law and the prophets were until John, and they ceaſed and ended in him; when the, עולם הבא, the world to come, the kingdom of God, or Goſpel ſtate, took place. The deſign of this Evangeliſt, is not to give an account of the genealogy of Chriſt, of his conception and birth, of what befel him in his infancy, or of any actions and ſayings of his from thence, to his appearance in Iſrael; but to give an account of his miniſtry and miracles, ſufferings and death; which is introduced with the preaching and baptiſm of John his forerunner, and which he chiefly intends by the beginning of the Goſpel: he firſt points out Chriſt, who is the author and ſubſtance, as well as the great preacher of the Goſpel; the ſum of which is, that he is Jeſus, the Saviour and Redeemer of loſt ſinners; the Chriſt, the Meſſiah, that was to come; the Mediator between God and man, the prophet that has declared the whole mind and will of God; the great high-prieſt, who has offered himſelf a ſacrifice for his people, made peace, procured pardon, brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and obtained eternal redemption, and now lives to make interceſſion for them; and king of ſaints, who reigns over them, protects and defends them, and is no other than the Son of God; equal with his Father; of the ſame nature with him, poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections, and enjoying the ſame glory; and which is a grand article of the Goſpel, and without which he could not be an able Saviour, nor the true Meſſiah. Mark begins his account of the Goſpel, and which he calls the beginning of it, with the ſame article of the divine ſonſhip of Chriſt, as the apoſtle Paul began his miniſtry with, Acts ix. 20. Matthew began his Goſpel with the humanity, Mark with the divinity of Chriſt: the one calls him the ſon of David, the other the Son of God, both true: Chriſt is the Son of David according to his human nature, the Son of God according to his divine nature; ſo a teſtimony is bore to the truth of both his natures, which are united in one perſon.

Ver. 2. As it is written in the prophets, &c.] Malachi and Iſaiah; for paſſages out of both follow; though the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions read, as it is written in the prophet Iſaias; and ſo it is in ſome Greek copies: but the former ſeems to be the better reading, ſince two prophets are cited, and Iſaiah is the laſt; to which agree the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, and the greater number of Greek copies. The following citations are made to ſhew, that according to the writings of the Old Teſtament, John the Baptiſt was to be the harbinger of Chriſt, to come before him, and prepare his way; and alſo the propriety of the method the Evangeliſt takes, in beginning his Goſpel with the account of John's miniſtry and baptiſm: the firſt teſtimony ſtands in Mal. iii. 1. and the words are the words of the Father to the Son, concerning John, pointing out his character and his work: behold, I ſend my meſſenger before thy face, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee. John the Baptiſt is here called a meſſenger, and the meſſage he was ſent and came with, was of the greateſt moment and importance, and required the cloſeſt attention to it; wherefore this paſſage is introduced with a behold! ſignifying that ſomething momentous, and what ſhould be ſtrictly regarded, was about to be delivered: and indeed, the work of this meſſenger was no other, than to declare that the long expected Meſſiah was born; that he would quickly make his publick appearance in Iſrael; that the kingdom of heaven, or the kingdom of the Meſſiah, was at hand; and that it became the Jews to repent of their ſins, and believe in Chriſt: he is called the meſſenger of God, my meſſenger; becauſe he was ſent, and ſanctified by him, he was called unto, and qualified for his work by him; ſee John i. 6, 7. his father Zechariah ſays, he ſhould be called the prophet of the higheſt, Luke i. 76. The reaſon of his being called the meſſenger of God, may be obſerved in the text itſelf, behold, I ſend: the words in Malachi are by us rendered, behold, I will ſend; becauſe this was at the time of the prophets's writing a thing future, but in the times of the Evangeliſt a thing done: and indeed, it is a more literal verſion of the Hebrew text, to render it I ſend, or am ſending; and it is ſo expreſſed, to denote the certainty of it, and becauſe in a little time it would be done: the words before thy face, are not in the original text of Malachi, nor in the Septuagint verſion, but are inſerted by the Evangeliſt; who might do it with authority, ſince Chriſt had done it before him, Matt. xi. 10. and which, as Surenhuſius [c] obſerves, is for the greater elucidation of the matter. The prophet does not ſay before whom he ſhould be ſent, though it is implied in the next clauſe, but here it is expreſſed: beſides, this meſſenger had now appeared before the face of Chriſt, had prepared his way in the wilderneſs, and had baptized him in Jordan; all which is deſigned in the following words, which ſhall prepare thy way before thee, by his doctrine and baptiſm: in the text in Malachi it is, before me; which has made it a difficulty with interpreters, whether the words in the prophet, are the words of Chriſt concerning himſelf, or of his Father concerning him. But ſending this meſſenger before Chriſt, may be called by the Father ſending him before himſelf, and to prepare the way before him; becauſe Chriſt is the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, and is the angel of his preſence, or face; beſides, Jehovah the Father was greatly concerned, and the glory of his perfections, in the work the Meſſiah was to do, whoſe way John came to prepare. That the prophecy in Malachi here cited, is a prophecy of the Meſſiah, is owned by ſeveral Jewiſh writers [d]; who expreſsly ſay, that thoſe words which follow, the Lord whom ye ſeek, are to be underſtood of the king Meſſiah: and though they are divided among themſelves, who ſhould be meant by this meſſenger, ſee the note on Matt. xi. 10. yet ſome of them are of opinion, that Elias is intended, even Abarbinel himſelf: for though in his commentary he interprets the words of the prophet Malachi himſelf, yet elſewhere [e] he allows Elias may be intended: indeed he, and ſo moſt that go this way, mean Elijah the prophet, the Tiſhbite; who they ſuppoſe will come in perſon, before the Meſſiah appears: yet not he, but one in his ſpirit and power is deſigned; and is no other than John the Baptiſt, in whom the paſſage has had its full accompliſhment.

[b] Hieron. Catalog. Script. Eccleſ. p. 91. § 18.

Ver. 3. The voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, &c.] This is the other teſtimony in proof of the ſame, and may be read in Iſa. xl. 3. ſee the note on Matt. iii. 3.

Ver. 4. John did baptize in the wilderneſs, &c.] Of Judæa, Matt. iii. 1. where he firſt appeared as a preacher; and is the ſame wilderneſs Iſaiah has reſpect to, in the above prophecy. The words are beſt rendered, in the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions; John was in the wilderneſs, baptizing and preaching the baptiſm of repentance, for the remiſſion of ſins: according to which, the account of the Baptiſt begins with his name, John; deſcribes the place where he was, where he made his firſt appearance, and continued in, the wilderneſs; which was not a wild uninhabited place, and without people, but had many cities, towns, and villages in it; and alſo declares his work and miniſtry there, which was preaching and baptizing: for though baptizing is here put before preaching, yet certain it is, that he firſt came preaching in theſe parts; and there baptized ſuch, to whom his preaching was made uſeful. Baptiſm is here called, the baptiſm of repentance; becauſe John required repentance antecedent to it, and adminiſtered it upon profeſſion of repentance, and as an open teſtification of it; and this for, or unto the remiſſion of ſins: not for the obtaining the remiſſion of ſins, as if either repentance, or baptiſm, were the cauſes of pardon of ſin; but the ſenſe is, that John preached that men ſhould repent of their ſins, and believe in Chriſt, who was to come; and upon their repentance and faith, be baptized; in which ordinance, they might be led to a freſh view of the free and full forgiveneſs of their ſins, through Chriſt; whoſe blood was to be ſhed for many, to obtain it; ſee Acts ii. 38.

Ver. 5. And there went out unto him all the land of Judæa, &c.] The people of the land, a great number of them: and they of Jeruſalem; the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, hearing of this new preacher, the new doctrine that he taught, and the new ordinance that he adminiſtered: and were all baptized of him in the river Jordan, confeſſing their ſins; that is, as many of them as were brought to a ſight and ſenſe of their ſins, and made a confeſſion of them, theſe he baptized, or immerſed, in the river Jordan; for certain it is, that there were many of the Phariſees and Sadducees who came, whom he rejected; ſee the notes on Matt. iii. 5, 6, 7.

Ver. 6. And John was clothed with camels hair, &c.] This is a deſcription of John by his cloaths; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 4. to which may be added, that it was uſual for penitents, and men of auſtere lives, and of the firſt claſs for holineſs and religion, to live in deſerts, to fare hard, and wear coarſe apparel. Mention is made of one man, who is called, נתן דצוציתא [f], becauſe he had on a garment of goats hair, which cut his fleſh, that ſo it might atone for him, for he was a penitent: and with a girdle of ſkin about his loins; a leathern one, as in Matt. iii. 4. not a golden one, ſuch as the high-prieſt wore, though the [g] Jews call John an high-prieſt: he was indeed of the prieſtly race; his father was a prieſt, but he did not wear a prieſtly girdle, nor any of the prieſts garments; and he eat locuſts and wild honey. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, honey of earth bees: in Ethiopia was a ſort of bees, little bigger than flies, and without a ſting, which had their hives in the earth, where they produced honey of a white colour, very pleaſant and wholeſome; and this is thought, by the Ethiopians, to be the honey which John eat [h]; but then there muſt have been the ſame in Judæa, which does not appear. Moreover, in the land of Judæa, there was, דבש של תמרים, the honey of palm-trees; and it is ſaid [i], that it is the beſt honey; and therefore the ſcripture calls, honey of the palm-trees, honey; and the palm-trees which grow in the plains and vallies, abound moſt with it; wherefore there was much of this about Jericho, the city of palm-trees: there was alſo, דבש של תאינים, honey of figs, which in ſome places was in great plenty: “ R. Jacob ben Doſthai ſays [k], it is three “ miles from Lud to Ono (ſee Ezra ii. 33.) one time I “ walked before break of day, and I went up to my “ ankles in honey of figs.” Dr. Lightfoot thinks, this was the honey the Evangeliſt ſpeaks of, and John eat of. I have obſerved on Matt. iii. 4. that with the Jews, the honey of bees was lawful to eat [l], though the bees themſelves were not. So Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes, Levit. xi. 20. “ Let the ſpecies of bees be an abomination to “ you, but the honey of bees may be eaten;” they being reckoned among reptiles that fly: and it may be further obſerved, that according to them, the honey of waſps and hornets was lawful to be eaten, as well as the honey of bees [m]; and this may be truly called, as here, wild honey; for which they give theſe reaſons [n], becauſe it is not of the ſubſtance of their bodies, but they gather it from herbs; and becauſe in the ſame manner as bees, they take it into their bodies, but do not produce it from them; though ſome of the doctors diſſent, and think it not lawful [o].

Ver. 7. And preached, ſaying, there cometh one mightier than I after me, &c.] From whence it appears, that John was a preacher of Jeſus Chriſt; of the dignity of his perſon, the excellency of his office, and the nature and importance of his work: the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to ſtoop down and unlooſe; expreſſing the great veneration he had for him, and the great ſenſe he had of his own unworthineſs, to be concerned in the loweſt and meaneſt ſervice of life for him; and that he was far from being worthy of the high honour done him, to be his meſſenger and forerunner; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 11.

Ver. 8. I indeed have baptized you with water, &c.] This was ſpoken to the baptized perſons, partly to take off their dependance upon him and his baptiſm; and partly to direct their views to Chriſt, from whom the gifts and graces of the Spirit are alone to be had: but he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 11. One copy adds, and with fire, as there: a Jewiſh writer ſays, the holy bleſſed God baptizeth with fire, and the wiſe ſhall underſtand [p].

Ver. 9. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, &c.] Whilſt John was preaching and baptizing in the wilderneſs, and had large crowds of people flocking to him, to ſee his perſon, hear his doctrine, and to be baptized by him; ſome for one thing, and ſome another: Jeſus came from Nazareth of Galilee; the place where he had been brought up, and lived, and dwelt in from his infancy, to this time: and was baptized of John in Jordan; which was the reaſon of his coming from Nazareth to him; ſee Matt. iii. 13. where this is obſerved; and in ſome verſes following, an account is given of what paſſed between Chriſt and John, on this occaſion.

Ver. 10. And ſtraightway coming up out of the water, &c.] Not John, as many think; though it was true of him, that he came up out of the water, as the adminiſtrator of the ordinance of baptiſm to Chriſt, but Chriſt himſelf; who having deſcended into the water, the river of Jordan, and being baptized by immerſion in it by John, came up out of it; not from the river-ſide, and up the declivity to it, but out of the river itſelf: when he ſaw the heavens opened; or cloven, or rent; this may be underſtood, either of John, who was the ſpectator of all this, which was done for the manifeſtation of the Meſſiah to him, and the confirmation of his faith in him, and that he might bear record of him; and ſo the Perſic verſion reads, John ſaw, &c. ſee John i. 32, 33. or of Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who came up out of the water; and when he did, ſaw the heavens part, and the Spirit like a dove deſcending upon him. The poſition of theſe words here, is a little different from that in Matt. iii. 16. there it is, the Spirit of God deſcending like a dove; which ſeems rather to point out the manner of his deſcent, than the form in which he deſcended: here it is put, the Spirit like a dove deſcending on him; which ſeems rather to incline to ſuch a ſenſe, that the Spirit appeared in the form of a dove, as well as deſcended like one; and both may be deſigned, and indeed the latter follows upon the former: if it was the form of a dove the Spirit of God deſcended in, it was a very ſuitable one: the dove, is a very proper emblem of the Spirit of God: the voice of the turtle, in Cant. ii. 12. is by the Targum interpreted, the voice of the Holy Spirit: he may be likened to a dove, for its ſimplicity and ſincerity; he guides into all truth as it is in Jeſus, and teaches to ſpeak the word in all plainneſs, openneſs, and ſincerity, and preſerves the ſaints in the ſimplicity of the Goſpel; and for its mildneſs and meekneſs; one of the fruits of the Spirit of God is meekneſs, Gal. v. 23. And this it produces in converted perſons, making them meek, humble, and gentle: and alſo for its harmleſsneſs and innocence; and which appears, or at leaſt ſhould, in thoſe who mind the things of the Spirit: hence that advice of Chriſt, be harmleſs as doves, Matt. x. 16. Likewiſe for its purity and cleanneſs; the Spirit of God is a ſpirit of holineſs, he is the author of ſanctification; ſuch as are waſhed, ſanctified, and juſtified, are ſo in the name of the Lord Jeſus, and by the Spirit of our God, 1 Cor. vi. 11. The dove is a mournful and bemoaning creature; and the Spirit of God makes interceſſion for the ſaints, with groanings which cannot be uttered, Rom. viii. 26. To which may be added, that Noah's dove bringing the olive-leaf in its mouth, as a ſign of peace and reconciliation, fitly reſembled the Holy Spirit, one of whoſe fruits is peace, Gal. v. 22. and which he produces, by leading to the blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt, whereby peace is made, and reconciliation obtained: and his deſcending upon Chriſt here, points him out as the peace-maker, through whom was come peace on earth, good-will towards men, and glory to God. Chriſt, on whom he lighted, is comparable to a dove; he is ſaid to have dove's eyes, Cant. v. 12. and he has all the fruits and graces of the dove-like Spirit of God, which reſted on him; like the dove, he is humble, meek, and lowly; in which characters, he is to be followed and imitated by his people: and as that creature is a very loving one to its mate, ſo is Chriſt to his church; whom he has ſo loved, as to give himſelf for her: and as that is a lovely beautiful creature, ſo is Chriſt; he is altogether lovely; and eſpecially his eyes of love, as they are ſet and fixed upon his church and people. With this deſcent of the Spirit as a dove on Chriſt, compare Iſa. xi. 2. and lxi. 1. ſee the note on Matt. iii. 16.

Ver. 11. And there came a voice from heaven, &c.] What the Jews call Bath Kol, ſaying, thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleaſed: it is in Matthew, this is my beloved Son; as if the words were ſpoken to others, to John, the adminiſtrator of baptiſm to him, and to thoſe that were ſpectators; directing them to Chriſt, on whom the Spirit now deſcended, and teſtifying to them how great a perſon he was, how nearly related to God; how much he was the object of his love, and what a pleaſure and delight he took in him; but here they are delivered as an immediate addreſs to Chriſt himſelf, thou art my beloved Son. Chriſt, as he was the only begotten Son of God from eternity, ſo his filiation was owned and declared to him as early, Pſal. ii. 7. This therefore was not the firſt time, nor was it only for his ſake that this was ſaid unto him, but alſo for the ſake of thoſe that ſtood by: but it may be obſerved, that he is not only called his Son, but his beloved Son; which might be neceſſary to be ſaid to him in his ſtate of humiliation, whilſt he was yielding obedience to the will of God, and fulfilling all righteouſneſs; and when he was about to be, as he quickly after this was, tempted by ſatan in the wilderneſs, by whom his ſonſhip was called in queſtion. Now theſe words being directed to Chriſt, ſhew that the former are ſpoken of him, and are applicable to him, as well as to John; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 17.

Ver. 12. And immediately, &c.] As ſoon as he was baptized, and this teſtimony had been given of his divine ſonſhip, the very ſelf-ſame day, the Spirit driveth him into the wilderneſs: into a more remote and deſolate part of it; for it was in the wilderneſs John was baptizing and preaching, when Chriſt came to him, and had the ordinance of baptiſm adminiſtered by him; and it was the ſame Spirit that deſcended on him at his baptiſm, which remained with him; by whoſe impulſe he was moved, though not againſt his will, to go into this deſert and forlorn place. For this was not the evil ſpirit ſatan, by whom he was tempted; for Matthew expreſsly ſays, that he was led up of the Spirit—to be tempted by the devil; where the devil that tempted him, is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the Spirit by whom he was led, and the ſame Spirit is meant here, as there. Moreover, in one of Beza's copies, and in his moſt ancient one, and in one of Stephens's, it is read, the Holy Spirit driveth him; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 1.

Ver. 13. And he was there in the wilderneſs forty days, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, and forty nights; for ſo long was he there, tempted of ſatan: the ſeveral temptations of ſatan, and how they were overcome by Chriſt, are particularly related by the Evangeliſt Matthew, ch. iv. which are here omitted; and what is not mentioned there, is here recorded: and was with the wild beaſts; which ſhews, that he was now in an uncultivated and uninhabited part of the deſert by men, and where only the moſt fierce and ſavage of creatures dwelt; and yet was as ſecure and unhurt by them, being the Lord of them, as Adam in Eden's garden, or Daniel in the lions den. This circumſtance is only related by the Evangeliſt Mark, and is what adds to the uncomfortable ſituation Chriſt was in, when tempted by ſatan; and his being not hurt by them, may declare, partly his innocence, as man, being as pure and holy as the firſt man was in his ſtate of integrity, when all creatures were brought before him, to give them names; and partly the power of God, who ſhut up the mouths of theſe creatures, that they did him no hurt; and alſo may ſignify, the awe they ſtood in of him, who, as God, is Lord of all. Theſe creatures were more gentle to Chriſt, and uſed him better than the wicked Jews, among whom he dwelt, who are compared to lions, dogs, and bulls of Baſhan, Pſal. xxii. 12, 13, 16, 20, 21. And the angels miniſtred unto him; after the temptations were over, and ſatan had left him, preparing for him, and bringing to him proper food, after ſo long a faſt; and waiting upon him, and ſerving him as their great Lord and maſter; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 11.

Ver. 14. Now after that John was put in priſon, &c.] In the caſtle of Macherus, by Herod, for reproving him for taking his brother Philip's wife: Jeſus came into Galilee; again, from whence he came to be baptized of John: preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom of God; the good news and glad tidings of the kingdom of the Meſſiah, or Goſpel diſpenſation; which lies not in worldly pomp and ſplendor, in outward obſervances, in legal rites and ceremonies, but in righteouſneſs, peace, and joy; in peace and pardon by the blood of Chriſt, in juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and in free and full ſalvation by him.

Ver. 15. And ſaying, the time is fulfilled, &c.] Either that which was fixed for the end of the law and prophets, the legal and Moſaic diſpenſation, and the Jewiſh church-ſtate; or the fulneſs of time for the Meſſiah's appearance in the world; which was agreed upon between the Father and the Son, was predicted in various prophecies, and the people of the Jews were in a general expectation of: and the kingdom of God is at hand; the ſame with the kingdom of heaven, in Matt. iii. 2. and iv. 17. ſee the notes there: repent ye and believe the Goſpel. He called them to repent, not only of their former ſins and vicious courſe of life, but of their bad principles and tenets, concerning a temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah; concerning merit and free-will, juſtification by the works of the law, and ſalvation by their obedience to the ceremonies of it, and the traditions of the elders: theſe he exhorts them to change their ſentiments about, and to relinquiſh them, and give into the Goſpel ſcheme; which proclaims liberty from the law, peace, pardon, and righteouſneſs by Chriſt, and ſalvation and eternal life by the free grace of God.

Ver. 16. Now as he walked by the ſea of Galilee, &c.] The ſame with the ſea of Tiberias, John vi. 1. he ſaw Simon; whoſe ſurname was Peter, the ſon of Jonas: and Andrew his brother; the brother of Simon, caſting a net into the ſea; of Galilee, in order to catch fiſh: for they were fiſhers; by occupation, this was their trade and buſineſs, by which they got their livelihood; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 18.

Ver. 17. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, come ye after me, &c.] Leave your worldly employments, and become my diſciples, and I will make you to become fiſhers of men: which will be a much more excellent and honourable employment, as men, and the ſouls of men, are more excellent, and of more worth than fiſhes; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 19.

Ver. 18. And ſtraightway they forſook their nets, &c.] Which perhaps were their all; ſee Matt. xix 27

27. And followed him; both in a corporal and ſpiritual ſenſe; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 20.

Ver. 19. And when he had gone a little further thence, &c.] From the place where Simon and Andrew were caſting their nets, though ſtill by the ſea-ſide; he ſaw James the ſon of Zebedee, and John his brother. The former was he whom afterwards Herod killed with the ſword, and the latter the beloved diſciple; theſe were alſo fiſhermen: who alſo were in the ſhip mending their nets: as the other two diſciples were on ſhip-board, caſting their nets into the ſea to catch fiſh; theſe were alſo in a ſhip, repairing their nets, in order to uſe them the ſame way, and for the ſame purpoſe; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 21.

Ver. 20. And ſtraightway he called them, &c.] As ſoon as he ſaw them; for he was looking out for them, having appointed them long before to the ſervice he now called them to; and they left their father Zebedee with the hired ſervants, and went after him. It might ſeem unnatural, had they left their father alone in the ſhip, to have taken the care and management of it, and therefore 'tis added, with the hired ſervants; who were hired for that purpoſe, to aſſiſt in mending the nets, and caſting them, and managing the ſhip, and conducting it from place to place, and therefore were not to be charged with want of humanity; and ſuch was the power that went along with Chriſt's call, that notwithſtanding natural affection to their parents, and the gain they might get by theſe ſervants and their trade, they chearfully quitted all, and followed Chriſt; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 22.

Ver. 21. And they went into Capernaum, &c.] Jeſus and his four diſciples he had juſt called, Simon and Andrew, James and John; though the Arabic and Perſic verſions read, he went; that is, Chriſt; and ſo Beza ſays it was read in a certain copy: and ſtraightway on the ſabbath-day he entered into the ſynagogue and taught; that is, immediately, as ſoon as he entered the city, it being then ſabbath-day; or, as ſoon as the ſabbath-day came, he went to the ſynagogue at Capernaum, and his diſciples with him; where the people uſed to meet weekly to hear the law read, and to be inſtructed in divine things; which opportunity Chriſt laid hold on to preach the Goſpel to them, and teach them things concerning the kingdom of God.

Ver. 22. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, &c.] The nature and importance of it, it being what they had not been uſed to hear; only at beſt the doctrine of the law, and ſometimes only the traditions of the elders, or an allegorical and traditional ſenſe of the ſcriptures, and things very trifling and unedifying: and alſo they were amazed at the manner of his preaching, which was with ſo much gracefulneſs, gravity, and majeſty, and was attended with ſo much evidence and power: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the Scribes; or their Scribes, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read. He did not go about to eſtabliſh what he ſaid by the authority of the Rabbins, as the Scribes did; ſaying, Hillell ſays ſo, or Shammai ſays thus, or ſuch a doctor ſays thus and thus; but he ſpake as from himſelf, as one ſent of God, that had an authority from him, and was independent of man; and this was what they had not obſerved in others, and wonder at it; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 28, 29.

Ver. 23. And there was in their ſynagogue, &c.] In the ſynagogue of the Capernaites, at the ſame time that Jeſus was teaching there, a man with an unclean ſpirit: not with an unclean heart, for there were doubtleſs many ſuch there, but that had a devil; for in Luke, ch. iv. 33. 'tis ſaid, he had a ſpirit of an unclean devil: ſo called, becauſe he is impure in himſelf, and the cauſe of uncleanneſs in men, in which he delights: and ſuch ſpirits ſometimes are where religious perſons meet, but with no good deſign; either to diſturb the preacher, or to divert the hearer, that the word may be unfruitful and unprofitable: and he cried out; either the man, or rather the unclean ſpirit in him, who had poſſeſſed his body, and made uſe of the organs of it: he cried out through dread of the majeſty of Chriſt, whoſe preſence he could not bear; and through grief and envy at the ſucceſs of his miniſtration, and the influence it had upon the minds of men; and through fear of being diſpoſſeſſed of the man, in whom he was.

Ver. 24. Saying, let us alone, &c.] Meaning with himſelf, the reſt of the unclean ſpirits, that had poſſeſſed the bodies of men in Galilee, and in all Judæa; knowing that Chriſt had power to diſlodge them, and fearing he would, intreats him he would let them alone, quietly to dwell in their beloved habitations: what have we to do with thee? They had nothing to do with Chriſt, as a Saviour; they had no intereſt in him, nor in his redemption, but he had ſomething to do with them, to ſhew his power over them, and to deliver men out of their hands: thou Jeſus of Nazareth; calling him ſo, from the place where he was educated, and had lived the greateſt part of his life, though he knew he was born at Bethlehem; but this he ſaid, according to the common notion of the people, and it being the uſual appellation of him: art thou come to deſtroy us? not to annihilate them, but either to turn them out of the bodies of men, which to them was a ſort of a deſtruction of them, and was really a deſtroying that power, which they had for ſome time exerciſed over men; or to ſhut them up in the priſon of hell, and inflict that full puniſhment on them, which is in reſerve for them: I know thee who thou art, the holy one of God: he whom God had called his holy one, Pſal. xvi. 10. and who is ſo, both in his divine nature, as the Son of God, the holy one of Iſrael; and as the Son of man, being the holy thing born of the virgin, and is without the leaſt ſtain of original ſin, or blemiſh of actual tranſgreſſion; and alſo as the Mediator, whom the Father has ſanctified and ſent into the world, the true Meſſiah; and all this the devil knew from his wonderful incarnation, by the voice from heaven at his baptiſm, from the conqueſt over him in the wilderneſs, and by the miracles he had already wrought: in the high-prieſt's mitre was written, קֹדֶשׁ לַיהוָה, which may be rendered, the holy one of the Lord: the high-prieſt was an eminent type of him.

Ver. 25. And Jeſus rebuked him, &c.] Checking his inſolence, deſpiſing his flattery, and refuſing to receive a teſtimony from him; and which he wanted not, leſt it ſhould be thought he had a familiarity and confederacy with him: ſaying, hold thy peace; ſtop thy mouth, I need no ſuch witneſs as thine, nor thy praiſes; I am not to be ſoothed by thy flattery, nor is my mouth to be ſtopped, or power reſtrained, by ſuch methods: wherefore he adds, and come out of him; I'll not let thee alone, the encomiums of me ſhall not prevail upon me to leave thee in the quiet poſſeſſion of the man; I'll give a teſtimony of who I am, by the diſpoſſeſſing of thee out of this man. In imitation of this authoritative power of Chriſt, the Jewiſh exorciſts, in their pretenſions to caſt out devils, uſe a like form: ſo they tell us [q], that R. Simeon ben Jochai, caſt a devil out of Cæſar's daughter, ſaying Ben Talmion (which was the name of the devil) צא, come out, Ben Talmion, come out; and he came out of her; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 27.

Ver. 26. And when the unclean ſpirit had torn him, &c.] Not that he had torn any limb from him, or had made any wound in any part of his body; for Luke ſays, ch. iv. 35. that he hurt him not, but he ſhook him; and as Luke there ſays, threw him in the midſt, of the people, or ſynagogue; and ſo the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read here, he caſt him, or threw him to the ground: he threw him into convulſions, and laid him proſtrate on the floor: and cried with a loud voice, he came out of him; though ſorely againſt his will, as his loud cry ſhewed, and being obliged to it by a ſuperior power.

Ver. 27. And they were all amazed, &c.] The people that were in the ſynagogue, who were met together for divine worſhip, were aſtoniſhed, not only at his doctrine, as before, but at this miracle and power of his in caſting out devils: inſomuch that they queſtioned among themſelves, ſaying, what thing is this? They ſpake among themſelves, as Luke ſays; they enquired of one another; they conferred together, talked over the point, and diſputed among themſelves, concerning both the doctrine and power of Chriſt, what, and how wonderful they were: what new doctrine is this? This they ſaid, not as fixing a brand of novelty upon it, as the Athenians did on Paul's doctrine, Acts xvii. 19. but as admiring it; being what was rare and unuſual, and which they had never heard of from their Rabbins and Scribes, and which was confirmed by miracles; for with authority commandeth he even the unclean ſpirits, and they do obey him: they not only obſerved the authority with which he delivered his doctrine, but the authority with which he caſt out devils, by a word ſpeaking; he not only commanded them to come out, but they immediately came out; their exorciſts took authority upon them to command, but could not oblige the devils to obey; but theſe men took notice, that ſuch was the authority of Chriſt in commanding, that the unclean ſpirits were obliged to obey, and did.

Ver. 28. And immediately his fame ſpread abroad, &c.] Not only in the city of Capernaum, where theſe things were done, and where his fame was firſt ſpread, but alſo throughout all the region round about Galilee: and not only throughout Galilee, but throughout all the country that was bordering upon it, and adjacent to it; ſee Matt. iv. 23, 25. The Perſic verſions reads, through all the provinces.

Ver. 29. And forthwith, when they were come out of the ſynagogue, &c.] Chriſt having wrought this miracle, and finiſhed his ſermon, and the whole ſynagogue ſervice being over, when it was uſual for every one to repair to their own houſes, or their friends, for refreſhment; he, and they that were with him, departed from it, and directly, being not far from it, they entered into the houſe of Simon and Andrew; who being brethren, dwelt together in a houſe at Capernaum, where it ſeems they were now inhabitants, though their native place was Bethſaida, John i. 44. with James and John; whom they took along with them, being fellow diſciples of Chriſt.

Ver. 30. But Simon's wife's mother lay ſick of a fever, &c.] A great fever, Luke ſays; a very violent one, which threatened with death, and muſt be very dangerous to an ancient perſon; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 14. And anon they tell him of her; for it ſeems, that not as ſoon as he came into the houſe, but ſome time after, when he had ſat awhile, and reſted himſelf after his fatigue in preaching; they acquainted him with her caſe, and beſeeched him to look upon her, and reſtore her: this was done, either by Simon and Andrew, or by ſome others of their friends that were in the houſe; who having either ſeen, or heard of his diſpoſſeſſing the unclean ſpirit, might rightly conclude he had power to remove a fever.

Ver. 31. And he came and took her by the hand, &c.] He went into the room where ſhe lay, and took hold of her hand; not to feel her pulſe, and thereby judge of the nature and ſtrength of her diſorder, as phyſicians do; nor merely in a friendly manner, as is cuſtomary, but in order to reſtore her: and lift her up; to ſit upright in the bed, who before was laid along upon it, ſo weak as not to be able to turn herſelf, much leſs to ſit erect by any aſſiſtance whatever: and immediately the fever left her; and there was not the leaſt ſymptom of it, nor none of the effects which it uſually leaves; ſuch was the virtue that went forth from Chriſt by touching her, and ſuch his great power: and ſhe miniſtered unto them; ſhe immediately aroſe from the bed, and put on her cloaths, being at once in perfect health and ſtrength; and, in gratitude to her Saviour and phyſician, ſhe aſſiſted in preparing food for him and his diſciples, and ſerved at table to them.

Ver. 32. And at even, when the ſun did ſet, &c.] At which time the Jews ſabbath was ended; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 16. for this was a ſabbath-day, ver. 21. when, according to them, it was not lawful to heal; nor did they offer to bring their ſick to him on that day; but the laſt of the two even-days being come, and the ſun ſet, the ſabbath was over: and therefore being under no reſtraint on account of that, they brought unto him all that were diſeaſed; with any ſort of diſeaſe whatever, even all that were in their city; and them that were poſſeſſed with devils. The Perſic verſion renders it Epilepticks, ſuch as were troubled with the falling ſickneſs, as many of thoſe were, whoſe bodies the devils poſſeſſed.

Ver. 33. And all the city was gathered together at the door.] That is, the inhabitants of the city of Capernaum, a very great number of them at leaſt, who having either heard of, or ſeen the diſpoſſeſſion of the unclean ſpirit in the ſynagogue in the day-time; and being willing to ſee what miraculous cures might be wrought by Chriſt upon the diſeaſed and poſſeſſed that were brought to him, got together in great crouds about the door of the houſe of Simon and Andrew, where Jeſus now was.

Ver. 34. And he healed many that were ſick of divers diſeaſes, &c.] Not that there were ſome, who had ſome ſorts of diſeaſes, whom he did not heal; but he healed all that came, or were brought to him, which were many, of every ſort of diſeaſe, which were divers, with which they were afflicted: and caſt out many devils; even as many as were brought to him, or were poſſeſſed with any: and he ſuffered not the devils to ſpeak; either for him, or againſt him; which ſhows his great power over them: becauſe they knew him, or that they knew him: he would not ſuffer them to ſay a word about him, becauſe he knew that they knew that he was the Chriſt, the Son of God, or he would not permit them to ſay who he was; becauſe he had others to bear witneſs of him, and better teſtimonies than theirs, and leſt his enemies ſhould reproach him with an agreement and familiarity with them.

Ver. 35. And in the morning, riſing up a great while before day, &c.] On the morrow after the ſabbath, on the firſt day in the morning, notwithſtanding the fatigue of the former day, through preaching and working miracles; yet he roſe up very early while it was very much within the night, as the light and day were coming on, and before the day broke; tho' it might be broad day before he departed out of the houſe, as Luke ſuggeſts, ch. iv. 42. he went out; out of the houſe of Simon and Andrew, and out of the city of Capernaum, leaving his diſciples and friends behind him: and departed into a ſolitary place, and there he prayed; as man, to his God and Father; it may be for his diſciples he had lately choſen; for himſelf, as man, that he might be ſtrengthened as ſuch for ſervice; and for ſucceſs in his miniſtry, and that his Goſpel might run and be glorified: he choſe a deſert, and ſolitary place, for the ſake of retirement, from the croud of people that attended at Peter's door; where he could not be alone, and in private, and as moſt ſuitable for the exerciſe of prayer. His early and private devotion may be an example to us.

Ver. 36. And Simon, and they that were with him, &c.] Peter, and his brother Andrew, together with James and John, followed after him; ſome time after he was gone; for he privately withdrew from them, ſo that they might not be aware when he went, nor apprized of his departure, for ſome conſiderable time; which when they were, they ſet out, in diligent ſearch, and eager purſuit after him, until they found him.

Ver. 37. And when they had found him, &c.] In the deſert and ſolitary place, where he had been praying: they ſaid unto him; in order to engage him to go with them, and as the reaſon why they ſought him with ſo much eagerneſs and diligence, all men ſeek for thee: not all the men in the world, nor, it may be, all the inhabitants of Capernaum, but a large number of them, who were enquiring after him, ſome for one thing, ſome for another; ſome to ſee him, what manner of man he was, and ſome to hear him, what ſort of doctrine he preached, and others to ſee his miracles, or to have themſelves, or their ſick healed; and the diſciples were loth that ſuch an opportunity of doing good ſhould be miſſed, and therefore ſought for him, till they found him.

Ver. 38. And he ſaid unto them, let us go into the next towns, &c.] Inſtead of returning with his diſciples to Capernaum, as they expected he would, and eſpecially ſince there was ſuch a concourſe of people got together, he propoſes to go to the next towns, or village-cities; towns that were neither villages, nor cities, but between both, as the word ſignifies: hence the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions render it, villages and cities; and it deſigns ſuch towns in which there were ſynagogues. The Jews diſtinguiſh between walled towns, villages, and large cities [r]. They aſk, "what is a large city? every "one in which there are ten leiſure men; if leſs "than ſo, lo! it is a village." And "every place "in which there were ten Iſraelites, they were "obliged to provide a houſe into which they might "go to prayer, at every prayer-time, and that "place is called a ſynagogue [s]." Theſe were the places Chriſt judged it adviſeable to go to; he had preached already at Capernaum, the day before, and had confirmed his doctrine by miracles, which was ſufficient for the preſent, and therefore thought fit to go elſewhere, and orders his diſciples to go likewiſe; for the Syriac verſion renders it, go ye to the next cities; and in the ſame way read the Arabic and Perſic verſions: that I may preach there alſo; as well as at Capernaum, that ſo the Goſpel may be ſpread, and have its uſefulneſs in other parts as well as there: the Arabic verſion renders it, that we may preach; both I and you; but without any foundation; nor does the reaſon following ſuit ſuch a verſion, for therefore came I forth; meaning, not from Simon's houſe, nor from Capernaum, tho' there may be a truth in that; for Chriſt might come from thence, with that view, to preach the Goſpel elſewhere; but from God his father, from whom he came forth, and by whom he was ſent, to preach the Goſpel to other cities alſo, both in Galilee and Judæa; even to all the inhabitants of that country, to all the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael; ſo that this was but anſwering the end of his coming, and acting according to the commiſſion given him.

Ver. 39. And he preached in their ſynagogues, &c.] Which were in the next towns, in the village-cities, and throughout all Galilee: taking every town and city in his circuit, he continued preaching the Goſpel of the kingdom in one place and another, until he had gone over the whole country: and caſt out devils; as out of the ſouls, ſo out of the bodies of men, whereby he confirmed the doctrine he preached.

Ver. 40. And there came a leper to him, &c.] After he was come down from a certain mountain, in Galilee, where he had been preaching to the people, Matt. viii. 1. and when he was in a certain city, Luke v. 12. either Capernaum, or ſome other city of Galilee. This man was full of leproſy, as Luke ſays, and very probably deemed incurable; of the nature and ſymptoms of the leproſy, ſee the note on Luke v. 12. beſeeching him; to cure him of his leproſy: and kneeling down to him; in token of ſubmiſſion, reſpect, and reverence, and to worſhip him: and ſaying unto him, if thou wilt thou canſt make me clean; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 2. Mark omits the word Lord.

Ver. 41. And Jeſus moved with compaſſion, &c.] At the ſad and deplorable caſe the poor man was in, being a merciful high-prieſt, and not with a deſire of popular applauſe, and vain glory: put forth his hand and touched him; tho' the leproſy was ſpread all over him, and there was no place clean, and touching him was forbidden by the law: and ſaith unto him, I will be thou clean; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 3.

Ver. 42. And as ſoon as he had ſpoken, &c.] The above words, immediately the leproſy departed from him, and he was cleanſed; from it, and which ſeems to be done not by touching him, but by the words ſpoken, which were accompanied with ſuch power, as to effect the cure in an inſtant; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 3.

Ver. 43. And he ſtraitly charged him, &c.] Either with the ſin which had been the cauſe of this leproſy, and to take care that he ſinned that ſin no more, leſt a worſe evil ſhould befal him; for ſin was uſually the cauſe of leproſy, as the caſes of Miriam, Gehazi, and Uzziah ſhow. It is ſaid to come upon men for ſeven things. The ſeven abominations mentioned in Prov. vi. 16—19. are ſaid, by the Jewiſh writers [t], to be the reaſons of perſons being ſtricken with leproſy: a proud look; as appears from the inſtance of the daughters of Zion, Iſ. iii. 16—24. the crowns of whoſe heads were ſmitten with a ſcab, and who were attended with a ſtink, baldneſs, and burning. A lying tongue; as in the caſe of Miriam, who, with Aaron, ſpoke againſt Moſes; upon which the cloud departed from the tabernacle, and Miriam became leprous, white as ſnow, Numb. xii. 1, 10. And hands that ſhed innocent blood; which is proved from Joab, on whoſe head the blood of Abner and Amaſa returned; and on account of which a leper was not to fail from his houſe; ſee 1 Kings ii. 31, 32. compared with 2 Sam. iii. 29. An heart that deviſeth wicked imaginations; which was fulfilled in Uzziah, who ſought to bring the high prieſthood into contempt, and therefore was ſmitten with leproſy, which aroſe in his forehead, while he had the cenſer in his hands, and was contending with the prieſts; and he continued a leper to his death, 2 Chron. xxvi. 18—21. Feet that be ſwift in running to miſchief; which was true of Gehazi, who ran after Naaman the Syrian, and took a gift of him which he ſhould not; for which, the leproſy, Naaman was cured of, ſeized him, and cleaved unto him, 2 Kings v. 20—27. A falſe witneſs that ſpeaketh Lyes; of this no inſtance is given. And him that ſoweth diſcord among brethren; as Pharoah between Abraham and Sarah; wherefore the Lord plagued Pharoah, &c. Gen. xii. 17. which the Jews underſtand of the plague of leproſy. Theſe ſeven things are, in another place[u], ſaid to be an evil tongue, ſhedding of blood, a vain oath, uncleanneſs, a proud ſpirit, theft, and envy. Elſewhere it is ſaid[w], that for eleven things leproſy cometh; for curſing God, for uncleanneſs, for murder, for ſaying of a neighbour a thing that there is nothing in it, for pride, for entring into a border which is not a man's own, for a lying tongue, for theft, for a falſe oath, for profaning the name of God, for idolatry; and R. Iſaac ſays, for an evil eye; and the Rabbins alſo ſay, it comes upon him who deſpiſes the words of the law: the firſt is proved from Goliah, 1 Sam. xvii. 26. 46. the ſecond from the daughters of Jeruſalem, Iſ. iii. 16—24. the third from Cain, Gen. iv. 15. and from Joab, 2 Sam. iii. 29. the fourth from Moſes, Exod. iv. 5, 6. the fifth from Naaman, 2 Kings v. 1. the ſixth from Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16—19. the ſeventh from Miriam, Numb. xii. 1, 10. the eighth and ninth from Zech. v. 4. compared with Lev. xiv. 45. the tenth from Gehazi, 2 Kings v. 20, 27. the eleventh from the children of Iſrael when they made the calf, Exod. xxxii. 25. compared with Numb. v. 2. But whether this man's ſin was either of theſe, or what it was, is not certain: however, he was, by this cure, laid under an obligation, for the future, to avoid it, and all other ſins: or rather the charge was to tell no man of his cure, before he came to the prieſt; nor to him, or any other, how he came by it, and by whom he was healed: and forthwith ſent him away; to the prieſt, in all haſte; and it looks as if the man was unwilling to have gone from him, but choſe rather to have continued with his kind benefactor: for the word ſignifies, he caſt him him out; he drove him from him; he obliged him to go without delay.

Ver. 45. But he went out, &c.] Either out of the ſynagogue; for in ver. 39. it is ſaid, that Chriſt preached in their ſynagogues, &c. and in ver. 40. there came a leper to him; and Luke very plainly ſuggeſts, that he was in the city, ch. v. 12. and he might be in the ſynagogue: and this was allowed a leper, according to the Jewiſh canons, provided ſome rules were obſerved; which were theſe[x]: "if a leper enters into a ſynagogue, they make for him a partition ten hands high, and four cubits broad; he enters in firſt, and goes out laſt:" or, it may be, he went out of the houſe where he was, into the city, and parts adjacent; for it ſeems as if the cure was done privately: and yet a leper was not allowed to enter into a houſe[y]; "if he did, all the veſſels which were there, i. e. all the goods in the houſe were defiled, even to the very beams. R. Simeon ſays, as far as four cubits. R. Judah ſays, if he ſtaid ſo long as the lighting of a lamp." And began to publiſh it much, and to blaze abroad the matter; contrary to the charge Chriſt gave him; tho' this might be done by him, not out of diſobedience to Chriſt, but out of a tranſport of joy for the mercy received; and perhaps with a good intention to ſpread the fame and glory of his ſaviour: inſomuch that Jeſus could no more openly enter into the city; of Capernaum, or whatever city it was, where this cure was wrought, without a croud of people about him, and danger from them, at leaſt from his enemies, who envied his applauſe and glory. But was without in deſert places; devoid of inhabitants, where he ſpent his time in prayer: and they came to him from every quarter; whenever the people could learn where he was: ſo agreeable was his doctrine to ſome; and ſo uſeful his miraculous work of healing to others.

Ver. 2. And ſtraightway many were gathered together, &c.] From all parts of the city, inſomuch that there was no room to receive them; in the houſe: by which it ſhould ſeem to be a large one, tho' not large enough to hold ſuch a numerous company as were got together: no, not ſo much as about the door; or the places before the door, the porch, the court, or court-yard. The croud was ſo great, that neither the houſe, nor the out-places before, could hold them, nor could they come even near the door; and he preached the word unto them. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, he ſpake his own word to them that came to him: he preached the Goſpel, the word of grace and truth, of life and ſalvation, to as many as could come near him, and were within the hearing of him. To me it ſeems, that our Lord went up into an upper room, and out of the window preached to the people, that were, in great numbers, without doors; and the following narrative ſeems to confirm this conjecture.

Ver. 3. And they came unto him, &c.] A conſiderable body of people, townſmen, friends, and relations of the perſon after-mentioned: bringing one ſick of the palſy, which was born of four; carried by four men upon their ſhoulders, as if he was a dead carkaſs; ſo weak and enfeebled was he by his diſeaſe, that he could not walk, or be otherwiſe brought; or rather upon a bed, which four men, at the four corners of it, carried in their hands; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, four men carried him on a bed; and certain it is, by what follows, that he was brought upon a bed. This man's caſe appears to be a very bad one, and what ſeems to be incurable by the art of medicine: it was not a ſlight touch of the palſy, but a general one, which had deprived him of motion and ſenſation. The palſy is a diſeaſe, whereby the body, or ſome of its parts, loſe their motion, and ſometimes their ſenſation or feeling: the cauſes of it are an impeded influx of the nervous ſpirits into the villi, or the muſcles, or of the arterious blood into their veſſels; which may happen from ſome fault either in the brain, the nerves, muſcles, or their veſſels. The palſy is ſaid to be perfect, or complete, when there is a privation of motion and ſenſation at the ſame time; imperfect, when one of the two is deſtroyed, the other remaining. The palſy again is either univerſal, lateral, or partial. The univerſal palſy, called alſo paraplegia, or paraplexia, is a general immobility of all the muſcles that receive nerves from the cerebrum, or cerebellum, except thoſe of the head——its cauſe is uſually ſuppoſed to reſide in the ventricles of the brain, or in the root of the ſpinal marrow.——The lateral palſy called alſo hemiplegia, is the ſame diſeaſe with the paraplegia, only that it affects but one ſide of the body. Its cauſe is the ſame, only reſtrained to one ſide of the brain, or ſpinal marrow. The partial palſy is where ſome particular part, or member, alone is affected; as, for inſtance, where the motion of the arm, or leg, is deſtroyed[z]. Now this man's diſeaſe ſeems to be the perfect and general palſy, which affects the whole body, or the paraplegia, which reaches every part but the head; whereby all ſenſe, as well as motion, are deſtroyed, and ſometimes only one of them: but in this caſe it ſeems as if both of them were loſt: that he was motionleſs, is clear from his being carried by four perſons; and it looks as if he had loſt his feeling, ſince he is not ſaid to be grievouſly tormented, as the centurion's ſervant is ſaid to be, Matt. viii. 6. whoſe diſeaſe ſeems to have been of the partial or imperfect kind; or however, tho' it deprived him of motion, yet not of ſenſation; his might be a kind of ſcorbutic palſy. This man is an emblem of a ſinner in a ſtate of nature, who is inſenſible of his condition, of the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, of his danger and miſery to which he is expoſed, of his loſt and undone ſtate, of the neceſſity of the new birth, and of the need of ſalvation by Jeſus Chriſt; and who, as he is deſtitute of ſpiritual life, can have no ſpiritual motion to come to Chriſt for life and ſalvation, or any ſpiritual ſtrength and activity to move in, or perform any thing that is ſpiritually good: and as the friends of this man took him, and brought him to Chriſt, and laid him down before him, hoping he might receive a cure from him, though, from what appears, it was unaſked by him, as he did; ſo it becomes the friends and relations of unregenerate perſons, who have received the grace of God themſelves, and are in a ſound and ſafe eſtate, to be concerned for them; to bring them under the means of grace, where they may be brought to a ſenſe of their ſins, and to a comfortable view of the free and full forgiveneſs of them, as this man; and this ſhould be done, even tho' there may be difficulties in the accompliſhment of it, as there were in this caſe, as is manifeſt from what follows.

Ver. 4. And when they could not come nigh unto him for the preſs, &c.] To the room where Jeſus was, nor into the houſe, nor even to the door, the croud about it was ſo great, they uncovered the roof where he was. The Arabic verſion reads it, they went up to the roof; and the Perſic thus, they carried him up upon the roof. The place where Chriſt was, ſeems to be an upper room; for in ſuch an one the Jewiſh doctors uſed to meet, and diſcourſe together about religious matters; ſee Acts i. 13. and xx. 8. Tho' ſome think this was a mean houſe in which Chriſt was, and had no upper room, but the ground-floor was open to the roof, thro' which the man, ſick of the palſy, was let down on his bed to Chriſt; and the rather, becauſe the people crouded about the door to get in, and there was no room to receive them, no not about it: but even from this circumſtance it ſeems moſt reaſonable, that there was an upper room in which Chriſt was, and at a window in which he might preach to the people, with much more convenience, than at, or about the door, where they were preſſing: for, certain it is, that he did preach the word to them, ver. 2. and many inſtances may be given of the above mentioned doctors, whoſe uſages, when indifferent, and not ſinful, might be complied with Chriſt, as theſe were, of their meeting and converſing together in upper rooms. Inſtead of many, take the few following[a]: "It happened to Rabban Gamaliel, "and the elders, who were ſitting, בעליית, in an "upper room in Jericho, that they brought them "dates, and they did eat, &c." Again[b], "theſe "are ſome of the traditions which they taught; "בעליית, in the upper chamber of Hananiah ben "Hezekiah, ben Garon." So it is likewiſe ſaid[c], that "R. Tarphon, or Tryphon, and the elders, were "ſitting in the chamber of the houſe of Nithzah, in "Lydda, and this queſtion was aſked before them, "is doctrine greateſt, or practice greateſt?" Once more[d], "the elders of the houſe of Shammai, "and the elders of the houſe of Hillell, went up, "לעליית, to the upper chamber of Jochanan ben "Bethira, and ſaid, that the Tzitzith, or fringes, "had no meaſure, &c." Now, over this upper room was a flat roof, with battlements about it; for ſo the Jews were obliged to build their houſes, Deut. xxii. 8. to which they had a way of going to and from both, within and without ſide their houſes; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 17. Hence we ſo often read[e] of דרך גגות, the way of the roofs, in diſtinction from דרך פתחים, the way of the doors; by which they entered into their houſes, and by which means, things might be carried from a court to a roof, and from a roof to a court; about which the doctors diſpute, ſaying, that on a ſabbath-day[f], "it is forbidden to aſcend and deſcend from the roofs to the court, and from the court to the roofs; and the veſſels, whoſe abode is in the court, it is lawful to move them in the court, and which are in the roofs, it is lawful to move them in the roofs.——Says Rabbi, when we were learning the law with R. Simeon at Tekoah, we brought up oil, and a confection of old wine, water, and balſam, from roof to roof, and from roof to court, and from court to court, and from the court to a cloſe, and from one cloſe to another, till we came to the fountains, in which they waſhed. Says R. Judah, it happened in a time of danger, and we brought the book of the law from court to roof, and from roof to court, and from court to a cloſe, to read in it." Now, in theſe roofs, there was a door, which they call, פתח גגות, the door of the roofs[g]: now when they had brought up the ſick man to the roof of the houſe, by a ladder faſtened on the outſide, which was common[h]; they took up this door, and let him down in his bed into the room where Jeſus was: and becauſe they wrenched the roof-door open with violence, therefore 'tis ſaid, and when they had broken it up, they let down the bed wherein the ſick of the palſy lay: opening the door, and perhaps taking up the frame of it, and removing ſome tiles about it, to make the way wider, they let down, with ropes, the bed, and the man on it, together. The Perſic verſion thus renders it, and the paralytic man being put upon a bed, at the four corners of the bed ſo many ropes being faſtened, they let him down through a window to Jeſus, into the place where he was ſitting; which is rather a paraphraſe, or expoſition of the words, than a tranſlation.

Ver. 5. When Jeſus ſaw their faith, &c.] The faith of the ſick man, and his friends, who ſeemed confident, that could they get at Chriſt, a cure would be wrought: the faith of the one appears in ſuffering himſelf to be brought in ſuch a manner, under ſo much weakneſs, and with ſo much trouble; and of the other in bringing him, and breaking thro' ſo many difficulties to get him to Chriſt. He ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy, ſon, thy ſins be forgiven thee; pointing and ſtriking at the root of his diſorder, his ſins. Chriſt calls him ſon, tho' in this afflicted condition: a perſon may be a child of God, and yet greatly afflicted by him; afflictions are not arguments againſt, but rather for ſonſhip: for what ſon is he whom the father chaſteneth not? He ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth, and by chaſtizing them, dealeth with them as with ſons; and ſuch as are without chaſtiſement are baſtards, and not ſons, Heb. xii. 6, 7, 8. yea, he calls him a ſon, tho' a ſinful creature, and who had not, as yet, until theſe words were ſpoken by Chriſt, any diſcovery and application of pardoning grace unto him: he was a ſon of God by divine predeſtination, being predeſtinated to the adoption of children: he was a ſon by virtue of the covenant of grace, he was intereſted in, as appears by his enjoying pardon of ſin, a bleſſing of it; which runs thus, I will be their father, and they ſhall be my ſons and daughters, 2 Cor. vi. 18. He was one of the children which were given to Chriſt as in ſuch a relation; and for the ſake of whom Chriſt was now a partaker of fleſh and blood, and in a little time was to die for them, in order to gather them together, who were ſcattered abroad. The bleſſing Chriſt conferred on this poor man is of the greateſt conſequence and importance, forgiveneſs of ſin: it is what ſprings from the grace and mercy of God; it is provided in a promiſe in the covenant of grace; Chriſt was ſent to ſhed his blood to procure it, in a way conſiſtent with the holineſs and juſtice of God; and this being done, it is publiſhed in the Goſpel, and is a moſt conſiderable article in it, and than which, nothing can be more deſirable to a ſenſible ſinner: and bleſſed are they that are partakers of it, their ſins will never be imputed to them; they will never be remembered more; they are blotted out of God's debt-book; they are covered out of his ſight, and are removed as far as the eaſt is from the weſt, even all their ſins, original and actual, ſecret or open, of omiſſion, or commiſſion; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 2.

Ver. 6. But there were certain of the Scribes ſitting there, &c.] In the upper room where Jeſus was, to watch and obſerve what he ſaid, and did: and reaſoning in their hearts; upon the aobve words of Chriſt, in the following manner.

Ver. 7. Why doth this man thus ſpeak blaſphemies? &c.] They took Chriſt to be a mere man, and reaſoned with themſelves, that he muſt be a blaſphemer, in aſſuming that to himſelf, which was peculiar to God: they ſeem aſtoniſhed at his words, and wonder at his arrogance, and to be filled with indignation and reſentment at him; ſaying, who can forgive ſins but God only? this was a generally received maxim with them, and a very juſt one. The Chaldee paraphraſe of Job xiv. 4. runs thus: "who can give a pure man out of a man that is defiled with ſins, but God, who alone is he, די ישבוק ליה, that can pardon him?" They even deny that Metatron, ſo they call the angel in Exod. xxiii. 20. of whom they ſay, that his name is as the name of his maſter, has a power of forgiving ſins; for which reaſon the Iſraelites rejected him as a meſſenger[i]. They were right in ſaying, that none but God could forgive ſin, againſt whom it is committed; but wrong in charging Chriſt with blaſphemy on this account; becauſe he is truly God, as well as man, as his omniſcience and omnipotence hereafter manifeſted, did abundantly ſhew. That no mere creature can forgive ſin, is certain: good men may, and ought to forgive one another, and even their very enemies; but then they can only forgive ſin as an injury done to themſelves, not as committed againſt God. The miniſters of the Goſpel may be ſaid to remit ſins miniſterially, or declaratively, by preaching the doctrine of pardon, declaring, that ſuch as believe in Chriſt ſhall receive the remiſſion of ſins; but for any man to aſſume ſuch a power to himſelf, as to grant pardons and indulgences, to abſolve from ſins, is antichriſtian, as the pope of Rome does; in which he takes that to himſelf, which is peculiar to God; ſo that he, as God, ſitteth in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Nor can any man procure the forgiveneſs of his ſins by any thing he has, or can do; not by his riches, which will not profit in a day of wrath, they being not a ſufficient ranſom-price for a man's ſelf, or any of his brethren and friends; nor by his repentance, for though this, and remiſſion of ſins, go together in grace and experience, yet repentance is not the cauſe of remiſſion of ſins, but rather the effect of remiſſion applied; nor by his faith, for faith does not procure, but receives this bleſſing; and much leſs by good works, for then the forgiveneſs of ſin this would not be according to the riches of grace; and a man would be ſaved by his works, ſince a principal part of ſalvation lies in the pardon of ſin; and beſides, the blood of Chriſt would be ſhed in vain. That God only can forgive ſin, is evident, becauſe it is againſt him, and him only, that men ſin: ſin is a tranſgreſſion of his law, a contrariety to his nature, and a contradiction of his will, an affront to his juſtice and holineſs, a contempt of him, who is the lawgiver, that is able to ſave and to deſtroy; it is of the nature of a debt, which he only can looſe from. Moreover, if there were any beſides himſelf that could forgive ſin, he would have one equal with him, and like unto him; whereas, who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity? Mic. vii. 18. This is a prerogative peculiar to him, which he challenges to himſelf: I, even I am he that blotteth out thy tranſgreſſions, Iſ. xliii. 25. but then this is common to all the three divine perſons in the Godhead, Father, Son, and Spirit. The Father, he has prepared this grace in his own heart; for the moving cauſe of it, is his ſovereign grace and mercy; he has promiſed and ſecured it in the covenant of his grace; he ſet forth, and ſent forth his ſon to obtain it, by the ſhedding of his blood, that ſo his juſtice might be ſatisfied; and it is for Chriſt's ſake he forgives all treſpaſſes. The Son of God is concerned in it: as man, his blood was ſhed for it; and that being the blood, not of a mere man, but of him that is God, as well as man, it was effectual to that purpoſe; it is in his name that it is preached, and he is exalted as a ſaviour to give it; and as the advocate of his people he calls for it, and requires it; and as he is truly and properly God, he has equal power to beſtow it, and apply it as his father. The holy Spirit, as he makes men ſenſible of their need of it, he ſhows it to them, and their intereſt in it; he ſprinkles the blood of Chriſt upon their conſciences, and declares them pardoned thro' it; he bears witneſs of the truth of it to them, and ſeals it up unto them; ſo that it is wholly of God.

Ver. 8. And immediately when Jeſus perceived in his ſpirit, &c.] His own ſpirit, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; not his human ſoul, nor the holy Spirit of God, tho' both may be ſaid to be his ſpirit; but his divine nature, in, and by which he knew all things, even the moſt ſecret thoughts of mens hearts: and as ſoon as ever the above thoughts were conceived in the minds of the Scribes and Phariſees, they were perceived by him, and told to them, that they ſo reaſoned within themſelves; he ſaid unto them, why reaſon ye theſe things in your hearts? thereby reproving them, not for reaſoning and concluding in their own minds, that none but God can forgive ſins; but for imputing blaſphemy to him, for pronouncing this man's ſins pardoned; he being God, as well as man, of which his knowing the thoughts and reaſonings of their minds might have been a convincing proof.

Ver. 9. Whether is it eaſier to ſay to the ſick of the palſy, &c.] This queſtion was put to them by Chriſt, in order to prove his deity, and clear himſelf from the charge of blaſphemy; for he that could cure the ſick of the palſy, by a word ſpeaking, had power to forgive him his ſins: and therefore propoſes it to them, which was eaſieſt to ſay, thy ſins be forgiven thee, or to ſay ariſe, and take up thy bed, and walk? both of them were eaſy to ſay, but not with power and effect: they were both inſtances of divine power, and proofs of deity; and only he that could do the one, could do the other; and the one was as eaſy to be performed, by a divine perſon, as the other: and tho' it may be hard to ſay which is the greateſt inſtance of power, or the ſtrongeſt proof of deity, to pardon a ſinner, or to cure a paralytic by a word ſpeaking; perhaps forgiveneſs of ſin may be the greateſt evidence of divine power and goodneſs; however, it is certain, it is a greater bleſſing to be pardoned, than to be cured of a palſy; yet curing of a palſy, in the manner in which Chriſt did it, was a more ſenſible proof of his deity to the Scribes and Phariſees, than pronouncing a man's ſins forgiven; becauſe this was viſible, and could not be denied; whereas the other, tho' pronounced, they might queſtion whether it had its effect: but by the one, which they would ſee done before their eyes, there would be left no room for them to doubt of the reality of the other; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 5.

Ver. 10. But that ye may know that the ſon of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf, who was really man, and the true Meſſiah, in which ſenſe this phraſe had been uſed in the writings of the Old Teſtament; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 17. Dan. vii. 13. and tho' by reaſon of his outward form, and mean appearance, he might be thought by them to be but a mere man, and had no right, nor authority, to ſay what he had; in order to convince them; he affirms, that he hath power on earth to forgive ſins. As there is an emphaſis lies on the phraſe, the ſon of man, ſuggeſting, that his being ſo was no contradiction to his deity, nor any hindrance to the exertion of his power; ſo there is another on thoſe words, upon earth; intimating, that tho' he was upon earth, in a very low eſtate, in a ſtate of humiliation, yet he had the ſame power to forgive ſin as in heaven; his humbling himſelf in human nature did not ſtrip him of his perfections, power, and prerogative as God: and if he had power on earth to forgive ſin, there can be no room to doubt of it now he is in heaven; ſince, as mediator, he is exalted to be a prince, and a ſaviour, to give repentance to Iſrael, and remiſſion of ſins, Acts v. 31. And that it might appear he had ſuch a power on earth, he ſaith to the ſick of the palſy; turning to, and addreſſing him in the following words, with great majeſty, authority, and power; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 6.

Ver. 11. I ſay unto thee, ariſe, and take up thy bed, &c.] He bid him, in an authoritative way, to ariſe from his bed, in which he was brought, and on which he lay before him, and take it up upon his ſhoulders, directly, and in the face of all the people, carry it away: and go thy way into thine houſe; to ſhew himſelf whole to his family and friends, and go about his buſineſs; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 6.

Ver. 12. And immediately he aroſe, &c.] Power going along with the words of Chriſt, he found himſelf perfectly well; and at once ſprung up from off his bed, and took up his bed, upon his ſhoulders, with all the eaſe imaginable: and went forth before them all; the Scribes and Phariſees, and the whole multitude of the people, who were eye-witneſſes of this wonderful cure: or againſt them all; for being ſtrong and robuſt, he made his way thro' the croud, with his bed on his back; inſomuch that they were all amazed; at the power of Chriſt, and the ſtrength of the man: and glorified God, ſaying, we never ſaw it on this faſhion; or any thing like this in our days. They eaſily perceived it was a preternatural action, and what could never be done by any mere man; they therefore attribute it to God, and give him the glory of it; they celebrated the perfections of God, particularly his power, and his goodneſs, which were very viſible in this inſtance; they praiſed him and his works, and gave thanks to him for this wonderful cure, which was wrought; and that he had given ſuch power to Chriſt, who they looked upon to be but a man; tho' they might have concluded from hence that he was God, to perform ſuch mighty works: and theſe that glorified God, and expreſſed their thankfulneſs for this inſtance of his kindneſs to men, were not the Scribes and Phariſees, who had charged Chriſt with blaſphemy; for the miracles of Chriſt rarely, if ever, had ſuch an effect upon them, as to acknowledge that they were from God, and that Chriſt performed them by a divine power, but rather by a diabolical influence. We never read of their praiſing God, and glorifying him for any thing that was done by Chriſt; but generally went away, after a miracle, hardened, and full of ſpight and malice, going and conſulting together how to take away his life. But theſe were the multitude, as Matthew ſays, who attended on the miniſtry of Chriſt, and followed him from place to place, and had a high opinion of him, as a great and good man; tho' they did not believe in him as the Meſſiah, and did not know him to be the ſon of God; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 8.

Ver. 13. And he went forth again by the ſea-ſide, &c.] The ſea of Galilee, where he had met with, and called Peter and Andrew, James and John; and not far from which were the ſolitary place, and the deſert places, where he was before he entered into Capernaum: and all the multitude reſorted unto him; who had been with him at Peter's houſe, and about the door, and thoſe who could not get near him: and he taught them; the word of God, the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it.

Ver. 14. And as he paſſed by, &c.] As he went from Simon's houſe, and from the city of Capernaum, to go to the ſea-ſide: he ſaw Levi, the ſon of Alpheus; the ſame with Matthew, Matt. ix. 9. and ſon to the ſame Alpheus as James was, Matt. x. 3. Beza's moſt ancient copy reads James, inſtead of Levi, very wrongly; but he was the brother of James, and alſo of Simon and Jude; ſo that there were four brothers of them apoſtles: and if Joſes, called Barſabas, was the ſame Joſes that was brother to theſe, as ſeems probable, a fifth was put up for an apoſtle, tho' the lot fell on Matthias. James, and Joſes, and Simon, and Jude, are mentioned together, Matt. xiii. 55. becauſe they lived together, and were men of religion and ſeriouſneſs, and known by their neighbours; but Matthew, or Levi, is not mentioned: it is thought, by ſome, probable, that he was a looſe, extravagant young man, and ſo might depart from his father's family, and enter into this ſcandalous employment of a publican; and herein went contrary to his father's will, Cleophas, or Alpheus, who was the huſband of the ſiſter of Mary, the mother of our Lord: ſitting at the receipt of cuſtom; the toll-booth, or cuſtom-houſe, where he ſat to take toll of paſſengers that came, or went in ſhips or boats. The Syriac verſion renders it, ſitting among the toll-gatherers; and the Perſic, among publicans; not only ſignifying the buſineſs in which he was, but the company he was among; which makes the grace of Chriſt the more illuſtrious and diſtinguiſhing, in looking upon him, and calling him: and ſaid unto him, follow me; and he aroſe, and followed him. Chriſt, the great ſhepherd of the ſheep, who came to ſeek, in order to ſave that which was loſt, was now looking up his loſt ſheep; and Matthew, or Levi, being one of them, he finds him, and calls him by his grace. Chriſt is always firſt with his people; he firſt ſeeks them, and then they ſeek him; he firſt finds them, and then they find him; yea, he is found of them that ſought him not. Levi took no notice of him, enquired not about him, and had no thought of leaving his employ, and going after him; but Chriſt knew him: his eye was upon him as he paſſed by him, and his time was a time of love, and ſo a time of life; he looked upon him, and ſaid unto him, live; quickening power went along with his words, and he aroſe, and left all, and followed him: Chriſt, as the good ſhepherd, went before; and Levi, thro' the grace that was now given him, as one of his ſheep, heard and knew his voice, and, without the leaſt heſitation or reluctance, quitted his buſineſs, and became a follower of him. How powerful is efficacious grace! what is it, it cannot do! it turns the heart of a ſinner at once, enclines it to Chriſt, and cauſes it to leave all for his ſake; it at once fills a ſoul with love to Chriſt, faith in him, and obedience to him; it works powerfully, and yet freely; it always obtains, and effects what it deſigns, yet puts no force upon the will: Levi, under the drawings of divine grace, followed Chriſt moſt willingly and chearfully; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 9.

Ver. 15. And it came to paſs, that as Jeſus ſat at meat in his houſe, &c.] In the houſe of Levi; not in the cuſtom-houſe, or toll-booth, for that he left; but in his houſe in the city of Capernaum, where he had him, and made an entertainment for him, in token of gratitude, for the high favour beſtowed on him: many publicans and ſinners ſat alſo together, with Jeſus, and his diſciples; being invited by Levi, and not objected to by Chriſt; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 10. for there were many, and they followed him; either Chriſt, whom they had obſerved to have called Matthew, and had heard preach by the ſea-ſide; or elſe Matthew; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, for many followed Matthew. The Ethiopic verſion reads the words, and they were many, that is, publicans and ſinners, and the Scribes and Phariſees followed him; mentioned in the next verſe, from whence, it ſeems, to be taken; tho' true it is, that not only a large number of publicans and ſinners followed Chriſt, but alſo many of the Scribes and Phariſees; yet with a different view from the former, not to get any advantage to themſelves, but, if they could, an advantage againſt Chriſt.

Ver. 16. And when the Scribes and Phariſees ſaw him eat, &c.] They were offended at his eating and drinking, tho' it was in moderation; becauſe he did not faſt as they, and their diſciples did; and eſpecially, that he eat with publicans and ſinners; men of very infamous characters, and bad lives, with whom the Phariſees diſdained to keep company: they ſaid unto his diſciples, how is it that he eateth and drinketh with publicans and ſinners? The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, your maſter, as in Matt. ix. 11. ſee the note there; ſo ſome Greek copies here.

Ver. 17. When Jeſus heard it, he ſaith to them, &c.] Chriſt either over-heard what they ſaid to his diſciples, or he heard it from the relation of the diſciples; and when he did, he turned to the Scribes and Phariſees, and ſpoke to them the following words: they that are whole, have no need of the phyſician, but they that are ſick; which ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that he was a phyſician; that theſe publicans and ſinners were ſick perſons, and needed his company and aſſiſtance but that they, the Scribes and Phariſees, were whole and in good health, in their own eſteem, and ſ wanted no relief; and therefore ought not to tak it amiſs, that he attended the one, and not th other. Theſe words give a general view of man kind, in their different ſentiments of themſelves and of Chriſt; and of the uſefulneſs of Chriſt to one ſort, and not another. There are ſome that cry up the power of man's free-will, and plead for the ſtrength and purity of human nature, and extol its excellencies and abilities; and it is no wonder that theſe ſee no need of Chriſt, either for themſelves or others: hence preachers of this complexion, leave Chriſt out of their miniſtry for the moſt part; and generally ſpeaking, leſſen the glory and dignity of his perſon, depreciate his offices, reject his righteouſneſs, and deny his ſatisfaction and atonement: and ſuch reckon themſelves the favourites of heaven, and are ready to ſay, whom ſhall God delight to honour, but us, who are ſo pure and holy? they therefore truſt in their own righteouſneſs, and deſpiſe others, and ſubmit not to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; they make their own works their ſaviours, and ſo neglect the great ſalvation by Chriſt. There are others that are ſick, and are quite ſick of themſelves; they ſee the impurity of their nature, how unſound and unhealthful they are; that from the crown of the head to the ſole of the foot, there is no ſoundneſs in them, nothing but wounds, bruiſes, and putrifying ſores: their loins are filled with the loathſome diſeaſe of ſin; they are ſenſible of their inability to cure themſelves, and that no mere creature can help them; and that all beſides Chriſt, are phyſicians of no value: and therefore they apply to him, whoſe blood is a balm for every wound, and a medicine for every ſickneſs and diſeaſe, and which cleanſes from all ſin: and whereas ſuch, and ſuch only, ſee their need of Chriſt as a phyſician, theſe only does he attend under this character; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 12. Adding this as a reaſon, I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners to repentance. Theſe words explain, what is more obſcurely and figuratively expreſſed in the former: it appears from hence, that by the whole are meant, righteous perſons; not ſuch who are made righteous, by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them, but ſuch who were outwardly righteous before men, who truſted in themſelves that they were righteous, depended on their own righteouſneſs, and fancied themſelves, with reſpect to the righteouſneſs of the law, blameleſs; and ſo, in their own apprehenſions, ſtood in no need of Chriſt and his righteouſneſs: yea, even needed not repentance, according to their own thoughts of things, and therefore were not called to it, but were left to their own ſtupidity and blindneſs; theſe were the Scribes and Phariſees: and by the ſick, are meant ſinners; ſuch who are made ſenſible of ſin, and ſo of their need of Chriſt as a Saviour; and who have evangelical repentance given them, and are called to the exerciſe and profeſſion of it: and Chriſt's calling ſinners to repentance, and beſtowing that grace, together with the remiſſion of ſins, which goes along with it, is doing his work and office as a phyſician. This Evangeliſt makes no mention of the paſſage in Hoſ. vi. 6. with which theſe words are introduced in Matthew. The laſt words, to repentance, are omitted by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and are wanting in ſome ancient copies; but are retained in the Arabic verſion, and in moſt copies, as in Matt. ix. 13. ſee the note there.

Ver. 18. And the diſciples of John and of the Phariſees uſed to faſt, &c.] Or were faſting; perhaps that very day, and ſo were the more diſpleaſed at this entertainment, Matthew had made for Chriſt and his diſciples, and at their being at it; or faſting was uſual with them: they faſted often, both John's diſciples, and the diſciples of the Phariſees; or the Phariſees themſelves; ſo the Vulgate Latin reads: of their frequent faſtings; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 14. and they came; both the diſciples of John, Matt. ix. 14. and the Scribes and Phariſees, Luke v. 30, 33. and ſay unto him, why do the diſciples of John, and of the Phariſees faſt, but thy diſciples faſt not? ſee the note on Matt. ix. 14.

Ver. 19. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] Both to John's diſciples and the Phariſees, can the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them? Suggeſting that he was the bridegroom, as John their maſter had called him, John iii. 29. and that his diſciples were the children of the bride-chamber; and that it was very unſuitable for them, and very unreaſonable to deſire them to faſt at ſuch a time, and under ſuch a character: wherefore the anſwer returned by Chriſt himſelf to the queſtion is, as long as they have the bridegroom with them, they cannot faſt: all which the Syriac verſion expreſſes by, לא, no; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 15.

Ver. 20. But the days will come, &c.] As they were in ſome ſenſe now come to the diſciples of John, their maſter being taken up by Herod, and confined in priſon, and ſo it was a mourning time with them: when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days; referring to the time of the ſufferings and death of Chriſt, which would be, and was a ſorrowful ſeaſon to his diſciples.

Ver. 21. No man alſo ſeweth a piece of new cloth, &c.] The traditions of the elders are meant, particularly concerning eating and drinking, and faſting, things before ſpoken of; and which occaſioned this parable, and which were new things in compariſon of the commands of God: ſome of them were of very ſhort ſtanding, deviſed in that age; and moſt, if not all of them, were ſince the times of Ezra. On an old garment; the moral and ceremonial righteouſneſs of the Jews, in obedience to the law of God; ſignifying, that the former were not to be joined with theſe, to make up a juſtifying righteouſneſs before God; which were not ſufficient for ſuch a purpoſe, either ſingly, or both together: elſe the new piece that filled it up, taketh away from the old, and the rent is made worſe; for by attendance to the traditions of the elders, the Jews were taken off from, and neglected the commandments of God; nay, oftentimes the commands of God were made void by theſe traditions: ſo that the old garment of their own righteouſneſs, which was very ragged and imperfect of itſelf, inſtead of being purer and more perfect, became much the worſe, even for the purpoſe for which it was intended; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 16.

Ver. 22. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles, &c.] By old bottles are meant, the Scribes and Phariſees, the whole, which needed not a phyſician, and the righteous, Chriſt came not to call; and by new wine, either the love of God, which is not ſhed abroad in the hearts of ſuch perſons; or the bleſſings of the new covenant, which are not beſtowed upon them; or the Goſpel, which brings an account of both, which is not received by carnal men: elſe the new wine doth burſt the bottles, and the wine is ſpilled, and the bottles will be marred: the Goſpel will only fill them with rage and fury, and they will deſpiſe it, and let it go; which will be an aggravation of their ſin and miſery, and ſo will prove the ſavour of death unto death unto them: but new wine muſt be put into new bottles; into the hearts of ſinners, who are called to repentance, ance, and are renewed in the Spirit of their minds; are new-born babes, that deſire the ſincere milk of the word, and wine of the Goſpel: in theſe the love of God is exceeding abundant, and it comes in with full flows into their ſouls; all grace is made to abound towards them, and the word of Chriſt richly dwells in them; in whom theſe things remain and abide, and they themſelves are ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 17.

Ver. 23. And it came to paſs, &c.] The Vulgate Latin adds, again; and ſo Beza ſays it was read in one of his copies: that he went through the corn fields on the ſabbath-day, and his diſciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn; and to rub them, and get the grain out of them, and eat them; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 1.

Ver. 24. And the Phariſees ſaid unto him, &c.] To Chriſt, the ſame they ſaid to his diſciples, Luke vi. 2. Behold, why do they on the ſabbath-day, that which is not lawful? ſee how they pluck the ears of corn and rub them, and eat things, which by the law, eſpecially by the traditions of the elders, were not lawful to be done on the ſabbath-day; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 2.

Ver. 25. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] By way of anſwer to their queſtion, and which was a full one, and enough to ſilence them: have ye never read what David did; referring to the hiſtory in 1 Sam. xxi. when he had need; of bread, was in great neceſſity, and in the utmoſt diſtreſs: and was an hungred, he, and they that were with him? which was a juſtifiable reaſon for what he and his company did; as it was for the action of the diſciples; being in a like caſe, and therefore very appoſite to the purpoſe; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 3.

Ver. 26. How he went into the houſe of God, &c.] The tabernacle; for the temple was not yet built: thither David went to get bread for himſelf and his men, being hungry: ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, where ſhould ſuch go, who are hungring and thirſting after righteouſneſs, but into the houſe of God? here's bread enough, and to ſpare; here is a table furniſhed with excellent proviſions; here the Goſpel is diſpenſed, which is milk for babes, and meat for ſtrong men; here Chriſt, the bread of life, is ſet forth, whoſe fleſh is meat indeed, and whoſe blood is drink indeed; here the ordinances are adminiſtred, which are breaſts of conſolation to the children of God; here is a feaſt of fat things, all things are ready, and ſouls are welcome, and therefore it muſt be right to attend here. And this was on the ſabbath-day that David went into the houſe of God; when the ſhew-bread loaves were removed, and divided among the prieſts, and new ones were placed in their room: and ſo under the Goſpel diſpenſation, on the Lord's day, the day ſet apart for publick worſhip, it becomes the ſaints to go up to the houſe of the Lord, and feed upon the proviſions of it: they are a royal prieſthood, they are prieſts, as well as kings to God; and their buſineſs is in the houſe of the Lord, to offer up ſpiritual ſacrifices to him; and as the goodneſs and fulneſs of his houſe appertains to them, they do well to attend and partake thereof. In the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt; and yet from the hiſtory it is clear, that it was in the days of Abimelech the high-prieſt, the father of Abiathar; wherefore the Jew charges [k] Mark with an error, and Matthew and Luke too: whereas the two laſt, make no mention of the name of any high-prieſt; and it might be obſerved, that in the Perſic verſion of Mark it is rendered, under Abimelech the high-prieſt; and in an ancient copy of Beza's, the whole clauſe is omitted; though it muſt be owned, that ſo it is read in other Greek copies, and in the ancient verſions, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and others: wherefore let it be further obſerved, that the fact referred to, was done in the days of Abiathar, though it was before he was an high-prieſt; and the particle επι may be ſo rendered, about, or before Abiathar was high-prieſt, as it is in Matt. i. 11. Beſides, Abiathar was the ſon of an high-prieſt, and ſucceeded his father in the office; and might be at this time his deputy, who acted for him, or he by his advice; and according to a rule the Jews [l] themſelves give, "the ſon of an high-prieſt, who is deputed "by his father in his ſtead, הרי כהן גדול אמור, "lo! he is called an high-prieſt." So that Abiathar might at this time be called the high-prieſt; and is the rather mentioned, becauſe he was the more eminent and famous man; and whom the Jews call [m] Urim and Thummim, becauſe there was much enquiry made by them, in his and his father's days, and very little after: to which may be added, that the names of the father and the ſon are ſometimes changed; Abimelech is called Abiathar, and this Abiathar is called Abimelech, the ſon of Abiathar, 2 Sam. viii. 17. and Abimelech the ſon of Abiathar, 1 Chron. xviii. 16. And it ſeems as if both father and ſon had two names, and were ſometimes called by the one, and ſometimes by the other: for as the father is ſometimes called Abiathar, the ſon is called Abimelech, or Abimelech, as in the places mentioned; and which refer to the times when David was king of Iſrael, and long after the death of Saul, and conſequently long after Abimelech, and the reſt of the prieſts at Nob, were killed by the order of Saul: wherefore Abimelech, or Abimelech, in the ſaid places, muſt be the ſon Abiathar; and who afterwards was thruſt out of the prieſthood by Solomon, for joining with Adonijah in his uſurpation, 1 Kings i. 25. and ii. 26. And from whence it appears, that his father was called Abiathar alſo, and which ſome take to be their family name; and if ſo, then there is no difficulty, and the Evangeliſt rightly ſays, that this affair was in the days of Abiathar: but be it that he intends the ſon, what has been before obſerved, is a ſufficient ſolution of this difficulty; for the Evangeliſt does not ſay that Abiathar was high-prieſt, when David came and eat the ſhew-bread; he only ſays, it was in the days of Abiathar the high-prieſt: for certain it is, that this happened in his days; and as certain, that he was an high-prieſt; and Mark might with great propriety call him ſo, though he was not ſtrictly one, till after this buſineſs was over: beſides, he was not only the ſon of an high-prieſt, and it may be his deputy, and ſome have thought officiated at this time, his father being ſick or infirm through old age; but inaſmuch as his father was directly killed by the order of Saul, he narrowly eſcaping, immediately ſucceeded him in the office of the high prieſthood; and therefore his being an high-prieſt ſo very near the time of this action, without any impropriety and impertinence, and eſpecially without incurring the charge of falſhood, the Evangeliſt might expreſs himſelf as he does. And did eat the ſhew-bread, which is not lawful to eat, but for the prieſts, and gave alſo to them which were with him? Who not only eat the ſhew-bread, which was ſet before the Lord, and was ſacred, and which none but the prieſts might eat of, after it was removed moved from the table; but he did this on the ſabbath-day; and he not only eat of it himſelf, but the ſoldiers that were with him; and all this with the knowledge and leave of the high-prieſt: for the Jews [n] have no reaſon to charge this Evangeliſt and the others with an error, that others beſides David eat of the ſhew-bread, urging that he came alone to Abimelech; ſince it is evident from 1 Sam. xxi. 2, 4, 5. that David had ſervants in company with him when he fled, though they did not attend him when he went to the high-prieſt; and that he aſked bread, and it was given him, not only for himſelf, but for the young men that he had appointed to be at ſuch a place: and therefore, if this was allowed to David and his men, when hungry, it ought not to be charged as an evil upon the diſciples, for plucking and rubbing a few ears of corn to ſatisfy their hunger, though on a ſabbath-day; and eſpecially when he, who was Lord of the ſabbath, was preſent, and admitted of it; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 4.

Ver. 27. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Continuing his anſwer to them, and adding, in confirmation of what he had ſaid, and for the further vindication of his diſciples, the ſabbath was made for man: for his good, and not for his hurt; both for the good of his ſoul, that he might have an opportunity of attending divine worſhip, both in publick and private; and for the good of his body, that he might have reſt from his labour: and this was the end of the original inſtitution and appointment of it; and therefore works of neceſſity are not forbidden on this day; ſuch as are for the neceſſary comfort, ſupport, and preſervation of life; or otherwiſe it would be apparent, that the ſabbath was not appointed for the good, but for the hurt of men. By man, is not meant all mankind; for the ſabbath was never appointed for all mankind, nor binding upon all; only the Jews, who are emphatically called man, or men; ſee Ezek. xxxiv. 30, 31. upon which the Jewiſh writers remark [o], that "they are called, אדם, man; but the idolatrous "Gentiles, and nations of the world, are not called "men;" but dogs, beaſts, &c. Our Lord may here be thought to ſpeak in their language, as he does in Matt. xv. 26. ſee the note there. And that the obſervation of the ſeventh-day, was only deſigned for the children of Iſrael, ſeems manifeſt from Exod. xxxi. 16, 17. wherefore the children of Iſrael ſhall keep the ſabbath, to obſerve the ſabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant; it is a ſign between me and the children of Iſrael; and not between him and the reſt of the world: and in ver. 14. ye ſhall keep the ſabbath, for it is holy unto you: on which the Jews [p] make this remark, לכם ולא לשאר עמין, to you, and not to the reſt of the nations: nor did they ever think that the Gentiles were obliged to obſerve their ſabbath, only ſuch who became proſelytes to their religion; even thoſe who were proſelytes of righteouſneſs: for a proſelyte of the gate, was not bound to obſerve it; for ſo ſays [q] Maimonides, "thoſe who take upon "them the ſeven commandments of Noah only, "lo! they are as a proſelyte of the gate, and they "are free to do work on the ſabbath-day for them-"ſelves, openly, as an Iſraelite, on a common day." Yea, they not only ſay, they were not obliged to keep the ſabbath, but that it was not lawful for them to obſerve it; and that it was even puniſhable with death for them to regard it; for ſo they ſay [r], "a "Gentile that keeps the ſabbath before he is cir-"cumciſed, is guilty of death, becauſe it is not "commanded him." They judged them unworthy of having this precept enjoined them, as being not men, but beaſts, and worſe than they, and had not the privilege the aſs has: hence one of their commentators [s] ſays, "concerning the reſt of an "aſs, thou (O Iſraelite!) art commanded; but "concerning the reſt of a Gentile, thou art not "commanded." And not man for the ſabbath; who was in being long before that was appointed and enjoined.

Ver. 28. Therefore the Son of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath.] Meaning himſelf, who had a power not only to diſpenſe with it, but to abrogate it as he did, with the reſt of the rituals of the ceremonial law; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 8. So that it did not become them to find fault with what his diſciples did, with his leave and approbation.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. AND he entered again into the ſynagogue, &c.] Perhaps in Capernaum, where he had before caſt out the unclean ſpirit; but not on the ſame day, nor on that day he had had the debate with the Phariſees, about his diſciples plucking the ears of corn on the ſabbath-day; but on another ſabbath, perhaps the next; ſee Luke vi. 6. And there was a man there which had a withered hand; who came there either for a cure, knowing Chriſt to be in the ſynagogue, or for the ſake of worſhip; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 10.

Ver. 2. And they watched him, &c.] The ruler of the ſynagogue, and the principal men in it; particularly the Scribes and Phariſees, who followed him wherever he went; they obſerved him diligently, and kept their eyes upon him; this lame man being in the ſynagogue, to ſee whether he would heal him on the ſabbath-day; which, knowing his readineſs to do good, they might expect he would: that they might accuſe him; as they had accuſed his diſciples before, of the violation of the ſabbath: according to the Evangeliſt Matthew, they put a queſtion to him, whether it was lawful to heal on the ſabbath-day? with this view, that they might one way or another, have ſomething to accuſe him of, either to the people, or to the Sanhedrim; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 10.

Ver. 3. And he ſaid unto the man which had the withered hand, &c.] After he had reaſoned with them, from the leſſer to the greater, upon their own principles and practices, in relieving and taking out a ſheep fallen into a ditch, on a ſabbath-day, Matt. xii. 10, 11. and knowing their thoughts, as Luke ſays, ch. vi. 8. their reaſonings and deſigns; and as the Perſic verſion here, from thence underſtanding their conſpiracy, turns himſelf to the lame man, and bids him ſtand forth: or, as in Luke, riſe up and ſtand forth in the midſt. He bid him riſe up from his ſeat, and ſtand forth in the midſt of the ſynagogue: this he ſaid, partly to raiſe the attention of the people to the following miracle; and partly to move commiſeration upon the ſight of the object; and to aggravate the hard heartedneſs of the Phariſees; as alſo, that it might be manifeſt to all, that the man's hand was really withered; and that there was no fraud in the following cure.

Ver. 4. And he ſaith unto them, &c.] Either to the whole multitude, to all the aſſembly in the ſynagogue; and ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, again he ſaid to the multitude; or rather, to the Scribes and Phariſees, who were watching him, and had put a queſtion to him, which he anſwers by another: is it lawful to do good on the ſabbath-days, or to do evil, to ſave life, or to kill? The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, or to deſtroy, as in Luke vi. 9. To do evil, kill, or deſtroy, are not lawful at any time; and to do good, and to ſave life, muſt be right at all times: our Lord has a particular view to the Scribes and Phariſees, and the queſtion is put home to their own conſciences; whoſe hearts and thoughts, deſigns and views, were all open to Chriſt; and who were now watching to do evil to him, and even to deſtroy and take away his life: for the violation of the ſabbath was death by the law, and this was what they ſought to accuſe him of: now he puts the queſtion to them, and makes them judges which muſt appear moſt right and juſt in the ſight of God and men, for him to heal this poor man of his withered hand, though on the ſabbath-day; which would be doing a good and beneficent action to him, whereby his life would be ſaved, and preſerved with comfort and uſefulneſs, and he would be in a capacity of getting his livelihood; or for them to cheriſh an evil intention againſt him, to ſeek to bring miſchief on him; and not only deſtroy his character and uſefulneſs as much as in them lay, but even take away his very life alſo: he leaves it with them to conſider of, which was moſt agreeable to the law of God, the nature of a ſabbath, and the good of mankind: but they held their peace; or were ſilent, not being able to return an anſwer, but what muſt have been in his favour, and to their own confuſion, and therefore choſe to ſay nothing.

Ver. 5. And when he had looked round about on them, &c.] In the ſeveral parts of the ſynagogue; for there were many of them on every ſide of him; which he might do, to obſerve their countenances, which might juſtly fall, upon ſuch a cloſe queſtion put to them, and what anſwer they would return to him: and his look upon them was with anger, with a ſtern countenance, which ſhewed indignation at them, though without ſin, or any deſire of revenge, for the evil they were meditating againſt him; for at the ſame time he had pity and compaſſion for them, being grieved for the hardneſs of their hearts: or the blindneſs of their hearts, as the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it; being troubled in his human ſoul, both at their inhumanity and cruelty to a miſerable object, whoſe cure, in their opinion, would have been a breach of the ſabbath; and to himſelf, having a malicious deſign againſt him, ſhould he perform it; and at their ſtupidity and ignorance of the law of God, the nature and deſign of the ſabbath, and of their duty to God, and their fellow-creatures: wherefore as one not to be intimidated by their evil deſigns againſt him, or prevented thereby from doing good, he ſaith unto the man, ſtretch forth thine hand; that is, the lame one; and ſuch power went along with his words, as at once effected a cure: and he ſtretched it out, and his hand was reſtored whole as the other. This laſt clauſe, whole as the other, is not in the Vulgate Latin, nor in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and may be added from Matt. xii. 13. ſee the note there; ſince it is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in others.

Ver. 6. And the Phariſees went forth, &c.] Out of the ſynagogue, being dreadfully galled with the reaſonings of Chriſt, at the ſilence and confuſion they were put to, and with the miracle he wrought, to the expoſing of them, and eſtabliſhing his own credit: and ſtraightway took counſel with the Herodians againſt him; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 16. How they might deſtroy him; perſiſting ſtill in their evil intentions, though Chriſt had ſo fully and clearly expoſed the wickedneſs of them: and it is to be obſerved, that thoſe men who thought it was not lawful to heal a lame man on the ſabbath-day, yet make no ſcruple of meeting and conſulting together on that day, and even with profane men, what meaſures and methods were beſt to take, to deſtroy the life of an innocent perſon.

Ver. 7. But Jeſus withdrew himſelf with his diſciples to the ſea, &c.] Knowing their evil deſigns againſt him, he departed out of the ſynagogue, and city of Capernaum; and taking his diſciples with him, he went to the ſhore of the ſea of Galilee; not out of fear, but becauſe his time was not yet come, and he had more work to do: and a great multitude from Galilee; from the ſeveral parts of it, in which country he now was: and from Judæa; that part of the land of Iſrael, which was particularly ſo called, and belonged to the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 8. And from Jeruſalem, &c.] The metropolis of the country of Judæa; and from Idumea, or Edom, as the Syriac verſion reads it; a country that lay on the ſouth of Judæa, formerly inhabited by the ſons of Edom, but now by Jews; or at leaſt the inhabitants of it were proſelytes to the Jewiſh religion. Mention is made of the plains of Idumea, along with Gazera, Azotus, and Jamnia, in 1 Maccab. iv. 15. Pliny [t] ſpeaks of Idumea and Judæa together, as a part of Syria; and Ptolemy ſays [u], this country lies on the weſt of the river Jordan; and it is here added, and from beyond Jordan; the country of Peræa, on the eaſt of Jordan: and they about Tyre and Sidon; either the inhabitants of theſe places, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions favour, reading a great company from Tyre and Sidon; or thoſe that lived near the borders, and upon the confines of theſe cities of Phœnicia: a great multitude; when all met together, from theſe ſeveral parts; who when they had heard what great things he did, came unto him: for his fame went through all the countries, for the miracles he wrought; which drew this vaſt concourſe of people after him; and who, enquiring where he was, came to him at the ſea of Galilee.

Ver. 9. And he ſpake unto his diſciples, &c.] In an authoritative way; he ordered and commanded them, that a ſmall ſhip ſhould wait on him: that a boat ſhould be got ready, be near at hand, and attend him, who was on ſhore; that he might go into it, ſhould there be any occaſion for it; and from thence preach to the people: becauſe of the multitude; which came from the above parts, and all together made a very numerous body of people: leſt they ſhould throng him; croud, preſs, afflict, and diſtreſs, and make him uneaſy, that he could not be able to ſtand conveniently, and preach to them: ſo that ſhould this be the caſe, as it was very likely it would, having a ſmall veſſel near the ſhore, he could go into it, and free himſelf from ſuch an inconvenience.

[t] Nat. Hiſt. l. 5. c. 12.

[u] Geograph. l. 5. c. 16.

Ver. 10. For he had healed many, &c.] Of various diſeaſes, and the fame of this brought more ſtill to him: inſomuch that they preſſed upon him; or puſhed upon him, with great eagerneſs and violence. The Arabic verſion renders it, they ruſhed upon him, ſo that they fell: they puſhed on, and preſſed ſo hard to get to him, that they fell upon one another, and on him: the Perſic verſion renders it, they caſt themſelves on him, for the ſake of touching him; which muſt be very troubleſome indeed. Though ſome think the phraſe ſignifies no more, than that they fell down before him at his feet, in a ſubmiſſive and petitionary way, intreating they might have the favour for to touch him; either any part of his body, or his garments, even the hem of them: and ſo the Ethiopic verſion tranſlates the words; they prayed him that they might touch him; ſee ch. vi. 56. As many as had plagues; of leproſy, and other diſeaſes, which were inflicted on them by God, as ſcourges and chaſtiſements for their ſins, as the word ſignifies, and which anſwers to, נגעים, Negaim; concerning which, there is a whole treatiſe in the Miſna; and which bears that name, and particularly regards the plagues of leproſy. Some verſions join this with the beginning of the next verſe. The Syriac verſion reads thus, who had plagues of unclean ſpirits; as if theſe plagues were their being poſſeſſed by unclean ſpirits. The Perſic verſion thus, having plagues from unclean ſpirits; as if theſe plagues were inflicted upon them by them, and which was ſometimes the caſe. The Arabic verſion after this manner, who had diſeaſes and unclean ſpirits; both the one and the other.

Ver. 11. And unclean ſpirits when they ſaw him, &c.] That is, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, they who had unclean ſpirits; or, as the Ethiopic, they that were poſſeſſed with unclean ſpirits; as ſoon as ever they beheld Chriſt, though they had never ſeen him before, and he was an entire ſtranger to them, yet fell down before him: the unclean ſpirits being ſaid to do that, which they that were poſſeſſed with them did; and which, notwithſtanding their poſſeſſion of them, they could not prevent, but were obliged to admit of it, as a token of their ſubjection to Chriſt: and even the devils themſelves in the men, cried, ſaying, thou art the Son of God; a divine perſon, equal with God; and ſuch his power over them, and his healing all manner of diſeaſes, by a word, or touch, ſhewed him to be.

Ver. 12. And he ſtraightly charged them, &c.] Or vehemently rebuked them, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; or threatened them much and vehemently, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic. The Perſic verſion renders it, threatned many; both the devils that confeſſed him, and the many that were healed of their diſeaſes: he gave them a ſtrict and ſevere charge, that they ſhould not make him known; or his work, as the Arabic, his miracles: he ſought not vain-glory and popular applauſe, nor did he need the teſtimony of men or devils; and eſpecially did not chuſe the latter, leſt his enemies ſhould traduce him, as having familiarity with them, as they did.

Ver. 13. And he goeth up into a mountain, &c.] Near Capernaum, being ſolitary, and a place of receſs and retirement, to pray, as Luke ſays, ch. vi. 12. who adds, and continued all night in prayer to God, notwithſtanding the great fatigue of the day paſt. His prayer, as is very probable, was chiefly concerning the great and important work, which was upon his mind, and he was about to do; the making and conſtituting twelve of his diſciples, as his apoſtles, to preach in his name, and work miracles: and calleth unto him whom he would; that is, when it was day, as the above Evangeliſt obſerves; when he called his diſciples, ſuch as had been for ſome time followers of him, as many of them as he thought fit: for it ſeems by the ſame Evangeliſt, that others were called to him beſides the twelve; and out of them he choſe them: the phraſe whom he would, is in the Arabic verſion rendered, whom he loved: and it is a common obſervation of expoſitors, that the choice and call of the apoſtles to office, were not according to their will, works, and merits, but according to the ſovereign will and grace of Chriſt, who choſe them, and not they him: but to me there ſeems no foundation for ſuch a remark here, though it is a truth; becauſe this regards not the call of the twelve only, and much leſs of them to office, but a call of many of the followers of Chriſt to come to him on the mountain: and they came unto him; as many as he called out of the multitude; and from among theſe he made the following choice.

Ver. 14. And he ordained twelve, &c.] Or made, conſtituted, and appointed twelve men, out of thoſe he called to him. The Arabic verſion adds, and called them apoſtles; which ſeems to be taken out of Luke vi. 13. That they ſhould be with him; conſtantly, in private and in publick; be taken into his family, and reckoned ſuch; be his familiars, and privy to all his affairs; hear all his diſcourſes, and ſee his miracles; that ſo they might be trained up and fitted for the great work he deſigned them for: and that he might ſend them forth to preach; the Goſpel in Judæa firſt, and then in all the world: for he did not at this time ſend them to preach, only choſe, called, and appointed them; and after they had been with him ſome time, and were better qualified for ſuch ſervice, he ſent them forth, as in Matt. x. 1, 5. for this conſtitution of them was before that miſſion, and was in order to it.

Ver. 15. And to have power to heal ſickneſſes, &c.] All manner of corporal diſeaſes that attend men and women: and to caſt out devils; from ſuch who were poſſeſſed with them: that is, he choſe and appointed them to be his apoſtles, with a view of conferring ſuch powers upon them hereafter; for as yet, they were not veſted with them, nor ſent out to exerciſe them; no, not till near twelve months after.

Ver. 16. And Simon he ſurnamed Peter.] Or Cephas, which ſignifies a rock, or ſtone, becauſe of his courage and conſtancy, his ſtrength and fortitude, his ſteadineſs and firmneſs of mind: this name was impoſed upon him, not at the time of his miſſion as an apoſtle; nor when he made that noble confeſſion of his faith in Chriſt, as the Son of the living God, at which time this name was taken notice of; but when Chriſt firſt called him to be his diſciple and apoſtle; ſee John i. 42.

Ver. 17. And James the ſon of Zebedee, and John the brother of James, &c.] Theſe are mentioned next, as being firſt called after Peter and Andrew: and he ſurnamed them Boanerges, which is, the ſons of thunder; either becauſe of their loud and ſonorous voice; or their warm zeal for Chriſt, and fervency in their miniſtry; or for their courage in oppoſing the enemies of Chriſt, and the power that went along with their words; which either put to confuſion and ſilence, or iſſued in conviction and converſion. The Syriac verſion reads Benai Regeſh, and the Perſic, Beni Reg'ſch. The Jews, as our learned countryman Mr. Broughton has obſerved [w], ſometimes pronounce Scheva by oa, as Noabyim, for Nebyim; ſo here, Boanerges for Benereges, or Benerges. There is a city which was in the tribe of Dan, mentioned in Joſh. xix. 45. which is called Bene-berak, the ſons of lightning; and is ſpoken of in the Jewiſh [x] writings, as a place where ſeveral of the Rabbins met, and converſed together: the reaſon of this name may be enquired after.

Ver. 18. And Andrew, &c.] The brother of Peter; and Philip, who was of Bethſaida; and Bartholomew, whom Dr. Lightfoot thinks is the ſame with Nathaniel: the name may be the ſame with בר תלמיון, Bar Talmion, with the Jews [y]; ſee the note on Matt. x. 3. and on John i. 41: and Matthew, the publican, who was called Levi; and Thomas, who was called Didymus, from his being a twin; and James, the ſon of Alpheus, to diſtinguiſh him from the other James, the ſon of Zebedee, and who is ſometimes called the leſs; and Thaddeus, whoſe name was alſo Lebbeus, and likewiſe Jude, the author of the Epiſtle that bears that name; and Simon the Canaanite, or Zelotes: of theſe men, and their ſeveral names, ſee the note on Matt. x. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 19. And Judas Iſcariot, &c.] So called to diſtinguiſh him from the other Judas; and is mentioned laſt for the following reaſon: which alſo betrayed him; and which action of his will ever render his name infamous among men. This man, with the reſt, our Lord choſe to be an apoſtle of his, tho' he knew he would betray him; in order to fulfil the purpoſes of God, the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and bring on the work of man's redemption he came into the world to perform. And they went into an houſe at Capernaum; the houſe of Simon and Andrew, where Jeſus uſed to be when there: they went home with him from the mountain; and from that time became his domeſticks, and were looked upon by him as his family, and were admitted to the greateſt nearneſs and intimacy with him.

Ver. 20. And the multitude coming together again, &c.] Either the multitude that were about the door of this houſe; inſomuch that there was no room about, nor any coming near it, ch. ii. 2. or the multitude that came from different parts, and had thronged about him at the ſea-ſide, before he went up into the mountain: theſe underſtanding that he was come down from thence, and was returned to Capernaum, and was at Simon's houſe, flocked thither, in great numbers, to ſee his perſon, hear his doctrines, and obſerve his miracles: ſo that they could not ſo much as eat bread: the preſs was ſo great, and their importunities ſo urgent, either to hear him preach, or have their ſick healed, that Chriſt, and his diſciples, had neither room nor opportunity to eat ſome food for the refreſhment of nature; tho' it was very neceſſary, and high time they had, eſpecially Chriſt, who had been up all night, which he had ſpent in prayer; and had been very buſy that morning in calling and appointing his apoſtles, and inſtructing them what they ſhould do.

Ver. 21. When his friends heard of it, &c.] Not his ſpiritual friends, his diſciples and followers, that believed in him; but his kinſmen, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render the words, who were ſo according to the fleſh; when they heard where he was, and what a croud was about him, ſo that he could not ſo much as take the neceſſaries of life for his refreſhment and ſupport, they went out to lay hold on him: either out of their houſes at Capernaum, or they went forth from Nazareth, where they dwelt, to Capernaum, to take him from this houſe, where he was thronged and preſſed, along with them; where he might have ſome refreſhment without being incommoded, and take ſome reſt, which ſeemed very neceſſary: ſo that this was done in kindneſs to him, and does not deſign any violent action upon him, in order to take him home with them, and to confine him as a mad man; tho' the following words ſeem to incline to ſuch a ſenſe; for they ſaid, he is beſide himſelf: ſome render it, he is gone out; that is, out of doors, to preach again to the people, which they might fear would be greatly detrimental to his health, ſince he had had no ſleep the night before; had been much fatigued all that morning, and for the throng of the people could take no food; ſo that for this reaſon they came to take him with them, to their own habitations, to prevent the ill conſequences of ſuch conſtant exerciſe without refreſhment. Moreover, tho' this may not be the ſenſe of the word, yet it is not to be underſtood of downright madneſs and diſtraction, but of ſome perturbation of mind, which they imagined, or heard, he was under; and anſwers to a phraſe frequently uſed by the Jews, that ſuch an one, נטרפה דעתו, his knowledge is ſnatched away, or his mind is diſturbed; which was ſometimes occaſioned by diſorder of body: ſo it is ſaid [z], "a deaf woman, or one that is fooliſh, or "blind, ושנטרפה דעתה, or whoſe mind is diſturbed; and if there are any wiſe women, they prepare "themſelves, and eat of the oblation." On that phraſe, whoſe mind is diſturbed, the note of Maimonides is, "it means a ſick perſon, whoſe underſtanding is "diſturbed thro' the force of the diſeaſe:" and was ſometimes the caſe of a perſon when near death [a]: and it was uſual to give a perſon that was condemned to die, and going to be executed, a grain of frankincenſe in a cup of wine, כדי שתטרף דעתו, that ſo his knowledge may be ſnatched away, or his mind diſturbed [b], and he intoxicated; that ſo he might not be ſenſible of his pain, or feel his miſery; in all which caſes, there was nothing of proper madneſs: and ſo the kinſmen and friends of Chriſt, having heard of the ſituation that he was in, ſaid one to another, he is in a tranſport and exceſs of mind; his zeal carries him beyond due bounds; he has certainly forgotten himſelf; his underſtanding is diſturbed; he is unmindful of himſelf; takes no care of his health; he will certainly greatly impair it, if he goes on at this rate, praying all night, and preaching all day, without taking any reſt or food: wherefore they came out, in order to diſſuade him from ſuch exceſſive labours, and engage him to go with them, where he might have reſt and refreſhment, and be compoſed, and retire.

Ver. 22. And the Scribes which came down from Jeruſalem, &c.] Or, but the Scribes, &c. who had an averſion to Chriſt, and a different opinion of him: theſe were they, who having heard much of the doctrine and miracles of Chriſt, came down from Jeruſalem, which lay in the upper, and higher part of the land of Iſrael, into Galilee, a low country, to make their obſervations upon him; and take every advantage they could againſt him, being men, in their way, letter learned, and artful, and cunning: theſe ſaid, he hath Beelzebub; or, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, Beelzebub is in him: ſometimes they call him Beelzebub; ſometimes ſay that he caſt out devils by him; and here, that he had him, or was in him; Beelzebub poſſeſſed him, and aſſiſted him, and there was a confederacy and familiarity between them: and by the prince of devils caſteth he out devils; for ſo they reckoned Beelzebub to be; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 25. and xii. 24.

[b] Ib. fol. 43. 1. Bemidbar Rabba, §. 10. fol. 198. 4.

Ver. 23. And he called them unto him, &c.] The Jeruſalem-Scribes, to come nearer to him, and attend to what he had to ſay in defence of his character and miracles: and ſaid unto them in parables; ſimilitudes, and proverbial expreſſions, as the following ſeem to be, how can ſatan caſt out ſatan? or one devil caſt out another? how unreaſonable is it to ſuppoſe it? can it ever be thought that ſuch, whoſe intereſt it is to unite, would ever oppoſe and diſpoſſeſs one another? if therefore, as if he ſhould ſay, I am Beelzebub, or have him, and he is in me, and I am in confederacy with him; was this the caſe, can any think I ſhould ever caſt him out of others, as I do?

Ver. 24. And if a kingdom be divided againſt itſelf, &c.] Any of the kingdoms of this world, and the kingdom of ſatan: that kingdom cannot ſtand; not long; its inteſtine broils and diviſions will ſoon bring it to deſolation; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 25.

Ver. 25. And if a houſe be divided againſt itſelf, &c.] Any family, ſmall or great, that houſe cannot ſtand; its contentions and diſcords will ſoon bring it down from a comfortable and flouriſhing ſituation, to a very diſtreſſed one; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 25.

Ver. 26. And if ſatan riſe up againſt himſelf, &c.] As he muſt do in ſuch a caſe as this, if devils are caſt out by Beelzebub, the prince of devils: and be divided; one devil againſt another, as the above calumny ſuppoſes; he cannot ſtand, but hath an end: his kingdom can't ſtand long, but muſt ſoon come to an end; his power and authority will ſoon be deſtroyed, both over his own ſpecies, and among men; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 26.

Ver. 27. No man can enter into a ſtrong man's houſe, &c.] This is properly a parable; the other ſeem to be proverbs, or ſayings, that were commonly uſed to ſhew the ill conſequences of diſcords, factions, and diviſions, as is explained at large in the note on Matt. xii. 29. which ſee.

Ver. 28. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees, who had not only blaſphemed him, but the Spirit of God alſo: all ſins ſhall be forgiven unto the ſons of men, and blaſphemies wherewith ſoever they ſhall blaſpheme; God, or the Son of God, angels, and men; and that thro' the blood of Chriſt, and when brought to a ſenſe of the evil of them; for tho' pardon is procured before, it is not applied till then; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 31.

Ver. 29. But he that ſhall blaſpheme againſt the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] Againſt his perſon, and the works performed by him, by aſcribing them to diabolical power and influence, as the Scribes did, hath never forgiveneſs: there is no pardon provided in the covenant of grace, nor obtained by the blood of Chriſt for ſuch perſons, or ever applied to them by the Spirit; but is in danger of eternal damnation. The Vulgate Latin reads it, and ſo it is read in an ancient copy of Beza's, guilty of an eternal ſin; a ſin which can never be blotted out, and will never be forgiven, but will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 32.

Ver. 30. Becauſe they ſaid, he hath an unclean ſpirit.] They charged Chriſt with having a devil, and his miracles with being wrought by the help of the devil; when, at the ſame time, they knew in their own conſciences they were works which were wrought by the finger and Spirit of God, and ſo were guilty of the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; the unpardonable ſin, for which there is no remiſſion: and this is mentioned as a reaſon why our Lord ſaid what he did concerning that ſin; becauſe they had been guilty of it, and ſo were liable to everlaſting puniſhment on account of it.

Ver. 31. There came then his brethren and his mother, &c.] At the ſame time he was ſpeaking to the Scribes, who ſeem to be different perſons from his friends and kinſmen, ver. 21. and ſtanding without; for Chriſt was within, in the houſe, talking with the Scribes and Phariſees, and preaching to the people: and the croud being ſo great, that they could not get into the houſe; they ſent unto him, calling him: they not only ſent one in to let him know who they were, and that they were without doors, deſirous to ſpeak with him; but alſo, with a voice as loud as they could, called to him themſelves; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 46.

Ver. 32. And the multitude ſat about him, &c.] In a circle, all around him, to hear him preach; ſo that there was no ſuch thing as the meſſenger coming near him; but the meſſage being whiſpered from one to another, it came to thoſe who ſat neareſt him: and they ſaid unto him, behold thy mother and thy brethren without ſeek for thee: in five of Beza's ancient copies, and in his moſt ancient one, are added, and thy ſiſters: agreeably, Chriſt hereafter makes mention of ſiſter, as well as mother and brother; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 47. and ſo it is read in the Alexandrian copy.

Ver. 33. And he anſwered them, &c.] The multitude that ſat about him, and informed him of his mother and brethren, being without, and deſirous of ſpeaking with him: ſaying, who is my mother, or my brethren? which is ſaid not thro' ignorance or contempt; but either, as diſpleaſed with the interruption given him; or with a view to take an opportunity from hence of expreſſing his ſuperior value to his ſpiritual relations; which looks with no favourable aſpect on the ſuperſtitious notions, and veneration of the virgin Mary among the papiſts; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 48.

Ver. 34. And he looked round about on them which ſat about him, &c.] To find out his diſciples among them, and point them out particularly, by ſtretching forth his hand towards them: and ſaid, behold my mother and my brethren; not in a natural, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; his mother, becauſe, in regeneration, he was formed in them; his brethren, becauſe, by adoption, his God was their God, his father their father; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 49.

Ver. 35. For whoſoever ſhall do the will of God, &c.] By believing in Chriſt, receiving him as a ſaviour, and redeemer, and ſubmitting to him in all his ordinances, as king of ſaints: the ſame is my brother, and my ſiſter, and my mother: ſuch are openly, and manifeſtatively related to Chriſt in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and are as dear to him, and more ſo, than ſuch perſons are who ſtand in ſuch a relation to others, or did to him according to the fleſh. And this ſhows not only the near relation, and ſtrong affection which Chriſt has for his people, but that he is not aſhamed of them; and it may be concluded, that he will reſent, in the keeneſt manner, every injury that is done them; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 50.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. AND he began again to teach by the ſea-ſide, &c.] He went out of the houſe where he was at Capernaum, the ſame day he had the above diſcourſe with the Scribes and Phariſees, and on which his mother and brethren came to ſpeak with him; and from thence he went where he had been before, and taught the people; namely, to the ſea-ſide, the ſhore of the ſea of Galilee, or Tiberias: and there was gathered unto him a great multitude; which followed him from the houſe, and from other parts of the city, and perhaps from the adjacent places: ſo that he entered into a ſhip, and ſat in the ſea; in the ſhip at ſea, at ſome little diſtance from the ſhore; the ſea of Tiberias being rather a lake, and within land, had no tide, and ſo was ſtill and quiet: and the whole multitude was by the ſea on the land; ſtood on the land, all along the ſea-ſhore; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 1, 2.

Ver. 2. And he taught them many things by parables, &c.] As he ſat in the ſhip, and they ſtood on ſhore; and ſaid unto them in his doctrine; as he was teaching them, and delivering unto them the doctrine he had received from his father: tho' the Jews ſay [c], that "the Iſraelites will have no need, לתלמודו של מלך משיח, of the doctrine of the king Meſſiah, in the time to come; becauſe it is ſaid, unto him ſhall the Gentiles ſeek, and not the Iſraelites." But it appears from hence, and many other places, that the Iſraelites both ſtood in need of his doctrine, and ſought after it; and very excellent it was; the doctrine of God, and of the grace of God; and was ſpoken with authority, and in ſuch a manner as never man ſpake, and which he delivered to his apoſtles; and which, if miniſters bring not with them, ſhould not be bid God ſpeed.

Ver. 3. Hearken, behold, there went out a ſower to ſow.] By whom is meant Jeſus Chriſt, who came forth from God as a teacher, and went out into the land of Judæa to preach the Goſpel, which is ſowing ſpiritual things among men; and this may be alſo applicable to any faithful miniſter of the word.

Ver. 4. And it came to paſs as he ſowed, &c.] Whilſt he was preaching the Goſpel, caſting about the precious ſeed of the word, he was laden with: ſome fell by the way-ſide; the common beaten path: the word was diſpenſed among ſome men comparable to it, on whom it lighted, but made no impreſſion; there it lay, tho' not long, and was not inwardly received, and took no root, and conſequently was of no effect: and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up; the devils, who have their abode in the air, eſpecially the prince of the poſſe of them; and the Syriac verſion reads it in the ſingular number, and the fowl came; that ravenous bird of prey, ſatan, who goes about ſeeking what he may devour; and for this purpoſe attends where the word is preached, to hinder its uſefulneſs as much as in him lies.

Ver. 5. And ſome fell on ſtony ground, &c.] The word was preached to ſome perſons who had hearts of ſtone, and which remained ſo: where it had not much earth; and ſo could be received only in a notional and ſuperficial way, but could take no place, ſo as to produce any good effect: and immediately it ſprung up; a ſudden and haſty profeſſion of the word was made, without a powerful experience of it: becauſe it had no depth of earth; if it had, it would have been longer in coming up; more work would have been done by it, which would have required more time, before a profeſſion of it had been made.

Ver. 6. But when the ſun was up, it was ſcorched, &c.] When perſecution aroſe becauſe of the word, and that became very hot and vehement, it tried and pierced thro' this thin ſpeculative knowledge of the word, which could not ſtand before it, and bear the heat of it: and becauſe it had no root, it withered away; the word had only a place in the head, and not in the heart; wherefore the profeſſion of it was ſoon dropped, and came to nothing.

Ver. 7. And ſome fell among thorns, &c.] The word was miniſtred to ſome who were eat up with the cares of the world, and the deceitfulneſs of riches, and other luſts: and the thorns grew up, and choaked it; the word did not take place ſo as to beat down, overcome, and root out theſe things, nor even to weaken, and keep under, and prevent the influence of them; but theſe got the aſcendant of the word, and prevailed over it, and made it altogether uſeleſs and unſucceſsful: for whilſt it was adminiſtred, the minds of theſe perſons were after their riches and worldly things, and gave no heed to the word; and at laſt were prevailed upon, not to attend upon it, but drop the profeſſion of it: and it yielded no fruit; it was not the means of grace; faith did not come by it, nor any other grace; nor did it produce good works in the life and converſation.

Ver. 8. And other fell on good ground, &c.] The word was preached to ſome whoſe hearts were diſpoſed by the Spirit and grace of God to receive it; and their underſtandings were enlightened by it; and they had a ſavoury and comfortable experience of the truths of it, it coming with power to them; it was a good word to them, and thro' the grace of God they became good by it; a good work of grace was wrought upon their ſouls, and they were filled with all goodneſs and righteouſneſs: and did yield fruit that ſprang up, and increaſed; they not only appeared, and made an outward profeſſion of the word, and brought forth a little ſhow of fruit, which comes to nothing, as in others; but they were filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, and increaſed with the increaſe of God, and grew in grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus, and continued to bring forth fruit to the end of their lives: and brought forth ſome thirty, and ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred; that is, ſo many fold: in ſome the word of God produced larger and greater effects; the grace of God was more in exerciſe in ſome, than in others, and ſome were more fruitful and uſeful; yet in all of them there was true grace, and a meaſure of it; ſome degree of lively exerciſe, and ſome uſefulneſs.

Ver. 9. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] To the multitude of hearers that were on the ſea-ſhore attending to the word preached, and among whom, doubtleſs, there were all thoſe ſorts of hearers mentioned in this parable: he that hath ears to hear, let him hear; obſerve, and take notice of what has been ſaid, as being of the greateſt moment and importance: for a larger explanation and illuſtration of this parable, ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

[c] Bereſhith Rabba, §. 98. fol. 85. 3.

Ver. 10. And when he was alone, &c.] After the multitude was diſmiſſed, and he either remained in the ſhip, or left it, and retired to ſome private place, it may be to Simon's houſe in Capernaum. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, when they were alone; meaning as follows, they that were about him with the twelve; that is, ſuch diſciples of his, who beſides the twelve, conſtantly attended him; perhaps thoſe who now were, or hereafter were the ſeventy diſciples. The Vulgate Latin reads, the twelve that were with him. In Beza's moſt ancient copy 'tis read, his diſciples; and to this agrees the Perſic verſion; and ſo the other Evangeliſts, Matthew and Luke, relate, that his diſciples came and aſked of him the parable; the meaning of it, and why he choſe this way of ſpeaking to the people, Matt. xiii. 10. Luke viii. 9. tho' that word may include others beſides the twelve.

Ver. 11. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] His diſciples; unto you it is given to know the myſtery of the kingdom of God; or the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven, the ſecrets of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the myſterious doctrines of grace; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 11. but unto them that are without; to ſtrangers, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, who were not the diſciples of Chriſt, nor admitted to any intimacy with him; who came only to amuſe themſelves with the ſight of his perſon and miracles: all theſe things are done in parables; are wrapt up in dark ſayings, and figurative expreſſions, the ſound of which they heard, and might be pleaſed with the pretty ſimilies made uſe of, but underſtood not the ſpiritual meaning of them.

Ver. 12. That ſeeing they may ſee, &c.] Which is the end and reaſon of his ſpeaking to them in parables. The paſſage referr'd to is in Iſ. vi. 9, 10. See the note on Matt. xiii. 14, 15.

Ver. 13. And he ſaid unto them, know ye not this parable? &c.] So eaſy to be underſtood, taken from things common, and which fall under every one's obſervation: and how then will you know all parables? if not this ſingle one, and which is ſo plain, how will ye be able to underſtand the numerous parables hereafter to be related, and which will be much more difficult?

Ver. 14. The ſower ſoweth the word.] Though our Lord thought fit to give the above gentle rebuke to his diſciples for their dulneſs; yet he condeſcends to favour them with an interpretation of the above parable, which here begins: by this it appears, that the ſeed in the parable, before delivered, and which fell on different ſorts of ground, is the word of God, which was preached to hearers of different diſpoſitions: the word is the word of life and truth; the word of peace and reconciliation; the word of faith and righteouſneſs; the word of ſalvation; the word which publiſhes and declares all theſe to be in and by Jeſus Chriſt.

Ver. 15. And theſe are they by the way-ſide, where the word is ſown, &c.] Such hearers are repreſented by the way-ſide, in which the ſeed fell; who, coming where the Goſpel is preached, ſtop a while and hear it, and ſo are only caſual and accidental hearers of it: but when they have heard; and indeed, whilſt they are hearing, and before they are well got out of the place of hearing, ſatan cometh immediately, and taketh away the word that was ſown in their hearts. The devil, ſignified by the fowl, or fowls of the air, immediately takes notice of ſuch hearers, and is very buſy with them; filling their minds with other things ſuitable to their diſpoſitions, and ſetting before them other objects, whereby their minds are, at once, taken off from what they have been hearing; ſo that all that they have obſerved, and laid up in their memories, is loſt at once, and never thought of any more.

Ver. 16. And theſe are they likewiſe which are ſown on ſtony ground, &c.] Such ſort of hearers of the word are ſignified by the ſtony ground, on which the ſeed were ſown, who are conſtant hearers of the word, and have ſome underſtanding of it; and ſome ſort of affection for it, and yet their hearts are not truly broken by it; they are not brought to a thorough ſight and ſenſe of ſin, and of their need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; their ſtony hearts are not taken away, and hearts of fleſh given them: who when they have heard the word, immediately receive it with gladneſs; ſeem highly pleaſed, and greatly delighted with it, as being a well-connected ſcheme of things; and which declares things, as heaven and eternal happineſs, which they, from a principle of ſelf-love, are deſirous of enjoying.

Ver. 17. And have no root in themſelves, &c.] The word has no root in their hearts, only in their natural affections: nor is the root of grace in them; there is no heart-work, only ſpeculative notions, and flaſhy affections: and ſo endure but for a time; they continue hearers and profeſſors of the Goſpel but for a ſmall ſeaſon; like the Jews, who rejoiced in the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt for a while, and then left him: afterwards when affliction, or perſecution ariſeth for the word's ſake, immediately they are offended. As ſoon as any ſmall degree of trouble comes upon them, and eſpecially when there is a hot perſecution of the profeſſors of religion, becauſe of the Goſpel they have embraced; ſuch hearers are ſtumbled at theſe things, and can't bear the loſs of any thing, or endure any thing ſevere for the ſake of the word they have profeſſed a pleaſure in; and therefore rather than ſuffer, they relinquiſh at once their profeſſion of it.

Ver. 18. And theſe are they that are ſown among thorns, &c.] Such hearers of the word are deſigned by the thorny ground, upon which other ſeed fell, as it was ſown, who are of worldly diſpoſitions; who are immoderately careful and anxious about the things of this life, and are bent upon acquiring earthly riches, and gratifying their carnal and ſenſual appetites: ſuch as hear the word; who notwithſtanding are prevailed upon thro' cuſtom, or the dictates of their conſciences, to attend upon the miniſtry of the word.

Ver. 19. And the cares of this world, &c.] The perplexing and diſtreſſing cares of it to get as much of it as they can, for themſelves and families, fill their minds, and poſſeſs their ſouls even when and while they are hearing the word: and the deceitfulneſs of riches; or riches which are deceitful, eſpecially when truſted in, and being obtained, they don't give the ſatisfaction they promiſe: and the luſts of other things entring in; carnal deſires after other objects, which are pleaſing to the ſenſual mind entering into their hearts, and gaining the aſcendant there: choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful; theſe being more attended to than the word is, that is quite loſt, and becomes uſeleſs, and unprofitable.

Ver. 20. And theſe are they which are ſown on good ground, &c.] Such hearers who are intended by the good ground on which other ſeed fell, are thoſe who are made good men by the grace of God; for there is none good naturally, nor that doeth good, no not one: theſe are ſuch who hear the word, and receive it; as the word of God, in whoſe hearts it works effectually; who receive it not into their heads only, but into their hearts; and having received it, hold it faſt, and abide by it in the worſt of times: and bring forth fruit, ſome thirty fold, ſome ſixty, and ſome an hundred; all bring forth good fruit of the ſame quality, tho' not of the ſame quantity: for a larger expoſition of this explanation of the parable, ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 19, 20, 21, 22, 23.

Ver. 21. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] At the ſame time after he had explained the parable of the ſower; for tho' the following parabolical and proverbial expreſſions were delivered by Chriſt at other, and different times, and ſome of them twice, as related by other Evangeliſts; yet they might be all of them expreſſed or repeated at this time, by our Lord, ſhewing why he explained the above parable to his diſciples; and that tho' he delivered the myſteries of the Goſpel in parables to them that were without, yet it was not his deſign that theſe things ſhould be always kept a ſecret, and that from all men: for as the Goſpel might be compared to ſeed, ſo likewiſe to a candle, the deſign and uſe of which is to give light to men: wherefore he aſks, is a candle brought to be put under a buſhel, or under a bed, and not to be ſet on a candleſtick? when a candle is brought into a room, in the night, where company are together, to converſe, or read, or work; is it proper that it ſhould be covered with a buſhel, or any other hollow veſſel? or when brought into a bed-chamber, is it right to put it under the bed? is it not moſt fitting and convenient, that it ſhould be ſet in a candleſtick, and then it will be of uſe to all in the room? ſo the Goſpel, which is the candle of the Lord, he had lighted up in the evening of the Jewiſh world, in the land of Judæa; it was not his will that it ſhould be always, and altogether, and from all men, covered with parables, and dark ſayings, without any explanation of them; but that the light of it ſhould be communicated, eſpecially to them his diſciples, who were to be the lights of the world, and which were to ſhine openly before men, for their good, and the glory of his heavenly Father; ſee Matt. v. 14, 15, 16.

Ver. 22. For there is nothing hid, &c.] In theſe parables, and figurative expreſſions uſed by Chriſt, which ſhall not be manifeſted, ſooner or later, to his diſciples: neither was any thing kept ſecret; any doctrine of the Goſpel, or myſtery of the kingdom: but that it ſhould come abroad; it was deſigned to be publiſhed in all Judæa, and afterwards, throughout the whole world, for the benefit of God's choſen ones, to their converſion, comfort, and edification: wherefore, it becomes the miniſters of the Goſpel to keep back nothing that may be profitable to the churches, nor ſhun to declare the whole counſel of God; but faithfully diſpenſe the myſteries of grace, and commend the truth to every man's conſcience, without any fear of men, or dreading the effects and conſequences of things; ſince nothing is declared in the word, or made known, but with a deſign to be publiſhed to others, to anſwer ſome divine end and purpoſe; ſee the note on Matt. x. 26.

Ver. 23. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.] What is now delivered, being very momentous and important; ſee Matt. xi. 15.

Ver. 24. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] At the ſame time, tho' he had ſaid what follows at another time, ſtill continuing his diſcourſe with his diſciples: take heed what you hear; diligently attend to it, ſeek to underſtand it, and lay it up in your minds, and memories, that it may be of uſe to you in time to come, and you may be uſeful in communicating it to others: with what meaſure ye mete, it ſhall be meaſured unto you; a common proverb among the Jews, uſed on various occaſions, and to different purpoſes; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 2. Here it ſeems to intimate, that if the diſciples carefully hearkened to what they heard from Chriſt, and ſtudiouſly laboured to underſtand it, and faithfully diſpenſed it to others, in return, a larger meaſure, and greater degree of ſpiritual knowledge, would be beſtowed upon them: for it follows, and unto you that hear, ſhall more be given; that is, that hear ſo as to underſtand, keep, and make a good uſe of what they hear, more ſhall be communicated to them; they ſhall have an increaſe of knowledge in the doctrines of grace, and myſteries of the Goſpel.

Ver. 25. For he that hath, to him ſhall be given, &c.] He that has Goſpel-light and knowledge, and makes a proper uſe of it, he ſhall have more; his path ſhall be as the path of the juſt, which ſhines more and more to the perfect day; the means of grace and knowledge ſhall be bleſſed to him, he attending conſtantly thereon, that he ſhall arrive to ſuch a knowledge of the Son of God as to be a perfect man in compariſon of others, who are in a lower claſs; and ſhall come to the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt, ſhall grow up to maturity, and be a man in underſtanding: and he that has the truth of grace, tho' its beginning is but ſmall, yet that making and keeping him humble, as it always does, he ſhall have more grace, or that he has, ſhall open and enlarge in its actings and exerciſes; his faith ſhall grow exceedingly, he ſhall abound in hope thro' the power of the Holy Ghoſt, and his love to God, and Chriſt, and to the ſaints, ſhall be greater and greater; and he ſhall increaſe in humility, patience, ſelf-denial, &c. and ſo he that has gifts for public uſefulneſs, and does not neglect them, but ſtirs them up for the profit of others, he ſhall have an increaſe of them; he ſhall ſhine as a ſtar in Chriſt's right hand, and appear brighter and brighter in the firmament of the church: and he that hath not, from him ſhall be taken, even that which he hath; or ſeemed to have, or thought he had, Luke viii. 18. a ſaying often uſed by Chriſt, both with reſpect to the ignorant Jews, and profeſſing Chriſtians, and even, as here, to the diſciples themſelves, reſpect perhaps being had to Judas. He that has only a ſpeculative notion of the Goſpel, and is without any experience and practice of it, in courſe of time his candle is put out; his light becomes darkneſs; he drops and denies the truths he held, and relinquiſhes the profeſſion of them: and he that has only counterfeit grace, a feigned faith, a falſe hope, and a diſſembled love, in due time; theſe will be diſcovered, and the name of them, and the character he bore, on account of them, will be taken from him: for true grace is never taken away, nor loſt; it is a ſolid, permanent thing, and is inſeparable to everlaſting glory and happineſs: but bare notions of the Goſpel, and a mere ſhow of grace, are unſtable and tranſient things; as alſo are the greateſt gifts without the grace of God. Judas had doubtleſs all the appearance of a true Chriſtian; he had the Goſpel committed to him, and the knowledge of it, and gifts qualifying him to preach it, and a commiſſion from Chriſt for it, yea, even a power of working miracles to confirm what he preached; and yet not having true grace, all was taken away from him, and were of no uſe unto him in the buſineſs of ſalvation: and ſo ſometimes it is, that even in this life the idol and worthleſs ſhepherd has his right arm clean dried up, and his right eye utterly darkened; his miniſterial light and abilities are taken away from him; theſe being either not uſed at all by him, or uſed to bad purpoſes; ſee Matt. xiii. 12. and xxv. 29.

Ver. 26. And he ſaid, &c.] He went on ſaying the following parable, which was delivered at the ſame time that the parable of the ſower was, tho' omitted by Matthew; and is here placed between that, and the other concerning the grain of muſtard-ſeed; which ſhows the time when it was ſpoken. The deſign of it is to ſet forth the nature of the word, and the miniſtration of it; the conduct of the miniſters of the Goſpel, when they have diſpenſed it; the imperceptibleneſs of its ſpringing and growth; the fruitfulneſs of it, when it has taken root, without the help of man; the gradual increaſe of grace under the inſtrumentality of the word; and the gathering of gracious ſouls, when grace is brought to maturity: ſo is the kingdom of God; ſuch is the nature of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and ſuch are the things that are done in it, as may fitly be repreſented by the following; as if a man ſhould caſt ſeed into the ground: by the man, is not meant Chriſt, for he ſleeps not; and beſides, he knows how the ſeed ſprings and grows; but any Goſpel-miniſter, who is ſent forth by Chriſt, bearing precious ſeed: and by ſeed is intended, not gracious perſons, the children of the kingdom, as in the parable of the tares; nor the grace of God in them, tho' that is an incorruptible and an abiding ſeed; but the word of God, or Goſpel of Chriſt, ſo called for its ſmallneſs, the diminutive character it bears, and contempt it is had in by ſome; and for its choiceneſs and excellency in itſelf, and in the account of others; and for its generative virtue under a divine influence: for the Goſpel is like the manna, which was a ſmall round thing, as a coriander ſeed; and as that was contemptible in the eyes of the Iſraelites, ſo the preaching of the Goſpel is, to them that periſh, fooliſhneſs; and yet it is choice and precious ſeed in itſelf, and to thoſe who know the value of it, by whom it is preferred to thouſands of gold and ſilver; and, as worthleſs and unpromiſing it may ſeem to be, it has a divine virtue put into it; and, under the influence of powerful and efficacious grace, it is the means of regenerating ſouls, and produces fruit in them, which will remain unto everlaſting life: though, as the ſeed is of no uſe this way, unleſs it is ſown in the earth, and covered there; ſo is the Goſpel of no uſe for regeneration, unleſs it is by the power of God let into the heart, and received there, where, thro' that power, it works effectually. By caſting it into the earth, the preaching of the word is deſigned; which, like caſting ſeed into the earth, is done with the ſame ſort of ſeed only, and not with different ſorts, with plenty of it, and at the proper time, whatever diſcouragements there may be, and with great ſkill and judgment, committing it to God to raiſe it up again: for the faithful diſpenſers of the word don't ſpread divers and ſtrange doctrines; their miniſtry is all of a-piece; they always ſow the ſame-like precious ſeed, without any mixture of the tares of error and hereſy; and they don't deal it out in a narrow and niggardly way; they don't reſtrain and conceal any part of truth, but plentifully diſtribute it, and declare the whole counſel of God; and tho' there may be many diſcouragements attend them, many temptations ariſe to put off from ſowing the word; the weather bad, ſtorms and tempeſts ariſe, reproaches and perſecutions come thick and faſt, ſtill they go on; uſing all that heavenly ſkill, prudence, and diſcretion God has given them, preaching the word in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; and when they have done, they leave their work with the Lord, knowing that Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but it is God only that gives the increaſe: and by the ground, into which it is caſt, is meant the hearers of the word, who are of different ſorts; ſome like the way-ſide, others like the ſtony-ground, and others like the thorny earth, and ſome like good ground, as here; whoſe hearts are broke up by the Spirit of God, the ſtonineſs of them taken away, and they made ſuſceptive of the good word.

Ver. 27. And ſhould ſleep, &c.] That is, the man that caſts in the ſeed, who repreſents the miniſters of the Goſpel: and, as applied to them, is not to be underſtood of natural ſleep, and indulging themſelves in that; much leſs of ſpiritual ſloth and indolence, as if they cared not what became of the ſeed ſown, whether it ſprung up, and came to any thing, or no; for neither of theſe belong to the characters of the true miniſters of the word: for tho' bodily ſleep in them, as in other men, is neceſſary for the ſupport of nature, and to put them in a capacity of diſcharging their work; yet perhaps none have leſs of it than ſtudious and laborious preachers of the Goſpel; and much leſs do they indulge a ſpiritual ſleep and ſlothfulneſs; tho' this may ſometimes attend them, as well as others: but then, whilſt they ſleep, in this ſenſe, tares are ſown, and they ſpring up, and not the good ſeed of the word, as in this parable; beſides, as they labour in the word and doctrine, by ſtudying and preaching it, ſo they follow their miniſtrations with inceſſant prayers that they be ſucceeded to the converſion of ſinners, and comfort of ſaints; nor can they be eaſy, unleſs they have ſome ſeals of their miniſtry: but rather, this may be underſtood of the ſleep of death; for ſo it often is, that the ſeed ſown by them does not appear in the fruits of it to the churches of Chriſt, among whom they have miniſtred, until after they are fallen aſleep in Jeſus: tho' it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of their holy ſecurity, confidence, and ſatisfaction in their own minds, that it will turn to profit and advantage, both to the good of ſouls, and glory of God, not deſpairing of ſucceſs; but having left their work with their Lord, they ſit down eaſy and ſatisfied, believing that the word ſhall proſper to the thing whereunto it is ſent: and riſe night and day; which ſhows their diligence and laboriouſneſs, and their conſtant attendance to other parts of their work, riſing up early, and ſitting up late, to prepare for, and diſcharge their miniſterial work; and their continued expectation of the ſpringing up of the ſeed ſown, which accordingly does in proper time: and the ſeed ſhould ſpring and grow up, he knoweth not how; 'tis a myſtery in nature, how the ſeed under the clods, where it dies before it is quickened, ſhould ſpring and grow up, and bring forth fruit; and ſo it is in grace, how the word of God firſt operates on a ſinner's heart, and becomes the ingrafted word there; the time when, and much leſs the manner how, grace, by this means, is implanted in the heart, are not known to a ſoul itſelf, and ſtill leſs to the miniſters of the word, who ſometimes never know any thing of it; and when they do, not till ſome time after: this work is done ſecretly, and powerfully, under the influence of divine grace, without their knowledge, tho' by them as inſtruments; ſo that though the ſowing and planting are theirs, all the increaſe is God's: this may encourage attendance on the miniſtry of the word, and teach us to aſcribe the work of converſion entirely to the power and grace of God.

Ver. 28. For the earth bringeth forth fruit of herſelf, &c.] Without any further help, or cultivation from the huſbandman; though under the influence of the ſun, dews, and ſhowers of rain from heaven: this is ſaid, not to denote that man of himſelf, upon hearing the word, can bring forth the fruit of grace in himſelf; he cannot regenerate himſelf, nor quicken, nor convert himſelf; he can't believe in Chriſt, nor love the Lord of himſelf; nor repent of his ſin, nor begin, or carry on the good work; he can neither ſanctify his heart, nor mortify the deeds of the body; or even bring forth the fruits of good works, when converted. For all theſe things are owing to the Spirit, power, and grace of God: men are regenerated according to the abundant mercy of God, of water and of the Spirit, by the word of truth, through the ſovereign will and pleaſure of God; and they are quickened, who before were dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and were as dry bones, by the Spirit of God breathing upon them: converſion in the firſt production, is the Lord's work; turn thou me, and I ſhall be turned: faith in Chriſt is not of ourſelves, it is the gift of God; and ſo is repentance unto life; love is one of the fruits of the Spirit, and in ſhort, the whole work of grace is not by might, nor by power of man, but by the Spirit of the Lord of hoſts; who begins and carries on, and performs it until the day of Chriſt: the work of ſanctification, is therefore called the ſanctification of the Spirit; and it is through him, the deeds of the body are mortified: and indeed, without Chriſt, believers themſelves can do nothing at all; even can't perform good works, or do any action that is truly and ſpiritually good. But the deſign is to ſhew, that as the earth without human power, without the huſbandman, under the influence of the heavens, brings forth fruit; ſo without human power, without the Goſpel miniſter, the word having taken root under divine influence, through the ſun of righteouſneſs, the dews of divine grace, and operations of the bleſſed Spirit, it riſes up and brings forth fruit: firſt the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear; which, as it very aptly deſcribes the progreſs of the ſeed from firſt to laſt; ſo it very beautifully repreſents the gradual increaſe of the work of grace, under the inſtrumentality of the word, accompanied with the Spirit and power of God. Grace at firſt appearance is very ſmall, like the ſmall green ſpire, when it firſt ſhoots out of the earth: light into a man's ſelf, his heart, his ſtate and condition, in the knowledge of Chriſt, and the doctrines of the Goſpel, is but very ſmall; he is one of little faith, and weak in the exerciſe of it: faith is but at firſt a ſmall glimmering view of Chriſt, a venture upon him, a peradventure there may be life and ſalvation for ſuch an one in him; it comes at length to a reliance and leaning upon him; and 'tis ſome time before the ſoul can walk alone by faith on him: its experience of the love of God is but ſmall, but in proceſs of time, there's a growth and an increaſe; light increaſes, which ſhines more and more unto the perfect day; faith grows ſtronger and ſtronger; experience of the love of God is enlarged; and the believer wades in theſe waters of the ſanctuary; not only as at firſt up to the ankles, but to the knees and loins; when at length they are a broad river to ſwim in, and which cannot be paſſed over.

Ver. 29. But when the fruit is brought forth, &c.] Unto perfection, and is fully ripe; ſignifying that when grace is brought to maturity, and faith is performed with power, and the good work begun is perfected; then, as the huſbandman, immediately he putteth in the ſickle; and cuts its down, and gathers it in; becauſe the harveſt is come; at death, or at the end of the world, which the harveſt repreſents: when all the elect of God are called by grace, and grace in them is brought to its perfection, and they have brought forth all the fruit they were ordained to bear, they'll then be all gathered in; either by Chriſt himſelf, who comes into his garden, and gathers his lillies by death; or by the angels, the reapers, at the cloſe of time, who will gather the elect from the four winds; or the miniſters of the Goſpel, who ſhall come again with joy, bringing their ſheaves with them; being able to obſerve with pleaſure a greater increaſe, and more fruit of their labours, than they knew of, or expected.

Ver. 30. And he ſaid, &c.] Still continuing his diſcourſe on this ſubject, and in order to convey to the minds of his diſciples clearer ideas of the Goſpel diſpenſation, the ſucceſs of the Goſpel, and the uſefulneſs of their miniſtration of it, for their encouragement, how unpromiſing ſoever things might then be: whereunto ſhall we liken the kingdom of God, or with what compariſon ſhall we compare it? It was uſual with the Jewiſh doctors, when about to illuſtrate any thing in a parabolical way, to begin with ſuch like queſtions; as, למה הדבר דומה, to what is this thing like[d]? when the anſwer is to ſuch or ſuch a thing, as here.

Ver. 31. It is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, &c.] That is, the kingdom of God ſpoken of in the preceding verſe, is like unto a grain of muſtard-ſeed; by which is meant, either the Goſpel, or the Goſpel church-ſtate, or the grace of God in the hearts of his people, and it may include them all: the Goſpel is ſo called, becauſe it treats of the two latter; but more eſpecially, becauſe it brings life and immortality to light, or points to the kingdom of heaven, directs the way unto it, and ſhews what qualifies perſons for it, and gives them a claim unto it: and the Goſpel church-ſtate may be ſo called, becauſe here Chriſt dwells, and rules as king; the members of it are his ſubjects, and the ordinances of it are his laws, to which they are obedient: and the grace of God in the hearts of his people may be ſo called, becauſe it is a governing principle in them; it reigns through righteouſneſs unto eternal life, and by it Chriſt reigns in and over them: now the kingdom of God in each of theſe ſenſes, may be compared to a grain of muſtard-ſeed, for the ſmallneſs of it, as follows; which when it is ſown in the earth, is leſs than all the ſeeds that be in the earth. The Goſpel was firſt preached by very few perſons, and theſe of no figure and account, eſpecially at their firſt ſetting out. Joh the Baptiſt came preaching the kingdom of God cloathed with a garment of camel's hair, and wit a leathern girdle about his loins; our Lord him ſelf made no pompous appearance, there was n form nor comelineſs in him; he was a man of ſor rows, and acquainted with griefs, and of a mean de ſcent and occupation; his diſciples were fiſherme and illiterate perſons; thoſe to whom it was preach ed, and by whom it was received at firſt, were b few, and theſe were the poor and the unlearne and publicans and ſinners. The Goſpel churc ſtate at firſt, conſiſted of very few perſons, Chriſt and his twelve apoſtles; and at his deat the number of the diſciples at Jeruſalem, men and women, were but an hundred and twenty; the ſeveral Goſpel churches formed in the Gentile world, roſe from ſmall beginnings; from the converſion of a very few perſons, and theſe the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things. The grace of God in the hearts of his people at firſt, is very little; it can ſcarcely be diſcerned by themſelves, and is ready to be deſpiſed by others; their light and knowledge, their faith and experience, being ſo exceeding ſmall.

Ver. 32. But when it is ſown it grows up, &c.] So the Goſpel, when it was preached, it ſpread notwithſtanding all the oppoſition made againſt it by the Jews and Gentiles: there was no ſtopping it; though the Jewiſh Sanhedrim charged the apoſtles to ſpeak no more in the name of Jeſus, they regarded them not; though Herod ſtretched forth his hands againſt the church, and killed one apoſtle, and put another in priſon, yet the word of God grew and multiplied, Acts xii. 1, 2, 3, 24. and Goſpel churches when ſet up, whether in Judæa, or among the Gentiles, preſently had additions made unto them, and grew up, as holy temples in the Lord: and wherever the grace of God is really implanted, there's a growing in it, and in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus: and becometh greater than all herbs: the Goſpel exceeds the traditions of the Jews, and the philoſophy of the Gentiles, and any human ſcheme whatever, in its nature, uſefulneſs, and the largeneſs of its ſpread: and the Goſpel church-ſtate will e'er long fill the world, and all nations ſhall flow unto it; when the Jews ſhall be converted, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come, it will be a greater kingdom, than any of the kingdoms of the earth ever were: and the grace of God in the heart, is vaſtly above nature, and does that which nature can never perform; and which ſpreads and enlarges, and at laſt iſſues in eternal glory: and ſhooteth out great branches, ſo that the fowls of the air may lodge under the ſhadow of it: by whom are meant, ſaints; ſuch to whom the Goſpel is come in power, and who have the grace of God wrought in their hearts, who are partakers of the heavenly calling: theſe come where the Goſpel is preached, and where gracious ſouls are met together, even in the ſeveral Goſpel churches; where they not only come and go, but where they lodge, abide, and continue, under the ſhadow of the Goſpel, and Goſpel ordinances, and that with great delight and pleaſure; ſinging ſongs of praiſe to God, for his electing and redeeming love, and for calling grace, and for all ſpiritual bleſſings, and Goſpel privileges: for a larger explanation and illuſtration of this parable, ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 31, 32.

Ver. 33. And with many ſuch parables, &c.] As thoſe of the tares, of the leaven in three meaſures of meal, of the treaſure hid in the field, the pearl of great price, the net caſt into the ſea, and of the Scribe inſtructed unto the kingdom of God; which though not related at length here, are by the Evangeliſt Matthew, in ch. xiii. together with others elſewhere: ſpake he the word unto them; preached the Goſpel to the multitude, as they were able to bear it: meaning either that he condeſcended to their weakneſs, accommodated himſelf to their capacities, and made uſe of the plaineſt ſimilies; and took his compariſon from things in nature, the moſt known and obvious, that what he intended might more eaſily be underſtood: or rather, he ſpoke the word to them in parables, as they were able to hear, without underſtanding them; and in ſuch a manner on purpoſe, that they might not underſtand; for had he more clearly expreſſed the things relating to himſelf, as the Meſſiah, and to the Goſpel diſpenſation, ſo as that they could have took in his meaning, ſuch were their pride, their wickedneſs, and the rancour of their minds, that they would have at once roſe up, and attempted to have deſtroyed him.

Ver. 34. But without a parable ſpake he not unto them, &c.] For the above reaſon, as well as for the accompliſhment of ſcripture; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 34, 35. And when they were alone, he expounded all things to his diſciples; after they returned with him from the ſea-ſide, to the houſe in Capernaum, where he uſually was when there; ſee Matt. xiii. 36. The multitude being diſmiſſed, he unfolded and explained all theſe parables to his diſciples, and led them into a large knowledge of himſelf, and the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven; whereby they were furniſhed for the work he had called them to, and deſigned them for.

Ver. 35. And the ſame day when the even was come, &c.] After he had finiſhed his parables among the multitude, and had explained them to his diſciples: he ſaith unto them; his diſciples, let us paſs over unto the other ſide: that is, of the ſea of Galilee, or lake of Genneſaret, to the country of the Gadarenes, and Gergeſenes; with a view for retirement and reſt, after the fatigue of the day; and for the trial of the faith of his diſciples, by a ſtorm which he knew would ariſe, whilſt they were on the ſea; and for the ſake of a miracle he was to work on the other ſide, after related.

Ver. 36. And when they had ſent away the multitude, &c.] Who had been attending him all day on the ſea-ſhore; though they ſeem to have been diſmiſſed by Chriſt, when he went into the houſe, and privately interpreted the parables to his diſciples; ſee Matt. xiii. 36. wherefore it is poſſible, that upon Chriſt's going to the ſea-ſhore again, in order to take boat for the other ſide, they might gather together again; when the diſciples acquainted them that he was not about to preach any more to them, but was going to the other ſide of the lake; upon which they departed: and they took him even as he was in the ſhip; which may be underſtood of his being taken and carried in the ſhip, in which he had been preaching all the day, without being moved into another; though this does not ſo well agree with his quitting that, and going home to his houſe in Capernaum; where, being alone with the diſciples, he opened the parables to them. Some think it refers to the ſituation and poſture in which he laid himſelf, as ſoon as he entered the ſhip; placing himſelf at the ſtern, and laying his head upon a pillow there, and ſo they carried him: others, that they took him into the ſhip, as he was alone without the multitude, who were ſent away, only the diſciples with him, which ſeems beſt: and there were alſo with him other little ſhips; or boats, that were in company with that, in which Chriſt was; and had in them either ſea-faring men upon buſineſs, taking fiſh, or carrying paſſengers over; or might have in them perſons, who were going along with Chriſt to the other ſide: theſe ſeem to be ordered in providence to be in company, that they might be witneſſes of the after miracle.

Ver. 37. And there aroſe a great ſtorm of wind, &c.] Called Lælaps, a wind that is ſuddenly whirled about upwards and downwards, and is ſaid to be a ſtorm, or tempeſt of wind with rain; it was a ſort of a hurricane: and the waves beat into the ſhip, ſo that it was full; of water, and ready to ſink. Beza ſays in one copy it is read, βυθιζεσθαι, θαι, and ſo in one of Stephens's. It was immerſed, covered all over with water, and was going down at once to the bottom; ſo that they were in imminent danger, in the utmoſt extremity; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 24.

Ver. 38. And he was in the hinder part of the ſhip, &c.] That is, Chriſt was in the ſtern of the ſhip: the Perſic verſion renders it, he was in the bottom of the ſhip, in a corner, but very wrongly; here he was aſleep on a pillow, which ſome ſay was a wooden one, framed at the ſtern: however, he was faſt aſleep on it, being greatly fatigued with the work of the day; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 24. And they awake him, and ſay unto him, Maſter, careſt thou not that we periſh? The diſciples came to him and jogged him, and awoke him out of ſleep; ſaying, Maſter, ariſe, and ſave us, or we are loſt: haſt thou no concern for us? how canſt thou lie ſleeping here, when we are in ſuch danger? are our lives of no account with thee? is it a matter of no moment with thee, whether we are ſaved or loſt? They ſeem to ſay this, not ſo much praying and interrogating, as complaining and reproving.

Ver. 39. And he aroſe and rebuked the wind, &c.] He aroſe from off his pillow, and ſtood up; and in a majeſtic and authoritative way reproved the wind, as if it was a ſervant that had exceeded his commiſſion; at which he ſhews ſome reſentment: and ſaid unto the ſea, peace, be ſtill; as if that which was very tumultuous and boiſterous, and threatened with ſhipwrack and the loſs of lives, had raged too much and too long: and the wind ceaſed, and there was a great calm; which was very unuſual and extraordinary; for after the wind has ceaſed, and the ſtorm is over, the waters of the ſea being agitated thereby, keep raging, and in a violent motion, for a conſiderable time; whereas here, as ſoon as ever the word was ſpoken, immediately, at once, the wind ceaſed, and the ſea was calmed: a clear proof this, that he muſt be the moſt high God, who gathers the winds in his fiſts, and ſtills the noiſe of the ſeas and their waves.

Ver. 40. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] His diſciples, why are ye ſo fearful? ſince he was with them in perſon, whoſe power to keep and preſerve them, they had no room to queſtion, when they reflected on the miracles they had ſo lately ſeen performed by him: how is it that ye have no faith? That is, in exerciſe: faith they had, but it was very ſmall, and ſcarcely to be called faith: they did indeed apply to him to ſave them, which ſhowed ſome faith in him; but then they feared it was too late, and that they were paſt all hope, and were juſt periſhing; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 26.

Ver. 41. And they feared exceedingly, &c.] That is, the men in the ſhip, the mariners to whom the ſhip belonged, and who had the management of it: and ſaid to one another, as perſons in the greateſt amazement, what manner of man is this, that even the wind and the ſea obey him? Surely this perſon muſt not be a mere man; he muſt be more than a man; he muſt be truly God, that has ſuch power over the wind and ſea. This beſt ſuits with the mariners, ſince the diſciples muſt have known before, who and what he was; though they might be more eſtabliſhed and confirmed in the truth of Chriſt's deity, by this wonderful inſtance of his power.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. AND they came over unto the other ſide of the ſea, &c.] Of Galilee, or Tiberias; into the country of the Gadarenes: in the Evangeliſt Matthew it is called, the country of the Gergeſenes, as it is here in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions. The Vulgate Latin reads, of the Geraſenes, and ſo ſome copies, from Geraſa, a place in the ſame country; but the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, Gadarenes, as do moſt copies; ſo called from Gadara, a city either adjacent to, or within the country of the Gergeſenes; which was called by both names, from theſe different places. It was not far from Tiberias, the place from whence this ſea has its name, over which Chriſt and his diſciples paſſed, John vi. 1. Chammath was a mile from [e] Tiberias, and this Chammath was ſo near to the country of Gadara, that it is often called, חמת דגדר, Chammath of Gadara [f]; unleſs it ſhould be rather rendered, the hot baths of Gadara: for ſo it is [g] ſaid, that at Gadara are the hot baths of Syria; which may be the ſame with the hot baths of Tiberias, ſo often mentioned in the Jewiſh writings [h]; hence the town of Chammath had its name, which was ſo near to Tiberias, that it is ſometimes reckoned the ſame with it [i]. Pliny [k] places this Gadara in Decapolis, and Ptolemy [l] in Cœlo Syria; and Meleager, the collector of Epigrams, who is called a Syrian, is ſaid [m] to be a Gadarene, a native of this Gadara. Mention is made of the whirlpool of Gadara [n], which remained ever ſince the flood. It appears to be an Heathen country, both from its ſituation, and the manners of the people.

Ver. 2. And when he was come out of the ſhip, &c.] As ſoon as he was landed, immediately there met him out of the tombs, a man with an unclean ſpirit. The Jews have a notion, that a man by dwelling among the tombs, becomes poſſeſſed with an unclean ſpirit: hence they ſay of one that ſeeks to the dead, or a necromancer [o], this is he that ſtarves himſelf, and goes and lodges in the tombs; כדי שתשרה עליו רוח טומאה, that ſo an unclean ſpirit may dwell upon him: which notion may ariſe from unclean ſpirits hurrying perſons poſſeſſed by them, unto ſuch places; partly for the terror, both of themſelves and others; and partly to poſſeſs the minds of men with a perſuaſion, that they have power over the dead, and which is very great in ſuch places. This caſe is the ſame with that, which is mentioned in Matt. viii. 28. as appears partly from its following the ſtorm, from which the diſciples had a remarkable deliverance; and partly from the country, in which this affair happened; for the country of the Gergeſenes, and of the Gadarenes, is the ſame, as has been obſerved; only it is called by different names, from two principal places in it: as alſo from various circumſtances in this relation; as the character of the poſſeſſed being exceeding fierce, dwelling among the tombs, and coming out from thence; the expoſtulation of the devil with Chriſt, and adjuration not to torment him; his entreaty to go into the herd of ſwine, and the leave he had; the deſtruction of the ſwine in the ſea; the fear and flight of the ſwineherds; the report they made to their maſters and others; and the requeſt of the people in general to Chriſt, that he would depart out of their coaſts. And though Matthew makes mention of two that were poſſeſſed, and Mark but of one, there is no contradiction in the one to the other; for Mark does not ſay there were no more than one; had he, it would have been a glaring contradiction to the other Evangeliſt; but as he has put it, there is none, and it creates no difficulty: wherefore the Jew [p] has no reaſon to object this as he does, as if the Evangeliſts claſhed with one another; and Mark may only take notice of this one, becauſe he was the fierceſt of the two, and had the moſt devils in him, having a legion of them; and becauſe the converſation chiefly paſſed between Chriſt and him; and becauſe the power of Chriſt was more manifeſtly ſeen in the diſpoſſeſſion of the devils out of him.

Ver. 3. Who had his dwelling among the tombs, &c.] Which is one of the characters of a madman among the Jews; who ſay it is [q] "the ſign of a madman, that he goeth out in the night, והלן בבית הקברות, and lodges among the tombs, and rents his garments, and loſes what is given to him." The ſame they ſay, in the ſame place, of an hypocondriac, and melancholy man; and of Kordiacus, which they give out [r] is a dæmon that poſſeſſes, and has power over ſome ſort of perſons: and no man could bind him, no, not with chains; ſo as to hold him for any length of time: not only cords were inſufficient to hold, but even chains of iron; ſo ſtrong was he through the poſſeſſion; for this could not be by his own natural ſtrength.

Ver. 4. Becauſe that he had been often bound with fetters and chains, &c.] Trial had been made ſeveral times, to no purpoſe; his arms had been bound with chains, and his feet with fetters, which was very proper to prevent doing hurt to himſelf, and injury to others: and the chains had been plucked aſunder by him, and the fetters broken in pieces; as if they had been twine threads; ſuch was his ſtrength, through the force of madneſs, and the poſſeſſion of ſatan, and his diabolical influence: neither could any man tame him; by any methods whatever; even ſuch who undertook the cure of madneſs, or to exorciſe thoſe that were poſſeſſed: this man was ſo furious and outragious, that he was not to be managed any way, either by art or force.

Ver. 5. And always night and day, he was in the mountains, &c.] And this being in an Heathen country, would have rendered him an unclean perſon, if he had not been poſſeſſed with an unclean ſpirit; for ſo runs one of the Jewiſh canons [s]: "he that walks in an Heathen land, on mountains and rocks, is unclean." And in the tombs; which very likely were on the mountains, and cut out of them, it being uſual to cut their ſepulchres out of rocks: crying, and cutting himſelf with ſtones; with ſharp pieces of ſtone, which he picked up among the broken tomb-ſtones, or from off the mountains, where he was night and day; and beſides taking up ſtones with his hands, and cutting himſelf with them, he might cut his feet with the ſharp ſtones of the mountains, in which he ran about: theſe mountains were thoſe, that encompaſſed the ſea of Tiberias; for of it is ſaid, שהרים מקיפין אותה, that the mountains ſurround it [t]: for the place where this man was, was near the ſea of Tiberias, over which Chriſt was juſt now come; and as ſoon as he arrived on ſhore, he met him, and found him in this condition. This man was a lively emblem, of a man in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy: he had an unclean ſpirit, as every natural man has; his ſoul or ſpirit is defiled with ſin, particularly his mind and conſcience: this pollution is natural to him; he brings it into the world with him; it is very univerſal, it has ſpread itſelf over all the powers and faculties of his ſoul, and is what he can't cleanſe himſelf from: who can ſay I have made my heart clean, I am pure from my ſin? Prov. xx. 9. Nothing that he can do, or can be done for him by a mere creature, can free him from it; nothing but the blood of Chriſt, and that cleanſes from all ſin: this man, through the poſſeſſion of ſatan, was a madman, and exceeding fierce and furious: there is a ſpirit of madneſs in all unregenerate men; they are exceeding mad againſt God, and Chriſt, and the ſaints, as Saul was before converſion, Acts xxvi. 9, 10, 11. For who but madmen would ſtretch out their hands againſt God, ſtrengthen themſelves againſt the Almighty, run upon him, even on his neck, and upon the thick boſſes of his bucklers? Job xv. 25, 26. Who but ſuch would oppoſe themſelves to the Son of God, or do deſpight to the Spirit of grace, who are equal in power and glory with God the Father? or kick againſt the pricks, by perſecuting the members of Chriſt? Who but men out of their ſenſes, would ſeek to ruin and deſtroy themſelves, both ſoul and body? This man was altogether under the power and influence of ſatan, and had a legion of devils within him. Satan is in every unconverted man, in every child of diſobedience; and works effectually in him, and leads him captive at his will: and he has beſides a ſwarm of fleſhly luſts in him, which have the government over him. This man had his dwelling among the tombs, where the dead lay: ſo unregenerate men dwell among dead ſinners, they have their converſation among the men of the world, who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, and according to the courſe of it: and as this man could not be bound with chains and fetters, but theſe were broke aſunder by him; ſo wicked men are not to be bound, reſtrained, and governed, by the laws, commands, and ordinances of God; they deſpiſe them, break through them, and cannot be ſubject to them; their language is, let us break their bands aſunder, and caſt away their cords from us, Pſal. ii. 3. And as no man could tame this man, ſo it is not in the power of men, by the force of moral ſuaſion, by all the arguments, expoſtulations, exhortations, promiſes, or threatenings, they can make uſe of, to influence the carnal minds of men, or make any real change in them; or bring them into a ſubjection to the law of God, or Goſpel of Chriſt, and remove from them the ſpirit of madneſs, and oppoſition to all that is good: and to ſay no more; as this man was miſchievous to himſelf, and cut himſelf with ſtones, ſo carnal men are the worſt enemies to themſelves; they cut and wound themſelves with their ſins, though like the madman, they are not ſenſible of it; and if grace prevent not, will deſtroy themſelves, both ſoul and body, with their tranſgreſſions.

Ver. 6. But when he ſaw Jeſus afar off, &c.] For it ſeems the tombs among which this man dwelt, were at ſome diſtance from the ſea-ſhore; wherefore when it is ſaid, ver. 2. that this man met Jeſus, as ſoon as he came out of the ſhip; the meaning is, that he then came forth to meet him, as he might do upon ſight of perſons landing afar off; though he might not know then, who Jeſus was: but coming nearer, and perceiving who he was, ſuch was the power of Chriſt over the devils in him, that though ſore againſt their wills, they obliged him to move on ſpeedily towards him; ſo that he ran and worſhipped him: he made all imaginable haſte to him; and when he came up to him, fell down at his feet before him, acknowledging his ſuperiority and power, whom no chains nor fetters could bind, nor any man tame; nor durſt any man paſs that way, for fear of him; and yet, upon ſight of Chriſt, without a word ſpoken to him, he runs and proſtrates himſelf before him. This is an inſtance of the ſuperiority of Chriſt over the devils, who knowing who he is, are filled with horror at him, fall down before him, and in their way do homage to him; though it is impoſſible they ſhould be ſpiritual worſhippers of him: unleſs this is rather to be underſtood of the man himſelf, who, at the ſight of Chriſt, might have his ſenſes for the preſent reſtored, and a knowledge of Chriſt given; to whom he ran ſpeedily, and threw himſelf at his feet, hoping for relief from him: however, it may be an emblem of a poor awakened ſinner, having a diſtant ſight of Chriſt; who, upon it, makes haſte unto him, and proſtrates itſelf before him, believing he is able, if willing, to ſave him from the power of ſatan, the evil of ſin, and from eternal ruin and damnation.

Ver. 7. And cried with a loud voice, &c.] The man poſſeſſed with the devil; or the devil in him, making uſe of his voice, expreſſing great fear, dread, and horror, at the appearance of Chriſt in theſe parts: and ſaid, what have I to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of the moſt high God? The devils in in the man, own the being of a God, and his ſupreme government over all, under the title of the moſt high. The word here uſed, anſwers to the Hebrew word, עליון, Elion, a name of God known to the ancient Canaanites: hence Melchizedek, a Canaanitiſh king, is called the prieſt of the moſt high God, Gen. xiv. 18. And among the Phenicians, he is called Elioun; which a Phenician writer [u] ſays, ſignifies the moſt high: and hence in Plautus [w], he goes by the name of Alon, which is the ſame word a little differently pronounced; and by the ſame name he might be known among other neighbouring nations of the Jews, and by the Gadarenes; and the devil now being in a Gadarene, makes uſe of this name. Devils believe there is one God, and tremble at him; and they confeſs that Jeſus of Nazareth, who was born of the virgin, according to the human nature, is the Son of God according to his divine nature: and whereas they had no intereſt in him, as a Saviour, they deſired they might have nothing to do with him as God; and ſince they had no ſhare in the bleſſings of his grace, they beg they might not feel the power of his hand. Truly they chuſe not to have any thing to do with God himſelf; they have caſt off allegiance to him, and rebelled againſt him; and have left their firſt eſtate, and departed from him; and ſtill leſs do they care to have any thing to do with his Son: and indeed it ſeems as if it was the decree and counſel of God, made known unto them, that the Son of God ſhould aſſume human nature, and in it be the head over principalities and powers, as well as men, which gave umbrage to them; upon which they apoſtatized from God, being unwilling to be under ſubjection to the man Chriſt Jeſus; though whether they will or no, they are obliged unto it: for though they deſire to have nothing to do with Chriſt, yet Chriſt has ſomething to do with them; he had when he was here on earth, and when he hung upon the croſs, and will have when he comes again to judge both quick and dead: they might be glad, one would think, to have to do with him as a Redeemer; but this they are not, their ſin being the ſame with that againſt the Holy Ghoſt: they are malicious, obſtinate, and inflexible, they cannot repent; and there's no pardon, nor was there any provided for them; they were paſſed by in the counſel and purpoſes of God's grace, and were not taken notice of in the covenant of grace: Chriſt took not on him their nature, but the nature of men; yea, he came to deſtroy them, and their works; ſo that indeed they had nothing to do with him as a Saviour, though he had ſomething to do with them as a judge, and which they dreaded: however, they own, and acknowledge him to be the Son of the moſt high God; they know and confeſs as much of him, and more too, than ſome that call themſelves chriſtians, and hope to be ſaved by Chriſt; and yet at the ſame time own, they had nothing to do with him. Men may know much of Chriſt notionally; may know, and confeſs him to be God, to be the Son of God, in the higheſt and true ſenſe of the phraſe; to be the Meſſiah, to have been incarnate, to have ſuffered, died, and riſen again; to be aſcended to heaven, from whence he'll come again; and yet have no more to do with him, or have no more intereſt in him, than the devils themſelves; and will, at the laſt day, be bid to depart from him. I adjure thee by God, that thou torment me not: not that he required an oath of Chriſt, that he would ſwear to him by the living God, that he would not diſtreſs him; but he moſt earneſtly and importunately intreated and beſeeched him, in the name of God; ſee Luke viii. 28. that he would not diſpoſſeſs him from the man, and ſend him out of that country, to his own place, to his chains and priſon; but ſuffer him either to lodge in the man, or walk about ſeeking, as a roaring lion, his prey: for it is torment to a devil to be caſt out of a man, or to have his power curtailed, or to be confined in the bottomleſs pit, from doing hurt to men; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 29.

Ver. 8. For he ſaid unto him, &c.] Or he had ſaid unto him, as ſoon as he came up to him, and fell before him; even before he had confeſſed, and adjured him; and which indeed drew out the confeſſion from him, that he was ſuperior to him, and therefore became his ſupplicant: come out of the man thou unclean ſpirit; which was ſaid with ſo much authority and power, that there was no withſtanding it: the devil knew he was not a match for him; that he muſt, at his command, quit his poſſeſſion, and therefore fell to confeſſion and intreaty. Chriſt will not dwell where ſatan does; when therefore he is about to take up his reſidence in the hearts of any, he outs with ſatan; he binds the ſtrong man armed, and diſpoſſeſſes him; he cauſes the ſpirit of uncleanneſs to depart; he ſanctifies the heart by his grace and Spirit, and ſo makes it a proper habitation for him to dwell in by faith; and this is done by mighty power: a man can't deliver himſelf out of the hands of ſatan, or cauſe him to quit his hold of him, or the unclean ſpirit to depart; part; nor can he ſanctify and cleanſe himſelf, and make himſelf meet for the maſter's uſe: this is all owing to efficacious grace.

Ver. 9. And he aſked him, what is thy name? &c.] Which queſtion Chriſt put, not for his own ſake; for he was not ignorant of his name, nor of the number of the unclean ſpirits which were in the man; but partly, that it might be known what a miſerable condition this poor man was in, being infeſted, and vexed with ſuch a large company of devils; and partly, that his own pity and power in delivering him, might be more manifeſt: and he anſwered, ſaying, my name is Legion: the Syriac verſion renders it, our name is Legion; the reaſon of which name is given, for we are many; as a Roman legion did conſiſt of many, though its number was not always alike: in the time of Romulus, a legion conſiſted of three thouſand foot, and three hundred horſe; afterwards, when the city was increaſed, of ſix thouſand foot, and ſix hundred horſe; ſometimes it was ſix thouſand and two hundred foot, and three hundred horſe; ſometimes four thouſand foot, and three hundred horſe; ſometimes five thouſand foot, and three hundred horſe[x]. Some make a legion to conſiſt of ſix thouſand ſix hundred ſixty ſix; and others make it much larger, even twelve thouſand five hundred: however, the number in a legion was many; hence the word is retained among the Jews, and is uſed for a large number, either of perſons or things; as, לגיון אחד משל זיתים, a legion of olives[y]: that is, a large number of them; though ſometimes it is uſed of a ſingle perſon, who has others under him, as the general of an army: thus it is ſaid[z], that one man ſhould ſay to another, "from whence art "thou? he replies, from ſuch a legion am I;—— "the man went to the legion——the legion heard, "and was afraid——the man ſaid, wo, unto me! "now will the legion ſlay me——the legion heard, "&c." And again[a], "a certain legion aſked "R. Abba, is it not written, &c." Once more[b], "Lo! ſuch a legion ſhall go with thee, to keep "thee, &c." Upon which the Gloſs is, שר הצבא, the general of an army; ſo called, becauſe he had a legion, or a large number of ſoldiers under his command: and juſt ſo this unclean ſpirit is called by this name, becauſe he had a great many more with him, and under him, in that man; ſometimes it is only uſed of a ſingle perſon himſelf, as of a king's ſervant ſent into a foreign country, to collect his[c] tax: a legion was reckoned by the Jews unclean and defiled, whatſoever place they entered into[d]; how much more unclean muſt this man be, that had a legion of unclean ſpirits in him! From hence it appears, that the devils are very numerous; for if there was a legion of them in one man, how many muſt there be in all the children of diſobedience, to maintain their ground, and ſupport their intereſt among them? As there is an innumerable company of holy angels to encamp about the ſaints, and do them all the ſervice they can, and are appointed to; ſo there is undoubtedly an innumerable company of devils, who do all the hurt they can, or are permitted to do, unto the ſons of men: hence they are expreſſed by words, which ſignify number as well as power; as principalities and powers, the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, ſpiritual wickedneſs in high places, the power or poſſe of the air, the angels of ſatan, the angels that ſinned and left their habitations, &c. As alſo that they are in a body, and in the form of an army; with a general at the head of them, the prince of devils, and king of the bottomleſs pit: there are whole ſquadrons and regiments of them, yea, even legions; which are formed in battle array, and make war againſt Chriſt, the ſeed of the woman; as they did when he was in the garden, and hung upon the croſs, which was the hour and power of darkneſs; and againſt his members; as they did in Rome pagan againſt the chriſtian church, and in Rome papal, againſt the ſame, Rev. xii. 7, 8, 17. and what a mercy it is for the ſaints, that beſides twelve legions of good angels and more, which are ready to aſſiſt and protect them, they have God on their ſide, and therefore it ſignifies not who is againſt them; and they have Chriſt with them, who has ſpoiled principalities and powers; and greater is the Holy Spirit that is in them, than he that is in the world.

Ver. 10. And he beſought him much, &c.] The devil that was at the head of this legion, who had the reſt under his command, he, in their name, and on their behalf, intreated Jeſus with great earneſtneſs. This ſhows the authority Chriſt has over the devils, and their ſubjection to him; they are not only obliged to quit their former poſſeſſion, when he gives orders, but they can't go any where elſe, or where they would, without his leave: though the man they were in could not be bound and held with chains and fetters of iron, through the great ſtrength they put forth in him; yet theſe themſelves are bound and held in chains, and can't move without Chriſt's permiſſion, or as he is pleaſed to lengthen out the chain unto them: and though they are no humble ſuppliants to him for grace and mercy, yet they are, that they may continue where they are; or be ſuffered to be ſomewhere elſe, to do miſchief to the ſouls and bodies of men: and though they are ſuch proud ſpirits, they be, they are very willing to humble themſelves, and in the moſt ſubmiſſive and preſſing manner, aſk a favour, even of him whom they hate, when they have an end to anſwer by doing injury to others; and in this, as well as in many other things, they are imitated by them who are truly called the children of the devil, and do the luſts of him their father. That he would not ſend them away out of the country; that if he did think fit to diſpoſſeſs them from that man, that however he would permit them to ſtay in that country, and not drive them wholly from thence; and which they might be the more deſirous of, becauſe it was an Heathen country, inhabited by the blind Gentiles, that knew not God, or apoſtate Jews, or both; among whom their power and authority were very great; and where they had long been, and had had a large experience of the tempers and diſpoſitions of men, and knew how to bait their temptations with ſucceſs.

Ver. 11. Now there was there nigh unto the mountains, &c.] Where this man often was, ver. 5. according to Beza, the mountains of Galaad, which ran through that country, or the mountains that ſurrounded Tiberias. Some copies, as the Alexandrian copy and others, read at, or about the mountain, in the ſingular number. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, about the mountain. The Syriac and Ethiopic, at the mountain; ſo in Luke viii. 32. a great herd of ſwine feeding; on one ſide of the mountain, or mountains; it may be called a great one, for there were about two thouſand hogs in it.

Ver. 12. And all the devils beſought him, &c.] The whole legion of them, not only their chief, in the name of the reſt, but all of them earneſtly entreated him; they were all humble ſupplicants, not from love, but fear, and with a view to do miſchief: though the word all is omitted in ſome copies, as it is in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions; neither has the Ethiopic the word devils, but both are retained in the Arabic verſion: ſaying, ſend us into the ſwine, that we may enter into them. The Perſic verſion renders it, ſeeing thou driveſt us from the man, give leave that we may enter into the ſwine; which is rather a paraphraſe than a verſion, and expreſſes the ſenſe very well. They choſe to be any where, rather than depart the country; and eſpecially than to be ſent into the deep, the abyſs, or bottomleſs pit; and they choſe to be ſent into the ſwine, as being impure creatures like themſelves; and no doubt with a view to deſtroy them, that they might ſatisfy themſelves as much they could, with doing miſchief; though not to that degree they would, nor to thoſe perſons they were deſirous of; and ſo bring as much odium and reproach upon Chriſt as they could, who gave them leave. The devils are unwearied in doing miſchief, they can't reſt unleſs they are about it; and they chuſe to be concerned in doing it in a leſſer way, if they are not allowed to do it as largely as they would: if they are not ſuffered to touch the lives of men, or ruin their ſouls, it is ſome ſatisfaction to them to be ſuffered to hurt their bodies; and if that is no longer permitted, rather than be doing nothing, they are deſirous of doing injury to irrational creatures, the property of men: all which ſhows, the malice and wickedneſs of theſe evil ſpirits; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 31.

Ver. 13. And forthwith Jeſus gave them leave, &c.] For the reaſon of this, ſee the note on Matt. viii. 32. and the unclean ſpirits went out; of the man, in whom they had for ſome time dwelt: and entered into the herd of ſwine; according to the leave given them by Chriſt: this ſhows, not only the exiſtence of ſpirits, but their going from one to another, ſhows, that they are circumſcribed by ſpace; that they are here, and not there, or there, and not here: there is an ubi, a ſomewhere, where they are; and whilſt there, are not elſewhere: and the herd ran violently down a ſteep place into the ſea. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, the herd ran to the rock, or promontory, and fell into the ſea. The Ethiopic, the herd grew mad, and was carried headlong into the ſea: the ſenſe is, that the devils having entered into them, it had a like effect on them, as on the man poſſeſſed; they ran mad, and were hurried on by the devils, to the rocks on the ſea-ſhore; where, falling down the precipice, they were all loſt; and a conſiderable loſs it was to their owners: for they were about two thouſand; a very large herd, but there were devils enow in that one man, to poſſeſs all theſe, and run them into the ſea: and were choked in the ſea; not ſuffocated by the devils, but drowned in the waters of the ſea, or lake, as Luke calls it; the lake of Genneſareth, or ſea of Tiberias and Galilee; which, as often obſerved, were the ſame. Though ſome think it was not this lake or ſea, but ſome other place of water near Gadara. Strabo ſays [c], that in the country of Gadara, there was a very bad laky water, of which if cattel taſted, they caſt their hair, hoofs, and horns; which perhaps may be the ſame with what the Talmudiſts call [f], בלועה דגדר, the whirlpool of Gadara; ſaid to be from the time of the deluge, and ſo called from its ſwallowing up every thing that came into it; but the ſea of Tiberias ſeems rather to be the place, where this herd periſhed. The Jew [g] objects to the deſtroying this herd of ſwine as an unjuſt action, being a great injury to the owners; and ſeeks to blacken the character of Chriſt, as being concerned in it: but, as biſhop Kidder [h] well obſerves, it does not appear that Jeſus deſtroyed it; it were the devils that did it: he ſuffered them indeed to go into it, nor did he reſtrain the natural power which they had; nor did he think fit to do it, nor was he obliged to it: but had he deſtroyed it himſelf, ſince he is Lord of all, the proprietor of all creatures, who has all under him, and at his diſpoſe, can give and take away as he pleaſes, no charge of evil and injuſtice can be brought againſt him; and this ſhould be ſatisfactory to a chriſtian, who believing him to be God over all bleſſed for ever; though it will not be to a Jew: let it therefore be further obſerved, that the owners of theſe ſwine, were either Jews or Gentiles; if they were Jews, and they brought up theſe ſwine in order to eat them themſelves, to deſtroy them was a juſt puniſhment, for their violation of the law of God, Deut. xiv. 8. And if they brought them up to ſell to others, this was contrary to their own canons; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 30. to the rules and cuſtoms of their own country, which were made as a fence to keep off from breaking the above law; and ſuch a practice could only proceed from an avaricious diſpoſition, of which this was a proper rebuke: or if they were Gentiles that were the owners of them, theſe were idolatrous perſons, worſhippers of devils; and it was but a righteous thing, to ſuffer the devils, whom they worſhipped, to do this miſchief to their property, to whom they devoted themſelves ſoul and body; and a Jew can't well find fault with this, who believes that idolaters can't be puniſhed too ſeverely: add to this, what the above learned prelate obſerves; this practice of the Gentiles in breeding hogs, was a temptation to the Jews to follow the ſame buſineſs, and even to taſte of the forbidden fleſh; ſo that to uſe his words, it was in truth an act of grace and favour to the Jews, to remove from them ſo dangerous a ſnare, and ſo bad an example: and it may be added, by ſuffering the devils to go into the ſwine, ſeveral valuable ends were anſwered, infinitely preferable to the herd of ſwine; ſuch as evincing the truth of the diſpoſſeſſion; ſhewing the greatneſs of the mercy to the diſpoſſeſſed; the power of Chriſt over the devils; and making for the ſpread of the fame of this miracle the more; as well as giving further proof of the malignity and miſchievous diſpoſition and actions of theſe evil ſpirits; by which the inhabitants of the adjacent places might learn, how hurtful they were to them, and what a bleſſing it was to be rid of them: and therefore ought to have been thankful to Chriſt for this diſpoſſeſſion, notwithſtanding the loſs of their ſwine; but ſuch an effect it had not upon them, but the reverſe, as the words following ſhow.

Ver. 14. And they that fed the ſwine, &c.] Not the owners, but the keepers of them, the ſwine-herds, fled; being aſtoniſhed at the power of Chriſt, affrighted at the noiſe of the devils, and terrified at the ſight and loſs of the ſwine: and told it in the city and country; or in the fields: they went into the city of Gadara, and told the ſtory of the diſpoſſeſſion of the devils out of the man, that had been for ſome time troubleſome in thoſe parts; and of their entrance into the ſwine, and the deſtruction of them: and they went into the fields, or country adjacent; they went to the villages thereabout, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render the word; or to thoſe houſes that were in the fields, ſcattered about, here, and there one, and where perhaps the owners of the herd lived: and they not only haſted away to the owners of the ſwine, to acquaint them with what had happened, in order to remove all blame from themſelves, and any ſuſpicion of negligence in them; to make it appear that it was not their fault, or owing to any careleſſneſs of theirs the ſwine periſhed; as that they ſuffered them to go too near the ſea-ſide, and did not keep a good look-out, and were not, as they ſhould have been, between them and the ſea, to have prevented ſuch an accident: this they not only did, but the affair, in all its circumſtances, being ſuch an amazing one; as the diſpoſſeſſion of the devils out of the man; the health, the calmneſs, and happy condition the diſpoſſeſſed was in; the entrance of the devils into the ſwine; their madneſs, and precipitant running into the ſea, and ſuffocation there; that they told it to every body they met with, whether in the fields belonging to Gadara, or in the city itſelf; which drew out a large concourſe of people to ſee what was done to the man that had been poſſeſſed, and to the ſwine, and alſo to ſee the perſon who had done all this; and which made the miracle the more notorious; city and country rung of it: ſo that, as Matthew ſays, the whole city came out to meet Jeſus; and Luke obſerves, that the whole multitude of the country of the Gadarenes round about beſought him to depart, &c. So we ſometimes read, in the Jewiſh writings, of the men, or inhabitants of the field, as oppoſed to the men, or inhabitants of the city, who differed both in their clothes and diet. "The garments, "דבני מחוזא, of the children, or inhabitants of "the city, who live deliciouſly, and do no work, "are broad like womens; but the garments, "דבני חקליתא, of the children of the field; ſuch "as do buſineſs in the field, are ſhort [i]:" and ſo of their food, 'tis obſerved [k], that the bread, דחקלאי, of the men of the field, which the Gloſs explains by בני כפר, the children, or inhabitants of a village, is what they put much flour into; but the bread, דמחוזא, of a city, which the Gloſs interprets of בני כרך, the children, or inhabitants of a walled town, or city, is what they do not put much flour into. And they went out to ſee what it was that was done: that is, the inhabitants of the city of Gadara, and thoſe that dwelt in the villages, and in lone houſes in the fields, went forth to the places where the poſſeſſed man uſed to be, and where Jeſus and he now were, and where the ſwine uſed to feed, to ſee with their own eyes, and ſatisfy themſelves of the truth of the narration the ſwineherds gave them.

Ver. 15. And they come to Jeſus, &c.] Who had wrought this miracle, and of which, and whom, the keepers of the ſwine had given them ſome account: and ſee him that was poſſeſſed of the devil, and had a legion. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the laſt clauſe, and had a legion, and ſo Beza's ancient copy; the Perſic verſion renders it, the legion being gone out of him: they ſaw, along with Jeſus, the man who had been poſſeſſed with a legion of devils, whom they knew very well to be the ſame man; ſitting, and clothed, and in his right mind, and they were afraid; not of the man, as they were before, when he was poſſeſſed, not daring to come that way becauſe of him; but of Chriſt, and his amazing power; who was able to diſpoſſeſs a legion of devils, and reſtore a man to his perfect ſenſes, to ſuch compoſure and decency, who was before in ſuch a dreadful condition, and ſo exceeding furious and outragious: they ſaw the man was ſtill and quiet, harmleſs and inoffenſive; they had nothing to fear from him; but they knew not what to make of Chriſt: they might take him for an exorciſt, or a magician, and fear that he would exerciſe his art to the ruine and deſtruction of them: they did not fear and reverence him as a divine perſon, but they dreaded him, as one poſſeſſed of a power of doing hurt: they were conſcious to themſelves of their ſins, and that they deſerved the juſt judgments of God upon them; and they were afraid that Chriſt was ſent to execute them upon them: and it is obſervable, that they ſay not one word to him, by way of complaint, for the loſs of their ſwine; but thought themſelves well off, could they but get rid of him. There was a ſtrange change and alteration in the man; he, who before was running about among the tombs, and upon the mountains, and ſcarce ever ſat ſtill, but was always in motion, as perſons diſtracted commonly are, was now ſitting at the feet of Jeſus, his kind benefactor, Luke viii. 35. and he who before was naked, and whenever any clothes were put upon him, tore them off again, and to pieces, as mad men uſually do, was now clothed; perhaps with ſome the ſwineherds had left behind them, in their fright, or the diſciples had with them: and he who before was quite out of his ſenſes, knew not what he ſaid, or did, was now in his right mind; of a ſound mind, of a good underſtanding, ſober, modeſt, and knowing. This man, as whilſt under the poſſeſſion of ſatan, was an emblem of a man in a natural eſtate; ſo, being now diſpoſſeſſed, he very aptly repreſented a converted man; who, being brought out of a ſtate of nature, out of an horrible pit, a pit wherein is no water, is ſitting at the feet of Jeſus; where he places himſelf, imploring his grace and mercy, intreating him to receive and ſave him, reſolving, if he periſhes, he'll periſh there; and where he is, as a ſcholar, at the feet of his maſter, hearing his words, and receiving inſtruction from him; and which alſo is expreſſive of his ſubmiſſion to his Goſpel and ordinances, and of pleaſure and continuance under them; as well as of that calmneſs and ſerenity of mind, which attends a ſenſe of juſtification, pardon, reconciliation, and adoption, and hope of glory: and whereas, before he was naked, and without a righteouſneſs, or, which was no better than filthy rags; he is now clothed with the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, with fine linen, clean and white, which is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, with change of raiment, and clothing of wrought gold; the righteouſneſs of Chriſt being not only imputed to him by the father, but revealed in the Goſpel, brought near by the Spirit, and put upon him, and received by faith; as well as having put on the new man, and being clothed with humility, and other graces of the Spirit, and with the garments of a holy converſation; and ſo will at laſt be clothed with the ſhining robes of immortality and glory. Such an one, who before was not himſelf, is now in his right mind; is come to himſelf like the prodigal; is become ſenſible of the evil of ſin, and is brought to true repentance for it; and of his loſt ſtate and condition, of his need of Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; has his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed upon Chriſt; beholds the lovelineſs and ſuitableneſs of him as a ſaviour, hears his voice, handles him, the word of life, taſtes the ſweetneſs there is in him, and in his Goſpel, and ſavours the things of his Spirit; and whoſe ſenſes alſo are exerciſed to diſcern between good and evil, and truth and error; who likewiſe has a new heart, and a right ſpirit created in him; and has the ſame mind in him, as was in Jeſus Chriſt, for humility and lowlineſs; and whoſe mind is ſtayed upon him; and truſts in him.

[i] T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 12. 1. & Gloſſ. in ib.

[k] T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 37. 2.

Ver. 16. And they that ſaw it, &c.] Not the keepers of the ſwine, for they were fled and gone; but others that were eye-witneſſes of the whole affair, who lived in houſes hard by, or were working in the fields; or the diſciples of Chriſt: told them how it befel to him that was poſſeſſed with the devil; gave a particular account, how, upon the firſt ſight of Chriſt, he ran to meet him, and fell down and worſhipped him; how Chriſt ordered the unclean ſpirit to come out of him; and how he was diſpoſſeſſed of a legion of devils by a word ſpeaking: and alſo concerning the ſwine; how, at the requeſt of the devils, and by the leave of Chriſt, they entered into them; upon which they ran mad; and betaking themſelves to the rocks by the ſea-ſide, fell down the precipice, and were ſuffocated in the ſea.

Ver. 17. And they began to pray him, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of the city of Gadara, and of the villages round about, very earneſtly importuned him to depart out of their coaſts; fearing, leſt for their ſins, ſome ſorer judgment ſhould fall upon them, than the loſs of their ſwine; ſince they perceived he was a perſon of great power and authority; which ſhows great ignorance and worldly-mindedneſs: they knew not how great a perſon they had among them; that he was the Son of God, and Saviour of the world: they might have known from the miracles wrought, that he was a very wonderful and extraordinary perſon; but then they conſidered him as one endued with great power, rather to do them hurt, than good; as one ſent to ſcourge them for their ſins, than to ſave them from them: ſuch very contrary notions have carnal men of Chriſt; they are afraid of being ſufferers, or loſers by him; they don't care to part with their ſwiniſh luſts for him: theſe they prefer to a ſaviour, and love the world, and the things of it, more than he, and therefore are not worthy of him; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 34.

Ver. 18. And when he was come into the ſhip, &c.] For at the requeſt of theſe men, who were unworthy of his preſence, and of any favour from him, either by his doctrine, or miracles, he turned back to the ſea-ſide again; and as he was about to take ſhip, he that had been poſſeſſed with the devil, prayed him that he might be with him: for when Jeſus turned his back upon the Gadarenes, and returned to the ſea-ſhore, this poor man, who had received ſo great a benefit by him, roſe up and followed him; and when he perceived that he was entering on ſhip-board, in order to go over into another country, earneſtly intreated he might go over with him in the ſhip, and continue with him: which he did, partly to teſtify his great love to him, and the grateful ſenſe he had of the mercy he had received from him; and partly, that he might enjoy his preſence, and have his protection: for he might fear, that when he was gone, and ſhould he remain in that country, the devils would repoſſeſs him with greater rage and fury. So gracious ſouls who know Chriſt, and have received out of his fulneſs, and grace for grace, earneſtly deſire to be with him, to enjoy communion with him, receive inſtruction from him, and be always under his care, influence, and protection. For to be with Chriſt, is to have his gracious preſence; to have nearneſs to him, and fellowſhip with him; to have familiarity and acquaintance with him, yet more and more; to be guided with his counſel, and upheld with the right hand of his righteouſneſs; than which, nothing can be more deſirable to thoſe that ſpiritually and ſavingly know him: for ſuch deſires ariſe from the knowledge they have of his perſonal glories and excellencies, as the Son of God; and as mediator, he has all power to protect them, all ſtrength to ſupport them, all grace to ſupply them, all wiſdom to direct them, all proviſions to feed them, and all bleſſings of grace and glory to beſtow upon them; and from the gracious experience they have had of his favour and loving-kindneſs, which is better than life; and from the ſenſe they have of their need of him; for without him they can do nothing; they can't perform any duty aright, nor withſtand any temptation, or bear up under any affliction: they are ſenſible of the bleſſed effects of his preſence; they know it brings light to their ſouls in darkneſs; that it quickens them when dead and lifeleſs in their frames and duties, and enlivens their ſpirits when dull and heavy; that it comforts and rejoices their hearts, and puts more joy and gladneſs into them, than any outward bleſſing whatever; that it removes their fears, and emboldens them againſt their enemies, and is their ſafety and defence; that it makes ordinances pleaſant and delightful, and gives contentment in the meaneſt ſtate; there is nothing enjoyed by them in this life which gives them the pleaſure and ſatisfaction that does: and hence it is that they often deſire even to depart out of this world, that they may be with Chriſt, which is far better; and indeed, if the preſence of Chriſt is ſo ſweet and deſirable now, what will the everlaſting, and uninterrupted enjoyment of his preſence be in the world to come? for in his preſence is fulneſs of joy, and at his right hand are pleaſures for evermore.

Ver. 19. Howbeit, Jeſus ſuffered him not, &c.] He being as able to preſerve him from thoſe evil ſpirits, when abſent, as preſent; and beſides, to take him along with him, would look like oſtentation and boaſting, which Chriſt was averſe unto; and more eſpecially as is clear from what follows, he choſe he ſhould ſtay behind, becauſe he had work for him to do in thoſe parts, which would be for the glory of God, the ſpread of the knowledge of himſelf, and his Goſpel, among his friends, relations, and countrymen: wherefore it follows, but ſaith unto him, go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compaſſion on thee: he bids him go to his own houſe, as it is in Luke, ch. viii. 39. to the place of his former abode; to the town, or city, where he before dwelt, and where his father and mother, brethren and ſiſters, wife and children might live; and there relate to them what great things the Lord, or God, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, had done for him; by caſting out a legion of devils from him, and had reſtored him to his perfect ſenſes and health, and had had compaſſion on him, both as to his ſoul and body, and had wrought a great ſalvation for him. So ſuch as are called by grace, and are turned from darkneſs to light, and from the power of ſatan unto God, ought to go t their chriſtian friends, and to the church of God, and declare in Zion the great things which God has done for their ſouls; in enlightening, quickening, converting, and comforting them, to the glory of his rich mercy, and abundant grace. They are great things indeed which the Lord has done for his people: he has done great things for them in eternity; he has loved them with an everlaſting love; he has choſen them in his Son to holineſs and happineſs; he has made a covenant with him, for them, full of ſpiritual bleſſings and promiſes; he has provided him, as a ſaviour, for them, and has appointed, and called him to that work; all which is more or leſs made known to them in effectual vocation, when they receive the Spirit of God, that they may know the things which are freely given to them of God. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt has done great things for them, as before time, by engaging for them as their ſurety; ſo, in time, by taking upon him their nature, by bearing their ſins, and ſuffering in their room and ſtead, thereby working out a great ſalvation, which, in converſion, is brought near, and applied unto them. And the Lord, the Spirit, does great things for them, when he calls them by his grace, and afterwards; in opening their eyes who were born blind, and who otherwiſe muſt have lift them up in hell; and in bringing them into the marvellous light of the Goſpel; in quickening them, when dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, who otherwiſe muſt have died the ſecond death; in cauſing them to hear the voice of Chriſt in the joyful ſound of the word, who otherwiſe muſt have heard the curſes of a righteous law; in taking away their ſtony hearts, and giving them hearts of fleſh; in reſcuing them out of ſatan's hands; in leading them to Chriſt for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; in diſcovering pardoning grace and mercy to them, thro' the blood of Chriſt; in delivering out of many and great temptations; in applying great and precious promiſes, ſuitably and ſeaſonably; and in reſtoring them when backſlidden, and ſpeaking comfortably to them; in witneſſing to their ſpirits, their adoption; and in ſealing them up to the day of redemption; and all this flows from divine compaſſion, and not from any motive and merit in the creature. It was ſovereign pity and compaſſion; the Lord has mercy on whom he will have mercy, and has compaſſion on whom he will have compaſſion, Rom. ix. 15. It was diſcriminating mercy: this man was not only diſpoſſeſſed of ſatan, but poſſeſſed of ſpecial grace, which cauſed him to deſire to be with Chriſt, when his countrymen deſired him to depart from them; it was ſhown him, when he had no pity on himſelf, when he cut and wounded himſelf; and it was beſtowed upon him, when he could not help himſelf, when he had a legion of devils within him: and now theſe great things, which ſpring from great love and mercy, ſhould be told to others, eſpecially to them that fear the Lord, to the churches of Chriſt: this is the will of God, and has been the practice of the ſaints in former ages; it rejoices the hearts of God's people to hear of theſe things, and enhances the glory of the grace of God: and what may ſerve to encourage ſouls to ſuch a work is, that it is to their friends they are to declare theſe things; who are well diſpoſed to them, rejoice at their converſion, ſympathize with them in their troubles, know what the things they ſpeak of mean, and gladly receive them into their affections and fellowſhip.

Ver. 20. And he departed, and began to publiſh in Decapolis, &c.] He ſubmitted to the will of Chriſt, though he could gladly have gone with him; he hearkened to his inſtructions, took his advice, and obeyed his commands, as every one that has received favours from him ought to do: and he went not only to his own, or his father's houſe, and acquainted his neareſt friends and relations with what had befallen him; but he publiſhed the account, as Luke ſays, ch. viii. 39. throughout the whole city, very likely of Gadara, where he might be a native; and which, as Pliny [l] relates, was in Decapolis, and agrees with the accounts of both the Evangeliſts: here he publiſhed, as Chriſt had ordered him, how great things Jeſus had done for him; only inſtead of ſaying the Lord had done them for him, he attributed them to Jeſus, who is Lord and God; and by that miracle, as by many others, gave full proof of his deity, as well as Meſſiahſhip. This is an inſtance of the obedience of faith, and is a conſiderable branch of it; for, as with the heart, men believe in Chriſt unto righteouſneſs, ſo, with the mouth, confeſſion muſt be made to the glory of that ſalvation which Chriſt has wrought out: many are backward to this part of the ſervice of faith, thro' fears, thro' unbelief, and ſatan's temptations; but this man, tho' to have continued with Chriſt was greatly deſirable by him, yet he ſubmits to his will and pleaſure, and is obedient to his orders; and that at once, immediately dropping his ſuit unto him, no longer inſiſting on his being with him; for he was ſenſible of the great obligations he was laid under to him, and ſaw it to be his duty to obſerve whatever he commanded him: and this was indeed but a reaſonable piece of ſervice, and what, if he had not been ordered to do, one would think he could not have done otherwiſe; at leaſt, had he not, he would not have acted the grateful and generous part: and indeed, if ſuch for whom the Lord has done great things as theſe, ſhould hold their peace, the ſtones would even cry out. And all men did marvel; at the power of Jeſus, at the miracle wrought by him, and the benefit the man had received, who they all knew had been in ſo deplorable a condition. It is not only marvellous to the perſons themſelves, for whom great things are done by the Lord; but it is amazing to others, to angels and men, when it is conſidered, who they are, on whoſe account they are wrought; great ſinners, very unworthy of ſuch high favours, yea, deſerving of the wrath of God, and of eternal damnation; and likewiſe, who it is that has done theſe things for them, the Lord of heaven and earth; he againſt whom they have ſinned, and is able both to ſave, and to deſtroy; he who is the Great God, is their Saviour; to which may be added, the conſequence of theſe things, they iſſue in everlaſting glory and happineſs.

Ver. 21. And when Jeſus was paſſed over again, &c.] Over the ſea of Tiberias, that part of it which was neceſſary to go over from the country of Gadara, to Capernaum, by ſhip, or boat, unto the other ſide. This may ſeem to ſome unneceſſary to be added; and it may be aſked, what way but by ſhip, or boat, could he have gone over to the other ſide of the ſea of Galilee? To which it may be replied, there was a bridge at Chammath of Gadara [m], over an arm of this ſea, over which Chriſt and his diſciples might have paſſed, and have gone by land to Capernaum; ſo that this phraſe is very neceſſarily and ſignificantly uſed: much people gathered unto him; who had before attended on his miniſtry in theſe parts, and had ſeen his miracles; as the caſting out of an unclean ſpirit from a man, healing the centurion's ſervant, curing the man ſick of the palſy, and Simon's wife's mother of a fever, and a man that had a withered hand: and he was nigh unto the ſea; he ſeems to have been at Capernaum, which was nigh unto the ſea, and in the houſe of Matthew or Levi, whom he had called at the ſea-ſide from the receipt of cuſtom; ſee Matt. ix. 9, 10, 18.

[m] T. Hieroſ. Erubin, fol. 22. 4.

Ver. 22. And behold, there cometh one of the rulers of the ſynagogue, &c.] Having heard of his return, and where he was; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. Jairus by name; in Hebrew יאיר, Jair: and Jerom ſays [n], it ſignifies enlightening, or enlightened; deriving it from אור, to be light: and it is no doubt a Jewiſh name, ſince he was a ruler of the ſynagogue; and beſides, it is often mentioned in the Old Teſtament, and particularly in Eſth. ii. 5. where, in the Septuagint, it is read Ιαιρος, Jairus. Matthew makes no mention of his name; but both Mark and Luke do. And when he ſaw him, he fell at his feet: as ſoon as he came into his preſence, tho' he was a perſon of ſuch authority; yet having heard much of the doctrine and miracles of Chriſt, and believing him to be a great prophet, and man of God; though he might not know that he was the Meſſiah, and truly God, threw himſelf at his feet; and, as Matthew ſays, worſhipped him; ſhewed great reverence and reſpect unto him, gave him homage, at leaſt in a civil way, tho' he might not adore him as God.

Ver. 23. And beſought him greatly, &c.] Uſed much importunity with him, and was very urgent in his requeſts: ſaying, my little daughter lieth at the point of death, or is in the laſt extremity; juſt breathing out her laſt; for ſhe was not actually dead when he left her, tho' ſhe was before he returned, and was at this time, as he might expect, expiring, or really gone; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. I pray thee come and lay thine hands on her, that ſhe may be healed, and ſhe ſhall live; expreſſing faith in the power of Chriſt to reſtore his daughter, tho' in the utmoſt extremity; yet ſeemed to think his preſence, and the impoſition of his hands, were neceſſary to it.

Ver. 24. And Jeſus went with him, &c.] Immediately, without objecting to the weakneſs of his faith: and much people followed him; to ſee the miracle performed, which they were exceedingly fond of: and thronged him; ſo that it was with ſome difficulty and trouble that he paſſed along the ſtreets to the ruler's houſe.

Ver. 25. And a certain woman which had an iſſue of blood twelve years.] See the note on Matt. ix. 20. This woman was in the croud that thronged Jeſus, as he paſſed thro' the ſtreets of Capernaum. Euſebius relates [o], that it was reported, that this woman was of Cæſarea Philippi, where her houſe was to be ſeen; where were extant ſome wonderful monuments of the benefits conferr'd upon her by Chriſt; as that at the door of her houſe was an effigy of a woman in braſs, ſet upon an high ſtone on her bended knees, and arms ſtretched out like a ſupplicant; and oppoſite to her, another effigy of a man, of the ſame metal, ſtanding, and decently clothed in a tunic, and his hand ſtretched out to the woman; at whoſe feet, upon the pillar, a ſtrange form of a plant aroſe, reaching up to the border of the brazen tunic, which is a remedy againſt all diſeaſes; and he ſays it remained to his times, and was then to be ſeen: and Theophylact [p] ſays, in the times of Julian the apoſtate it was broke to pieces. But this woman rather ſeems to be an inhabitant of Capernaum, in the ſtreets of which the after cure was wrought; and therefore what credit is to be given to the above accounts, I leave to be judged of. It may be more uſeful to obſerve, that this profluvious woman is an emblem of a ſinner in a ſtate of nature: as her diſeaſe was in itſelf an uncleanneſs, and rendered her unclean by the law, whereby ſhe was unfit for the company and ſociety of others; ſo the diſeaſe of ſin, with which all are infected, is a pollution itſelf, and of a defiling nature; all the members of the body, and all the powers and faculties of the ſoul are polluted with it, and the whole man is filthy in the ſight of God, and is pronounced unclean by the law of God; and ſuch perſons are very unfit for the ſociety of ſaints on earth, and much leſs to be with thoſe in heaven, nor even to be with moralized perſons; for evil communications corrupt good manners: openly profane and impure ſinners are infectious, and to be avoided. Likewiſe, as this woman's diſeaſe was of long ſtanding, ſhe had it twelve years, and it was become inveterate and ſtubborn, and not eaſy to be removed; ſo ſuch is the diſeaſe of ſin, and indeed it is much worſe; it is what is brought into the world with men, and is as old as themſelves; is natural to them, and cannot be removed by any ordinary and natural methods, but requires ſupernatural power and grace; and it is in ſuch a like caſe and condition, that the Spirit of God finds his people, when he quickens, ſanctifies, and cleanſes them: and when I paſſed by thee, and ſaw thee polluted in thine own blood, I ſaid unto thee when thou waſt in thy blood live, Ezek. xvi. 6.

Ver. 26. And had ſuffered many things of many phyſicians, &c.] She took many a nauſeous medicine, and had gone thro' courſes of phyſick with different phyſicians; for there were many among the Jews that pretended to the cure of fluxes; and various are the preſcriptions the Jewiſh doctors give for ſuch a diſorder, as may be ſeen in their Talmud [q]; and many of which Dr. Lightfoot [r] has tranſcribed: and among the reſt, they direct to the uſe of gum of Alexandria, alum, ſaffron, Perſian onions, cummin, and Fænum Græcum, put into wine and drank. And had ſpent all that ſhe had; had waſted her ſubſtance, and brought herſelf to poverty, by purſuing the directions given her; ſo that ſhe was not in circumſtances now to employ a phyſician; and was nothing bettered, but rather grew worſe: the ſeveral medicines ſhe had taken had done her no good, had not, in the leaſt, reſtrained and checked the diſorder, but it was rather increaſed thereby. This is often the caſe of perſons who are, in ſome meaſure, ſenſible of the diſeaſe of ſin, but are ignorant of the proper methods to be taken for the cure of it. They apply to their own works of righteouſneſs, moral and civil, to the duties of religion, private and publick, to a legal repentance, external humiliation and tears, and an outward reformation of life, hoping hereby, in proceſs of time, to be rid of their diſorder, and be in good health; whereas theſe are phyſicians of no value, and of no real ſervice in their caſe: they are ſo far from being the better, that they are rather worſe and worſe, there being ſo much impurity, imperfection, and ſin, in all theſe things, and which is increaſed by a dependance on them; that their iniquities grow upon them, and the ſcore of their tranſgreſſions is become greater, and their diſtemper the more inveterate, and leſs eaſy to be cured; yea, not only they ſpend their money for that which does not bring them a cure, and exhauſt all the ſtock of nature's power to no purpoſe, but they alſo ſuffer much hereby. For ſuch a courſe of action, ſuch conduct and methods as theſe bring them into a ſpirit of bondage; for when they fail in their duties, don't come up to the rules preſcribed them, what terror of mind poſſeſſes them? what horror and wrath does the law work in their conſciences? what a fearful looking for is there of fiery indignation, to conſume them? it can't be expreſſed what ſome have ſuffered by following ſuch preſcriptions.

Ver. 27. When ſhe had heard of Jeſus, &c.] Of the many miracles he had wrought, and cures he had performed, in caſes as difficult and deſperate as hers, or more ſo; and that he was now paſſing along the ſtreets, came in the preſs behind; though ſhe was ſo weak, and much enfeebled, as ſhe muſt needs be, by ſuch and, ſo long a diſorder; yet ſhe ventures into the croud, which were puſhing and preſſing after Chriſt; and got up to him, behind him, being aſhamed to tell her caſe, and deſire a cure: and touched his garment; the hem, or border of it, with her hand, very ſoftly, and in a private manner, ſo as not to be obſerved by any. Chriſt is the ſinner's laſt ſhift; it tries every one firſt before it comes to him; it ſpends all its money, ſtrength, and time, with others, to no purpoſe; and finding them all to be uſeleſs and unſerviceable, it applies to him, who is the only phyſician that can give relief in this caſe: like this woman, having heard of his ability to ſave to the uttermoſt thoſe that come to him; and being encouraged by the many cures of the worſt of ſinners, of ſuch who were in the moſt deſperate condition, preſſes in the throng, through a great many temptations, difficulties, and diſcouragements thrown in the way by ſatan, and its own evil heart of unbelief, and which ariſe from a ſenſe of vileneſs and unworthineſs; and in a modeſt and baſhful manner, fearing it ſhould be thought preſumption in him, and yet perſuaded it is the only way for a cure, and that it is to be had in this way, lays hold on the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and the garments of his ſalvation; or, in other words, thus reaſons with himſelf: tho' I am ſuch a vile, ſinful, unrighteous, and impotent creature, yet ſurely in the Lord there is righteouſneſs and ſtrength, if I can but by faith lay hold thereon; tho' it be but in a weak way, only by a touch, and in a trembling manner; I ſhall be juſtified from all things, I could not be juſtified by all the works of righteouſneſs I have been doing, and that evidentially and comfortably; and therefore I'll venture and draw nigh unto him, and tho' he ſlay me I'll truſt in him; I'll throw off my own filthy rags of righteouſneſs; I'll make mention of, and lay hold on his righteouſneſs, and that only; he ſhall be my ſalvation. And ſuch an one finds, as this woman afterwards did, a perfect cure, cleanſing from all ſin, a free and full forgiveneſs of it, and complete juſtification from it.

Ver. 28. For ſhe ſaid, &c.] Within herſelf, ſuch were her thoughts, and ſo great her faith: if I may touch but his clothes I ſhall be whole; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 21.

Ver. 29. And ſtraightway the fountain of her blood was dried up, &c.] It was uſual with the Jews to call the womb, in which the child is formed, מקור, a fountain[s]; and becauſe, from hence, iſſued the blood in a menſtruous and profluvious perſon, they called it, as here, מקור דמיה, the fountain of her blood[t]; and ſometimes uſe the ſame phraſe of the drying up of it, as in this place: they ſay[u], when a woman is ſearched and found to be pure, ſhe is forbidden her houſe, עד שיתנגב מעיינה, until her fountain be dried up; ſo that as no blood iſſued from it, there was none in it, and which was now this woman's caſe, as ſhe found; and ſhe felt in her body that ſhe was healed of that plague: ſhe not only found by that quick alteration there was in her animal ſpirits, which were now free and vigorous; but ſhe perceived, in that part of her body, from whence the iſſue ſprung, that ſhe was perfectly well, and that the diſorder was entirely gone, which had been for ſo many years a ſore affliction to her, and a ſevere correction and chaſtiſement of her, as the word uſed implies. It properly ſignifies a ſcourge, as every affliction is, a ſcourge for ſin; and very likely this woman's diſeaſe was on the ſame account: ſometimes afflictions are God's ſcourges in a way of wrath, and ſometimes in a fatherly way, in love: for whom the Lord loveth he chaſteneth, and ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth, Heb. xii. 6. and who, as he wounds, he heals, and which is ſenſibly perceived by his people. The word plague carries in it ſomething more dreadful, and fitly enough expreſſes the nature of ſin, which is a peſtilential diſeaſe; the corruption of nature, indwelling ſin is called the plague of the heart, 1 Kings viii. 38. It is a loathſome diſeaſe, and without the grace of God, a mortal one; the body of ſin, is a body of death; and all ſin is of the ſame nature and kind; the end of it is deſtruction and death: the healing of it is the forgiveneſs of ſin, which is thro' the blood of Chriſt, and the application of it to the ſoul; which, when made, is ſenſibly felt, for it immediately produces ſpiritual joy, peace, and comfort: this makes the bones, which were broken, to rejoice; this bids every ſon and daughter of the Lord God Almighty to be of good chear; it cauſes the inhabitants of Zion to hold their peace, and no more ſay they are ſick, becauſe their ſins are forgiven them. And a man may as eaſily perceive when his ſpiritual maladies are healed in this way, as when he is cured of any bodily diſorder.

Ver. 30. And Jeſus immediately knowing in himſelf, &c.] As ſoon as ever the woman had touched his garments, and had a cure, Chriſt, who knew all things in his ſpirit, or divine nature, that dwelt in him, knew what was done, that the woman had touched him, and was healed thereby; though, as not without his knowledge, ſo neither without his will, and entirely by his power: that vertue was gone out of him; to the healing of ſome perſon, tho' not at all to the diminution of that vertue, which remained as powerful and effective in him as ever. This ſhows that there was an internal eſſential vertue in Chriſt to cure diſeaſes: it was not what he derived from another, or exerciſed under another's influence; but what was his own, and which he put forth as the Lord God omnipotent. The apoſtles of Chriſt cured diſeaſes, but not by their own power and holineſs, by any innate vertue in them; but in the name of Chriſt, and by power derived and received from him: but Chriſt, being God, had infinite vertue within himſelf, which went forth from him when he pleaſed, to the curing of whatſoever diſeaſe he thought fit; and which was no ways leſſened by the frequent exertions of it; no more than the light and heat of the ſun by the continual emanations of them; only there is this difference between the emiſſion of light and heat from the ſun, and the ſending forth vertue from Chriſt, that the one is by the neceſſity of nature, without knowledge, or will, but the other voluntarily, and when, and as he pleaſes. The ſame holds good with reſpect to healing ſpiritual diſeaſes: Chriſt has a power within him to forgive all treſpaſſes; and vertue may be ſaid to go out of him to this purpoſe, when it is his will to make application of pardoning mercy to his people; which requires an exertion of power, as well as a diſplay of grace. Turned him about in the preſs, and ſaid, who touched my clothes? that is, turned himſelf towards the woman behind him, tho' the preſs was ſo large about him, and aſked who touched his clothes; not for his own ſake, who knew very well who had done it; but that the cure might be known to others: not for the ſake of oſtentation and popular applauſe, but for the manifeſtation of his glory, and for the glory of God, and for the ſtrengthening the faith of Jairus, who was with him, and with whom he was going to raiſe his daughter to life; and alſo that he might have an opportunity of ſhewing forth, and commending this poor woman's faith, and of confirming the cure wrought, and of diſmiſſing her with the utmoſt pleaſure and joy.

[t] T. Hieroſ. Nidda, fol. 50. 2.

[u] T. Hieroſ. Nidda, fol. 48. 4.

Ver. 31. And his diſciples ſaid unto him, &c.] Peter, and they that were with him; after the croud that were about him denied that any of them had touched him; ſee Luke viii. 45. thou ſeeſt the multitude thronging thee, and ſayeſt thou who touched me? They ſeem aſtoniſhed at his queſtion, and anſwer with ſome degree of warmth, and almoſt ready to charge it as weak and impertinent; ſince, as there was ſuch a croud about him, preſſing him on every ſide, he could not but be touched by many; and therefore to aſk who touched him, when this was the caſe, they thought was a very ſtrange and unneceſſary queſtion.

Ver. 32. And he looked round about, &c.] The preſs and throng of people, on every ſide of him; though he knew very well where ſhe ſtood, who had done the thing, and had received the cure: to ſee her that had done this thing; how ſhe looked, and whether her countenance, and the confuſion ſhe was thrown into by the queſtion, would not betray her; though he himſelf wanted no ſuch ſigns, by which to diſcover her. Chriſt, as God, being omniſcient, knew who ſhe was, and where ſhe was; and, as man, did not want to ſee her to gratify his curioſity: nor was his view to chide her for what ſhe had done, but to expreſs his well-pleaſedneſs in her faith and actions, and to obſerve it to others, and the cure ſhe had; not in an oſtentatious way, to gain glory to himſelf, but to commend her faith, and encourage others in the exerciſe of it on him; and eſpecially Jairus, the ruler of the ſynagogue, who was with him, and in great diſtreſs, on account of his daughter, whom Chriſt was going to raiſe from the dead.

Ver. 33. But the woman fearing and trembling, &c.] Leſt ſhe ſhould be reproved, and ſuffer the penalties of the law, for appearing in publick during the time of her uncleanneſs, Lev. xv. 25. or that Chriſt was diſpleaſed with her, for her taking an improper method to obtain her cure; or leſt he ſhould recal it, or was angry with her for concealing it, and attempting to go away undiſcovered, and without ſo much as thanking him for it. After converſion, after ſouls have laid hold on Chriſt for righteouſneſs and life; after they have had the pardon of their ſins, and are cured of their diſeaſes, they are not without their fears and tremblings, tho' there is no juſt reaſon for them: they fear where no fear is; that is, where there is no true cauſe of fear; which was this woman's caſe: they are ſometimes afraid they have no intereſt in Chriſt, and in his love; that they are hypocrites; that the truth of grace is not in them; that they ſhall never hold out to the end; that they ſhall periſh, and come ſhort of eternal glory, notwithſtanding they know, as this woman did, what has been done in them, and done for them. Knowing what was done in her, and by her; being conſcious to herſelf that ſhe was the perſon that had touched him, and that upon it the fountain of her blood was dried up, and ſhe was thoroughly healed of her diſeaſe: came and fell down before him, and told him all the truth. Chriſt did not point her out, though he knew her; or call her by her name, tho' he could have done it, and have ordered her to come to him, and account for her conduct: he had ſaid enough to work upon her, and engage her to come; who came of herſelf, and with the greateſt reverence to his perſon, and ſenſe of her own unworthineſs, threw herſelf at his feet, and gave him a relation of the whole matter, with the utmoſt truth and exactneſs; what had been her caſe, what was her faith, and what ſhe had done, and what a cure ſhe had received; and which ſhe acknowledged with the greateſt thankfulneſs. In ſome copies 'tis added, before all; before Chriſt and his diſciples, and the throng of people that were along with him: ſhe that came behind Chriſt, and privately took hold of the hem of his garment, her faith, ſecretly going out unto him; now appears openly before him, not being able to hide herſelf any longer. Nor is ſhe aſhamed to tell what ſhe had done, and had been done in her: truth is to be ſpoken, even all the truth; no one has reaſon to be aſhamed of that, and eſpecially of the truth of grace, truth in the inward parts; this is what God requires, and gives, and delights in. The ſecret experiences of grace in our ſouls we ſhould not be aſhamed to relate to others; this makes for the glory of divine grace, and the good of others. In ſome copies 'tis read, and told him all her cauſe before all; her whole affair, how it had been with her, and now was, and what was the cauſe of her taking ſuch a method ſhe did.

Ver. 34. And he ſaid unto her, daughter, &c.] Inſtead of reproving her, or ſhewing any anger, or reſentment at her, as ſhe feared, he ſpeaks to her in a very ſoft, kind, and tender manner, and called her daughter; which was not only an expreſſion of affection and civility, this being an affable, courteous way of ſpeaking, uſed by the Jews; but might ſignify her ſpiritual relation thro' him, being a child of God by adopting grace. She was a daughter of Abraham by natural deſcent, as was the woman bound by ſatan eighteen years, Luke xiii. 16. and ſo ſhe was likewiſe in a ſpiritual ſenſe, being one that walked in the ſteps of his faith, believing in hope againſt hope: and ſhe was alſo a daughter of the Lord God Almighty, as her faith ſhewed her to be, Gal. iii. 26. and to this our Lord may chiefly refer; ſhe was one of thoſe that were predeſtinated to the adoption of children, and were given to Chriſt as ſuch; and who are evidentially the children of God by faith in him: and to have a teſtimony of adoption from the Spirit of God, and from the mouth of Chriſt himſelf, as this woman had; how great a bleſſing is it! thy fait hath made thee whole: through faith in Chriſt ſh received the cure from him; for it was not her act of faith that either merited, or procured it, but his power, and he himſelf the object of her faith that effected it: tho' he is pleaſed to take no further notice of the vertue that went out from him; but commends her faith, for her further and future encouragement in the exerciſe of it, and for the encouragement of others to believe in him. In the Greek text it is, thy faith hath ſaved thee; both from her bodily diſeaſe, and from her ſins: not that there is ſuch an intrinſic virtue in faith as to deliver from either; for certain it is, that it was not virtue that went out of her faith, but vertue which went out from Chriſt that cured her of her iſſue; tho' faith was the means of drawing it out; or it was that, thro' which, vertue from Chriſt exerted itſelf, and produced ſuch an effect: and it is as certain, that not faith, but Chriſt, is the author and cauſe of ſpiritual ſalvation: faith looks to Chriſt for ſalvation, and receives every bleſſing of it from him, as righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, adoption, and eternal life; ſo that believers are ſaved by grace, thro' faith; thro' the exerciſe of that grace they have the joy, and comfort of ſalvation now; and thro' it they are kept, by the power of God, unto the full poſſeſſion of it hereafter. Go in peace; to thine houſe; all health and happineſs attend thee; let no uneaſy thought, about what has paſſed, dwell on thy mind; be joyful and thankful for the mercy received, and never fear, or dread, a return of the diſorder. Peace is the effect of faith in Chriſt, of pardon thro' his blood, and ſalvation in him; true ſpiritual, ſolid peace is enjoy'd in a way of believing; it is the fruit of a view of intereſt in juſtification by faith in Chriſt's righteouſneſs; and nothing more effectually produces and ſecures it than a ſenſe of all ſpiritual diſeaſes being healed, or an application of pardoning grace and mercy, thro' the blood of Chriſt; which itſelf ſpeaks better things than that of Abel, even pardon, and ſo peace: ſuch who are bleſſed in this manner, and walk under a view and ſenſe of theſe things, go in peace all their days, and at laſt enter into peace, even into the joy of their Lord. And be whole of thy plague: ſhe was ſo already; but this was a confirmation of it, and what might aſſure her, that ſhe ſhould remain ſo, and no more be afflicted with that chaſtiſement. Sin pardoned, tho' ſought for, ſhall not be found; nor condemnation come upon the pardoned ſinner; he is whole and ſound, and ſhall be no more ſick, and much leſs die the ſecond death.

Ver. 35. While he yet ſpake, &c.] The above things to the poor woman, in commendation of her faith, and for her future encouragement, peace, and comfort in ſoul and body: there came from the ruler of the ſynagogue's houſe certain that ſaid. The Vulgate Latin renders it, from the ruler of the ſynagogue, and which is indeed the literal verſion of the phraſe; but they could not come from him in perſon, for he was with Jeſus: hence ſome verſions, as the Arabic and Ethiopic, read, there came to the ruler of the ſynagogue; but the ſenſe is eaſy, by ſupplying the word houſe, as we do, and as the Syriac and Perſic verſions alſo do. Luke ſpeaks but of one that came, ch. viii. 49. whereas this Evangeliſt ſuggeſts there were more, which is no contradiction; for Luke does not ſay there was but one; there might be more that came with the news, tho' but one related it as the mouth of the reſt; or they might come one after another with it. Which ſaid, thy daughter is dead, why troubleſt thou the maſter any further? theſe brought him the account that his daughter was actually dead, which he himſelf feared before; and therefore they thought it was in vain to give Chriſt any further trouble to drag along thro' a croud of people preſſing him; whom they looked upon as a very worthy perſon, an eminent doctor and prophet, a maſter in Iſrael, and one that had done great cures on living perſons in diſtreſs; yet imagined it was wholly out of his power to raiſe one from the dead, of which, as yet, they had had no inſtance, unleſs the raiſing of the widow of Naim's ſon was before this, as indeed it ſeems to be; but perhaps theſe perſons, who were ſome of the relations, or domeſticks of the ruler, had heard nothing of it; for if they had, they might have hoped he would have exerted his power in raiſing the ruler's daughter, as well as the widow's ſon.

Ver. 36. As ſoon as Jeſus had heard the word that was ſpoken, &c.] By thoſe that came from the ruler's houſe; as that his daughter was dead, and it was to no purpoſe to give him any farther trouble, ſince all hope of recovery was now gone: he ſaith unto the ruler of the ſynagogue; who was overwhelmed with trouble, and quite diſpirited, and ready to ſwoon and die away; be not afraid, only believe: don't be diſcouraged at theſe tidings, or diſtruſt my power to help thee, only believe that I am able to raiſe her, even from the dead; and fear not, but it will be done. If a man can but believe, he has no reaſon to fear; for what is it that almighty power can't do? it can raiſe the dead; there is nothing can ſtand in its way, or ſtop its courſe; and faith in it ſurmounts difficulties which are inſuperable to carnal ſenſe and reaſon: this was the ſupport and foundation of Abraham's faith; hence he was ſtrong in the exerciſe of it, and believed in hope againſt hope, becauſe he was fully perſuaded that God was able to perform what he had promiſed, Rom. iv. 18, 20, 21. And whereas the ruler had expreſſed ſome faith in Chriſt, that his daughter, tho' at the point of death, would be healed by him and live, provided he would but come and lay his hands on her; and Chriſt had aſſented to go along with him, and had given him an intimation that he would reſtore her; he had nothing to do but to believe in him, that even tho' ſhe was dead, he was able to raiſe her from the dead, as well as to recover her at the point of death, and that he would do it; but, oh! this thing, only believe, how hard a matter is it, tho' there is ſo much encouragement to it both in the power and will of Chriſt! Faith is not of a man's ſelf at firſt; it is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit; and the lively and comfortable exerciſe of it is owing to the influence of efficacious grace: but if Chriſt, who is the author and finiſher of faith, ſays believe, or only believe; ſuch power goes along with his words, as doubtleſs did at this time, as cauſes ſouls to exerciſe faith in him; and the more faith, the leſs fear; and ſuch walk moſt comfortably in themſelves, and moſt to the glory of Chriſt, who walk by faith on him. This word only does not exclude the exerciſe of other graces, but rather implies it, for where this grace is in exerciſe, generally ſpeaking, others are; nor the performance of good works, which are the fruits and effects of true faith, and without which faith is dead; but it ſtands oppoſed to fears and doubting, and to all carnal reaſonings, as well as to all truſt and confidence in other objects beſides Chriſt.

Ver. 37. And he ſuffered no man to follow him, &c.] To the houſe of the ruler, but diſmiſſed the multitude, being not deſirous of the honour and applauſe of men: probably what he ſaid to the ruler, was privately, and with a low voice, ſo that the multitude did not hear him; and underſtanding by the meſſengers that the child was dead, were the more eaſily prevailed upon to depart, ſince they might conclude there was nothing now to be done; ſave Peter, and James, and John, the brother of James: three favourite diſciples, who were a ſufficient number of witneſſes; and who were taken alone along with Chriſt on ſome other occaſions, as at his transfiguration, and when in the garden.

Ver. 38. And he cometh to the houſe of the ruler of the ſynagogue, &c.] Along with him, and the three diſciples above-mentioned; and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, and they came, the above perſons: and ſeeing the tumult; the throng and croud of people, of relations, friends, neighbours, and acquaintance, on this occaſion, all in a hurry, and in one motion or another, expreſſing their concern by words and geſtures. And them that wept and wailed bitterly; the mourning women, the ſame with the Preficæ of the Romans, who ſung mournful ſongs, and made hideous noiſes, being hired for this purpoſe; as alſo thoſe who played doleful tunes on muſical inſtruments; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 23.

Ver. 39. And when he was come in, &c.] Into the houſe, within doors, into one of the apartments, and where the company of mourners, and the pipers and mourning women were, ſinging and ſaying their doleful ditties: he ſaith unto them, why make ye this ado and weep? why all this tumult and noiſe? this grief and mourning, whether real or artificial? the damſel is not dead, but ſleepeth: not but that ſhe was truly dead, but not ſo as to remain under the power of death: ſhe was like a perſon in a ſleep, who would in a little time be awaked out of it; and which was as eaſily performed by Chriſt, as if ſhe had been only in a natural ſleep; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 24.

Ver. 40. And they laughed him to ſcorn, &c.] The ſervants of the houſe that had laid her out; and the neighbours and relations that were come in on this occaſion, and had ſatisfied themſelves that ſhe was dead; and the players on the pipe and flute, with the mourning women, who got their livelihood this way; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 24. but when he had put them all out; of the houſe, or that part of it where he was; that is, ordered them to depart, with the leave and conſent of the maſter of the houſe: he taketh the father, and the mother, of the damſel, and them that were with him; either with Jairus, who had accompanied him to Chriſt, and returned with him; the Ethiopic verſion reads it, with them, who were with the father and the mother of the damſel, their near relations, and intimate friends; or rather with Chriſt, namely, the three diſciples, Peter, James, and John: and entereth in where the damſel was lying; into an inner room, where the child was laid out on a bed.

Ver. 41. And he took the damſel by the hand, &c.] See the note on Matt. ix. 25. And ſaid unto her; in the Syriac language, which was then commonly ſpoken by the Jews, and well underſtood: hence the Syriac verſion expreſſes the following words without an interpretation, Talitha Cumi. The Ethiopic verſion reads it, Tabitha Cumi; and ſo do ſome Greek copies, and Latin verſions, taking it to be the ſame word as in Acts ix. 36. whereas that ſignifies Dorcas, a roe; but this word is of another ſignification, as here explained, which, is being interpreted, damſel (I ſay unto thee) ariſe. The phraſe, I ſay unto thee, is no part of the interpretation of the above Syriac words; but is added by the Evangeliſt, as being what was expreſſed by Chriſt at the ſame time, ſignifying his authority and power over death; only damſel ariſe, is the interpretation of them. טלי, Tali, ſignifies a boy, and טליתא, Talitha, a girl; and ſo they are often uſed in the Targums [w], and in the Talmud: the one is uſed for a boy of ſeventeen years of age [x], and the other for a girl of ſixteen or ſeventeen years of age [y]; ſo that this child might well be called by this name, ſince ſhe was but twelve years of age; and קומי, Cumi, is the imperative of קום, to ariſe.

Ver. 42. And ſtraightway the damſel aroſe, and walked, &c.] As ſoon as ever the above words were pronounced by Chriſt, ſuch divine power went along with them, that the child returned to life; and raiſed herſelf up from the bed, got off of it, and walked about the room in perfect health and ſtrength: for ſhe was of the age of twelve years; and ſo, when alive and well, was able to walk; tho' one of this age was called a little one, as this is by another Evangeliſt; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. and they were aſtoniſhed with a great aſtoniſhment; they were exceedingly amazed at ſuch a ſignal inſtance of the power of our Lord, even both the parents of the child, and the diſciples of Chriſt.

Ver. 43. And he charged them ſtraitly that no man ſhould know it, &c.] From them, immediately, and whilſt he was upon the ſpot; for that the thing could be long concealed, it was not reaſonable to ſuppoſe: this charge he gave, to ſhew his diſlike of oſtentation and popular applauſe, and to avoid the envy of the Scribes and Phariſees, and prevent the people from making any attempts to proclaim him king; his time not being yet come to die, he having ſome other work to do; and a more full manifeſtation of him being reſerved for another time, and to be done in another way. And commanded that ſomething ſhould be given her to eat; which would be an evidence not only that ſhe was really alive, but that ſhe was reſtored to perfect health: ſhe was both raiſed from the dead, and entirely freed from the diſtemper ſhe laboured under before her death; death had cured her of that, as it does of all diſtempers: ſhe did not riſe with it, but was free from it; and was now like one that had been aſleep for a while, and was hungry upon it; as children of ſuch an age generally are upon riſing from ſleep.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. AND he went out from thence, &c.] From Capernaum; and came into his own country; or city, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the city of Nazareth; ſo called becauſe it was the place where Chriſt was conceived, and where he was educated; for which he had a regard, and was willing it ſhould partake of the benefit of his doctrine and miracles: and his diſciples follow him; as they did where-ever he went; and which is a true characteriſtic of a diſciple of Jeſus.

Ver. 2. And when the ſabbath-day was come, &c.] For it ſeems that it was on a week-day, or on one of the common days of the week, that he entered into the city, where he remained without making himſelf known, till the ſabbath-day came: and then he began to teach in the ſynagogue; that is, at Nazareth; where he expounded the law and the prophets, and preached the Goſpel: and many hearing him were aſtoniſhed. The Vulgate Latin adds, at his doctrine; and ſo it is read in Beza's moſt ancient copy: ſaying, from whence hath this man theſe things? This ſkill of explaining ſcripture, this doctrine which he teaches, and theſe miracles he is ſaid to work? this queſtion they the rather put, becauſe they had known him from the beginning: he had lived long among them, and they knew he had not learnt of men, and therefore wondered how he came by ſuch things as theſe: and what wiſdom is this which is given to him, that even ſuch mighty works are wrought by his hands? which were but the other day employed in ſervile work, and mechanical operations.

Ver. 3. Is not this the carpenter? &c.] Some copies read, the carpenter's ſon, as in Matt. xiii. 55. and ſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; but all the ancient copies, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions, read the carpenter: ſuch may Chriſt be reaſonably thought to be, ſince his father was; and which buſineſs he might follow, partly through the meanneſs and poverty of his parents; and partly that he might ſet an example of induſtry and diligence; and chiefly to bear that part of the firſt Adam's curſe, which was to eat his bread with the ſweat of his brow: nor ought this to have been objected to him by the Jews, with whom it was uſual for their greateſt doctors and Rabbins, to be of ſome trade or ſecular employment; ſo R. Jochanan was a ſhoe-maker[z], R. Iſaac was a blackſmith[a], R. Juda was a taylor[b], Abba Saul and R. Jochanan, were undertakers for funerals[c]; R. Simeon was a ſeller of cotton[d], R. Nehemiah was a ditcher[e], R. Joſe bar Chelphetha was a ſkinner[f]; and others of them were of other trades, and ſome exceeding mean: the famous R. Hillell was a hewer of wood, and Carna, a judge in Iſrael, was a drawer of water[g]; and ſo Maimonides ſays, "the great wiſe "men of Iſrael, were ſome of them hewers of "wood and drawers of water[h]." They ſay, "a "man is obliged to learn his ſon an honeſt and "eaſy trade[i]:" there are ſome buſineſſes they except againſt[k], but this of a carpenter is not one; yea, they ſay, "if a man does not teach his ſon "a trade, it is all one as if he taught him thievery[l]." Nor did they think it at all inconſiſtent with learning; for they have a ſaying[m], that "beautiful is the learning of the law, along with a "trade." The Jews ought not to have flouted Chriſt with this trade of a carpenter, ſince, according to them, it was neceſſary that a carpenter, in ſome caſes, ſhould be a regular prieſt; as in repairing of the temple, eſpecially the holy of holies. So ſays Maimonides[n]; "there was a trap-door, or "an open place in the floor of the chamber, open "to the holy of holies, that workmen might enter "thereby into the holy of holies, when there was "a neceſſity of repairing any thing; and ſince we "make mention of workmen, it may be obſerved "here, when there is need of building in the midſt "of the temple, great care ſhould be taken, "שיהיה האומן כהן כשר, that the workman, or "carpenter, be a right prieſt." Yea, they expreſsly ſay, that the Meſſiah is one of the four carpenters in Zech. i. 20. And the Lord ſhewed me four carpenters; they aſk[o], "who are the four carpenters? "Says R. Chana bar Bizna, ſays R. Simeon the "ſaint, Meſſiah the ſon of David, Meſſiah the ſon "of Joſeph, and Elijah, and a prieſt of righteouſneſs." This is with ſome variation elſewhere expreſſed thus[p], "and the Lord ſhewed me four carpenters; and theſe are they, Elijah, and the king "Meſſiah, and Melchizedek, and the anointed for "war." And one of their commentators[q] on the ſame text ſays, "our Rabbins of bleſſed memory, "explain this verſe of the days of the Meſſiah;" and then cites the above paſſage out of the Talmud; and another[r] refers unto it; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 55. The inhabitants of Nazareth go on, in order to reproach Jeſus, calling him the ſon of Mary; a poor woman of their town, and perhaps now a a widow, ſince no mention is made of Joſeph: the brother of James and Joſes, and of Juda and Simon? who were all of them the ſons of Alpheus or Cleophas, who was himſelf brother, or his wife, ſiſter to Joſeph or Mary; ſo that Chriſt was the near kinſman of theſe his ſons: and it was uſual with the Jews to call ſuch an one a brother, and even indeed a more diſtant relation. The Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of Joſes, read Joſeph: and are not his ſiſters here with us? And they were offended at him; either at the manner he came by his wiſdom, with which he delivered ſuch doctrine he did; and by his power, through which he wrought his mighty works, or miracles; they ſuſpecting he came by them in an unlawful way, through familiarity with the devil, which they ſometimes charged him with having: or at the meanneſs of his trade and employment; they could by no means think of him as the Meſſiah, who made ſo contemptible a figure, and was brought up in ſuch a low way of life; and the rather, ſince one of their kings in common, was not to be a mechanic, or at leaſt of any mean occupation: one of their canons runs thus[s]; "they don't appoint to be a king, or an high-prieſt, one that "has been a butcher, or a barber, or a bath-keeper, "or a tanner; not becauſe they were unfit, but "becauſe their buſineſs was mean, and the people "would always deſpiſe them." Other trades are elſewhere[t] mentioned, from among whom a king, or an high-prieſt, were never taken; as founders, combers, borers of hand-mills, druggiſts, weavers, notaries, fullers, a letter of blood, or a ſurgeon, &c. particularly ſuch as related to women's buſineſs. Now, as it was not uſual to chuſe any one to be a king that wrought at a trade, they could not bear that the king Meſſiah ſhould be of one; and becauſe Jeſus was, they were offended at him, and rejected him as the Meſſiah. Or they were offended at the meanneſs of his extraction and deſcent, his father, and mother, and brethren, and ſiſters, being all perſons in low circumſtances of life; whereas they expected, the Meſſiah would be born and brought up as a temporal prince, in great grandeur and ſplendor; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 55, 56, 57.

Ver. 4. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] The following proverb; a prophet is not without honour, but in his own country, and among his own kin, and in his own houſe; the ſame as in Matt. xiii. 57. ſee the note there. Only the phraſe, among his own kin, is here added: very probably ſome of thoſe that made theſe reflections, were ſome diſtant relations of Joſeph, or Mary; for as Jeſus was now in his own country and city, and in his own native place, ſo among his kindred and relations; who envied his gifts and attainments, and objected to him his riſe from that branch of their family, which was the moſt mean and abject.

Ver. 5. And he could there do no mighty work, &c.] Or miracle; not that Chriſt had no power in himſelf to work miracles, though their unbelief and contempt of him were very great; but it was not fit and proper that he ſhould do any there, ſince ſuch were their prejudices againſt him: it is an uſual way of ſpeaking with the Hebrews, when either it is not fit and proper that a thing ſhould be done, or they will not do it, to ſay it can't be done; ſee Gen. xix. 22. and xxxvii. 4. and even it is ſaid of God himſelf, So that the Lord could no longer bear, becauſe of your evil doings, Jer. xliv. 22. Not but that he could, if he would, but he would not; nor was it fit and proper that he ſhould; the ſame is the ſenſe here: beſides, in Matt. xiii. 58. 'tis ſaid, he did not many mighty works there; and ſo the Arabic verſion here, and he did not many mighty works there; he did not think it proper to do any of any great conſequence, nor did he. Wherefore the Jew [u] has no reaſon to object this to the divinity of Chriſt, as if there was a want of power in him. Chriſt is omnipotent, and he has given proof of his almighty power, by the miracles which he has wrought; and though he wrought no mighty work there, yet he wrought many elſewhere, which ſufficiently atteſt the truth of his proper deity: the emphaſis lies upon the word there; though he did not work any conſiderable miracle in that place, he did in others; which ſhows, that it was not a defect of power in him, that was the reaſon of it, but ſomething elſe; and Matthew gives the reaſon of it, and ſays, it was becauſe of their unbelief: not that their unbelief was an over-match for his power; he could have removed that, if he had thought fit, but he did not do it; he, who is the author and finiſher of faith, could have took away their unbelief, as the man that brought his dumb child to Chriſt, concluded he could; and therefore ſaid to him, Lord, help my unbelief, Mark ix. 24. Chriſt ſometimes required of the perſons he was about to heal, faith in him, that he could heal them; and ſo did his apoſtles, Matt. ix. 28. Acts xiv. 9. Not that faith contributed any thing to the cure, but it was the way and means in which Chriſt was pleaſed to communicate his healing vertue: beſides, when perſons applied to him for healing, and expreſſed their faith in him, it gave him an opportunity of working a miracle for that purpoſe; but now theſe people did not ſo much as aſk ſuch a favour of him, and ſo gave him no occaſion of doing any mighty work; for which reaſon it may be ſaid, he could not, no opportunity offering: and moreover, ſeeing they diſbelieved him, and rejected him as the Meſſiah, they were unworthy of having any wrought among them; and it was but juſt and right, to do none: nay, it was rather an inſtance of kindneſs not to do any among them; ſince had he, and they had remained impenitent and unbelieving, as he knew they would, theſe would have been aggravations of their condemnation. Save that he laid his hands upon a few ſick folk, and healed them. There were ſome few ſick people that had faith in him, and came to him, beſeeching him to heal them; and accordingly he did lay his hands on them, and cured them, which was a way he ſometimes uſed: and theſe cures he wrought, to ſhew his power, what he could do, and what benefits they might have enjoyed by him, and to leave them inexcuſable.

Ver. 6. And he marvelled becauſe of their unbelief, &c.] Which was the reaſon, as Matthew ſays, ch. xiii. 58. why he did not many mighty works there, becauſe they continued their prejudices againſt him, and their unbelief in him, notwithſtanding what he did do, which was matter of admiration to him; wherefore he took his leave of them, as an ungrateful and unworthy people; and it is never after obſerved, that he returned there any more. It was a ſurprize to Chriſt, as man, that his countrymen ſhould not believe in him, but reject him as the Meſſiah, on account of the above things; ſince they knew his parentage and education, and mean employ among them, even almoſt to that time; and yet ſuch were his miniſtry and miracles, and ſuch were his wiſdom and power he was poſſeſſed of, that they could not account for; they might at leaſt have concluded, ſeeing it was clear to them he had not them from men, that he had a miſſion and commiſſion from God, and was qualified by him for ſuch ſervice and work; though they might have carried their reaſonings further, and it was marvellous they ſhould not, and have believed him to be more than a man, to have been a divine perſon, and the true Meſſiah: the proofs of Chriſt's deity and Meſſiahſhip are ſo plain and inconteſtable, that it is amazing that there ſhould be any, who have read them or heard of them, that ſhould be deiſts, or continue unbelievers. Such unbelief muſt be owing to a wretched ſtupidity, and judicial blindneſs of mind. And he went round about the villages teaching: he took a circuit throughout all the little towns and villages round about Nazareth, inſtructing the ignorant country people, in the things concerning the kingdom of God.

Ver. 7. And he called unto him the twelve, &c.] His twelve diſciples, as ſome copies read; whom he had before called by his grace, and had appointed and ordained them his apoſtles, but had not yet publickly ſent forth; in order to which, he now called them to him, and gave them their commiſſion, qualifications, and inſtructions: and began to ſend them forth by two and two: he firſt ſent forth one couple, and then another; the reaſon of his ſending them by pairs, was partly for the ſake of company, and that they might be uſeful and aſſiſting to one another; and partly to ſhew their agreement in doctrine; and that they might be proper and ſufficient witneſſes of it, whereby it might be eſtabliſhed; and the rather, being thus ſent by pairs into different parts, their meſſage would be the ſooner diſpatched, than if they had all went together: and gave them power over unclean ſpirits: that is, to caſt them out; as it is expreſſed in Matt. x. 1. ſee the note there; and which is here added in the Syriac and Perſic verſions. Many things are omitted by this Evangeliſt, which are mentioned by Matthew: he does not give us the names of the twelve apoſtles; the reaſon of that indeed may be, becauſe they are related by him in ch. iii. 16—19. and he did not chuſe to repeat them here: nor does he take any notice of the places where the apoſtles were to go, and where not; nor of the perſons to whom, or not; as not into the way of the Gentiles, nor into any of the cities of the Samaritans, but to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael: nor does he ſay any thing of the ſubject matter of their miniſtry, or what they had in charge to publiſh; as that the kingdom of heaven is at hand, or the Goſpel-diſpenſation: nor does he obſerve the ſeveral things they were to do in confirmation of their doctrine and miſſion; as healing the ſick, cleanſing lepers, raiſing the dead, and caſting out devils: he only relates the directions given them with reſpect to their journey, in the following verſes; the reaſon of all which ſeems to be, becauſe he refers not to the ſame time as Matthew does, to their appointment and ordination; but to the time they were ſent out, and proceeded on their journey.

[u] MS. Luſit. N. 83. apud Kidder, Demonſtr. of the Meſſiah, par. 2. p. 59.

Ver. 8. And commanded them that they ſhould take nothing for their journey, &c.] To accommodate them in it, except thoſe things after directed to: ſave a ſtaff only; a ſingle one, for ſtaves in the plural number are forbidden, Matt. x. 10. ſee the note there; no ſcrip, no bread, no money in their purſe. Travellers uſed to put their bread, or any other ſort of food into their ſcrips, and their money in their girdles; but the diſciples were not allowed to carry either, becauſe proviſion were to be made for them wherever they came at free coſt, it being what their labour was worthy of; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 9, 10.

Ver. 9. But be ſhod with ſandals, &c.] Which were different from ſhoes, and more fit to travel with, and therefore allowed when ſhoes were forbidden; ſee the note on Matt. x. 10. though ſome think there was no difference between ſhoes and ſandals, and that Chriſt in Matt. x. 10. does not forbid the taking of ſhoes, but two pair of ſhoes; as not two coats, nor two ſtaves, but one of a ſort only. And not put on two coats; that is, at a time; an inner and an outward one, or one at one time, and another at another: they were forbid change of raiment; the reaſons for it ſee in the note on Matt. x. 10. From all which it appears, that as a miniſter of the Goſpel ought not to be a worldly minded man, that minds earth and earthly things, and ſeeks to amaſs wealth and riches to himſelf, and preaches for filthy lucre's ſake; nor to be a ſenſual and voluptuous man, ſerving his own belly, and not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, feeding himſelf, and not the flock; ſo neither ſhould he be filled with worldly cares, overwhelmed in worldly buſineſs, and entangled with the affairs of this life: he ought to have his mind free from all ſollicitude and anxious concern, about a ſubſiſtence for himſelf and his, that ſo he may with greater and more cloſe application, attend to his miniſtry, to preparations for it, and the performance of it; and give up himſelf entirely to the word and prayer, and not have his mind diſtracted with other things: upon which account it is highly neceſſary, that the people to whom he miniſters ſhould take care, that a ſufficient proviſion be made for him; that he may live without any anxious care and thought about ſuch things, and his mind be more intent about the work he is called unto: and which is what our Lord chiefly deſigns by all this, who has ordained that they that preach the Goſpel, ſhould be comfortably provided for, and live of it; and which, as it makes for the peace of their minds that miniſter, it iſſues in the advantage of thoſe who are miniſtered to.

Ver. 10. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] He continued giving orders and directions to them, ſaying, in what place ſoever ye enter into an houſe, there abide till ye depart from that place: that is, in whatſoever city or town they ſhould come to, the firſt houſe they went into, they ſhould continue in, during their ſtay in that city or town, and not ſhift from houſe to houſe; ſee the note on Matt. x. 11.

Ver. 11. And whoſoever ſhall not receive you, nor hear you, &c.] Who would neither take them into their houſes, nor hear what they had to ſay to them: when ye depart thence; from the houſe, or the city, or town, in which it is: ſhake off the duſt under your feet, for a teſtimony againſt them; that they had been with them, and attempted to preach the Goſpel to them, but they deſpiſed and rejected it; wherefore they departed from them as an unworthy people, againſt whom the duſt of their feet would riſe as a teſtimony, in the day of judgment; ſee the note on Matt. x. 14. Verily, I ſay unto you, it ſhall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrha in the day of judgment, than for that city. This clauſe is omitted in ſome copies, and ſo it is in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and may perhaps be tranſcribed from Matt. x. 15. ſee the note there; though it is in moſt copies, and is read in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions. It is certain that there will be a day of judgment; it is fixed, God has appointed it, though it is not known by men or angels: this will be univerſal; all muſt appear in it before God, the judge of all, Jews and Gentiles; ſuch who have lived in the earlier ages of time, as well as thoſe that will live nearer that day; ſuch who have only had the dim light of nature to guide them, and alſo who have been favoured with the Goſpel revelation: the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, though they have had the judgments of God upon them in this world, they will not eſcape the righteous judgment of God hereafter; things are not over with them, there is ſtill a reckoning to be made, an account to paſs with them; their full puniſhment is not yet executed, even though they have been ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire; their bodies muſt be raiſed, and they muſt receive for the things which they have done in them, and which they have ſo dreadfully and unnaturally abuſed; and yet, as vile ſinners as they have been, and as ſore a puniſhment as they are worthy of, their puniſhment will be milder and more tolerable, than that of the inhabitants of ſuch places, where the Goſpel has been preached, and they have deſpiſed and rejected it. May the inhabitants of our land, eſpecially of ſome parts of it, as of London, and others, conſider this!

Ver. 12. And they went out, &c.] From that part of the country where they then were, ſome one way, and ſome another, two by two, with theſe inſtructions, and according to theſe directions; in order to preach the word, and work miracles, in the ſeveral parts where they were ſent: and preached that men ſhould repent; both of the evil practices which they were guilty of, and of the bad principles they had imbibed, and change both their ſentiments and their conduct: this they exhorted them to, as John the Baptiſt, and Chriſt, had done before, who ſet out in their miniſtry the ſame way; and theſe, as they did alſo, preached the Goſpel, and the things appertaining to the kingdom of God, and Goſpel diſpenſation, and called upon men to believe them. For faith and repentance went together in Chriſt's miniſtry, Mark i. 15. and ſo they did in the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, Acts xix. 4. and in the miniſtry of the apoſtles, Acts xx. 21. When they preached that men ſhould repent, it does not from hence follow, that they have a power to repent of themſelves: for ſuch is the condition of men by nature, that they neither ſee their need of repentance, and their hearts are ſo hard and obdurate, that they cannot work themſelves up to it, or work it in them, and exerciſe it; this requires the powerful and efficacious grace of God to produce it, and it is a gift of his grace; and if he gives the means, and not the grace of repentance itſelf, it will never appear: but the apoſtles preaching that men ſhould repent, ſhows that they were in ſuch a ſtate as to need it; and how neceſſary it was for them to have it, ſeeing without it they muſt all periſh: and ſuch a miniſtration is proper, to awaken the minds of men to a ſenſe of the need of it, and to direct them to Chriſt the Saviour, who is exalted to give it, as well as the remiſſion of ſins.

Ver. 13. And they caſt out many devils, &c.] Which they had power given them to do; and this they did, in confirmation of their miſſion and doctrine, and for the benefit of miſerable creatures, who were poſſeſſed by them; and to ſhew their power over the devils, and as a prelude of what they were to be the inſtruments of, in caſting ſatan out of the ſouls of men, both Jews and Gentiles; and eſpecially, in the ejection of him out of the Gentile world: and anointed with oil many that were ſick, and healed them. This they were doubtleſs directed to by Chriſt, as an outward ſign of healing; but not as a medicine; otherwiſe there would have been no miracle in the cure: though it is certain, the Jews uſed anointing with oil medicinally in many caſes, as the means of healing; but they did not always ſucceed, as the apoſtles did: on the day of atonement [w], "it was not lawful to anoint "part of the body, as the whole body; but if a "man was ſick, or had ulcers on his head, he "might anoint according to his uſual way, and "no notice was taken on't." Again [x], "a man "may not anoint with wine, or vinegar, but he "may anoint with oil: he that has a pain in his "head, or has ulcers upon him, סך שמן, he may "anoint with oil, but he may not anoint with wine "and vinegar: wine of the ſecond tithe, which "they mix, is forbidden to anoint with; oil of "the ſecond tithe, which they mix, is lawful to "anoint with." . And it is elſewhere ſaid [y], that "R. Meir allowed of the mixing of oil and wine, "לסוך לחולה, to anoint the ſick on a ſabbath; "but when he was ſick, and we ſought to do ſo "to him, he would not ſuffer us." But that oil was uſed by the apoſtles as a medicine for the healing of diſeaſes, cannot well be thought; ſince oil, tho' it may be uſeful in ſome caſes, it is not an univerſal medicine, which is proper to all; nor were the apoſtles inſtructed by Chriſt in the art of phyſic, but were poſſeſſed by him with extraordinary gifts, to cure the diſorders of the body, for the confirmation of the Goſpel, which they preached; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that healing the ſick by anointing with oil, is joined with the extraordinary power of caſting out devils; and it was the ſame power by which they performed the one, as the other; ſee Luke ix. 1, 2, 6. Hence it appears, that this paſſage gives no countenance to the uſe of ſuch a practice in our days; ſince theſe were apoſtles only, who uſed it, who were extraordinary perſons, and whoſe office in the church was an extraordinary one, and is now ceaſed; and healing in this way, was by an extraordinary power beſtowed upon them, which has ceaſed; and therefore the rite, or ceremony of anointing with oil, for ſuch a purpoſe, ſhould be of courſe diſcontinued; however, it cannot be ſupported by this inſtance, whatever countenance it may ſeem to have from James v. 14. for it muſt be owned, there is ſome difference in the paſſages: the perſons that anointed here were apoſtles, there the elders of the church; the perſons anointed there, were good people, the members of the church, but here any ſort of perſons, and chiefly, if not altogether unbelievers; the healing of them is aſcribed to the prayer of faith in James, but here to the extraordinary power of the apoſtles, by anointing with oil; though it may be, the healing was equally miraculous in the one, as the other: but be this as it will, nothing can be concluded from hence, in favour of the ſacrament of extreme unction, uſed by the Papiſts; who adminiſter that to perſons, juſt at the point of death, and that for the remiſſion of their ſins, and the ſaving of their ſouls; whereas oil was uſed by the apoſtles to ſick perſons, and for the recovery of their bodily health. But ſince theſe were extraordinary cures which they performed this way, why did they make uſe of oil at all, ſeeing the vertue of healing did not come from that, and they could as well have healed ſickneſſes without it, as with it? To which it may be replied, that they did not always make uſe of it; ſometimes only words were expreſſed, ſometimes only hands were laid on the ſick, and ſometimes the ſick perſons were healed by handkerchiefs and aprons taken from them; which ſhow, that the healing vertue was not in the means, nor was it tied to any: moreover, this was only uſed as an outward ſign of healing, and might have ſome ſpiritual ſignificancy in it; it might ſhow, that they were ſent forth by Chriſt the anointed one, who is anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows; it might be ſymbolical of the grace of the Spirit, which is often compared to oil, which they themſelves were poſſeſſed of in a large meaſure, and which is communicated through the miniſtration of the Goſpel; and it might be ſignificative of the Goſpel itſelf, which brings light and joy, health and comfort along with it, to the ſouls of the men, which they were the happy meſſengers of.

Ver. 14. And king Herod heard of him, &c.] Of Jeſus, as the Syriac verſion ſupplies it; or the miracles of Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion. This Herod here called a king, as he might be by his courtiers, and the common people, is the ſame with the Tetrarch in Matt. xiv. 1. Luke ix. 7. for he was only Tetrarch of Galilee. This was Herod Antipater, the ſon of Herod the great; the fame of Jeſus reached his ears, he being governor of thoſe parts, which were moſtly viſited by Chriſt: for his name was ſpread abroad; by means of his miniſtry and miracles, and through thoſe of his diſciples, whom he had ſent two by two into all parts of the country: and he ſaid that John the Baptiſt was riſen from the dead, and therefore mighty works do ſhew forth themſelves in him; for Herod had ſome time before put John to death; and hearing of theſe wonderful things that were done by Chriſt, his conſcience ſmote him for the murder of John; and ſuch a thought ſtruck into his mind, that he was riſen from the dead, and did theſe miracles: and the more he thought of it, the more ſtrongly he was perſuaded of it; and told it to his courtiers with a great deal of aſſurance, that it was certainly he; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 2.

Ver. 15. Others ſaid that it is Elias, &c.] This was the opinion, either of many of the Jews, who expected that Elias the Tiſhbite would come in perſon, before the coming of the Meſſiah; and thought by the appearance and wonderful works of Jeſus, that he was now come: or of Herod's courtiers, who ſaid this to divert him, from his notion of John the Baptiſt, which they might perceive was very diſtreſſing to him; though the former ſeems rather to be the ſenſe: others ſaid, that it is a prophet; or the prophet, that was to come, whom Moſes had ſpoken of, and the Jews expected; this was the opinion of others of them: or as one of the prophets. The word ἢ, or, is left out in ſome copies; and ſo it is in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and then the ſenſe is, this new prophet lately raiſed up, is as one of the old prophets, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and others; or one of them had riſen up.

Ver. 16. But when Herod heard thereof, &c.] Either of Chriſt, or rather of the different opinions about him, he ſaid, it is John, whom I beheaded: the thought ſtuck cloſe to him, and continued with him; he could not get rid of it, nor perſuade himſelf to the contrary; nor could any of his ſervants get him off of it, but he affirmed it with the greateſt aſſurance imaginable. Theſe different ſentiments of the people concerning Jeſus, greatly perplexed the mind of Herod, as appears from Luke ix. 7, 8, 9. for it was firſt given out by others, and not by Herod, that John the Baptiſt was riſen from the dead; which he hearing of, gave him great uneaſineſs: he thoroughly conſidered the matter; he called to mind how he had uſed him, impriſoned him, and put him to death. At firſt he could not receive it, that ſince he was beheaded by him, he ſhould be reſtored to life; but hearing of the miracles that were done by him, his conſcience accuſed him, his fancy worked, and at length he firmly believed it, that he muſt be riſen: and this ſentiment, which he himſelf gave into at laſt, diſtreſſed him above all the reſt, becauſe of his concern in his death, fearing he was come to life to take vengeance on him: it might not ſit very eaſy upon his mind, to hear that Elias had appeared, the fore-runner of the Meſſiah, the king of the Jews; who himſelf might be quickly expected, and who he might fear, would ſeize upon, and take away that part of the kingdom which he was poſſeſſed of: and even to be told, that one of the prophets was riſen from the dead, might be ſhocking to him; imagining that ſomething of conſiderble moment was to be done, ſome revolution to e made; that the people would be ſtirred up by im, to attempt a change of government: but the rſt of theſe made the greateſt impreſſion on him, nd what he could not get off, but fully gave into, s a thing unqueſtionable. He owns he beheaded John; he was conſcious to himſelf of the ſin, and onfeſſes it; he does not lay it to the charge of Hedias and her daughter, though they requeſted it; e guilt of it lay upon his conſcience, and he eaded this appearance of John, as he fancied. nd if he was a Sadducee before, as he has been ought to be, he now changed his mind, and beved a reſurrection from the dead. So men may convinced of ſin, and entertain other and better tions of religion, and yet not be converted rſons.

Ver. 17. For Herod himſelf had ſent forth, &c.] ne of his guard, a detachment of ſoldiers, and hold upon John; who ſeized upon him, and k him up: and bound him in priſon; in the caſtle of Machærus: for Herodias ſake, his brother Philip's wife, for he had married her; whilſt his brother was living, and who had had children by her; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 3.

Ver. 18. For John had ſaid unto Herod, &c.] He had been perſonally with him, and had plainly and freely told him of his ſin, and faithfully reproved him for it; alledging what he had done, was contrary to the law of God: it is not lawful for thee to have thy brother's wife; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 4.

Ver. 19. Therefore Herodias had a quarrel againſt him, &c.] Was angry with him, conceived wrath, and laid up hatred againſt him, and was an adverſary to him; which is the ſenſe of the Oriental verſions. She bore him an inward grudge, and lay in wait to take the firſt opportunity of diſpatching him: and would have killed him, but ſhe could not; being hindered by Herod, who as yet would not ſuffer it; partly through fear of the people, and partly through the reſpect he had for John.

Ver. 20. For Herod feared John, &c.] Had him in great reſpect; he had a great veneration for him; which was the reaſon that Herodias could not as yet accompliſh her deſign againſt him, and vent her rage upon him. Though ſome underſtand this not of his reverence, but of his dread of him: he knew as follows, that he was a man exemplary for juſtice and holineſs, which gained him great eſteem among the people; wherefore, though Herod, as well as Herodias, could very willingly have put him to death, yet, as Matthew ſays, he feared the multitude; who in general, had an high opinion of John as a prophet, and a holy good man: he feared therefore to take away his life, leſt they ſhould riſe and rebel againſt him; nor would he ſuffer Herodias to do it, for the ſame reaſon. Knowing that he was a juſt man, and an holy; by what he had heard of him, by his own converſation with him, and the obſervation he had made upon his tenets, and conduct. He was a juſt, or righteous man, in a civil, legal, and evangelical ſenſe: he did that which was juſt, between man and man; he did to others, as he would be done by himſelf; he was outwardly righteous before men, he lived ſoberly and righteouſly; nor was he chargeable with any notorious breach of the law; his converſation was ſtrictly moral: and he was juſt, or righteous before God, through the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him; in whom he believed, and to whom he looked as the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſin of the world: but it was in the former ſenſe, that he was known by Herod to be a juſt man; who only could paſs ſuch a judgment upon him, by his outward conduct and manner of life: and ſo as he had true principles of internal holineſs wrought in him by the Spirit of God, with which he was filled from his mother's womb; he was externally holy in his walk and converſation, which was viſible to others, and was taken notice of by this wicked prince: the former of theſe characters may regard his juſtice, uprightneſs, and integrity among men; the latter, his piety and devotion unto God: and the whole agrees with the account the Jewiſh hiſtorian [z] gives of him, that he was "an excellent "good man, who ſtirred up the Jews to the ſtudy "of virtue, and eſpecially piety and juſtice." Theſe were epithets, which uſed to be given to men, famous for religion and piety; ſo we read of Simeon, צדיק, the juſt [a], and of R. Simeon, חסידא, the holy one [b]: and obſerved him; or kept him in cuſtody, in priſon, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic render it; and did not put him to death, but preſerved him from the deſigns of Herodias againſt him. Or he obſerved and took notice of what he had heard him ſay in his miniſtry; he laid it up, and kept it in his mind, and memory; the remembrance of which kept him in awe, and he durſt not, and could not for the preſent, give heed to the ſollicitations of Herodias, or ſuffer her to take away his life: and he alſo obſerved his exemplary life and converſation, which was ſo juſt and upright, that his conſcience would not admit him, to give him up to her will and pleaſure. And when he heard him, he did many things, and heard him gladly: when he heard John explain the law and the prophets, open the writings of the Old Teſtament, preach the doctrine of repentance towards God, and faith in the Meſſiah to come; ſet forth the evil, danger, and puniſhment of ſin, and exhorted to a holy life and converſation; taught the doctrine of baptiſm for the remiſſion of ſin by Chriſt, and ſpoke of the glories and happineſs of a future ſtate, and of the nature of the Goſpel diſpenſation, juſt now uſhering in; Herod, like one of the ſtony ground hearers, received the word with joy, was pleaſed with it, and in ſome things outwardly reformed; but the word did not take root in his heart, and therefore what external effects it produced, came to nothing; nor was he able to withſtand the luſts and corruptions of his heart. The ſenſe ſeems to be, that while he was hearing John, his natural affections were moved, and he had a kind of pleaſure in the things he delivered; juſt as the Jews, for a ſeaſon rejoiced in his light, John v. 35. his natural conſcience dictating to him, that the things which were ſpoken, were right, and juſt, and good; and they were delivered in ſuch a ſolemn and ſtriking manner, as commanded attention and awe; and were things of ſuch a nature and importance, that from a principle of ſelf-love, he could not but wiſh himſelf an intereſt in: and ſo far they had ſuch an influence upon him, as to engage him to do many things in an external way, which had the appearance of good, at leaſt of moral good: ſo that it is manifeſt from hence, that perſons may have a natural affection for the miniſtry of the word, and ſeem delighted with it for a while; yea, may do a great many good actions, which ſeem to be ſuch; and yet the word come in word only, and not in power: there may be all this, and yet true grace may not be wrought, and the word not be the engrafted word, which is able to ſave. In one of Beza's copies, and ſo in one of Stephens's, and in the Coptic verſion, inſtead of he did many things, it is read, he heſitated much; he was perplexed and diſtreſſed, he did not know what to do with himſelf; his conſcience was uneaſy, ſome things were pleaſing to him, and others greatly afflicted him; his mind was diſtracted, he could not tell what to think, ſay, or do: however, it had ſuch an effect upon him, that he had ſome reſpect for John; a veneration of him; at leaſt, ſome fear and dread of him, which kept him from taking away his life, or ſuffering any others to do it.

[a] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 2.

[b] T. Bab. Succah, fol. 52. 2.

Ver. 21. And when a convenient day was come, &c.] For Herodias; who had long ſought and watched for an opportunity of avenging herſelf on John, and ſuch a time Herod's birth-day proved; though ſome think, that this phraſe is the ſame with, יום טוב, a good-day; often uſed by the Jews for a feſtival; any one of their feaſt-days; there is a tract in their Miſna which bears this name; and that ſuch a day was this. But not one of the feſtivals of the Jews was this, as either their paſſover, or pentecoſt, or feaſt of tabernacles, which Herod had no regard to; but his own birth-day, which he kept as a feſtival, in eating, and drinking, and dancing; and ſo was a very opportune and ſeaſonable time for Herodias to take the advantage of Herod when in a good humour, amidſt his company, and in his cups, to ſollicit that, which ſhe had often done without ſucceſs: and ſo it was now, that Herod on his birth-day made a ſupper to his Lords, high captains, and chief eſtates of Galilee: this birth-day, was either the day of his natural, or civil birth; the day when he was born into the world, or of his acceſſion to the throne; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 6. when he made a grand entertainment in the evening for his nobles, and the officers of the army, the captains of thouſands, and the principal men, thoſe of the firſt rank and quality in Galilee, of which he was Tetrarch.

Ver. 22. And when the daughter of the ſaid Herodias came in, &c.] To the hall, where Herod and his gueſts were, after ſupper was over; or rather, whilſt at it: ſhe is called the daughter of Herodias, and not of Herod; ſhe having had her not by him, but by his brother Philip: her name is thought to be Salome; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 6. and danced and pleaſed Herod, and them that were with him; at ſupper, his lords, captains, and principal men in his dominions; ſee the note as before. The king ſaid unto the damſel, aſk of me whatſoever thou wilt, and I will give it thee; which ſhows how exceedingly pleaſed he was; and the more, in that ſhe gave ſuch general pleaſure to his whole company.

Ver. 23. And he ſware unto her, &c.] He added an oath to what he had before ſaid, the more to confirm it, and to encourage her in her requeſt, and which he repeated in ſtronger language: whatſoever thou ſhalt aſk of me, I will give it thee, unto the half of my kingdom; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 7.

Ver. 24. And ſhe went forth and ſaid unto her mother, &c.] The king having made ſuch a promiſe to her, and annexed his oath to it, ſhe thought proper before ſhe aſked any thing of him, to withdraw from the hall and company, and conſider with herſelf, and conſult with her mother, who was not at the entertainment; it being not uſual in thoſe eaſtern countries, for women to ſit at table, at any grand feſtival; to whom ſhe reported the offer the king had made, and deſired ſhe would be pleaſed to direct her, what requeſt to make: ſaying, what ſhall I aſk? To which her mother made anſwer, without taking any further time to think of it, being prepared for it, and determined in her mind, whenever ſhe had an opportunity of aſking a favour of the king, what it ſhould be: and ſhe ſaid the head of John the Baptiſt. So ſweet is revenge that to have her will on that great and good man was more to her, than to have half the king's dominions.

Ver. 25. And ſhe came in ſtraightway with haſ unto the king, &c.] Having had her mother's advice, and being haſtened by her, ſhe immediatel returned to the hall, where the king and his gueſ were, with much concern, eagerneſs, and diligence and aſked, ſaying, I will that thou give me by and in a charger, the head of John the Baptiſt: her p tition proceeding upon a promiſe with an oath, is pr ſented by way of demand; inſiſting upon it, th in a very little time, this hour, as the Syriac verſi renders it, within an hour's time, or leſs; and he as Matthew has it, in that very place, and wh the company was there; that orders ſhould be giv to cut off the head of John the Baptiſt, and that that ſhould be brought, in a large diſh, unto her; and this was what ſhe had to aſk, and inſiſted upon the immediate and punctual performance of it; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 8.

Ver. 26. And the king was exceeding ſorry, &c.] See the note on Matt. xiv. 9. yet for his oath's ſake, and for their ſakes which ſat with him; as Matthew adds, at meat; for it ſeems as if ſupper was not over, when all this was tranſacting. He would not reject her; deny her her requeſt, or ſend her away without granting it; which could not be without grieving her, and treating her with contempt, and defrauding her of the promiſe; all which ideas are expreſſed by ſome verſions.

Ver. 27. And immediately the king ſent an executioner, &c.] See the note on Matt. xiv. 10. and commanded his head to be brought; ordered him to cut off his head in priſon, and bring it away forthwith in a charger to him: and he went and beheaded him in the priſon; according to his orders.

Ver. 28. And brought his head in a charger, &c.] In a large diſh, to Herod, who gave it to the damſel; the daughter of Herodias, as ſhe had requeſted: and the damſel gave it to her mother; who had inſtigated her to it; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 11.

Ver. 29. And when his diſciples heard of it, &c.] That is, when the diſciples of John heard of this barbarous execution of their maſter, they came; to the priſon in the caſtle of Machærus, and took up his corps; the trunk of his body; for his head was carried away, to glut the revenge of Herodias; and laid it in a tomb; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 12.

Ver. 30. And the apoſtles gathered themſelves together, &c.] The twelve apoſtles of Chriſt, whom he had ſent out, two by two, into differents parts, having gone thro' them, and finiſhed the embaſſy, they were ſent about, met together in one place, and came in a body together, unto Jeſus: their Lord and maſter, who had ſent them, and to whom they were accountable, as all the miniſters of the Goſpel are: and told him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught: they gave him an exact and full account of what miracles were wrought by them, what diſeaſes they had cured, and what a number of devils they had caſt out; and alſo what doctrines they had preached, and what ſucceſs in all they had had: ſo every Goſpel-miniſter muſt give an account of his miniſtrations to Chriſt.

Ver. 31. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] After he had heard their account, was ſatisfied with it, and approved of what they had ſaid and done: come ye yourſelves a-part into a deſert place, and reſt a-while; where they might be free from noiſe and hurry, and take ſome reſt and refreſhment, after their weariſome journey, hard labours, and great fatigue in preaching and working miracles; which ſhows the great compaſſion, tenderneſs, and care of Chriſt for his diſciples: for there were many coming and going, and they had no leiſure ſo much as to eat; the people were continually going to and fro; as ſoon as one company was gone, who came with their ſick and diſeaſed to be healed, or upon one account or another, another came: ſo that there was no opportunity of private meditation and prayer, nor of ſpiritual converſe together; nor even ſo much as to eat a meal's meat for the refreſhment of nature.

Ver. 32. And they departed into a deſert place, &c.] Which belonged to the city of Bethſaida, Luke ix. 10. by ſhip, privately; over ſome part of the ſea of Tiberias, this place lying on a more remote ſide of it.

Ver. 33. And the people ſaw them departing, &c.] The multitude that came to and fro, ſaw Chriſt and his diſciples taking ſhip, and launching off; for tho' they were as private as could be, and intended to have gone in a very private manner, yet the people obſerved them: and many knew him; Jeſus; ſome copies read, them; and ſo do the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; they knew both Chriſt and his diſciples, tho' they were in the ſhip, and at ſome diſtance: and ran afoot thither out of all cities, and out-went them, and came together unto him; they went on foot, as they might from Capernaum, Nazareth, and the parts adjacent, over the bridge at Chammath of Gadara, to this place, that belonged to Bethſaida; whither they perceived they ſteered, and made ſuch haſte, that they got thither before them; and the people that flocked from ſeveral cities met together, and came to Jeſus, to hear his doctrine, and ſee his miracles.

Ver. 34. And Jeſus when he came out, &c.] Of the ſhip, and was got aſhore, ſaw much people; who came partly from the places where he came from, and partly from the cities and towns adjacent: and was moved with compaſſion towards them; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 14. the reaſon follows, becauſe they were as ſheep, not having a ſhepherd. Chriſt obſerved, that they were hungring and thirſting after the word of righteouſneſs, and had no faithful, ſpiritual paſtors to feed them with knowledge and underſtanding; for the Scribes and Phariſees were blind guides, and ſhepherds that could not underſtand; ſo that the people were ready to periſh for lack of knowledge, not having any ſpiritual comfort and refreſhment under their miniſtry: hence they followed Chriſt, where-ever he went, with great zeal and fervency, earneſtly deſiring the bread of life: this moved his compaſſion, ſo that tho' his view in coming to this place was retirement, and that his diſciples might have ſome reſt and refreſhment, and might ſolace themſelves in private converſation with him, and each other; yet poſtponing private advantage to public good, inſtead of reproving them for giving him this freſh trouble, kindly and tenderly received them: and he began to teach them many things; relating to the kingdom of God, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the doctrines and ordinances of it; things relating to their ſpiritual and eternal welfare, the comfort, and ſalvation of their immortal ſouls: and he dwelt long upon theſe ſubjects, becauſe he found they were very ignorant, and needed inſtruction, and were very deſirous of it; as well as healed all ſuch of bodily diſeaſes that ſtood in need thereof; of which Matthew only takes notice; as Mark only of doctrine; but Luke mentions both doctrine and miracles of healing.

Ver. 35. And when the day was now far ſpent, &c.] Or much time was gone, in teaching the people, and healing the ſick: his diſciples came unto him; nearer to him, as he was preaching, or healing the ſick: and ſaid, this is a deſert place, and now the time is far paſſed; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 15.

Ver. 36. Send them away, &c.] Leave off preaching, diſmiſs the aſſembly; ſee Matt. xiv. 15. that they may go into the country round about; or into the fields; that is, to the odd houſes, which were here and there in the fields; ſee the note on ch. v. 14. and into the villages; the little country-towns that were near at hand: and buy themſelves bread, for they have nothing to eat: they brought no proviſions with them, and there were none to be had in that deſert place; and it was high time they had ſome refreſhment; for the uſual time of dining was paſt, the firſt evening was come, the day was on the decline, and was far ſpent.

Ver. 37. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, give ye them to eat, &c.] This he ſaid to try their faith, and make way for the following miracle: and they ſay unto him, ſhall we go and buy two hundred pennyworth of bread, and give them to eat? This might be juſt the ſum of money they now had in the bag, as Grotius, and others conjecture; and the ſenſe be, ſhall we lay out the two hundred pence, which is all we have in hand, to buy bread for this multitude? is it proper we ſhould? is it thy will that ſo it ſhould be? and if we ſhould do ſo, as Philip ſuggeſts, John vi. 7. it would not be enough to give every one a little: wherefore they ſay this, as amazed that he ſhould propoſe ſuch a thing unto them; or the reaſon of mentioning ſuch a ſum, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, might be, becauſe that this was a noted and celebrated ſum among the Jews, and frequently mentioned by them. A virgin's dowry, upon marriage, was two hundred pence[c]; and ſo was a widow's; and one that was divorced[d], if ſhe inſiſted on it, and could make good her claim: this was the fine of an adult man, that lay with one under age; and of a male under age, that lay with a female adult[e]; and of one man that gave another a ſlap of the face[f]. This ſum anſwered to ſix pounds and five ſhillings of our money.

Ver. 38. And he ſaith unto them, how many loaves have ye? &c.] This he ſaid, not as ignorant, but as willing to try their faith yet more, and that the after miracle might be more manifeſt and illuſtrious: go and ſee; meaning, either that they ſhould examine their own ſtore, if they had any; or rather go and ſee what was to be had upon the ſpot, among the company, for money: and when they knew, they ſay five loaves and two fiſhes: when they had made enquiry what proviſions there were, and the moſt that could be got at any rate, they tell him, Andrew, Simon Peter's brother, particularly, that there was a boy among the multitude that had five barley loaves, and two ſmall fiſhes; and, at the ſame time, ſuggeſts, that they were nothing for ſo great a company.

Ver. 39. And he commanded them to make all ſit down, &c.] Chriſt ordered his diſciples, without any more ado, to cauſe the whole multitude, men, women, and children, to ſit, or lie down, as they uſed to do at table, when about to take a meal; and as they had no table before them, nor beds, or couches to ſit, or lie down upon, he directed them to place them by companies upon the green graſs; that there might be ſome order among them, as at a meal; and that their number might be the more eaſily known; and that all of them might more plainly ſee the miracle that was to be wrought; and the proviſion be more orderly diſtributed to them.

Ver. 40. And they ſat down in ranks, &c.] Or beds; in ſuch form as little beds are placed in a garden, or as rows of vines in a vineyard, in which form the ſcholars of the wiſe men ſat in their ſchools: it is ſaid[g], “ R. Eliezer ben Azariah expounded before the wiſe men in the vineyard “ (i. e. the univerſity) of Jabneh; tho' was there “ a vineyard there? but theſe are the diſciples “ of the wiſe men, who are made, or placed, “ שורות שורות, rows, rows, or in ranks, as a vineyard.” By hundreds, and by fifties; that is, an hundred in each bed, or row, and fifty in each bed, or row, as the word ανα ſignifies: each diſtinct bed, or row, had either a hundred, or fifty in it.

Ver. 41. And when he had taken the five loaves and two fiſhes, &c.] Out of the hands of thoſe that brought them into his own: he looked up to heaven, and bleſſed, and brake the loaves; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 19. and gave them to his diſciples to ſet before them; the multitude, in order to eat of them: and the two fiſhes divided he among them all; that every one might have a part. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, they divided; that is, the apoſtles.

Ver. 42. And they did all eat, and were filled.] See the note on Matt. xiv. 20.

Ver. 43. And they took up twelve baſkets full of the fragments, &c.] Of the broken pieces of bread, after all had eat, and were ſatisfied: and of the fiſhes; what remained of them: for tho' there was but one loaf for a thouſand perſons and more, and two ſmall fiſhes to be divided among five thouſand and more; yet, thro' the wonderful power of Chriſt increaſing both, as they were diſtributing and eating, there was enough of both for them all, and ſuch a quantity of each left as filled twelve baſkets.

Ver. 44. And they that did eat of the loaves, &c.] And alſo of the fiſhes; for they all eat of both: were about five thouſand men: the word ωσει, about, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic and Ethiopic verſions, reading five thouſand men certain. The Evangeliſt Matthew adds, beſide children and women.

Ver. 45. And ſtraightway he conſtrained his diſciples, &c.] The reaſons of this ſee in the note on Matt. xiv. 22. to get into the ſhip; in which they came to this place, and which was waiting for them: and to go to the other ſide before unto Bethſaida; or rather to go to the other ſide over-againſt Bethſaida; for they were now in a deſert belonging to that city: wherefore they were ordered to go, and did go to the other ſide of the ſea of Tiberias, or Galilee, even to Capernaum, as appears from John vi. 17, 24, 25. while he ſent away the people; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 22.

Ver. 46. And when he had ſent them away, &c.] Either his diſciples, or rather the multitude: he departed into a mountain to pray: after his diſciples were gone, and he had diſmiſſed the people, he went from the deſert, where he had been, up into a mountain; being a retired place, to ſpend ſome time in private prayer to God; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 23.

Ver. 47. And when even was come, &c.] The ſecond evening, and it was properly night: the ſhip was in the midſt of the ſea; of Galilee, about twenty-five or thirty furlongs from the ſhore; ſee John vi. 19. and he alone on the land; upon the mountain. This is obſerved, partly to ſhew what diſtreſs the diſciples were in, in the midſt of the ſea, having a hard gale of wind, and their maſter not with them; and partly to ſhew that there was no way, humanly ſpeaking, of Chriſt's getting to the ſhip, in order to go over; and is an illuſtration of the following miracle, of walking ſo many furlongs, as he muſt, upon the water, in a ſtormy, bluſtering night, to get to it.

Ver. 48. And he ſaw them toiling in rowing, &c.] He ſaw them either with his bodily eyes from the mountain on which he was; or he perceived in his Spirit, he knew, by virtue of his omniſcience as God, what diſtreſs his diſciples were in; being toſſed about with the waves of the ſea, and were labouring with all their might and main againſt the wind; and were vexed and tortured, as the word ſignifies, ſignifies; they were in the utmoſt pain and uneaſineſs of mind, as well as fatigue of body, aſſiſting the men in rowing; for the ſhip they were in was no other than a veſſel managed by oars; and hard work it was to keep it from being over-ſet: for the wind was contrary unto them; it blew from the other ſide they were making to, full in their face, hard againſt them; ſo that it was with great toil and difficulty, that they got any thing forward: and about the fourth watch of the night; or three o'clock in the morning: ſo that it is very likely, that as the evening when they took to the veſſel was ſun-ſetting, or about ſix o'clock, they had been nine hours at ſea, and had got but twenty-five or thirty furlongs from ſhore; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 25. he cometh unto them walking upon the ſea: being in this diſtreſs, Chriſt came down from the mountain to the ſea-ſide; and then, by his divine power, as the mighty God, that treadeth on the waves of the ſea, he walked upon the ſurface of the waters of it; as on dry land, as the Perſic verſion adds: and would have paſſed by them; that is, he made as though he would; ſee Luke xxiv. 28. By the courſe he ſteered, by the ſwiftneſs of his motion, and his ſeeming negligence of them, it looked as tho' he intended to have gone by them, and ſaid nothing to them, tho' this was far from his real deſign.

Ver. 49. But when they ſaw him walking on the ſea, &c.] See the note on Matt. xiv. 26. they ſuppoſed it had been a ſpirit; a phantom, a ſpectre, an apparition, a nocturnal dæmon: and cried out; as men affrighted at the ſight, and fearing they ſhould be hurt by it, or that it portended ſome evil to them; ſee the note, as before.

Ver. 50. For they all ſaw him, and were troubled, &c.] Had it been only ſeen by one, it might have been thought a fancy, and the effect of mere imagination; but as every one ſaw it, it was out of all doubt that ſo it was, and which gave them the greater concern: and immediately he talked with them; as ſoon as they ſaw him, that very moment, as the Syriac renders it; that ſo by hearing his voice their fears might be allayed: and ſaith unto them, be of good chear, it is I, be not afraid; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 27.

Ver. 51. And he went up unto them in the ſhip, &c.] That is, after Peter had deſired he might be bid to come to him upon the water, and having got leave, made an eſſay; but the wind being boiſtrous, and beginning to ſink, he cried out for help; when Chriſt ſtretched out his hand, and ſaved him; and then he, together with Peter, went up into the ſhip to the reſt of the diſciples, as is related by Matthew, tho' omitted by this Evangeliſt: and the wind ceaſed; from blowing; it was laid at once, as ſoon as ever Chriſt entered the ſhip: and they were ſore amazed in themſelves beyond meaſure, and wondered. The Ethiopic verſion adds, at him; they were aſtoniſhed, when they found it was Chriſt, and not a ſpirit; and they were more amazed at his walking upon the ſea; and they marvelled ſtill more abundantly, when they obſerved that the wind ceaſed upon his coming into the ſhip; their amazement was beyond expreſſion, and therefore a heap of words are made uſe of to ſignify it by.

Ver. 52. For they conſidered not the miracle of the loaves, &c.] Which they had ſeen but the day before; they did not attend to it, nor learn from it, as they might, the wonderful glory of Chriſt, and the greatneſs of his power; which was as much an act of omnipotence, as either his walking upon the water, or cauſing the wind to ceaſe, or more ſo. For their heart was hardened; or blinded; not by ſin, or againſt Chriſt, much leſs in a judicial way; but there was a great deal of dulneſs and ſtupidity, and want of attention in them. The glory of Chriſt, which he manifeſted, and ſhewed forth in his miracles, was not ſo clearly and fully diſcerned, attended to, and acknowledged by them, at it might reaſonably be thought it would; for notwithſtanding theſe miracles, which they daily ſaw, they ſtood in need of divine illuminations, that the darkneſs of their minds being removed, they might behold the glory of Chriſt, as the glory of the only-begotten of the father.

Ver. 53. And when they had paſſed over, &c.] The lake of Genneſaret, or ſea of Galilee, they came into the land of Genneſaret; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 34. to Capernaum, as appears from John vi. 17, 24. for Capernaum was in the land of Genneſaret; to which agrees what Joſephus ſays, that the land of Genneſaret was watered with a very excellent ſpring, which the inhabitants of that place call Capernaum[h]; and drew to the ſhore: this is omitted in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; and the Arabic reads, and they caſt anchors.

Ver. 54. And when they were come out of the ſhip, &c.] Chriſt and his diſciples, and were aſhore, ſtraightway they knew him; that is, the men of that place, as in Matt. xiv. 35. ſee the note there; and ſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read here, the inhabitants of that country, the country of Genneſaret; they knew him, having ſeen and heard him before.

Ver. 55. And ran through that whole region round about, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of that part of the country where Chriſt landed, ran many of them themſelves, and others ſent meſſengers into all parts of it, on every ſide: and began to carry about in beds thoſe that were ſick; or lame, or ſo diſordered that they could not walk, or bear any other way of being carried; theſe they brought to him, where they heard he was: in whatſoever part of the country they could learn he was in; for he went about from place to place doing good.

Ver. 56. And whitherſoever he entered into villages, or cities, or country, &c.] Whether in ſmaller towns, or larger cities, or the fields, where were houſes here and there one: they laid the ſick in the ſtreets; or markets, in any public places: and beſought him that they might touch but the border of his garment; if they might not be admitted to touch his perſon, or he did not chuſe to lay his hands on them: and as many as touched him; or it, the border of his garment, as they deſired: were made whole; of whatſoever ſickneſs, or diſeaſe, they were afflicted with; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 36.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. THEN came together unto him the Phariſees, &c.] Having heard of his miracles, and that he was come into the land of Genneſaret; they conſulted with one another, and came together to Jeſus, to watch and obſerve what was ſaid and done by him, and take what advantage they could againſt him. These were not of that country, but were of Jeruſalem, as were their companions the Scribes: and certain of the Scribes which were of Jeruſalem; for the fame of Chriſt had reached the metropolis of the nation; and theſe men being the more artful and cunning of the whole ſect, either came of themſelves, or were ſent by the Sanhedrim, to make their obſervations upon his doctrine and conduct; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 1.

Ver. 2. And when they ſaw ſome of his diſciples, &c.] An opportunity ſoon offered of giving them an handle againſt him; for obſerving ſome of his diſciples to ſit down to meat, they took notice that they eat with defiled (that is to ſay, with unwaſhen) hands, and they found fault; with them, and charged them with the breach of the traditions of the elders, and took an occaſion from hence of quarrelling with Chriſt. The Jews uſe the ſame phraſe the Evangeliſt here does, and interpret it in juſt the ſame manner: ſo, ſpeaking of things eaten, בידים מסואבות, with defiled hands; that is, ſays the commentator [i], it is all one as if it was ſaid, בלא נטילת ידים, without waſhing of hands; which was eſteemed a very great crime, and eſpecially if done in a contemptuous way: for they ſay [k], “ he “ that deſpiſeth waſhing of hands, ſhall be rooted “ out of the world; for in it is the ſecret of the “ decalogue;” and particularly to eat with unwaſhen hands, was unpardonable in a diſciple of a wiſe man; for they looked upon this to be the characteriſtic of one of the vulgar people, a common and illiterate man: for they aſk [l], “ who is “ one of the people of the earth, or a plebeian? “ he that does not eat his common food with pu- “ rity.” By this alſo they diſtinguiſhed a Jew from a Gentile; if he waſhed his hands, and bleſſed, he was known to be an Iſraelite, but if not, a Gentile [m]; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 2.

Ver. 3. For the Phariſees, and all the Jews, &c.] The far greater part of them; all, excepting the Sadducees; and eſpecially the Phariſees, were very tenacious of this tradition of waſhing hands before eating: hence Phariſees are deſcribed as ſuch, אוכלי חוליהן בטהרה, that eat their common food with cleanneſs [n], i. e. of hands: theſe, except they waſh their hands oft, eat not; or except they waſh very curiouſly, with great care, diligence, and exactneſs, as the Syriac verſion ſuggeſts; and about which there are various rules given, to be obſerved with great ſtrictneſs [o]. Some render the words, they waſh their hands to the elbow; and this is a rule with the Jews, which is cloſely to be abode by, that the waſhing of hands is to be, עד פרק, to the joint, which joins the hand and arm together [p]: particularly 'tis obſerved [q], that “ waſhing of the hands “ for the eating of the offering, is unto the elbow, “ and for common food, to the joints of the fin- “ gers: he that eats with an ancient man, and “ does not waſh his hands to the elbow, he may “ not eat with him.” Well may it be added, holding the tradition of the elders: nor do the Jews pretend the authority of the ſcriptures as obliging them to ſuch rules; for, they ſay, the command concerning waſhing of hands is, מדברי סופרים, from the words of the Scribes [r]; and is מצות חכמים, a command of the wiſe men [s]. The tradition is this: “ they waſh hands for common food, but for “ the tithe, and for the firſt offering, and for that “ which is holy, they dip them, and for the ſin “ offering; for if the hands are defiled, the body “ is defiled [t].” And this tradition of the elders, the Scribes, and Phariſees, ſtrictly obſerved.

Ver. 4. And when they come from the market, &c.] In Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in one of Stephens's, it is read as we ſupply, when they come: wherefore this reſpects not things bought in the market, a ſenſe favoured by all the Oriental verſions, for many of them could not be waſhed; but the perſons of the Scribes and Phariſees, who when they came from market, or from any court of judicature, immerſed themſelves all over in water, according to the true ſenſe of the word βαπτιζω here uſed: for, “ if the Phariſees touched but the gar- “ ments of the common people, they were defiled, “ all one as if they had touched a profluvious “ perſon, וצריכן טבילה, and needed immerſion;” and were obliged to it [u]: hence, when they walked the ſtreets, they walked on the ſides of the way, that they might not be defiled, by touching the common people [w]: wherefore, except they waſh, they eat not, or immerſe themſelves in water, as well as uſed, טבילת ידים, immerſion of the hands, or waſhing of the hands by immerſion; and which, if only intended, is ſufficient to ſupport the primary ſenſe of the word, baptizo: and many other things there be which they have received to hold; by tradition from their elders; as the waſhing of cups and pots, brazen veſſels, and of tables: and here the word βαπτισμος, baptiſm, is rightly uſed in its proper and primary ſignification; for all theſe things were, according to the traditions of the elders, waſhed by immerſion: “ in a laver, they ſay [x], which holds forty “ ſeahs of water, which are not drawn, every de- “ filed man dips himſelf, except a profluvious “ man; and in it מטבילין את כל הכלים הטמאין, “ they dip all unclean veſſels;” as cups, pots, and brazen veſſels: very particularly brazen veſſels are mentioned, becauſe earthen ones that were unclean, were to be broken [y]; which were all waſhed before eaten in, even on a ſabbath-day, and that by dipping: [z] “ diſhes, in which they eat at evening, “ (i. e. of the ſabbath) they waſh them, to eat in “ in the morning; in the morning they waſh them, “ to eat in at noon; at noon they waſh them, to “ eat in at the Minchah; and from the Minchah, “ and forward, they don't waſh again: but cups, “ and jugs, and pots they waſh, and it goes thro' “ all the day; for there is no fixed time for drink- “ ing.”

“ ing.” All ſuch veſſels, whether had of a Gentile, or an Iſraelite, or even a wiſe man, were to be immerſed before uſed [a]. “ He that buys a veſſel for the uſe of a feaſt, of Gentiles, whether “ molten veſſels, or glaſs veſſels——מטבילן, they “ dip them, in the waters of the laver; and after “ that they may eat and drink in them: and ſuch “ as they uſe for cold things, as cups, and pots, “ and jugs, they waſh them, ומטבילן, and dip “ them, and they are free for uſe: and ſuch as they “ uſe for hot things, as cauldrons and kettles, (brazen “ veſſels) they heat them with hot water, and “ ſcower them, ומטבילן, and immerſe them, and “ they are fit to be uſed: and things which they “ uſe at the fire, as ſpits and gridirons, they heat “ them in the fire, till the cruſt (the covering of “ ruſt, or dirt) falls off, ומטבילן, and dip them, “ and they may be lawfully made uſe of.—This “ is the immerſion with which they immerſe veſſels “ for a feaſt, bought of Gentiles; and after that “ they are free for eating and drinking; for the “ buſineſs of uncleanneſs and purification is only “ from the words of the Scribes — and none are “ obliged to this immerſion, but molten veſſels for “ a feaſt, bought of Gentiles; but if he borrows of “ Gentiles, or a Gentile leaves in pawn molten veſſels, (made of caſt braſs, or iron) he waſhes, or “ boils, or heats in the fire, but need not immerſe “ them; and ſo if he buys veſſels of wood, or “ veſſels of ſtone, he waſhes, or boils them, but “ need not dip them; and ſo earthen veſſels need “ not be immerſed; but thoſe that are covered with “ lead, are as molten veſſels, וצריכין טבילה, and “ need immerſion.” And not only ſuch that were bought of Gentiles, but even that were made by Jews, and ſcholars too, were to be immerſed in water. “ Veſſels, they ſay [b], that are finiſhed in “ purity, even tho’ a diſciple of a wiſe man makes “ them, care is to be taken about them, lo! theſe “ ought to be immerſed:” and alſo tables, at which they eat; and becauſe their poſture at them were lying, reclining, or leaning; hence the word κλινων is uſed for them here: theſe were capable of defilement in a ceremonial ſenſe, according to the traditions of the Jews: one of their rules is this [c]; “ every veſſel of wood, which is made for the uſe “ of veſſels, and of men, as, השולחן, a table, a “ bed, &c. receive defilement.” And there were ſeveral ſorts of tables, which, by their laws, were unclean, or might be defiled by the touch of unclean perſons, or things: ſo they ſay [d], “ a table, “ and ſide-board, which are made leſs, or covered “ with marble, if there is a ſpace left, in which “ cups may be ſet, they may be defiled. R. Judah “ ſays, if a ſpace is left, in which may be put “ pieces, i. e. of bread or fleſh: a table of which “ the firſt of its feet is taken away is clean; if the “ ſecond is taken away it is clean; if the third is “ taken away it may be defiled.” Again [e], every veſſel of wood, that is divided into two parts is clean, excepting a double table, &c. i. e. a table which conſiſted of various parts, and were folded together when it was removed: and theſe were waſhed by covering them in water; and very nice they were in waſhing them, that the water might reach every part, and that they might be covered all over; that there might be nothing which might ſeparate between them and the water, and hinder its coming to them: as for inſtance, pitch being upon a table, whether within or without, divided between that and the water; and when this was the caſe, it was not rightly waſhed [f]: but to waſhing tables by immerſion, there is no objection; wherefore, to perplex this matter, and give further trouble, it is inſiſted on, that the word ſhould be rendered beds; and it muſt be owned that it is ſo rendered in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, (in the Arabic verſion the clauſe is omitted) and in many modern tranſlations; and we are contented it ſhould be ſo rendered. And theſe beds deſign either the couches they lay, or leaned upon at meals; or the beds they ſlept in at nights: theſe were capable of being polluted, in a ceremonial ſenſe; for of ſuch pollution, and ſuch waſhing, are we to underſtand theſe traditions: for thoſe things regard not the bare waſhing of them when naturally unclean, when they ought to be waſhed; and it is the cuſtom of all people to waſh them when this is the caſe. A bed, and bedſtead, are capable of ſuch pollution as ſoon as they are ſhaved with a fiſh-ſkin, or are completed without poliſhing [g]; that is, as ſoon as they are finiſhed; and there are ſeveral ways by which they are defiled. A bed is defiled, טמא מת, by one that is defiled with the dead [h]; that is, who has touched a dead body, and he ſits upon the bed, or touches it, he defiles it. Again, a bed that is made to lie upon, is defiled, מדרס, by treading [i]; that is, it is defiled if a man, or a woman, that has a gonorrhœa, or a menſtruous woman, or one in child-birth, or a leper, ſhould ſit, ſtand, lie, hang, or lean upon it; yea, if any thing ſhould touch it, which has been touched by any of theſe. Alſo, a bed which is not made for to lie upon, but to lay a dead body on, is defiled in the ſame way; and ſo are even the pillow and bolſter [k]. Now theſe were to be waſhed when they had received any defilement, and that by immerſion. Their canons run thus: “ מטה, a bed, that “ is wholly defiled, if, הטבילה, he dips it, part by “ part, it is pure [l];” again [m], “ הטביל בו את המטה, “ if he dips the bed in it, (the pool of water) al“ though its feet are plunged into the thick clay “ (at the bottom of the pool) it is clean.” If it ſhould be inſiſted upon, that it ought to be ſhewn, and proved, that the very bolſters and pillows on which they lay and leaned, were waſhed in this way, we are able to do it: “ הכר והכסת, a pil“ low, or a bolſter of ſkin, when a man lifts up the “ ends, or mouths of them, out of the water, the “ water which is within them will be drawn; what “ ſhall he do? מטבילן, he muſt dip them, and lift “ them up by their fringes [n].” In ſhort, it is a rule with the Jews, that “ wheresoever, in the law, “ waſhing of the fleſh, or of cloaths, is mention“ ed, it means nothing elſe than the dipping of “ the whole body in water—for if any man waſh “ himſelf all over, except the top of his little fin“ ger, he is ſtill in his uncleanneſs [o].” So that the Evangeliſt uſes the words βαπτιζω, and βαπτισμος, moſt properly, without departing from their primary and literal ſenſe; nor could he have uſed words more appoſite and fit. Various rules, concerning theſe things, may be ſeen in the treatiſes Celim and Mikvaot. Hence it appears, with what little ſhew of reaſon, and to what a vain purpoſe this paſſage is ſo often appealed to, to leſſen the ſenſe of the word βαπτιζω, baptizo; as if it did not ſignify to dip, but a ſort of waſhing, ſhort of dipping; tho' what that waſhing is, is not eaſy to ſay, ſince veſſels and cloaths are in common waſhed by putting them into water, and covering them with it: this paſſage therefore is of no ſervice to thoſe who plead for ſprinkling, or pouring water in baptiſm, in oppoſition to immerſion; nor of any diſſervice, but of real uſe to thoſe who practiſe immerſion, and muſt confirm them in it. Nor need they have recourſe to a various reading, which one of the manuſcripts in the Bodleian library furniſhes with, which is, unleſs they are ſprinkled; which reading muſt be wrong, not only becauſe, contrary to all other copies, but alſo to the uſages of the Jews in the waſhing of themſelves.

Ver. 5. Then the Phariſees and Scribes aſked him, &c.] Not the diſciples, but Chriſt himſelf; for their chief view was to find fault, and quarrel with him: why walk not thy diſciples according to the tradition of the elders, but eat with unwaſhen hands? or with common, that is, defiled hands, as in ver. 2. So the words are read in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and in one of Stephens's copies, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion. The word common is uſed for that which is unclean or unholy, Acts x. 14, 28. Rom. xiv. 14. Heb. x. 29. and ſo ſignifies unwaſhen hands, as we read, and render it: beſides, common hands may have ſome reſpect to the hands of the common people, the vulgar and illiterate, who ſhewed no regard to this tradition, but eat their common food without waſhing their hands. Inſtead of the tradition of the elders, the Ethiopic verſion reads, the conſtitution of the Scribes and Phariſees; and which are ſometimes by the Jews called, דברי סופרים, the words, or ſayings of the Scribes[o], and are preferred by them to the written law; and the ſame are commonly called הליכות, ways, in which a man is to walk, and according to which he is to ſteer his courſe of life; and to which reference is here had in the word, walk, uſed by the Phariſees; who ſuggeſt, that theſe deciſions, conſtitutions, and traditions of the elders, were the rule, according to which men ought to order their manner of life and converſation; blaming the diſciples, that they did not conform to them, and particularly in the caſe of eating bread, which they did without waſhing their hands, which was ſtrictly enjoined among theſe canons; and they wanted to know the ſenſe of Chriſt upon it. Tho' they might have known from the ſcriptures, particularly from Ezek. xx. 18, 19. that it was their duty, as well as the diſciples of Chriſt, to walk, not in the ſtatutes of their fathers, nor obſerve their judgments, the laws and ordinances inſtituted by them; but to walk in the ſtatutes of the Lord, and to keep his judgments, and do them: not the traditions of men, but the word of God, ſhould be the rule of walk and converſation; and as many as walk according to this rule, peace will be upon them; but thoſe that walk according to the commandments of men, juſtly deſerve the character given of ſuch by the prophet Iſaiah, whoſe words our Lord produces in the following verſes.

Ver. 6. He anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Matthew poſtpones the following citation and application of the prophecy of Iſaiah, to the account of the command of God being broken by the tradition of Corban; which Mark makes the anſwer of Chriſt to begin with: well hath Eſaias propheſied of you hypocrites; which in Matthew is read, ye hypocrites, well did Eſaias prophecy of you; to the ſame ſenſe as here: for the prophecy of Iſaiah not only deſcribed the hypocrites of his time, but had reſpect chiefly to the Jews in ſucceeding ages, in the times of Chriſt, and both before and after; when they would, as they did, greatly degenerate, and loſt the power and ſpirituality of religion, and had only the form of it; left the word of God for the traditions of men, and were given up to great ſtupidity, and to judicial blindneſs: hence the apoſtle Paul refers to a paſſage in the ſame chapter, Iſ. xxix. 10. and applies it to the Jews in his time. Rom. xi. 8. ſee the note on Matt. xv. 7. ſaying, as it is written in Iſ. xxix. 13. this people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. In the prophet Iſaiah more is ſaid than is here cited; and ſo in Matthew more is produced, and the whole is there expreſſed thus: this people draweth nigh unto me with their mouth, and honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me: they preſented their bodies before the Lord in the ſynagogues, or in the temple, and prayed to him with an air of devotion and fervency, and offered up their praiſes to him, for their external privileges and bleſſings; but, alas! this was all lip-labour; there was no lifting up their hearts, with their hands, unto God; theſe were not united to fear his name, but were diſtracted in his worſhip, and carried away from him to other objects; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 8.

Ver. 7. Howbeit, in vain do they worſhip me, &c.] This is the continuation of the citation out of Iſaiah, as is alſo what follows: teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. As all theſe traditions mentioned were ſuch; as waſhing their hands before they eat bread, and their whole bodies, when they came from the market, or from any court of judicature, or concourſe of men, where they had been touched by the common people, and the waſhing of cups, pots, brazen veſſels, and tables, or beds; theſe they taught the people, and enjoined them the obſervance of them, inſtead of inſtructing them in the doctrines of the bible, reſpecting the Meſſiah, and ſalvation by him, the right fear, and true worſhip of God, his ordinances and ſtatutes: wherefore their worſhip of him, tho' attended with a great ſhow of ſanctity and religion, was a vain thing, a mere empty thing, devoid of life, power, and ſpirituality, unacceptable to God, and of no real uſe, profit, and advantage to themſelves: it neither iſſued in the glory of God, nor brought any true pleaſure, or ſolid peace to themſelves; and they would find, by ſad experience, that their hope of being in the favour of God, and of enjoying eternal happineſs on account of it, would prove a vain hope; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 9.

Ver. 8. For laying aſide the commandment of God, &c.] Meaning not any particular commandment, but all the commandments of God, the whole written law; to which they preferred the oral law, or the traditions of the elders, and the deciſions of their doctors. So the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the commandments of God. Ye hold the tradition of men: very ſignificantly are the elders, whom the Jews revered, and whoſe traditions and conſtitutions they extolled above the ſcriptures, called men, in diſtinction from God, whoſe commands they neglected; which expoſes and aggravates their ſin, that they ſhould leave the one, which had the ſtamp of divine authority on them, and hold the other, which were only the devices of mens brains; as the waſhing of pots and cups.

[o] T. Hieroſ. Beracot, fol. 3. 2.

The Arabic verſion adds, and veſſels, from ver. 4. and the Ethiopic verſion, between chalices and cups, places monies; as if they alſo contracted uncleanneſs in ſome caſes, and needed waſhing: and indeed, there is a tradition to this purpoſe [p], “ דינר שנפסל, a penny which is rejected (that is, as the commentators ſay [q], which a kingdom or province has made void, or which wants weight) if any one prepares it to hang about the neck of a child, it is unclean; and ſo a Sela (which was the value of four-pence) and it is prepared to weigh with it, is unclean.” And many other ſuch like things you do; ſo many, that it is almoſt endleſs to reckon up. The treatiſe Celim, or of veſſels, in the Miſna, is full of rules, concerning the cleanneſs and uncleanneſs, of almoſt all things in uſe with men; and ſo of what do, and what do not ſtand in need of waſhing. And theſe things they did, not according to the commandment of God, nor did they pretend to it; but according to the words of the Scribes, and traditions of the elders, which reached to all ſorts of veſſels: their rule is this [r]; “ veſſels made of wood, and of ſkin, and of bone, and of glaſs, if they are plain, they are clean; but if they are hollow, (or made to hold things) they are liable to pollution.” Which Maimonides [s] explains thus, “ veſſels of wood, and of ſkin, and of bone, if hollow, receive defilement from the words of the law; but if they are plain, as tables, a ſeat, a ſkin on which they eat, they don't receive defilement, but, מדברי סופרים, from the words of the Scribes.” And this waſhing of veſſels, not only concerned ſuch as were for private uſe, but the veſſels of the ſanctuary: ſo it is ſaid [t]; “ after a feaſt, at the cloſe of a good day, or feſtival, they dip all the veſſels in the ſanctuary; becauſe the common people have touched them at the feaſt, in the time of keeping it: wherefore they ſay, touch not the table (the ſhew-bread table) when they ſhow it to them that come up to the feaſt, that it may not be defiled by touching it; and if after the feaſt, it is found (polluted) it muſt be dipped——and all the veſſels are obliged to immerſion, excepting the golden altar, and the altar of braſs.” So that our Lord might well ſay, and many ſuch like things ye do.

Ver. 9. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] He continued his diſcourſe, ſaying, full well, or fairly, ye reject the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own tradition: theſe words may be conſidered, as ſpoken ironically, thus; as pious and excellently good men, you, in a very fair and handſome manner, reject and make void the commandments and laws of God; and it is very fit it ſhould be ſo, in order to preſerve your own traditions, that nothing may be wanting to keep up the honour of them, and a due regard to them. The Arabic verſion reads the words by way of interrogation, is it fit that you ſhould omit the commandments of God, and keep your own ſtatutes? and ſo the Ethiopic, do ye rightly make void the commandment of God, that ye may keep your own commandment? Which makes them come nearer to the paſſage in Matthew; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 3.

Ver. 10. For Moſes ſaid, &c.] That is, God by Moſes; for the following precept was ſpoken by God, and written by him on one of the tables of ſtone, and delivered into the hands of Moſes, to be given to the children of Iſrael: honour thy father and thy mother, Exod. xx. 12. the ſanction of which law is, and whoſo curſeth father or mother, let him die the death, Exod. xxi. 17. As the former of theſe commands is to be underſtood, not only of honouring parents in thought, word, and deed, but alſo of providing for them, when in want and diſtreſs, through poverty and old age; ſo the latter is to be interpreted, not merely of wiſhing or imprecating the moſt dreadful things upon parents, which ſome may not be guilty of, and yet tranſgreſs this command; but likewiſe of every ſlight put upon them, and neglect of them, when in neceſſitous circumſtances: and both theſe laws were broken by the Jews, through their tradition hereafter mentioned; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 4.

Ver. 11. But ye ſay, &c.] Your elders, doctors, and wiſe men, in oppoſition to God and Moſes: if a man ſhall ſay to his father or his mother, it is Corban, that is to ſay, a gift; in the ſame manner is this word interpreted by Joſephus, who ſpeaking of ſome that call themſelves Corban unto God, ſays [u] in the Greek tongue, δωρον δε τȣτο σεμαινει, this ſignifies a gift: now, according to the traditions of the elders, whoever made uſe of that word to his father or his mother, ſignifying thereby, that what they might have expected relief from at his hands, he had devoted it; or it was as if it was devoted to ſacred uſes; adding, by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me, he ſhall be free; and not under any obligation to regard and relieve his parents, let their caſe and circumſtances be what they would. This is the form of a vow, which a man having made on purpoſe, to free himſelf from the charge of the maintenance of his parents, when reduced, repeats unto them; or which he makes upon their application to him: various forms of this kind of vows, are produced in the note on Matt. xv. 5. which ſee: this was not the form of an oath, or ſwearing by Corban, or the ſacred treaſury in the temple, mentioned in Matt. xxvii. 6. of which I don't remember any inſtance; nor was it a dedication of his ſubſtance to holy and religious uſes; to the ſervice of God and the temple; but it was a vow he made, that what he had, ſhould be as Corban, as a gift devoted to ſacred uſes: that as that could not be appropriated to any other uſe, ſo his ſubſtance, after ſuch a vow, could not be applied to the relief of his parents; though he was not obliged by it to give it for the uſe of the temple, but might keep it himſelf, or beſtow it upon others. L. Capellus has wrote a very learned diſſertation upon this vow, at the end of his Spicilegium on the New Teſtament; and our very learned countryman, Dr. Pocock, has ſaid many excellent things upon it, in his miſcellaneous notes on his Porta Moſis; both which ought to be read and conſulted, by thoſe who have learning and leiſure.

Ver. 12. And ye ſuffer him no more to do ought for his father, or his mother.] According to the Jewiſh canons [w], if a man vowed a thing which is contrary to a command, he was obliged to keep his vow, and break the command: thus, if a man vowed that his father or his mother ſhould never receive any benefit from what he had, but that his ſubſtance was as Corban, or as any thing devoted to divine ſervice, he was obliged to keep his vow; nor was he allowed after this, to do any thing for his father, or mother, however poor or helpleſs they might be; unleſs he applied to a wiſe man to revoke his vow, or to give him liberty to do it; for he could not do it of himſelf, as wicked as it was;

and though he might heartily repent of it, and was ever ſo willing to make it null and void: and though a diſſolution of it by a wiſe man was allowed of, yet hereby they ſet up their own power and authothority againſt God, and his law; they did not reſcind the vow, becauſe it was contrary to the command of God: for notwithſtanding its being contrary to the command of God, it was to be obſerved, though to the breaking of that, unleſs looſed by a wiſe man, at the man's requeſt; whereby they eſtabliſhed their magiſterial power and authority, without any regard to the honour and glory of God; and therefore what follows, is juſtly obſerved by our Lord; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 6.

Ver. 13. Making the word of God of none effect, through your tradition, &c.] Beza ſays, in his moſt ancient copy 'tis read, your fooliſh tradition; and ſuch it was indeed, that a vow made raſhly, and in a paſſion, or if ever ſo deliberately entered into, ſhould be more binding upon a man than the law of God; that rather than break this, he ſhould tranſgreſs a divine command; and that though he might ſee his folly, and repent of his ſin in making ſuch a wicked vow, he could not go back from it, without the permiſſion of a wiſe man: ſhould his poor diſtreſſed parents come to him for aſſiſtance, he was obliged to anſwer them, that he had bound himſelf by a vow, that they ſhould receive no advantage from his ſubſtance; and ſhould they remonſtrate to him the command of God, to honour them and take care of them, and obſerve that that command is enforced by promiſes and threatenings; he had this to reply, and was inſtructed to do it, that it was the ſenſe of the wiſe men and doctors, and agreeable to the traditions of the elders, to which he ought rather to attend, than to the words of the law, that he ſhould keep and fulfil his vow, whatever command was neglected or broken by it. Which ye have delivered: they received it from their anceſtors, and delivered it to their diſciples; and 'tis in this way, that all their traditions were delivered: they ſay [x], that “ Moſes “ received the law, (the oral law) at Sinai, “ ומסרה, and delivered it to Joſhua; and Joſhua “ to the elders, and the elders to the prophets; and “ the prophets to the men of the great ſynagogue; “ the laſt of which was Simeon the juſt; and Antigonus a man of Socho, received it from him; “ and Joſe ben Joezer, a man of Tzeredah, and “ Joſe ben Jochanan, a man of Jeruſalem, received “ it from Antigonus; and Joſhua ben Perachiah, “ (ſaid to be the maſter of Jeſus Chriſt) and Nitthai the Arbelite, received it from them; and “ Judah ben Tabai, and Simeon ben Shetach, received “ it from them; and Shemaiah and Abtalion re- “ ceived it from them; and from them Hillell and “ Shammai.” Who were now the heads of the two grand ſchools of the Jews; theſe received, and delivered out theſe traditions to the Scribes and Phariſees, and they to their diſciples: and many ſuch like things do ye; meaning, that there were many other traditions beſides this now mentioned; whereby, inſtead of preſerving the written law, which they pretended, theſe were an hedge unto [y], they, in a great many inſtances, made it void.

Ver. 14. And when he had called all the people unto him, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of all, read again, and ſo do ſome copies: having ſaid what was ſufficient to ſtop the mouths of the Scribes and Phariſees, about their unwarrantable traditions; he turns himſelf to the common people, who ſtood at ſome diſtance, becauſe of theſe venerable doctors, and called to them to come nearer to him: he ſaid unto them, hearken to me every one of you, and underſtand; ſignifying, he had ſomething of moment to ſay to them, which they would do well to attend unto, and what they ſhould be deſirous of underſtanding aright, it being what concerned every one of them; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 10.

Ver. 15. There is nothing from without a man, &c.] As any ſort of food and drink, whether it be received, with, or without waſhing of the hands: that entering into him can defile him; in a moral ſenſe, or render him loathſome and unacceptable in the ſight of God: but the things which come out of him; the Arabic verſion reads, out of the mouth of man, as in Matt. xv. 11. for the things are, all ſinful words which proceed from the imaginations and luſts of the heart; as all idle, unchaſte, blaſphemous, and wrathful words and expreſſions: and may include evil thoughts, words, and actions; which actions firſt in thought, take their riſe from the corrupt heart of man; and in word, come out of the mouth; and in action, are performed by ſome one or other of the members of the body: theſe are they that defile the man; his mind and conſcience, the faculties of his ſoul, and the members of his body; and render him abominable in the ſight of God, and expoſe him to his wrath and diſpleaſure; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 11. The ſenſe of the whole is, that not what a man eats and drinks, and in whatſoever way he does either, though he may eat and drink with unwaſhen hands, or out of cups, pots, and platters, not properly waſhed, according to the traditions of the elders, renders him a polluted ſinful man, in the ſight of God; or ſuch an one, whoſe company and converſation are to be avoided by good men; but that it is ſin in the heart, and what proceed from it; as all evil thoughts, wicked words, and impure actions; which denominate a man filthy and unclean, and expoſe him to the abhorrence of God, and of his people: the words may be rendered, there is nothing from without a man——can make him common; that is, as a plebeian, a vulgar common man, a ſinful wicked man, as the common people were, or at leaſt were ſo eſteemed by the Phariſees; nothing that he took into his body, by eating or drinking, could put him into the claſs of ſuch perſons: but the things which come out of him; out of his heart, by his lips: thoſe are they that make a man common; or a vulgar wicked man. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, it is not what enters from without into the mouth of man, which can defile him; but only what goes out of the heart of man, this defiles the man: the Perſic verſion adds, and is the ſin of death; or ſin unto death, a deadly, mortal ſin.

Ver. 16. If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.] See the note on Matt. xi. 15.

Ver. 17. And when he was entered into the houſe, &c.] Very probably at Capernaum, and it may be the houſe of Simon and Andrew, where he uſed to be when there: from the people; being ſeparated from them, having diſmiſſed and left them, when he and his diſciples were by themſelves alone: his diſciples aſked him concerning the parable; that ſaying of his to the people, which was ſomewhat dark and intricate to them; that nothing without a man going into him defiled him, but what comes out of him: this was aſked by Peter, in the name of the reſt; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 15.

Ver. 18. And he ſaith unto them, &c.] With ſome warmth of ſpirit and reſentment, at their ſtupidity; [x] Pirke Abot, c. 1. §. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. [y] Ib. §. 1.

pidity; are ye ſo without underſtanding alſo? As well as others, and to ſuch a degree; and yet, as Matthew expreſſes it, ſo wretchedly ſtupid, and ſo long, and as much, as others: do ye not perceive? common ſenſe will tell you, that whatſoever thing from without entereth into the man, it cannot defile him; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 16.

Ver. 19. Becauſe it entereth not into his heart, &c.] Which is the ſeat and fountain of all moral pollution; and if that is not defiled, no other part can be; and that that is not defiled by eating and drinking, unleſs in caſe of intemperance, is clear; becauſe food and drink do not go into it: but into the belly; it is taken in at the mouth, goes down the throat, and is received into the ſtomach, and from thence it paſſes through the bowels: and goeth into the vault; בית הכסא, the private houſe, as the Jews call it, without going into the heart at all: purging all meats; that which it leaves behind, is pure and nouriſhing; and whatever is groſs and impure, is carried with it into the vault, ſo that nothing remains in the man that is defiling.

Ver. 20. And he ſaid, &c.] Continued to ſay in his diſcourſe; though this is left out in the Syriac verſion; that which cometh out of the man, that defileth the man; meaning, not his excrements, which were unclean by the law, Deut. xxiii. 13. but what comes out of his heart, by his mouth; or is expreſſed in action, as appears by what follows; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 18.

Ver. 21. For from within, out of the heart of man, &c.] The inſide of man is very bad, his inward part is not only wicked, but wickedneſs itſelf, yea, very wickedneſs, Pſal. v. 9. in him dwells no good thing naturally, his heart is wicked, and deſperately ſo; it is full of evil; and out of the abundance of it, proceed the evil things hereafter mentioned; all its powers and faculties are vitiated, there is no place clean; the underſtanding and judgment are dreadfully corrupted; the mind and conſcience are defiled; the affections are inordinate; not only the thought, but every imagination of the thought of the heart is evil, and that continually: what good thing therefore, can come out of ſuch a Nazareth as this? Nothing, but what follows: for from hence proceed evil thoughts, adulteries, fornications, murders; which ſeveral things are related in Matt. xv. 19. ſee the note there; only the order here is a little different; murders which are here mentioned laſt, are there put after evil thoughts.

Ver. 22. Thefts, &c.] Theſe alſo are mentioned in Matthew, but Mark omits falſe witneſſes, and adds the following; which, excepting blaſphemy, are not taken notice of by the other Evangeliſts; covetouſneſs, wickedneſs, deceit, laſciviouſneſs, an evil eye, blaſphemy, pride, fooliſhneſs; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 19.

Ver. 23. All theſe evil things come from within, &c.] All evil thoughts, words, and actions, take their riſe from the inward parts of man; from his heart; which is ſadly corrupted, and is the fountain from whence all theſe impure ſtreams flow. And if theſe come from within, then not from without; they are not by imitation, or are the mere effects of example in others: example may indeed, and often does, draw out the evil that is within; but it does not produce it there; if it was not there before, it could not draw it out from thence: and if all theſe evils come from within, then the inward part of man muſt be ſinful and polluted, previous to the commiſſion of theſe evil things; and from whence ſprings then that inward pollution? It is the fruit of original ſin, of Adam's tranſgreſſion; the conſequence of which is, a corrupt nature, which is derived to all his poſterity: for his nature being corrupted by ſinning, and he having all human nature in him, the individuals of it could not be propagated by ordinary generation, without the pollution of ſin cleaving to them; who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? not one, Job xiv. 4. Nor has there ever been any inſtance to the contrary, but the man Chriſt Jeſus; whoſe human nature was holy, it not deſcending from Adam by ordinary generation; otherwiſe, all men, as David was, are ſhapen in iniquity, and conceived in ſin, Pſal. li. 5. and this is the ſource and ſpring of all ſinful actions, internal and external. And defile the man; both ſoul and body; all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, and all the members of the body; or make a man common: theſe ſhew him to be one of the common people, a very ſinful man; as ſuch were reckoned, and therefore are called emphatically, ſinners; and are joined with publicans, who were eſteemed the worſt of ſinners: from all which it appears, that ſin in thought, word, and deed, is the defiling thing, and is what ought to be carefully avoided; and not meats, and the manner of eating them, provided moderation is uſed.

Ver. 24. And from thence he aroſe, &c.] From the land of Genneſaret, or from Capernaum, which was in it: and went into the borders of Tyre and Sidon; two cities of Phœnicia: not into them, but into the borders of them; into thoſe parts of Galilee, which bordered on Phœnicia; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 21. And entered into an houſe; in ſome one of the towns, or cities, in thoſe parts; which houſe might be, for the entertainment and lodging of ſtrangers: and would have no man know it; took all proper precaution as man, that no body ſhould know who, and where he was; that the Gentiles, on whoſe borders he was, might not flock to him, which would create envy and diſguſt in the Jews: but he could not be hid; he had wrought ſo many miracles in Galilee, and his fame was ſo much ſpread, and he had been ſeen, and was known by ſo many perſons, that, humanly ſpeaking, it was next to impoſſible, that he ſhould be long unknown in ſuch a place.

Ver. 25. For a certain woman, &c.] One way and means by which he came to be more openly diſcovered who he was, was this; a woman in thoſe parts, whoſe young daughter had an unclean ſpirit; a devil, with which ſhe was poſſeſſed; hearing of ſome miracles, he had wrought in healing the ſick, and caſting out devils; and underſtanding that he was in ſuch a place, made all haſte to him; and with great reſpect and reverence to ſo venerable a perſon, threw herſelf at his feet, and earneſtly entreated mercy for her child; believing he had power to caſt the devil out of her, though at a diſtance from her.

Ver. 26. The woman was a Greek, &c.] Or Gentile, an Heathen woman, which made her faith the more remarkable. So the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions call her; which ſhe might be, and was, though ſhe was a woman of Canaan, as ſhe is ſaid to be in Matt. xv. 22. for though the land of Iſrael in general, was called the land of Canaan, yet there was a particular part, which was at firſt inhabited by Canaan himſelf, which bore this name; and is the ſame with Phœnicia, of which this woman was an inhabitant, and therefore ſhe is afterwards called a Syrophœnician; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 22. And this place was now inhabited by Gentiles; hence the Jews often diſtinguiſh between an Hebrew and a Canaanitiſh ſervant; of which take an [z] inſtance or two; "an Hebrew ſervant is obtained by money, "and by writing——a Canaanitiſh ſervant is obtained by money, and by writing, and by poſſeſſion." Again[a], "he that does injury to an Hebrew ſervant, is bound to all theſe (i. e. to make compenſation for loſs, pain, healing, ceſſation from buſineſs, and reproach) excepting ceſſation from buſineſs—but he that hurts a Canaanitiſh ſervant, that belongs to others, is bound to them all." And by a Canaanitiſh ſervant, they underſtand any one that is not an Iſraelite; for an Hebrew and a Canaanite, are manifeſtly oppoſed to one another. This woman being of Phœnicia, as appears by what follows, which was ſometimes called Canaan, might be ſaid to be a woman of Canaan, and alſo a Gentile. A Syrophœnician by nation; or extract. The Syriac and Perſic verſions, ſay ſhe was of Phœnicia of Syria; and the latter, by way of explanation, of Emiſa. The Arabic verſion adds, her extraction was of Ghaur; and the Ethiopic verſion ſays, ſhe was the wife of a Syrophœnician man; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 22. And ſhe beſought him, that he would caſt forth the devil out of her daughter; which ſhe was perſuaded, by what ſhe had heard of him, he was able to do, by a word ſpeaking, though her daughter was not preſent.

[z] Miſn. Kidduſhin, c. 1. §. 2, 3.

Ver. 27. But Jeſus ſaid unto her, &c.] Not directly and immediately, upon her firſt requeſt; for he anſwered not a word to that; but after his diſciples had deſired ſhe might be ſent away, her cries being ſo troubleſome to them; and after ſhe had renewed her requeſt to him; ſee Matt. xv. 23, 24, 25. Let the children firſt be filled: according to this method, our Lord directed his apoſtles, and they proceeded: as he himſelf was ſent to the loſt ſheep of the houſe of Iſrael, he ordered his diſciples to go to them, and preach the Goſpel to them, and work miracles among them; and not go in the way of the Gentiles, nor into any of the cities of the Samaritans; but when they had gone through the cities of Judæa, he ordered them, after his reſurrection, to go into all the world, and preach the Goſpel to all nations, beginning at Jeruſalem: and this order they obſerved in other places, where there were Jews; they firſt preached to them, and then to the Gentiles; knowing that it was neceſſary, that the word of God ſhould be firſt ſpoken to them; and it was the power of God to the Jew firſt, and then to the Gentile: and the expreſſion here uſed, though it gives the preference to the Jew, does not exclude the Gentile; nay, it ſuppoſes, that after the Jews had had the doctrines of Chriſt, confirmed by his miracles, ſufficiently miniſtered unto them, for the gathering in the choſen ones among them, and to leave the reſt inexcuſable; and ſo long as until they ſhould deſpiſe it, and put it away from them, judging themſelves unworthy of it; that then the Gentiles ſhould have plenty of Goſpel proviſions ſet before them, and ſhould eat of them, and be filled; and ſhould have a large number of miracles wrought among them, and a fulneſs of the bleſſings of grace beſtowed on them. The Jews are meant, who were the children of God by national adoption; who were firſt to be filled with the doctrines and miracles of Chriſt, before the Gentiles were to have them among them; as they were, even to a loathing and contempt of them: for it is not meet to take the childrens bread, and to caſt it unto the dogs: as by the children are meant the Iſraelites, who were not only the children of Abraham by natural deſcent, but the children of God, to whom pertained the adoption, by virtue of the national covenant made with them; ſo by the dogs, are meant the Gentiles, who were reckoned as ſuch by the Jews; and by the bread, which it was not fit and proper ſhould be taken from the one for the preſent, and caſt to the other, is deſigned the miniſtry of the Goſpel; which is as bread, ſolid, ſubſtantial, wholeſome, and nouriſhing; and the miraculous cures wrought on the bodies of men, which accompanied it: now it was not meet and convenient as yet, that theſe things ſhould be taken away from the Jewiſh nation, until they had anſwered the ends for which they were deſigned, and the Jews ſhould expreſs their loathing and abhorrence of them; which when they did, they were taken away from them, and were miniſtered to the nations of the world, they contemptuouſly called dogs; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 26.

Ver. 28. And ſhe anſwered and ſaid unto him, yes, Lord, &c.] Agreeing to, and acquieſcing in, what he ſaid; which ſhe ſeemed to have underſtood, though delivered in a proverbial way; and very appoſitely replies, yet the dogs under the table, eat of the childrens crumbs; which they leave, or let fall: ſignifying that ſhe did not envy the bleſſings of the Jews, or deſire any thing might be done injurious to them; only that this favour might be granted her, which ſhe owned ſhe was unworthy of, that her daughter might be healed. She tacitly owns, that the character of dogs belonged to the Gentiles, and to her and her's among the reſt; that they were vile and baſe in themſelves, inferior to the Jews, as to privileges, like dogs under the table; that the proviſions with which the table of the Goſpel miniſtry was furniſhed, was not for them; at leaſt, that they were quite undeſerving of them: but however, whereas dogs were allowed to eat crumbs which now and then fell from the table, or out of the childrens hands and laps; ſo ſuch unworthy Gentiles as ſhe, might be allowed a ſmall benefit or favour by the bye, when it did not take from, and was no diſadvantage to the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 27.

Ver. 29. And he ſaid unto her, for this ſaying, &c.] Or word of faith; in which ſhe expreſſed ſuch great faith in him: the Perſic verſion reads it, go thy way; for with the bleſſing of this word, the devil is gone out of thy daughter: as if this ſaying referred to the word of Chriſt, and the divine power, that went along with it, to the ejection of the devil; when it refers to the ſaying of the woman, and not to the words of Chriſt, which follow: go thy way; in peace, thy requeſt is granted; it is as thou wouldſt have it: the devil is gone out of thy daughter. Chriſt, who as God is every where, and whoſe divine power reaches to all places, perſons, and things, had, in a ſecret and powerful manner, caſt the devil out of this woman's daughter; without going to her, or ſpeaking to him, his power had wrought the miracle effectually.

Ver. 30. And when ſhe was come to her houſe, &c.] For with thoſe words of Chriſt, ſhe was abundantly ſatisfied, and went away with as great a faith, and as ſtrong a perſuaſion of the diſpoſſeſſion, as that ſhe came with, that Chriſt was able to effect it: and accordingly ſhe found the devil gone out; of her daughter; that ſhe was entirely diſpoſſeſſed of him, and no more vexed and tormented with him, but in perfect eaſe, and at reſt: and her daughter laid upon the bed; without any violent motions, convulſions, and toſſings to and fro, as before; but compoſed and ſtill, taking ſome reſt, having been for ſome time greatly fatigued with the poſſeſſion. The Ethiopic verſion reads, ſhe found her daughter cloathed cloathed and ſat upon the bed; for perſons in theſe poſſeſſions, would often put off their cloaths, and tear them in pieces; and were ſeldom compoſed, and rarely ſat long in a place or poſture; but now it was otherwiſe with her.

Ver. 31. And again departing from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and coming out again from the borders of Tyre, he came through Sidon; and ſo two of Beza's copies; the Arabic verſion, which De Dieu made uſe of, reads to Sidon; as he muſt needs come to it, if he came through it; though the verſion in the Polyglott Bible of Walton's reads, מיין, from Sidon: but the greater number of copies, and the Syriac and Perſic verſions read as we do, and which is righteſt; ſince it does not appear, that Chriſt went out of the land of Iſrael, into any Heathen cities: and beſides, Sidon was further off from Galilee than Tyre, and ſo did not lie in his way to it; and therefore 'tis not likely he ſhould paſs through that city, in order to go to it. The Ethiopic verſion reads, and coming out again from Tyre, he went through Sidon: both theſe places were in Phœnicia, and it is probable that the woman before mentioned, might belong to one or other of them. According to this verſion, ſhe may be thought to be of Tyre, and that it was there, where the above diſcourſe paſſed between Chriſt and her; though ſome Dutch pictures, Dr. Lightfoot [b] takes notice of, repreſent her as praying for her daughter, at the gate of Sidon; and Borchard the monk, as he relates from him, ſays, that before the gate of Sidon eaſtward, there is a chappel built in the place, where the Canaanitiſh woman prayed to our Saviour for her daughter. But Chriſt, for the reaſon before given, could be in neither of theſe places, being out of the land of Iſrael; beſides, the text is expreſs, that it was to the borders of this country he came, and from thence he went; and not to, or from, or through any of theſe places. He came unto the ſea of Galilee; or Tiberias, the ſame with the lake of Genneſaret: he came to thoſe parts of Galilee, which lay by it, where he had been, before he went to the borders of Tyre and Sidon: through the midſt of the coaſts of Decapolis; of this place, ſee the note on Matt. iv. 25. It was a country which conſiſted of ten cities, from whence it had its name: now not through the middle of theſe cities, or of this country, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; but through the midſt of the borders of it Chriſt paſſed, which lay in his way from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, to the ſea of Galilee. The Syriac and Perſic verſions render the words, unto the borders of Decapolis, or the ten cities; and the Arabic verſion, unto the middle of the coaſts of the ten cities; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 29.

Ver. 32. And they bring unto him one that was deaf, &c.] There were two ſorts of perſons that were called deaf among the Jews; one that could neither hear nor ſpeak; ſuch were they who were born deaf; and ſo having never heard any thing, it was impoſſible they ſhould ever ſpeak: the other ſort were they that could ſpeak, but not hear; who loſt their hearing by ſome diſaſter or another, but retained their ſpeech [c]: of this ſort ſeems to be this man, who though he had ſome difficulty in ſpeaking, yet could ſpeak a little, and had an impediment in his ſpeech; or could ſcarcely ſpeak, as the word ſignifies; though it is ſometimes uſed by the Septuagint, for one that was entirely dumb, as in Iſa. xxxv. 6. and ſo it is here rendered dumb, by the Vulgate Latin, and other verſions; yet it ſeems to deſign one that ſtammered, and could not ſpeak plainly, and without great difficulty: he was tonguetied, as it ſhould ſeem from ver. 35. This man, the inhabitants of the parts where Chriſt now was, his relations or friends, bring to him, having heard of his fame, and perhaps they had ſeen miracles performed by him: and they beſeech him to put his hand upon him; firmly believing, that upon his ſo doing, the man's hearing would come to him, and he would ſpeak without difficulty: very likely they had ſeen cures performed by Chriſt in this way, or at leaſt had heard, that by laying his hands on perſons diſordered, they had been reſtored to the right uſe of their ſenſes, or limbs; wherefore they moſt earneſtly intreated, he would be pleaſed to do the ſame favour to this poor man. The caſe of this man, much reſembles that of a ſinner, in a ſtate of nature, who is deaf to the voice, both of law and Goſpel: he does not hearken to the commanding voice of the law, or attend to its precepts, nor can he be ſubject to it; nor does he hear its menaces and curſes, nor is he at all affected and diſturbed with theſe things; and, like the deaf adder, he ſtops his ear to the charming voice of the Goſpel; he deſpiſes it, and has it in the utmoſt abhorrence: he is deaf to all the inſtructions, directions, cautions, and exhortations, of the miniſters of the word; and even of his beſt friends, relations, and acquaintance: nor can he ſpeak the language of Canaan; it is a ſtrange language to him; he can neither talk it himſelf, nor underſtand it in others; for as he has no experience of the grace of God in him, he muſt be dumb, and cannot ſpeak of what he has no knowledge: and indeed, it may be obſerved of ſuch who are under the firſt workings of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul; that they are often as it were tongue-tied, and through fear or baſhfulneſs, or the temptations of ſatan, care not to ſpeak; or with great difficulty, are brought to ſpeak of what God has done for them; and at firſt, it is but in a liſping, ſtammering way, they do ſpeak of theſe things: and as the friends and relations of this man, having a great opinion of Chriſt, and a perſuaſion of his ability to relieve and cure him, bring him unto him, that he might put his hands upon him; ſo do ſuch who know Chriſt themſelves, and have felt the power of his grace upon their own ſouls, bring their deaf and dumb, their relations in a ſtate of nature, under the means of grace; being very deſirous that Chriſt would make bare, and put forth his mighty arm of grace, and lay hold upon them, and work a good work in them, and give them ears to hear his voice, and a tongue to ſpeak his praiſe.

Ver. 33. And he took him aſide from the multitude, &c.] To ſhun all appearance of oſtentation and vain-glory: and put his fingers into his ears; the finger of his right hand into his left ear, and the finger of his left hand into his right ear: and he ſpit and touched his tongue; that is, either he ſpit upon his tongue, for ſo the Vulgate Latin renders it, ſpitting he touched his tongue; and the Perſic verſion thus, he caſt his ſpittle on his tongue; or rather, he ſpit on his finger, and touched his tongue with it. Theſe actions were not done as means of healing, or as having any natural virtue, or tendency in them, to effect a cure; but to ſhow the power of Chriſt, that by the mere touch of his finger, and by the ſpittle of his mouth, as well as by laying on of hands, as was deſired, and by a word ſpeaking, ing, he could at once remove this, or any ſuch diſorder. The taking this man aſide from the multitude, is an emblem of the Lord's ſeparating his people from the reſt of the world, when he calls them by his grace; for as they are diſtinguiſhed from others, in the choice of them in Chriſt, and in redemption by him; ſo in effectual vocation, they are bid to come out from among them, and by the power of divine grace, they are brought out from among them, and give up themſelves to Chriſt, and to his churches: and Chriſt's putting his fingers into the ears of this man, repreſents the exertion of his power, and his removing by the finger of his Spirit, the obſtructions of ſpiritual hearing; or rather, the planting of the ſpiritual ear, or forming a principle of ſpiritual hearing in the ſoul: and his touching his tongue with the ſpittle of his mouth, may lead us to obſerve the application of his word, through the efficacy of his grace, as a means of looſing his tongue, and opening his lips, to ſhew forth his praiſe.

Ver. 34. And looking up to heaven, &c.] To his Father there, by whom he was ſent, and from whom, as man, he received his authority and power; though this was not for aſſiſtance in the working of this miracle, which he had power to do of himſelf; nor do we find that he put up any requeſt to his Father: but he ſeems to have made uſe of this motion, not for his own ſake, but for the ſake of the man; to teach him, that every good gift, bleſſing, mercy, and favour, and ſo this he was about to partake of, was from above: he ſighed; not as unequal to the work of healing the man, or as deſpairing of doing it; but as commiſerating the caſe of the poor man, and reflecting with concern upon his ſin, that had been the occaſion of it. Theſe actions of looking up to heaven and ſighing, as they may be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, or with relation to the ſpiritual healing of a ſinner, may ſhow that ſuch a bleſſing comes from above: it is received from heaven; it is God that gives the hearing ear, as well as the ſeeing eye; and that in a ſpiritual, as well as in a natural ſenſe: and therefore this directs to apply to God for it, whether for a man's ſelf, or for others; and when enjoyed, to look up again to heaven, and return thanks for it: and alſo that ſuch a favour flows from divine mercy and compaſſion, Chriſt pitying the caſe of perſons in ſuch a condition; and he being an high-prieſt that can have compaſſion on thoſe that are in diſtreſs, and having ability to help them, makes uſe of it, and expreſſes both his pity and his power, as in the following manner. And ſaith unto him; in the Syriac language, which he then ſpoke, אתפתח, Ethphatha, or Ephphatha; that is, being interpreted, be opened, both ears and mouth. And this way of ſpeaking is uſed by the Jews, of a deaf man being reſtored to hearing, as of a blind man's being reſtored to ſight; of which, take the following inſtance[d]; "a minor that receives (i. e. a divorce) "and afterwards becomes adult, or a deaf man, "ונתפקח, and is opened (i. e. his ears are opened, "or his hearing is reſtored) or a blind man, ונתפתח, "and is opened (has his ſight again) or a fool, and "he is reſtored to his reaſon, or a Gentile, and he "becomes a proſelyte, is unfit or unlawful (to "carry a divorce from a man to his wife) but, פקח, "one that is open, and afterwards becomes deaf, "and then again opened; פתיח, or open, and afterwards become blind, and again opened; or a fool, "and is reſtored to his ſenſes, and again becomes a "fool, he is right or fit," (for the above purpoſe.) It is common with them to call one that hears well, in diſtinction from a deaf man, one that is open[e]. This is an inſtance of the power of Chriſt in curing diſorders, merely by a word ſpeaking, without the uſe of means; for what he did before, were not as means of healing, but ſignificative of his power; which now went along with his word, and which was expreſſed with great majeſty and authority: and ſuch a power attends the word of his grace, to the opening of the heart, to give heed to the things which are ſpoken; and to the opening of the ear to diſcipline, and ſealing inſtruction to it; and to the opening of the mouth and lips, in praiſe and thankfulneſs.

Ver. 35. And ſtraightway his ears were opened, &c.] 'Tis in the Greek text, his hearings; the inſtruments of his hearing, and ſo rightly rendered, his ears; the Perſic verſion reads, both his ears; but the word both is unneceſſary, ſince the word, ears, takes in both. Such a power went along with the words of Chriſt, when he ſaid, be opened; that immediately, as ſoon as ever the words were pronounced, the man's hearing came to him, and he heard as quick as ever he did before he loſt it, or as any other man: and the ſtring of his tongue; which cauſed it to cleave to his jaws, or the roof of his mouth, and hindered him from ſpeaking plainly, was looſed, and he ſpake plain; פשיקאית, eaſily, as the Syriac verſion renders it; without any difficulty to himſelf, and ſo as to be readily underſtood by others. Thus thoſe whoſe ears are opened, and whoſe tongues are looſed in a ſpiritual manner by Chriſt, ſpeak plainly of what they have heard and ſeen, and felt; they can give a plain and clear account of the work of God upon their ſouls; how they have been convinced of the impurity of their nature, the corruptions of their hearts, and the exceeding ſinfulneſs of ſin, in heart, lip, and life; how they have ſeen Chriſt to be an all-ſufficient and ſuitable Saviour, and have been directed, and encouraged, to go to him for healing, pardon, righteouſneſs, and everlaſting ſalvation: they can tell what promiſes have been applied to them, and what comforts they have enjoyed; how buſy ſatan has been with them, and what temptations of his they have been delivered out of, and by what means: in a word, they can ſpeak plainly of the love of God to them; of the glories and excellencies of Chriſt; of their faith and hope in him, and love to him; and of the operations of the Spirit of God upon their hearts; and of the glories of the world to come, they are in the expectation of, ſo far as they are taught of God.

Ver. 36. And he charged them, &c.] The man that had his hearing and ſpeech reſtored to him, and thoſe that brought him, and as many as were witneſſes of the miracle: that they ſhould tell no man; of the cure that was wrought, being not deſirous of the applauſe of men; and knowing it would bring upon him the envy of the Scribes and Phariſees; and be a means of putting the common people upon ſetting him up as a temporal king, ſuch as they expected the Meſſiah would be: but the more he charged them, ſo much the more a great deal they publiſhed it; or ſpake of him, as the Ethiopic verſion reads it; for they looked upon his charge merely to proceed from modeſty, and that made them the more forward to ſpeak of his greatneſs, and in his praiſe, to publiſh his mighty works, and ſpread the fame of his miracles far and near. So, ſuch who have received the grace of God, are become acquainted with Chriſt, and have a real experience of divine things, cannot but ſpeak of them; they are like new wine which hath no vent; and are ready to burſt like new bottles; to forbear ſpeaking is a pain, and wearineſs to them; nay, they think, ſhould they hold their peace, the ſtones in the walls would cry out. Wherefore, partly for the glory of God, the magnifying of the riches of his grace, and the honour of Chriſt, and the bleſſed Spirit; and partly to ſhew their own ſenſe of things, the gratitude of their minds, and the thankfulneſs of their hearts, as well as for the uſe, comfort, edification, and inſtruction of others, they muſt ſpeak, and cannot be ſilent, whatever reſtraints are laid upon them.

[d] Miſn. Gittin, c. 2. §. 6.

[e] Vid. Miſn. Yebamot, c. 14. §. 10. & T. Bab. Yebamot, fol. 114. 2.

Ver. 37. And were beyond meaſure aſtoniſhed, &c.] The man that was cured, the men that brought him, and the whole multitude were exceedingly, beyond all expreſſion, amazed at what was done, in this caſe, and many others; for there were other miracles alſo wrought at this time; ſee Matt. xv. 30, 31. The grace of God, in opening the ears and heart of a ſinner, and cauſing the tongue of the dumb to ſing his praiſe, is very aſtoniſhing, to men and angels; to the perſons themſelves that partake of it; and to all the ſaints that hear of it: it is amazing that ſuch grace ſhould be beſtowed at all; and it is more, that it ſhould be communicated to ſuch unworthy perſons it is; as alſo, that it ſhould produce ſuch effects it does; that it ſhould make ſuch a ſurprizing change, and be attended with ſuch bleſſed conſequences: ſaying, he hath done all things well; not by Beelzebub, the prince of devils, as ſaid the Scribes and Phariſees; nor in any oſtentatious manner, for the ſake of the honour and applauſe of men, as they plainly ſaw; but for the good of mankind, and for the glory of God: and as all the miraculous works, which Chriſt did, were well done by him, ſo all other works of his: all that he did in eternity before the world was, he did well; what he did in the council and covenant of grace, in eſpouſing the perſons and cauſe of his people, and in all his federal tranſactions and ſuretyſhip-engagements for them: he drew nigh to God on their account; he chearfully agreed to what his father propoſed; he entered into a covenant with him, and took the care and charge of all his people, and of all promiſes and bleſſings of grace for them: and whatſoever he has done in time is well done; as his aſſumption of human nature; taking a nature, and not a perſon, this of a virgin, and an holy nature, tho' ſubject to ſinleſs infirmities, and this in due and proper time; alſo his ſubjection to the law, moral, civil, and ceremonial, as it became him to fulfil all righteouſneſs; and his preaching the Goſpel, which he did with authority, and which he ſpake as never man did, and which he confirmed by his miracles; but eſpecially the great work of redemption he came about, was well done by him: this he has thoroughly done; he has redeemed his people from the law, its curſe, and condemnation; he has ranſomed them out of the hands of ſatan; he has ſaved them from all their ſins; he has procured the remiſſion of them, made reconciliation for them, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs: he has done this work to the ſatisfaction of all parties; to the glory of all the divine perfections, of juſtice, as well as of grace and mercy; to the contentment and pleaſure of all the divine perſons, his father, himſelf, and the bleſſed Spirit; and to the joy of angels and men: and all that he has done, or is now doing in heaven, as an advocate and interceſſor, is done well; and we may be aſſured, that all that he will do hereafter, as the judge of quick and dead, will be done in like manner. He maketh both the deaf to hear, and the dumb, or thoſe that could not ſpeak, at leaſt without a great deal of difficulty to ſpeak; an inſtance of both which there was in this ſingle man's caſe.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. IN thoſe days, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, on that day; as if it was on the ſame day that the deaf man was healed; and ſo it might be; and on the third day from Chriſt's coming into thoſe parts; and ſo is very properly expreſſed, in thoſe days; ſee ch. vii. 31. compared with the following verſe: the multitude being very great: for the number of men that eat, when the following miracle was wrought, were about four thouſand; ſee ver. 9. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, again; referring to the former miracle of the five thouſand, who were fed with five loaves, and two fiſhes, ch. vii. 44. And having nothing to eat; what they might have brought with them being expended, and they in a deſert, where nothing was to be had, nor bought for money: Jeſus called his diſciples to him, and ſaith unto them; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 32.

Ver. 2. I have compaſſion on the multitude, &c.] Chriſt is a compaſſionate ſaviour both of the bodies and ſouls of men: he had compaſſion on the ſouls of this multitude, and therefore had been teaching them ſound doctrine; and he had compaſſion on the bodies of many of them, and had healed them of their diſeaſes; and his bowels earned towards them all; becauſe, ſays he, they have now been with me three days, and have nothing to eat; for if they brought any food with them, it was all ſpent, and they were in a wilderneſs, where nothing was to be got; where they had no houſe to go into, nor bed to lie upon, and no proviſions to be bought; and in this caſe they had been two nights and three days; which ſhewed great affection and zeal in theſe people, and a cloſe attachment to Chriſt, in expoſing themſelves to all theſe difficulties and hardſhips, which they ſeemed to bear with much patience and unconcernedneſs. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions prefix the word behold to this clauſe, as expreſſing admiration at their ſtay with him ſo long in ſuch a place.

Ver. 3. And if I ſend them away faſting to their own houſes, &c.] Gr. to their own houſe, or home; but all the Oriental verſions render it as we do, in the plural, their own houſes, or habitations; and it ſeems from hence that they were now faſting, and at leaſt had had no food all that day, whatever they might have the day before, which is not certain. They will faint by the way; for want of food their ſtrength will be exhauſted, their animal ſpirits will fail, their nerves will be looſened, they will not be able to perform their journey, or get to the end of it: for divers of them came from far; perhaps ſome had followed him from the coaſts of Tyre and Sidon, from whence he came laſt; and others from Decapolis, thro' the midſt of the borders of which he paſſed hither; and others from different parts, who had heard of his coming; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 32.

Ver. 4. And his diſciples anſwered him, &c.] The Syriac verſion renders it, ſay unto him; and the Perſic and Ethiopic, ſaid unto him; forgetting the late miracle of feeding five thouſand with five loaves and two fiſhes, when they had now a leſs number, and more proviſions: from whence can a man ſatisfy theſe men with bread here in the wilderneſs? from what place, and by what ways and means can it be thought, that ſuch a quantity of bread can be got at any rate in a deſert, as to ſatisfy ſo large a number of hungry men? ſee the note on Matt. xv. 33.

Ver. 5. And he aſked them, how many loaves have ye? &c.] See the note on Matt. xv. 34. and they ſaid, ſeven. Matthew adds, and a few little fiſhes, which are here afterwards mentioned.

Ver. 6. And he commanded the people to ſit down on the ground, &c.] See the note on Matt. xv. 35. and he took the ſeven loaves, and gave thanks, and brake them; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 36. and gave to his diſciples to ſet before them, the multitude, and they did ſet them before the people; in which they were obedient to their Lord's commands, tho' they were ſo forgetful, unbelieving, and ſtupid.

Ver. 7. And they had a few ſmall fiſhes, &c.] Which they alſo acquainted Chriſt with, and brought out unto him: and he bleſſed, and commanded to ſet them alſo before them. It looks, by this account, as if the fiſhes were bleſſed, and brake, and diſtributed ſeparately, after the bleſſing, breaking, and diſtribution of the bread; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, upon whom alſo he bleſſed; and the Perſic thus, and he alſo bleſſed the fiſhes; but, according to Matthew they were both bleſſed, and brake, and diſtributed together, as it is highly reaſonable to ſuppoſe they were both eat together; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 36.

Ver. 8. So they did eat, and were filled, &c.] Chriſt and his diſciples, and the whole multitude: they not only had ſome, but they had all enough; a full meal. It was ſurprizing that it could be divided ſo, as that every one ſhould have a bit; but that they ſhould all be ſatisfied to the full, is amazing: and they took up of the broken meat that was left ſeven baſkets; as many as there were loaves; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 37.

Ver. 9. And they that had eaten were about four thouſand, &c.] That is, men, beſides women and children, as Matthew obſerves; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 38. and he ſent them away; ſome that came dumb with their ſpeech, and deaf with their hearing; others that were maimed, with perfect healing of their wounds, and with their limbs ſound and whole; others that came lame, he diſmiſſed leaping; and others that were blind, with their ſight reſtored to them, and all of them full.

Ver. 10. And ſtraightway he entered into a ſhip, with his diſciples, &c.] As ſoon as ever he had diſmiſſed the multitude, he took ſhipping with his diſciples; for he was at the ſea of Galilee, either at a place near it, or upon the ſhore of it; ſee ch. vii. 31. and came into the parts of Dalmanutha; which Matthew calls, the coaſts of Magdala; ſee the note on Matt. xv. 39. The Arabic verſion reads it, Magdal; and in two of Beza's copies it is read, Madegada; but the Syriac verſion reads, Dalmanutha; and the Perſic, Dalmanuth; and the Ethiopic, Dalmathy: it was a city in the coaſts of Magdala, and is thought by Dr. Lightfoot to be the ſame with Tzalmon, or Salmon, a place often mentioned [f] in the Jewiſh writings.

Ver. 11. And the Phariſees came forth, &c.] Out of their houſes; who dwelt in the coaſts of Magdala, and parts of Dalmanutha, and came to Jeſus, hearing of his being arrived in their neighbourhood: and began to queſtion with him; or to diſpute with him, it being their manner to carry on diſputations by queſtions and anſwers. The Perſic verſion has the queſtion they put, and about which they diſputed, if thou art the Chriſt; in proof of which they required a ſign: ſeeking of him a ſign from heaven, tempting him; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 1.

Ver. 12. And he ſighed deeply in his ſpirit, &c.] In his human ſoul; and which ſhows that he had one, and was ſubject to grief and ſorrow, and all paſſions and infirmities, excepting ſin. This deep ſigh was on account of the hardneſs of their hearts, the malignity of their minds, and inſincerity of their intentions; who had no view to come at truth by this enquiry, but to enſnare him: and ſaith, why doth this generation ſeek after a ſign? when ſo many have been ſhewn among them, and they will not believe: verily I ſay unto you, there ſhall no ſign be given to this generation; ſuch as they deſired; namely, one from heaven. The Evangeliſt Matthew adds, but the ſign of the prophet Jonas; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 4. and xii. 40.

Ver. 13. And he left them, &c.] As a perverſe and hardened generation of men, and as ſuch with whom it was not worth while to diſcourſe: and entering into the ſhip again; which brought him over, and waited for him: departed to the other ſide; of the ſea of Galilee, towards Bethſaida, ver. 22.

Ver. 14. Now the diſciples had forgotten to take bread, &c.] At Dalmanutha, or Magdala, or whatever place in thoſe parts they were at, before they took ſhipping, as was their uſual method. Neither had they in the ſhip with them more than one loaf; for thirteen paſſengers of them. The Perſic verſion reads the whole thus: and they forgot to take bread with them, not indeed one loaf, and there was no bread with them in the ſhip; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 5.

Ver. 15. And he charged them, &c.] When they were in the ſhip, and had juſt recollected themſelves, that they had took no care to bring any proviſions with them: ſaying, take heed, beware of the leaven of the Phariſees, and of the leaven of Herod: in Matthew, inſtead of the leaven of Herod, it is read, the leaven of the Sadducees; which are either the ſame, Herod and his courtiers being Sadducees, or favourers of them; or the Sadducees being ſticklers for Herod, and his government, which the Phariſees had no good opinion of; or elſe diſtinct from one another; and ſo Chriſt cautions againſt the doctrines of the Phariſees, which regarded the traditions of the elders, and of the Sadducees, concerning the reſurrection, and of the Herodians, who thought Herod to be the Meſſiah; and againſt the unreaſonable requeſt and demand of them all to have a ſign from heaven, in proof of his own Meſſiahſhip; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 6.

Ver. 16. And they reaſoned among themſelves, &c.] Upon Chriſt's giving this caution, and recollecting with themſelves, that they had forgot to buy any proviſions, and take with them: ſaying, it is becauſe we have no bread; that he ſays theſe words; tacitly chiding and reproving us, for our want of thought and care; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 7.

Ver. 17. And when Jeſus knew it, &c.] As he did immediately, by his omniſcience; for as he knew the thoughts and reaſonings of the Scribes and Phariſees, Matt. ix. 4. ſo he did thoſe of his own diſciples: he ſaith unto them, why reaſon ye becauſe ye have no bread? or imagine that I have given you this caution on that account; or are diſtreſſed becauſe this is your caſe, as if you ſhould be reduced to great difficulties, by reaſon of your forgetfulneſs and negligence: perceive ye not yet, neither underſtand? the meaning of the parabolical expreſſions, which he had uſed them to; or his power in providing food for them, and ſupporting a great number of perſons with very little food, of which they had ſome very late inſtances: have ye your heart yet hardened? as after the firſt miracle; ſee ch. vi. 52. for it might have been expected, that by a ſecond miracle of the loaves, their underſtandings would have been more enlightened, and their faith encreaſed, and that they would have relinquiſhed their groſs notions, their anxieties, doubts, and unbelief.

[f] Miſn. Celaim, c. 4. §. 9. & Yebamot, c. 16. §. 6. T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 82. 2.

Ver. 18. Having eyes, ſee ye not? &c.] Meaning perhaps both the eyes of their bodies, and of their underſtandings: they had bodily eyes, and with them ſaw the miracles he wrought, and yet took little notice of them; and the eyes of their underſtandings were enlightened by Chriſt, and yet ſaw things but very darkly: and having ears, hear ye not? They had their natural hearing, and yet made but little uſe of it; and did not ſo diligently attend to the ſound of Chriſt's words: and tho' they had ſpiritual ears given them to hear, yet were very dull of underſtanding, and taking in things: and do ye not remember? the interpretation of parables formerly given, and the miracles of the loaves lately wrought.

Ver. 19. When I brake the five loaves among five thouſand, &c.] This, with what follows, chiefly regards the laſt queſtion: how many baſkets full of fragments took ye up? don't you remember? have you forgot what was ſo lately done? ſurely you cannot: they ſay unto him, twelve. Their memories were hereby refreſhed, and they call to mind the exact number of the baſkets of fragments that were taken up, which were above double the number of the loaves, the multitude were fed with.

Ver. 20. And when the ſeven among four thouſand, &c.] That is, when ſeven loaves were broken among four thouſand men, how many baſkets full of fragments took ye up? this ſurely you muſt remember, it being ſo recent an action, but juſt done, as it were: and they ſaid ſeven; for this, as yet, could not have ſlipped their memories; though they had been reaſoning among themſelves becauſe of their ſtraightneſs of proviſions, as if theſe things had never been done.

Ver. 21. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Since this was the caſe, and they ſo well remembered the miracles he had wrought, and the circumſtances of them: how is it that ye do not underſtand? my words concerning the leaven of the Phariſees, of the Sadducees, and of Herod, as to imagine I ſpoke of bread, taken in a literal ſenſe; or that I concerned myſelf about the ſcantineſs of your proviſions, when you might have learnt from my late miracles, how able I am to ſupport you, if you had not ſo much as one loaf with you: wherefore it argues great want both of underſtanding and faith, and ſhows great ſtupidity, ignorance, and unbelief, to give ſuch a ſenſe of my words, and to be anxiouſly concerned on the ſcore of your proviſions.

Ver. 22. And he cometh to Bethſaida, &c.] The city of Andrew, Peter, and Philip, John i. 44. a fiſhing town, which was ſituated by the ſea of Galilee. Beza's ancient copy, and the Gothic verſion, wrongly read Bethany. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, they came; Chriſt, and his twelve apoſtles, who landed at this place; and they bring a blind man to him; for Chriſt had been here before, and was known by the inhabitants of the place; who, as ſoon as they heard of his arrival, and knowing what miracles were done by him, brought a poor blind man, of their town, to him, to be cured by him: and beſought him to touch him; having heard of, or ſeen cures performed by him this way. This man is an emblem of ſuch who are ſpiritually blind: he had no natural ſight at all; he could ſee nothing; he had not the leaſt glimmering of any thing, until he was touched by Chriſt: ſo men, in a ſtate of nature, are quite dark, even darkneſs itſelf, until they are made light by the Lord: they have no ſight, nor ſenſe of themſelves, of their ſinful, loſt, and dangerous eſtate and condition they are in; they know not becauſe they are blind, that they are wretched, and poor, and miſerable, and naked: they have no ſight of Chriſt, neither of the glory of his perſon, nor of the fulneſs of his grace, nor of the nature, neceſſity, and ſuitableneſs of his ſalvation: they are quite blind as to any ſaving knowledge of God in Chriſt, the way of life and peace by him, and the work of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul; or with regard to any ſpiritual experience of the power of Goſpel truths, or views of the glories of another world: and as this man ſeemed to be unconcerned himſelf about the cure of his blindneſs, only his friends were affected with his caſe, and brought him to Chriſt, and ſolicited a cure, ſo it is with unregenerate men; they are inſenſible of their caſe, and ſo thoughtleſs of it, and unaffected with it, and do not, of themſelves, ſeek for a deliverance out of it; nor do they make uſe of means for that purpoſe; but it becomes their friends, relations, and acquaintance, that are ſpiritual, who know their caſe, and their need of Chriſt, and his grace, to bring them to him under the means, and pray unto him, that he would put forth the mighty power of his grace upon them, and give them ſpiritual ſight, to ſee in what a loſt condition they are, and their need of him.

Ver. 23. And he took the blind man by the hand, &c.] Not for the ſake of touching him, in order to heal him, as they deſired, but to be his guide: and led him out of the town; to ſhun all appearance of vain glory and popular applauſe, being willing to do the miracle in a private manner; and becauſe of the obſtinacy and unbelief of the inhabitants of this place, who were not worthy to be witneſſes of ſuch a cure; ſee Matt. xi. 21. and when he had ſpit on his eyes; not as a cauſe of healing him; for whatever uſe ſpittle may be of to ſuch that have weak eyes, it can have no cauſal influence upon, or be of any ſervice, in a natural way, to a blind man, to reſtore his ſight unto him: and put his hands upon him; as he ſometimes did, when he healed perſons of any diſorder: he aſked him, if he ſaw ought; any object whatever, whether he could perceive he had any ſight at all. Chriſt's taking the blind man by the hand, and leading him out of the town, and ſpitting on his eyes, and putting his hands upon him, and then aſking him if he ſaw ought, are emblematical of what he does in ſpiritual converſion, when he turns men from darkneſs to light: he takes them by the hand, which expreſſes his condeſcenſion, grace, and mercy, and becomes their guide and leader; and a better, and ſafer guide they cannot have; he brings them by a way they know not, and leads them in paths they had not known before; makes darkneſs light before them, and crooked things ſtraight, and does not forſake them: he takes them a-part, and ſeparates them from the reſt of the world; he calls them out from thence to go with him, teaching them, that, when enlightened by him, they ſhould have no fellowſhip with the unfruitful works of darkneſs, and the workers of them; for what communion has light with darkneſs? his putting ſpittle upon his eyes, may ſignify the means of grace, the eye-ſalve of the word, which, when attended with a divine power, enlightens the eyes; and which power may be repreſented here by Chriſt's putting his hands upon the man; for the Goſpel, without the power of Chriſt, is inſufficient to produce ſuch an effect; but when it is accompanied with that, it always ſucceeds.

Ver. 24. And he looked up, &c.] This is omitted in the Arabic and Perſic verſions. The ſenſe is, that he opened his eye-lids, and lifted up his eyes, to try if he could ſee, and he could, and did ſee again; his ſight was returned again, tho' very imperfectly as yet: and ſaid, I ſee men as trees walking: he ſaw ſome objects at a little diſtance from him, which, by their motion, he ſuppoſed to be men; otherwiſe his ſight was ſo imperfect, that he could not have diſtinguiſhed them from trees: he was capable of diſcerning the bulk of their bodies, and that they walked, or moved forward; but he could not diſtinguiſh the particular parts of their bodies; they ſeemed to be like trunks of trees, in an erect poſture, and which he ſhould have took for ſuch, had it not been for their walking. As this man immediately, upon Chriſt's putting ſpittle on his eyes, and laying his hands on him, had ſight given him, tho' it was very obſcure and glimmering; ſo, as ſoon as ever the Goſpel comes with power, it diſpels the darkneſs of the mind, and introduces light; tho' at firſt it is but very ſmall; it is let in gradually: the ſinner is firſt convinced of the evil of his actions, and then of the ſinfulneſs of his nature; he firſt ſees the ability and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt as a Saviour, and after that his willingneſs, and his intereſt in him as ſuch; and all this is commonly before he is ſo well acquainted with the dignity and infiniteneſs of his perſon, as the Son of God: and it is ſome time before he has his ſpiritual ſenſes exerciſed to diſcern between good and evil, between truth and error; or arrives to a clear and diſtinct knowledge of Goſpel-truths, and a ſtability in them. Hence it is, that ſuch are greatly harraſſed with ſatan's temptations; are diſquieted in their ſouls; are filled with doubts and fears, and are in danger of being impoſed upon by falſe teachers.

Ver. 25. After that he had put his hands again upon his eyes, &c.] By the former account it does not appear on what part of him he put his hands; but this determines it; and from hence it ſeems plain, that he firſt ſpit on his eyes, and then cloſed them, and put his hands on them; which laſt action of his he repeated, tho' not the former: and made him look up. This is omitted in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions. The Vulgate Latin reads it, he began to ſee; and ſo Beza's ancient copy: but this he did before, upon the firſt impoſition of hands on him. The Arabic verſion renders it, he ſaw well: this is expreſſed afterwards. The words are an order, or command of Chriſt to the man to lift up his eyes, and try again how he could ſee, and whether any better than before, which he did: and he was reſtored; his ſight was reſtored to him as before, and he was perfectly cured of his blindneſs; and ſaw every man clearly; or all things, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read: he ſaw every object diſtinctly, and afar off, as the word uſed alſo ſignifies; he could diſtinguiſh men from trees, and trees from men. This man, as before obſerved, was a very lively emblem of one that is ſpiritually enlightened by the grace of God: Chriſt firſt ſeparated this man from the reſt of the multitude; and ſuch are firſt diſtinguiſhed from others in election, and redemption, and vocation, who are illuminated by the Spirit of God: means were made uſe of by Chriſt for healing this man; tho' the bare actions, without a divine power, would have been inſufficient, as the ſpittle of his mouth, and the impoſition of his hands: and, generally ſpeaking, in the illumination of a ſinner the word of Chriſt's mouth is a means; tho' this, without the efficacy of his grace, is not of itſelf ſufficient. This man, upon his firſt reception of ſight, had a very dim, obſcure, and imperfect view of things; could not well diſtinguiſh one thing from another, tho' he ſaw. As at firſt converſion, the enlightened ſoul has but a very glimmering view of things, particularly of Chriſt, the glory and fulneſs of his perſon, the efficacy of his blood, the excellency of his righteouſneſs, of his ability, willingneſs, and ſuitableneſs as a Saviour; and eſpecially of thoſe doctrines of the Goſpel, that are more ſublime and diſtinguiſhing. But as this man afterwards had a more clear, and diſtinct view of objects; ſo it is with true believers in Chriſt; their ſhining light increaſes, and ſhines more and more unto the perfect day. For Goſpel-light at preſent is not perfect in any: ſuch who have the cleareſt views of things, have ſome darkneſs and imperfection in them; tho' they may be ſaid to ſee all things clearly, in compariſon of what they ſometimes did, and others do: particularly ſaints, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, ſee more clearly than thoſe under the legal diſpenſation did; the object was at a greater diſtance from them; they ſaw the promiſes afar off; and the medium of their ſight, or thro' which they ſaw, were obſcure types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices, and dark prophecies. Moſes, and his law, had a veil over them; but New Teſtament-ſaints, with open face, without a veil, behold, as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord Jeſus, and of Goſpel-truths: indeed, they that know moſt, ſee things moſt clearly, and ſpeak of them moſt diſtinctly, know but in part, and propheſy but in part, in compariſon of the beatific viſion; when ſaints ſhall ſee face to face, and know, as they are known; they now ſee but thro' a glaſs darkly. How clearly will all things be ſeen in the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, when there will be no need of the light of the ſun, or moon of ordinances; but Chriſt, the lamb, will be the everlaſting light thereof, in which the nations of them that are ſaved ſhall walk!

Ver. 26. And he ſent him away to his houſe, &c.] Which ſeems to have been in one of the neighbouring villages, or was one of the houſes ſcattered about in the fields for the conveniency of rural buſineſs. Saying, neither go into the town; or that town, as the Syriac, the town, or city of Bethſaida: nor tell it to any in the town; to any of the inhabitants of the town, that he ſhould meet with any where, or at any time: the reaſon of this was not merely, or only becauſe Chriſt would have the miracle concealed; but chiefly becauſe the inhabitants of this place were notorious for their impenitence and unbelief. Chriſt had done many wonderful works among them, and yet they repented not; nor did they believe in him; but deſpiſed him, his doctrine, and his miracles; and therefore for their neglect and contempt of ſuch means, he was determined to withdraw them from them. So Chriſt ſometimes deals with nations, cities, and towns, that diſbelieve, reject, and deſpiſe his Goſpel; he takes it away from them, he orders his miniſtring ſervants to preach no more to them; no more to tell them of the good news of life and ſalvation by him: thus he dealt with the Jews, who contradicted, and blaſphemed, and judged themſelves, or by their conduct made themſelves appear to be unworthy of the words of eternal life; he took away the kingdom of God, or the Goſpel, from them, and ſent it among the Gentiles: and thus he threatened the church of Epheſus, for leaving its firſt love, to remove the candleſtick out of its place, in caſe of non-repentance; and a grievous judgment it is upon a place and people, when God commands the clouds to rain no rain upon them, Iſ. v. 6. or, in other words, when he enjoins his miniſters no more to tell, or publiſh his Goſpel to them; he determining to withdraw from them, and have no more to do with them; ſo Chriſt, and his diſciples, departed from this place, as is declared in the following verſe.

Ver. 27. And Jeſus went out, and his diſciples, &c.] From Bethſaida, and even from Galilee, into the towns of Ceſarea Philippi; in the juriſdiction of Philip, tetrarch of Iturea and Trachonitis; for this Ceſarea was rebuilt by him, and called ſo in honour of Tiberias Cæſar; and the towns and villages adjacent to it are here intended; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 13. and by the way he aſked his diſciples; as they were going from Galilee to thoſe parts: ſaying unto them, whom do men ſay that I am? not that he needed any information of this; for he knew not only what was ſaid by men, but what was in them; but he put this queſtion, in order to bring out their ſenſe of, and faith in him, and to impart ſomething to them which was neceſſary they ſhould be acquainted with; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 13. where it is read, whom do men ſay, that I, the ſon of man, am?

Ver. 28. And they anſwered, &c.] That ſome ſaid he was John the Baptiſt; which was the opinion of Herod, and others: but ſome ſay Elias; that is, the Tiſhbite, whom the Jews, in general, expected in perſon before the coming of the Meſſiah, and imagined that Jeſus was he: and others one of the prophets; as Jeremiah, or Iſaiah, or ſome other. The Vulgate Latin reads, as one of the prophets; and ſo Beza's ancient copy, as in chap. vi. 15. All ſpake highly and honourably of him: the people in common did not look upon him as a mean perſon; they perceived by his doctrine, and more eſpecially by his miracles, that he was an extraordinary one: the ſeveral perſons which they differently took him to be, and make mention of, were ſuch as were of great repute; as John the Baptiſt, who had lately been among them, and whom all held to be a prophet, and indeed was more than a prophet; and Elias, who was ſo very zealous for the Lord of hoſts, and wrought many miracles in his day; and whoſe coming the Jews were in expectation of to uſher in the Meſſiah; and none thought him leſs than one of the prophets; and all agreed he was an uncommon man; even one raiſed from the dead, as he muſt be, if he was John the Baptiſt, or Elias, or one of the old prophets; but they knew him not, at leaſt did not confeſs him to be the Meſſiah; he not appearing as a temporal prince, they were taught to believe he would be; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 14.

Ver. 29. And he ſaith unto them, but whom ſay ye that I am, &c.] 'Twas for the ſake of this queſtion he put the former; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 15. and Peter anſwereth and ſaith unto him, thou art the Chriſt; the Meſſiah that was long ago promiſed, and ſo often propheſied of in the books of Moſes, and the prophets; and whom the Jews have ſo much and long expected. This confeſſion of Peter's, in which all the apoſtles agreed with him, ſpeaks out what Jeſus really was, and exceeds the moſt exalted ſentiments which the people had of him: he was not the harbinger of the Meſſiah, but the Meſſiah himſelf; not Elias, in whoſe Spirit his forerunner was to come, and did come; nor any one of the prophets; but he, who was ſpoken of by all the holy prophets, which have been ſince the beginning of the world. Not one of the various opinions of the people being juſt, and anſwering the true character of Jeſus, he demands the ſenſe of his diſciples, which is here given by Peter in their name, and which was right; and on account of which he declared Peter bleſſed, and aſcribed his knowledge of him not to fleſh and blood, but to the revelation of his father. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, the Son of the living God; and ſo Beza found it in one ancient copy; but it may be it is only taken from Matt. xvi. 16. ſee the note there.

Ver. 30. And he charged them, &c.] His diſciples, after he had declared his approbation of Peter's confeſſion of faith, and ſignified he would build his church on that rock, and the gates of hell ſhould not prevail againſt it; and promiſed Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and that whatſoever was bound, or looſed by him on earth, ſhould be bound and looſed in heaven; which is omitted by Mark, but related by Matthew: after this he gave a ſtrict and ſevere charge, that they ſhould tell no man of him; that he was the Meſſiah, and the Son of God; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 20.

Ver. 31. And he began to teach them, &c.] For as yet he had ſaid nothing to them about his ſufferings and death, at leaſt in expreſs terms; but now they being firmly eſtabliſhed in the faith of him, as the Meſſiah, he thought it proper to inform them, that the ſon of man muſt ſuffer many things; meaning himſelf, as that he ſhould be betrayed, apprehended, and bound, ſhould be ſmitten, ſpit upon, buffeted and ſcourged; and which things muſt be done, and he ſuffer them, becauſe it was ſo determined by God, and foretold in the ſcriptures: and be rejected of the elders, and of the chief prieſts and Scribes; which compoſed the grand Sanhedrim of the nation, and are the builders that were propheſied of by whom he ſhould be rejected, Pſ. cxviii. 22. and be killed; in a violent manner; his life be taken away by force, without law, or juſtice: and after three days riſe again; not after three days were ended, and on the fourth day, but after the third day was come; that is, on the third day, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; and even the Phariſees themſelves thus underſtood Chriſt, Matt. xxvii. 63, 64. ſo the phraſe, after eight days, is uſed for the eighth day, being come, or that day ſennight; ſee Luke ix. 28. compared with Matt. xvii. 1. John xx. 26.

Ver. 32. And he ſpake that ſaying openly, &c.] Concerning his ſufferings, death, and reſurrection from the dead. He not only ſpoke it before them all, but in plain words, without a figure; ſo that it might be, and was clearly underſtood by them; and he ſpake it as the word will alſo bear, not only very freely, but likewiſe boldly, with an undaunted courage, with intrepidity of mind; being not in the leaſt diſcouraged, nor ſhewing any concern or fear about what was to befal him: and Peter took him, and began to rebuke him. Peter might more eſpecially be concerned at this free and open account Chriſt gave of his ſufferings and death, becauſe he had juſt now acquainted him, that he ſhould have the keys of the kingdom of heaven; by which he might underſtand ſome high poſt in the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah he expected; and immediately to hear of his ſufferings and death, damped his ſpirits, and deſtroyed his hopes, and threw him into ſuch difficulties he was not able to remove; and therefore he takes Chriſt aſide, and very warmly expoſtulates with him about what he had ſaid, and chides him for it, and intreats him that he would not think, or talk of ſuch-like things: the words of Peter are recorded by Matthew, ch. xvi. 22. ſee the note there.

Ver. 33. But when he had turned about, &c.] Upon Peter, and ſhewed quick reſentment at what he ſaid: and looked on his diſciples; he caſt his eye towards them at the ſame time, and expreſſed to them the ſame diſpleaſure in his countenance, they being of the ſame mind: he rebuked Peter, ſaying, get thee behind me ſatan, for thou ſavoureſt not the things that be of God; things which were according to the will of God, as the ſufferings of Chriſt were: they were according to the determinate counſel of his will; what he had determined in his purpoſes and council ſhould be; and what he had declared in the ſcriptures of truth, the revelation of his will, would be; and in which, according to them, he ſhould have a great concern himſelf, Iſa. liii. 6, 10. and whereby all his divine perfections would be glorified, and therefore may well be ſaid to be the things of God; and which ought to be ſavoured, minded, and attended to, as things of the greateſt moment and importance: and which, though the apoſtle had often read of in the books of the Old Teſtament, yet either had not a clear underſtanding of them, as being the will of God; or however, they were greatly out of his view at this time, his mind being poſſeſſed with notions of a temporal kingdom, and of worldly honour and grandeur: wherefore it follows, but the things that be of men; as were the notions of Chriſt's being a temporal prince, that would ſet up a worldly kingdom, and deliver the Jews from the Roman yoke, and make his ſubjects happy, with an affluence of all worldly things; and particularly his favourites, as the diſciples were: theſe were ſchemes of mens deviſing, and were ſuited to the corrupt nature, and carnal inclinations of men; and theſe things at preſent too much poſſeſſed Peter's mind: wherefore the Lord rebuked him in a very ſevere, tho' juſt manner; being touched in his moſt tender part, and diſſuaded from that which his heart was ſet upon, and he came into the world for; whoſe keen reſentment is ſeen by uſing a phraſe he never did but to the devil himſelf, Matt. iv. 10. ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 23.

Ver. 34. And when he had called the people unto him, &c.] Who, it ſeems, followed him out of Galilee, from Bethſaida, and theſe parts; for it was in the way from thence to Ceſarea Philippi, that Chriſt had this converſation with his diſciples; who walked together alone, the multitude following at ſome diſtance; and the private converſation being ended, Chriſt called, or beckned to the people, to come nearer to him: with his diſciples alſo; for what he was about to ſay, concerned them both: whoſoever will come after me; in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as this multitude did in a natural one, and which is the ſame as to be a diſciple of his: let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs, and follow me; ſignifying, that his followers muſt deny themſelves of worldly advantages, and ſuffer many things, as well as he, which he had been but juſt before acquainting his diſciples with; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 24.

Ver. 35. For whoſoever will ſave his life, &c.] Life is a valuable thing, and all that a man has he will give for it; ſelf-preſervation is a principle in nature; and it becomes every man to take all lawful methods to ſave his life, when it is threatened, or is in danger: but whoever is willing to ſave it, when it is called for to be laid down for Chriſt's ſake; and rather than lay it down, will deny Chriſt, and give up a profeſſion of him, and his Goſpel, ſhall loſe it: he ſhall not enjoy it with honour and comfort now, and much leſs with peace, pleaſure, and happineſs hereafter, but ſhall be under the power of the ſecond death: but whoſoever ſhall loſe his life for my ſake, and the Goſpel's; that is, ſhall willingly part with it when he is called to it, rather than deny Chriſt and his Goſpel, the ſame ſhall ſave it: tho' he will loſe it now, he will find it again in the reſurrection of life; for he will riſe to eternal life; when ſuch, who have apoſtatized from Chriſt, will riſe to ſhame, and everlaſting contempt: this man will have greatly the advantage over ſuch; they'll die the ſecond death, or be deſtroyed ſoul and body in hell; and he'll live for ever with Chriſt, in endleſs pleaſure and glory; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 25.

Ver. 36. For what ſhall it profit a man, &c.] In the long run, in the iſſue of things, who by denying Chriſt, and his Goſpel, may not only ſave his life for the preſent, but procure for himſelf great riches and wealth: if he ſhall gain the whole world; were that poſſible to be done, and which the ambitious, worldly man is deſirous of; yet ſuppoſing he had his deſire, of what avail would this be in the upſhot of things, ſhould the following be his caſe, as it will, and loſe his own ſoul? which is immortal and everlaſting, when the world, and the glory of it paſs away, and ſo is of more worth than the whole world. The world can only be enjoyed for a ſeaſon, and that with a great deal of fatigue and trouble; but the ſoul continues for ever; and if it is loſt and damned, its torment always abides, and the ſmoke of it aſcends for ever; its worm never dies, and its fire is never quenched; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 26.

Ver. 37. Or what ſhall a man give in exchange for his ſoul?] To deliver it out of its miſerable ſtate and condition; all the riches of the world, and the whole world itſelf, are not an equivalent to it, or a ſufficient ranſom for it; riches will not profit in the day of wrath, or deliver a ſoul from damnation and ruin: wherefore, if he had the whole world, he could not redeem his ſoul with it; and he has nothing elſe to give for it, and therefore it is paſt all recovery; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 26.

Ver. 38. Whoſoever therefore ſhall be aſhamed of me, &c.] As ſuffering, crucified, and put to death; things he had been ſpeaking of before: whoever thro' ſcandal of the croſs, and fear of men, will be aſhamed of Chriſt, and dare not profeſs faith in him, but ſhall conceal and keep it to themſelves: and of my words; the doctrines of the Goſpel, of remiſſion of ſins by his blood, of juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and of ſalvation alone by him, with every other truth relating to him, or connected with theſe: in this adulterous and ſinful generation; which was ſo both in a moral and ſpiritual ſenſe; for both corporal and ſpiritual adultery prevailed among them. And particularly the Scribes and Phariſees adulterated the word of God by their falſe gloſſes, in which they acted a very ſinful part; and ſuch was their authority, that few durſt contradict them, or profeſs'd doctrines which were the reverſe of them. Wherefore our Lord aſſures his diſciples and followers, that ſhould they be deterred by theſe men from a free and open profeſſion of him, and his Goſpel, by which it would appear that they were aſhamed of both, of him alſo ſhall the ſon of man be aſhamed; will not own ſuch an one for his; he'll take no notice of him; he'll not confeſs his name; but, as one that he is aſhamed of, he'll turn away from him; not ſo much as look at him, or ſay one favourable word to him, or for him; but bid him be gone from him, as a worker of iniquity: this he will do, when he cometh in the glory of his father; the ſame that the father has; being his ſon, of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him; and as mediator, endued with power and authority from him, to judge the world; and when he'll be accompanied with the holy angels; who will deſcend from heaven with him, and be employed on earth by him; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 27.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. AND he ſaid unto them, &c.] Both to his diſciples, and the multitude, verily I ſay unto you, there be ſome of them that ſtand here; that were then living, and upon the ſpot, which ſhall not taſte of death, or die, till they have ſeen the kingdom of God come with power. When Jeſus was declared both Lord and Chriſt, by the wonderful effuſion of the Holy Spirit; the Goſpel ſpread in the world both among Jews and Gentiles, in ſpite of all oppoſition, under the power and influence of the grace of God, to the converſion of thouſands of ſouls; and that branch of Chriſt's regal power exerted in the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 28. This verſe properly belongs to the foregoing chapter, to which it is placed in the Vulgate Latin verſion; and ſo it concludes one in Matthew, and ought not to begin a new chapter.

Ver. 2. And after ſix days, &c.] Six days after this diſcourſe with his diſciples, in their way to Cæſarea Philippi, and after they were come into thoſe parts: Jeſus taketh with him Peter, James, and John; favourite diſciples, and a ſufficient number, to be witneſſes of his transfiguration: and leadeth them up into an high mountain a-part by themſelves; where he and they were alone. This was not mount Tabor, as is generally ſaid, but either the mountain which Cæſarea was at the foot of, or it may be mount Lebanon; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 1. and he was transfigured before them; the above three diſciples; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 2.

Ver. 3. And his raiment became ſhining, &c.] With the rays of glory and brightneſs which darted from his body thro' his clothes, and made them as bright as the light of the ſun at noon-day: and exceeding white as ſnow; than which nothing is whiter; ſo as no fuller on earth can white them. The Syriac verſion renders it, as men cannot white on earth; and the Perſic thus, ſo as men could not behold him. Juſt as the Iſraelites could not ſtedfaſtly behold the face of Moſes, becauſe of the glory of his countenance, when he came down from the mount; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 2.

Ver. 4. And there appeared unto them Elias with Moſes, &c.] Or Moſes and Elias, as all the Oriental verſions read, as in Matt. xvii. 3. ſee the note there: and they were talking with Jeſus; concerning his deceaſe, and what he was to do and ſuffer at Jeruſalem, and of which he himſelf had lately talked with his diſciples; ſo that this might have been a confirmation of theſe things to them; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 3.

Ver. 5. And Peter anſwered and ſaid to Jeſus, &c.] He addreſſed himſelf to him, as being more familiar with him; as alſo becauſe he was the principal perſon: wherefore he ſays, maſter, it is good for us to be here: the company and converſation were exceeding agreeable to him and his fellow-diſciples; and the glory that Chriſt appeared in ſurpaſſed every thing they had ſeen before: and let us make three tabernacles; or, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, and we will make, &c. expreſſing not a petition, but a reſolution; to which the Perſic verſion premiſes, if thou wilt give us commandment; ſubmitting it to the will of Chriſt: one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 4.

Ver. 6. For he wiſt not what to ſay, &c.] He did not know what he ſhould ſay, or what was proper to be ſaid by him, at ſuch a time, in ſuch circumſtances, and before ſuch perſons; for they were ſore afraid. The Perſic verſion reads, he was; and ſo the Latin tranſlation of the Syriac, tho' that itſelf is, they were; for all three were filled with conſternation at what they ſaw and heard; ſo that they were ſcarcely themſelves, and knew not well what they ſaid or did.

Ver. 7. And there was a cloud that over-ſhadowed them, &c.] Jeſus, Moſes, and Elias, and alſo the diſciples; who, according to Luke, entered into it, and ſo were covered by it. And a voice came out of the cloud, ſaying, this is my beloved ſon, hear him. This was the voice of God the Father, bearing a teſtimony to the ſonſhip of Chriſt; and was directed, not to Moſes and Elias, but to the diſciples, enjoining them to hear and obey him, who was the end of the law and prophets; was the great prophet Moſes had ſpoken of, and was to be hearkened to, and whom all the prophets had teſtified of, and in whom they all centred; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 5.

Ver. 8. And ſuddenly when they had looked round about, &c.] Upon hearing the voice, to ſee if they could obſerve any other object, by whom it was pronounced, and whether the ſame they had ſeen continued: they ſaw no man any more; neither Moſes, nor Elias, not at that time, nor ever after; ſave Jeſus only with themſelves: the voice only regarded him, and being directed to them; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 8.

Ver. 9. And as they came down from the mountain, &c.] Chriſt, and his three diſciples, Peter, James, and John, whom he led up thither: he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what things they had ſeen; on the mount, as the transfiguration of himſelf, the perſons of Moſes and Elias, and the bright cloud from whence the voice came, which bore teſtimony of Chriſt's ſonſhip: he ordered to keep the whole of this a ſecret from every man, even from their fellow-diſciples, till the ſon of man were riſen from the dead; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 9.

Ver. 10. And they kept that ſaying with themſelves, &c.] They retained it in their own mind, as the Perſic verſion renders it; they kept it cloſe, as Luke ſays, among themſelves, and acquainted no man with it: and which refers either to the whole of Chriſt's charge, relating to the viſion on the mount; or elſe only to what he ſaid about his reſurrection from the dead; and which they took notice of particularly, and laid hold upon, as the word will bear to be rendered; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion does render it, and they obſerved his ſaying; what he laſt ſaid concerning the ſon of man's riſing from the dead; queſtioning with one another what the riſing from the dead ſhould mean: they enquired, diſputed, and reaſoned with one another, what ſhould be the meaning of ſuch an expreſſion: not that they were ignorant of the general reſurrection of the dead; for this was the hope of Iſrael, and the general ſenſe of the Jewiſh nation: but they did not know what he meant by his particular riſing from the dead; whether he meant it in a literal ſenſe, which ſuppoſed his death; and that tho' he had lately told them of, they knew not how to reconcile to the notions they had of a long and flouriſhing temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah; or whether he meant a reſurrection and glorious enlargement of his kingdom and intereſt, in ſuch manner as they expected.

Ver. 11. And they aſked him, ſaying, &c.] Being put in mind of it, by ſeeing Elias on the mount, or elſe by what Chriſt had ſaid concerning his reſurrection, or both: why ſay the Scribes, the Vulgate Latin adds, and Phariſees, that Elias muſt firſt come? before the Meſſiah comes, or before the ſetting up his kingdom in greater glory; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 10.

Ver. 12. And he anſwered, and told them, &c.] Allowing that their obſervation was right, and that this was the ſenſe of the Scribes, and that there was ſomething of truth in it, when rightly underſtood: Elias verily cometh firſt, and reſtoreth all things; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 11. and how it is written of the ſon of man, that he muſt ſuffer many things, and be ſet at nought. The ſenſe of Chriſt is, that John the Baptiſt, whom he means by Elias, comes firſt, and reſtores all things: and, among the reſt of the things he ſets right, this is one, and not one of the leaſt; namely, that he gives the true ſenſe of ſuch paſſages of the ſacred writings, which related to the contemptuous uſage, rejection, and ſufferings of the Meſſiah; as that in theſe he was the lamb of God typified in the ſacrifices of the law, who by his ſufferings and death takes away the ſin of the world; and therefore he exhorted and directed thoſe to whom he miniſtred, to look unto him, and believe in him; ſee John i. 29. Acts xix. 4.

Ver. 13. But I ſay unto you, that Elias is indeed come, &c.] Meaning John the Baptiſt, who in prophecy is deſigned by him. And they have done unto him whatſoever they liſted; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 12. which words ſhould be read in a parentheſis, as they are in the Vulgate Latin verſion; for what follows, as it is written of him, reſpects not what the Scribes and Phariſees, and the people of the Jews did to John at their pleaſure; deſpiſing his miniſtry and meſſage, rejecting the counſel of God delivered by him, and remaining impenitent and unbelieving, notwithſtanding his powerful and awakening miniſtry, with many other things, which are no where written of him; but the words regard his coming, and the propheſies concerning him, and particularly, that under the name of Elijah, in Mal. iv. 5. and which had had their accompliſhment.

Ver. 14. And when he came to his diſciples, &c.] The other nine, who were left at the bottom of the mountain, and were waiting for him: he ſaw a great multitude about them: there was a multitude that followed him from Bethſaida hither; and which, very likely, was greatly increaſed upon Chriſt's arrival in thoſe parts, and the people hearing of it; and the Scribes queſtioning with them; diſputing and contending with them about their maſter, his doctrines and miracles, and their miſſion and authority from him; inſulting them, on account of their inability to diſpoſſeſs a dumb ſpirit, hereafter related.

Ver. 15. And ſtraightway all the people when they beheld him, &c.] As ſoon as ever they ſaw him, to many of whom, eſpecially thoſe that followed him out of Galilee, he was perſonally known. Were greatly amazed; either that he ſhould come at that juncture, to aſſiſt and relieve his diſciples, when the Scribes were triumphing over them, as ſome think; or rather, as others, on account of that remaining luſtre and glory which was on his countenance, through his transfiguration, and not yet wholly gone off; like that which was on the face of Moſes, when he came down from mount Sinai: and running to him, ſaluted him; wiſhing him all peace and proſperity, expreſſing their great joy at his coming to them; which was very deſirable by them, and exceedingly pleaſing to them, and eſpecially at this time, as both their words and geſture ſhewed.

Ver. 16. And he aſked the Scribes, &c.] The Vulgate Latin renders it, he aſked them; and the Ethiopic verſion, he ſaid unto them; meaning either that he aſked the diſciples when he came to them, or elſe the people that ran to ſalute him; but the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, the Scribes; ſeeing them about his diſciples, in cloſe debate with them, and running hard upon them, he aſks them, what queſtion ye with them? what is it ye ſeek and require of them? what is your diſpute with them? what is your debate about? The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, what queſtion ye among you? among themſelves, and one another; and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy.

Ver. 17. And one of the multitude anſwered and ſaid, &c.] The Scribes made no reply, being afraid to engage with him, whom they had often found too hard for them; and the diſciples, if they were ſpoken to, were ſilent, thro' ſhame, becauſe they had not ſucceeded in the cure of the perſon brought to them, which gave their enemies an handle againſt them: wherefore the parent of the afflicted child made anſwer, ſaying; the occaſion of this debate between the Scribes, and thy diſciples, is as follows: Maſter, I have brought unto thee my ſon, which hath a dumb ſpirit; ſignifying, that he had heard much of him, as a very great man, and he believed him to be a maſter in Iſrael, who was famous both for doctrine and miracles, and therefore he brought his ſon to him, to be cured by him; but Chriſt not being in the way, he propoſed him to his diſciples, who attempted it without ſucceſs. The caſe of his ſon was, he had a dumb ſpirit. The Evangeliſt Matthew ſays he was a lunatick; and by his account of him it appears, that he had the epilepſy, or falling ſickneſs; and which, when upon him, took away the uſe of his ſpeech. And ſo the Jews aſcribe dumbneſs to the violence of a diſeaſe: thus they aſk[z]; "what is Cordiacus? (καρδιακος) one that "has a diſorder which affects the heart, and cauſes "a deliquium, (a fainting and ſwooning away) but "a man, שנעשה אלם, who is become dumb, thro' "the force of a diſeaſe;" which was the caſe of this child: tho' this diſeaſe did not ariſe from natural cauſes, but from a diabolical poſſeſſion; for he had a ſpirit, a foul ſpirit, a devil, as he is called: ſome further account is given of this unhappy caſe, in the next verſe.

[z] Jarchi in Miſn. Gittin, c. 7. §. 1.

Ver. 18. And whereſoever he taketh him, &c.] The ſpirit, or devil, whether it be near fire, or water, or whatſoever danger, or dangerous place: he teareth him; or throws him into it, or daſhes him againſt it; or inwardly racks, tortures, and convulſes him: and he fometh; at the mouth, like one that is mad: and gnaſheth with his teeth; through the exceſſive pain he is in: and pineth away; his fleſh is withered, dried up, and conſumed away. This was the ſad deplorable caſe this child was in, who was his father's only child, and therefore his health and life were very deſireable: now he further obſerves to Chriſt, ſaying, and I ſpake to thy diſciples that they ſhould caſt him out, and they could not. Chriſt being abſent, he intreated the diſciples, who had power againſt unclean ſpirits, to caſt them out; that they would make uſe of it, and diſpoſſeſs this dumb and evil ſpirit; and who did make trial to caſt him out, but were not able to effect it; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 16.

Ver. 19. He anſwereth them, &c.] The father of the child, and who is included in the reproof afterwards given, for his unbelief, and taking part with the Scribes againſt his diſciples; though the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, read, them; meaning not his diſciples, but the Scribes and Phariſees, with the father of the child: and ſaith, O faithleſs generation, how long ſhall I be with you? how long ſhall I ſuffer you? bring him unto me; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 17.

Ver. 20. And they brought him unto him, &c.] The father of the child, and thoſe that were with him, brought the child to Jeſus, into his preſence, before him: and when he ſaw him; that is, either when Jeſus ſaw the child, or the child ſaw Jeſus; or the evil ſpirit in him, and by him, which were all at once: ſtraightway the ſpirit tare him; threw him into a violent fit, ſhook him, and convulſed him in a dreadful manner; knowing his time was ſhort, and being filled with indignation and rage, that he ſhould be obliged, as he knew he muſt, to quit the child very ſpeedily; and was therefore reſolved to do all the miſchief, and put him to all the pain he could: and he fell on the ground; at the feet of Jeſus, not being able to ſtand, through the violent motions and convulſions he threw him into: and wallowed, foming; rolled about from ſide to ſide, foming at the mouth, and in the moſt exquiſite rack and torture.

Ver. 21. And he aſked his father, &c.] As he lay rolling about in this miſerable condition, that the length and ſtubborneſs of his diſorder might be known, and ſo the cure the more remarkable, and appear the more expreſſive of his divine power and goodneſs: how long is it ago ſince this came unto him? ſince this evil ſpirit entered into him, and theſe diſorders have attended him? and he ſaid of a child; or from his infancy; ſo that it was not for any actual ſin that he had committed, that this ſore affliction came upon him; and yet he could not be without ſin, ſince it was not agreeable to the juſtice, mercy, and goodneſs of God, to afflict, or ſuffer to be afflicted, one that is innocent; and therefore muſt be tainted with original ſin, which is the ſource and pring of all afflictions, calamities, and judgments.

Ver. 22. And oft times it hath caſt him into the re, &c.] When he has been near it; ſo that one art or other of his body has been ſcorched, or urnt, and his life in danger: and into the waters to deſtroy him: when he has been near any brook, or river, it has thrown him into it, in order to drown him, as into the fire, to burn him. The Ethiopic verſion before fire and water reads, into the deep; meaning either the ſea, or ſome deep pit, or off a precipice. All this is ſaid to aggravate the caſe, and ſhew the miſerable condition the child was in, from the frequency of the fits, and the danger he was expoſed to: but if thou canſt do any thing. This man's faith was very weak, and perhaps weaker than when he firſt came from home with his child. He had brought him to the diſciples of Chriſt, and they could not cure him; the evil ſpirit was as ſtrong, or ſtronger in him, than ever; he now lay in a violent fit, and in a moſt miſerable condition; ſo that he was almoſt ready to deſpair of healing: ſome ſmall hopes he had, that Chriſt might be able to relieve in this caſe; but he puts an if upon his power, and earneſtly intreats him, if he had any, he would put it forth: have compaſſion on us, and help us; his child that lay in ſuch a deplorable condition, rolling on the ground at his feet; and himſelf, who was greatly afflicted for him: he tries, in very moving language, both the power and pity of Chriſt; and begs that if he had either, he would exert them on this occaſion.

Ver. 23. Jeſus ſaid unto him, if thou canſt believe, &c.] As the man put an if on the power of Chriſt, Chriſt puts an if on the faith of the man; and tacitly ſuggeſts, that power was not wanting in himſelf, but faith in him; and ſhould that cure not be performed, it would not be owing to any inability in him, but to his own incredulity. The Arabic verſion renders it, what is this thy ſaying, if thou canſt do any thing? What doſt thou mean by it? Thou oughteſt not to doubt of my power; there's no reaſon for it, after ſo many miracles wrought; upbraiding the man with his unbelief; and the Ethiopic verſion renders it thus, becauſe thou ſayeſt, if thou canſt: wherefore to ſhow that power was not wanting in him, provided he had but faith, it follows, all things are poſſible to him that believeth; that is, to be done to him, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions ſupply: for all things are not poſſible to be done by the believer himſelf, but all things are poſſible to be done for him, by God, or Chriſt, or the Spirit of God: thus our Lord, as he elſewhere does, aſcribes that to faith, which is done by a divine power.

Ver. 24. And ſtraightway the father of the child cried out, &c.] As ſoon as ever he found it was put upon his faith, and that the iſſue of things would be according to that, he expreſſed himſelf with much vehemency, being in great diſtreſs; partly with indignation at his unbelief, and partly thro' fear of miſſing a cure, by reaſon of it: and ſaid with tears; repenting of his unbelief, and grieved at the preſent weakneſs of his faith; which he very ingenuouſly confeſſes, ſaying, Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief; not forward, but out of the way: he found in himſelf ſome ſmall degree of faith in the power of Chriſt, but it was mixed with much unbelief, through the greatneſs of the child's diſorder; and therefore deſires it might be removed from him, and he might be helped againſt it: he ſaw it was not in his own power to believe; nor had he ſtrength of himſelf to oppoſe his unbelief; but that both faith muſt be given him, and power againſt unbelief. The Syriac verſion renders it, help, לחסירוה הימנותי, the defect of my faith: fill up that which is lacking in it, 'tis very deficient, Lord, increaſe it; and the Arabic and Ethiopic tranſlate thus, help the weakneſs of my faith. He found his faith very weak, he deſires it might be ſtrengthened, that he might be ſtrong in faith, and give glory to God; and in this way unbelief is helped, or men helped againſt it: every believer, more or leſs, at one time or another, finds himſelf in this man's caſe; and alſo that it is neceſſary to make uſe of the ſame petition; for faith is but imperfect in this life, and often very weak and defective in its exerciſe.

Ver. 25. When Jeſus ſaw that the people came running together, &c.] לותה, to him, as the Syriac verſion adds, and ſo the Perſic; upon hearing the vehement cry of the father of the child, and the earneſt ſollicitations he made, expecting that ſomething would be done: he rebuked the foul ſpirit; that brought this diſorder on the child, had continued it ſo long, and with ſo much violence. Matthew calls this foul ſpirit, the devil, ch. xvii. 18. ſee the note there: ſaying unto him, thou dumb and deaf ſpirit; ſo calling him, not becauſe the ſpirit was dumb and deaf, but becauſe he had been the cauſe of dumbneſs and deafneſs in the child: he had at times taken away both his ſpeech and hearing: I charge thee, come out of him, and enter no more into him. Chriſt, in an authoritative way, ordered the unclean ſpirit to quit his poſſeſſion, and never attempt to regain it more. This he ſaid, partly with regard to the devil, who would be deſirous of re-poſſeſſion; and partly with reſpect to the diſeaſe, which had its intervals, and returned at certain times; and alſo with reſpect to the father of the child, to confirm his faith in the cure, and that he might be in no pain about the return of the diſorder.

Ver. 26. And the ſpirit cried, and rent him ſore, &c.] We rightly ſupply, the ſpirit, as do the Syriac and Perſic verſions, the dæmon; for it was he, and not the child, that cried, and made an hideous noiſe, at his ejection; being filled with wrath and rage, that he muſt be obliged to quit the poſſeſſion he had ſo long held; and therefore, in ſpite and malice, before it left him, ſhook and tore him, and threw him into dreadful convulſions: and came out of him; though ſore againſt his will, being obliged to it, by the ſuperior power of Chriſt: and he was as one dead; that is, the child, when the devil had left him, lay as ſtill as if he had no breath, nor life in him: inſomuch that many ſaid, he is dead; really dead; that there was no life in him, nor any hopes of his coming to himſelf again.

Ver. 27. But Jeſus took him by the hand, &c.] Took hold of the hand of the child, as the Perſic verſion renders it; and lifted him up; from the ground, on which he was caſt by the ſpirit; and he aroſe: this is omitted in the Syriac and Arabic verſions, though in one edition of the latter, according to De Dieu, it is rendered, and he ſtood; to which is added, and went into his own houſe. The Perſic verſion, inſtead of this clauſe reads, and the child was healed; and all the expreſſions ſhew, that he was perfectly well.

Ver. 28. And when he was come into the houſe, &c.] Perhaps into the man's houſe whoſe child he had healed, or into ſome other in theſe parts, for the ſake both of retirement and refreſhment: his diſciples aſked him privately, why could not we caſt him out? The nine diſciples, who were particularly concerned in this matter, fearing they had loſt the power of caſting out devils, conferred upon them, enquired of Jeſus, when he was alone, why they could not caſt the dæmon out of the child, when they had ejected unclean ſpirits out of many others; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 19.

Ver. 29. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Matthew, beſides the following reaſon, aſſigns another, as given by our Lord, why they could not caſt out the foul ſpirit, which was their unbelief; of which they were guilty in ſome ſort, as well as the Jews, and the father of the child; but Mark omits it, and only relates this as the reaſon; this kind can come forth by nothing, but by prayer and faſting; which they had not obſerved; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 21.

Ver. 30. And they departed thence, &c.] From the coaſts of Cæſarea Philippi, from that part of the country where the mountain was, on which Chriſt was transfigured, and at the foot of which the above miracle was wrought. This is to be underſtood of Chriſt and his twelve diſciples, though the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read in the ſingular number, he went out; not alone, but with his diſciples, as the following account ſhows: and paſſed through Galilee; in order to go to the coaſts of Judæa, and ſo to Jeruſalem, where he was ſhortly to ſuffer: and therefore that his journey might not be retarded, and he be hindered by the converſation of the people in Galilee, and their importunity to ſtay with them, and teach, and work miracles among them, he paſſed through the country, in as private a manner as could be: and he would not that any man ſhould know it; partly for the reaſon juſt mentioned, and partly that he might have the opportunity of converſing alone with his diſciples, and of reminding, and informing them, of ſome important things, which 'twas neceſſary they ſhould be acquainted with, and obſerve.

Ver. 31. For he taught his diſciples, and ſaid unto them, &c.] What he had ſome little time before ſuggeſted to them; ſee ch. viii. 31. The Son of man is delivered into the hands of men: in one of Beza's copies it is read, ſinful men, as in Luke xxiv. 7. and ſo the Perſic verſion reads here, and adds rebellious. This is repreſented as if it was already done, becauſe it was determined and agreed upon, that it ſhould be; and becauſe, in a very little time, the Son of man would be delivered into the hands of wicked men, according to the will of God, with his own conſent, by the means of Judas, the Jews, and Pilate: and they ſhall kill him; put him to death, in a violent manner, contrary to all law and juſtice: and after that he is killed; this is omitted in the Arabic verſion, and in the Perſic verſion in the room of it 'tis read, and ſhall put him into a ſepulchre; that being what followed next upon his death: and he ſhall riſe the third day. This Chriſt always takes care to mention, for the comfort of his diſciples, when he tells them of his death.

Ver. 32. But they underſtood not that ſaying, &c.] Meaning either the whole of what he had ſaid, concerning his delivery, death, and reſurrection: and which then muſt be interpreted with ſome limitation; for they muſt underſtand the ſenſe of hi words, which were clear and expreſs; eſpeciall concerning his death, which affected their mind with trouble and grief; for Matthew ſays, they wer exceeding ſorry upon it, ch. xvii. 23. ſee the not there; but they could not underſtand how it coul be, and upon what account, and for what end, holy and good, and innocent a man as he wa could be put to death; nor how this could conſi with his character, as the Son of God, the Meſſia and king of Iſrael; and with the notions they h of the Meſſiah's abiding for ever, and ſetting up temporal kingdom on earth: or this may rega only his reſurrection from the dead; which wheth it was to be taken in a literal or myſtical ſenſe, th could not tell: and were afraid to aſk him; l

they ſhould be upbraided with their ignorance and ſtupidity, as they had been lately rebuked by him for their unbelief, and the neglect of their duty; and as Peter had been ſeverely reprimanded for expoſtulating with him about the ſelf-ſame things, delivered by him to them, not long before.

Ver. 33. And he came to Capernaum, &c.] Where he met with the collectors of the tribute-money, and paid it to them, as related by Matthew, ch. xvii. 24. though Mark takes no notice of it. The Vulgate Latin and the Syriac verſions, read in the plural number, they came; Chriſt and his twelve apoſtles; and which is the ſenſe of the words, read in the ſingular number; for Chriſt came not alone, but with his diſciples: and being in the houſe; of Simon and Andrew, very likely where he uſed to be when at Capernaum: he aſked them, what was it that ye diſputed among yourſelves by the way? Whilſt in their journey from Cæſarea Philippi, to Galilee; or as they travelled through the parts of Galilee to Capernaum. This queſtion Chriſt put, not as ignorant of what had paſſed among them, but in order to have the caſe laid before him; that he might reprove them for their pride and ambition, and have an opportunity of teaching them humility, and of informing them of the nature of his kingdom, and ſubjects; concerning which, they had entertained very wrong notions. The phraſe among yourſelves, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, but ſtands in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic.

Ver. 34. But they held their peace, &c.] Fearing a reprimand, for their vanity and affectation of worldly grandeur: for by the way they had diſputed among themſelves, who ſhould be the greateſt; that is, who ſhould be advanced to the higheſt poſt, and have the greateſt place of authority, honour, and dignity, in the temporal kingdom of the Meſſiah, they expected would be in a little time ſet up: for notwithſtanding what Chriſt had ſaid to them, concerning his being given up to the power of men, and concerning his death and reſurrection, they ſtill retained their former principle, to which they knew not how to reconcile his dying; and therefore choſe rather to leave his meaning in ſuſpenſe, and remain ignorant about it, than quit ſo darling a notion: and doubtleſs this diſpute was occaſioned by what Chriſt had ſaid to them; who afterwards, getting by themſelves, talked about it, which led on to a warm conteſt, about precedence in his kingdom.

Ver. 35. And he ſat down, &c.] As their maſter, as one having authority; and in order to examine into this matter, and paſs judgment upon it: and called the twelve; all the diſciples, who though they might not be all engaged in this diſpute, nor equally criminal, yet were all poſſeſſed of the ſame notion; and therefore Chriſt calls them all unto him, what he had to ſay, being pertinent unto them all: and ſaith unto them, if any man deſire to be firſt; to have the pre-eminence, and be in the chief place in the kingdom of the Meſſiah, the ſame ſhall be laſt of all, and ſervant of all: his pride and vanity ſhall be checked; his ambitious views ſhall be fruſtrated; inſtead of being firſt, he ſhall be laſt; and inſtead of having ſuperior reverence and reſpect, he ſhall be debaſed, and treated with neglect and contempt; and inſtead of being the maſter over others, ſhall be the ſervant of all. Some copies read, let him be; and ſo the Perſic verſion, let him be laſt, and miniſter to every one; and the Ethiopic thus, let him ſubject himſelf to all, and be ſervant to all; for the only way to preferment in Chriſt's kingdom, or in the Goſpel diſpenſation, is humility and meekneſs, and performing the loweſt ſervices to all, with diligence and chearfulneſs.

Ver. 36. And he took a child, &c.] Which was in the houſe, and which he called unto him, and ſet by him, as the other Evangeliſts obſerve: and ſet him in the midſt of them; his diſciples, that all might ſee and learn from this inſtance: and when he had taken him in his arms; and embraced him, to ſhow his great regard to humility, and humble perſons: he ſaid unto them; the following words.

Ver. 37. Whoſoever ſhall receive one of ſuch children, &c.] That is, any believer, who is like to ſuch a child, for humility, meekneſs, and lowlineſs of mind; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, איך הנא טליא, one like to this child; and ſo the Arabic and Perſic verſions; for it can't be thought that Chriſt's meaning is, that whoever takes up any little child, embraces, and takes notice of it, as he did, does what is after related; but that whoever ſhews reſpect, and peforms the leaſt office of love and kindneſs to the meaneſt believer, comparable to a little child, for the above excellent qualities, and he does this, ſays Chriſt, in my name; on account that he belongs to Chriſt, is one of his, bears his image, partakes of his grace, is loved by him, and ſhall be glorified with him: ſuch is Chriſt's great regard to his humble followers, that he takes it all one as if done to himſelf: he receiveth me; this humble believer, being a member of his, and like unto him, and reſpected by him; and whoſoever ſhall receive me; Chriſt, in any of his members: receiveth not me; that is, not him only; for he does receive him, otherwiſe there would be a contradiction in the words; but his meaning is, that he does not hereby receive him, by receiving one of his, nor him ſo much, as his Father: but him that ſent me; for as ſhowing reſpect to one of Chriſt's members, is ſhowing reſpect to him; ſo ſhowing reſpect to Chriſt, is ſhowing reſpect to his Father, from whence he came, by whom he was ſent, in whoſe name he acted, and whoſe work and ſervice he was concerned in.

Ver. 38. And John anſwered him, ſaying, &c.] Taking notice of what Chriſt juſt now ſaid, and obſerving how well pleaſing it was to him, to receive in a meek and humble manner, the leaſt believer in his name; and reflecting upon an action, in which he and ſome of his fellow-diſciples were concerned, and which he perceived was not ſo agreeable to this rule of Chriſt, thought proper to relate it to him; that he might have his ſenſe of it, and give him an opportunity of enlarging on a ſubject, ſo ſuitable to the temper and diſpoſition of this beloved diſciple. Maſter, we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name: very likely he called him Rabbi, as the Syriac verſion renders it, or Rabboni, as in John xx. 16. a title commonly given to Chriſt, both by his diſciples and others: the caſe related, very probably happened, when the diſciples being ſent forth by Chriſt to preach the Goſpel, and caſt out devils, took a tour through Judæa and Galilee, where they ſaw this man. John was not alone; there were others with him, at leaſt another, who was an eye-witneſs with him; for the apoſtles were ſent out, by two and two: who this man was, is not ſaid, his name is not mentioned, perhaps was unknown to the apoſtles; though Beza ſays, in one ancient exemplar 'tis read, we knew one. This perſon not only attempted to caſt out devils, but really did; and that more than one; but in which of Chriſt's names he did it, is not expreſſed: if in the name of the Meſſiah, Dr. Lightfoot's conjecture may be right, that he was one of John's diſciples; who had been baptized in the name of the Meſſiah, that was juſt expected to come; to whom, as to others of his diſciples, was given a power of caſting out devils, to make the way of the Meſſiah more plain; wherefore the reaſon why he did not caſt out devils in the name of Jeſus, but in the name of the Meſſiah, and did not follow him, nor his diſciples, was not out of contempt, but ignorance, not knowing that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Meſſiah: or if he caſt out devils in the name of Jeſus, which ſeems moſt likely, he might be, as others think, a diſciple of John's, who really did believe in Jeſus, though he did not aſſociate with his diſciples, but continued with the diſciples of John: wherefore it is ſaid, and he followeth not us; was neither one of the twelve apoſtles; nor one of the ſeventy diſciples; nor even one of the lower claſs, of the profeſſed diſciples of Jeſus. This clauſe is omitted in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: and we forbad him; going on in this way, caſting out any more devils: becauſe he followeth not us; was not one of their company, nor any of Chriſt's diſciples; who had received no authority and commiſſion from Chriſt, to do what he did: wherefore they feared, that by ſuch an irregular way of proceeding, the dignity of Chriſt would be leſſened, and ſome diſhonour and reproach reflected on him: and beſides the honour of Chriſt, they might conſult their own; and their caſe be too much like that of Joſhua, when Eldad and Medad propheſied in the camp. This clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin, but ſtands in all the Eaſtern verſions.

Ver. 39. But Jeſus ſaid, forbid him not, &c.] Neither him, nor any other they ſhould hereafter meet with, who might be caſting out devils in his name, giving this as a reaſon for it; for there is no man which ſhall do a miracle in my name; or miracles, as the Syriac verſion, as to caſt out devils, or heal any ſickneſs and diſeaſe, that can lightly ſpeak evil of me: ſuch a man can never reproach and blaſpheme that name, which he makes uſe of in doing, and by which he does wonderful works; no man can call Jeſus accurſed, who caſts out devils in his name; ſee 1 Cor. xii. 3. if he has ſpoken evil of him before, he can't do it again, as the Perſic verſion renders it, with any face; or he can't do it quickly, immediately, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions interpret it: there muſt be ſome time before ſuch an one apoſtatizes, if he ever does; he can't very eaſily and readily go into a way of blaſpheming that name, by which he does his mighty works; his conſcience will not admit of it; and beſides, it would be contrary to his intereſt; it muſt ſink his credit, and he loſe the eſteem and applauſe of men, he had gained by his miracles; for to diſhonour that name, would be to reproach himſelf.

Ver. 40. For he that is not againſt us, is on our part.] Many copies read, he that is not againſt you, is for you; as this man; he was not againſt either Chriſt, or his diſciples; he was doing the ſame work, promoting the ſame intereſt, and deſtroying the kingdom of ſatan: and therefore, though he did not follow them, and had not his commiſſion immediately from Chriſt; yet, inaſmuch as he was oppoſing the ſame common enemy, and did nothing againſt them, he ought to be reckoned as one for them, and on their ſide. 'Tis a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that all that are not againſt a man, and take not the part of his enemy, are to be accounted his friends.

Ver. 41. For whoſoever ſhall give you a cup of water to drink, &c.] Not only one that does a miracle in the name of Chriſt, but he that ſhews the leaſt reſpect, or does the leaſt kindneſs to any one of his; ſee the note on Matt. x. 42. is to be reckoned a friend, and is ſo accounted by Chriſt; and will be ſooner or later taken notice of by him, eſpecially, if what he does, be it ever ſo little, is done on his account: in my name, becauſe ye belong to Chriſt; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, on account that ye are Chriſt's; are his diſciples, are called by his name, are partakers of his grace, bear his image and likeneſs, are loved by him, intereſted in him, given to him, redeemed by him, called by his grace, and ſhall be with him: verily, I ſay unto you, he ſhall not loſe his reward; ſee the note on Matt. x. 42.

Ver. 42. And whoſoever ſhall offend one of theſe little ones that believe in me, &c.] Whoſoever ſhall do the leaſt injury to the meaneſt perſon that believes in Chriſt, who are mean both in their own eyes, and the eyes of others; for Chriſt is not ſpeaking of little children in age, who are neither capable of believing in Chriſt, nor are they ready to take offence; but of ſuch as belong to him; his diſciples and followers, of whom he is ſpeaking in the preceding verſe: it is better for him that a mill-ſtone were hanged about his neck, and he were caſt into the ſea; and drowned there: the alluſion is to the drowning of malefactors, by tying a ſtone, or any heavy thing about their necks, and caſting them into the ſea. Caſaubon, and others, have ſhewn out of Heathen writers, that this has been a practice of ſome nations, particularly the Grecians: Jerom ſays, Chriſt ſpeaks according to the cuſtom of the country; this being a puniſhment of the greateſt crimes among the Jews; but I have no where met with it in their writings: Chriſt's ſenſe is, that ſuch who give offence to any of his miniſters or people, how mean ſoever they may appear, ſhall undergo the ſevereſt puniſhment; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 6.

Ver. 43. And if thy hand offend thee, cut it off, &c.] I have obſerved on Matt. v. 30. that by the Jewiſh canons, cutting off of the hand was ordered in ſome caſes there mentioned; which, though literally enjoined, muſt not be underſtood, as though the Jewiſh Sanhedrim had a power of inflicting ſuch a puniſhment, on perſons found guilty of the things inſtanced in; or that it was required they ſhould do this to themſelves; but ſuch rules were delivered in ſuch language, to ſhew the heinouſneſs of the crimes committed, to expreſs an abhorrence of them [g], and to deter perſons from them; and to ſhew, as the Gloſs [h] on one place obſerves, that it is better, that the hand be cut off; or it ſhould be more eligible to the perſon himſelf, to have it cut off, than to be guilty of ſuch evil: and in like manner, Chriſt there and here, directs to what is moſt proper and fit to be done; even to part with what is ever ſo near and dear, rather than be drawn into evil by it: and his ſenſe in this place is, that the deareſt friends and acquaintance, or be they what they will, though ever ſo near and dear, like a right hand, the inſtrument of action, that obſtruct the ſpiritual welfare of men, are to be renounced and parted with, and treated as real enemies, and of the moſt pernicious conſequence; ſee the note on Matt. v. 29, 30. It is better for thee to enter into life maimed: not that there will be any ſuch thing, as upon the reſurrection, going into heaven without a limb; for the words are to be underſtood, not literally, but figuratively; and the ſenſe is, it is better to part with every thing here, that is detrimental to a man's doing, or enjoying, what is ſpiritually good, and enter into eternal life, than having two hands, to go into hell; than by enjoying ſuch perſons and things, agreeable to the fleſh, to the ruin of the ſoul, and be caſt into hell; into the fire that never ſhall be quenched. This is a periphraſis of hell, and is an alluſion to the valley of Hinnom, from whence hell has its name, here and elſewhere; where a conſtant fire was kept, for the burning of polluted things: one of the Jewiſh writers ſays [i], that it "was a "place in the land near to Jeruſalem, and was a "place contemptible; where they caſt things de"filed, and carkaſſes; and there was there, "אש תמיד, a continual fire, to burn polluted "things and bones; and therefore the condemna"tion of the wicked, in a parabolical way, is called "Gehinnom." And ſays another of them [k], "Ge"hinnom is a place known, near to Jeruſalem, and "a valley, שאין האש נכבית, whoſe fire is never "quenched; and in which they burn bones of de"filement, and carkaſſes, and other polluted "things." This whole clauſe is left out, in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and the phraſe, that never ſhall be quenched, is not in the Arabic verſion.

[h] In T. Bab. Sabbat, fol. 108. 2.

Ver. 44. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] The paſſage referred to, is in Iſa. lxvi. 24. and as there, the words are ſpoken of ſuch, as tranſgreſſed againſt the Lord; ſo here, of ſuch as offended any of Chriſt's little ones, or were offended by an hand, a foot, or eye, and retained them: by their worm is meant, their conſcience; for as a worm that is continually gnawing upon the entrails of a man, gives him exquiſite pain; ſo the conſciences of ſinners, will be continually flying in their faces, bringing their ſins to remembrance, accuſing them of them, upbraiding them with them, aggravating them, tormenting them for them, filling them with dreadful anguiſh and miſery, with twinging remorſes, and ſevere reflections, and which will never have an end. This will be always the caſe; conſcience will be ever diſtreſſing, racking, and torturing them; it will never ceaſe, nor ceaſe doing this office: and ſo the Chaldee paraphraſe of Iſ. lxvi. 24. renders this phraſe, נשמתהון לא ימותון, their ſouls ſhall not die; but ſhall ever continue, in the dreadful torments and unſpeakable horrors, of a corroding conſcience: and by the fire may be meant, the fire of divine wrath let into their ſouls, which will never be extinguiſhed; and ſo Jarchi interprets the phraſe in Iſaiah, their fire, בגיהנם, in hell. It is a tradition of the Jews [l], that the light, or fire, which God created on the ſecond day, there is no quenching it for ever; as it is ſaid, for their worm ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, Iſa. lxvi. 24. the paſſage which is here referred to; the reaſon they give is, becauſe it is the fire of hell: the ſenſe of which is ſometimes given by the Jewiſh doctors thus [m]; their worm ſhall not die from the body, and the fire ſhall not be quenched from the ſoul.

Ver. 45. And if thy foot offend thee, cut it off, &c.] Such who are that to men, as the foot is to the body, the ſupport of them, through whom they have their maintenance and ſubſiſtence; and yet theſe, if they are a means of cauſing them to ſtumble and fall, or of leading out of the ways of Chriſt, and off from him, their company is to be ſhunned and abſtained from; it is better for thee to enter halt into life. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, eternal life, which is undoubtedly intended by life; and ſo reads the Cambridge copy of Beza's; and the meaning is, that it is better to go alone without ſuch company into heaven, than having two feet to be caſt into hell, into the fire that never ſhall be quenched; ſee the note on the preceding verſe.

Ver. 46. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] The Perſic verſion renders it, becauſe from thence there can be no deliverance; which is rather an interpretation of theſe figurative expreſſions, and is a good one; ſince they deſign the eternity of hell torments, as well as point at the anguiſh and miſery of them.

Ver. 47. And if thine eye offend thee, pluck it out, &c.] Than which, nothing is dearer to man, it being very tender, and exceeding uſeful: this metaphor the Lord ſometimes makes uſe of, to ſhew how dear his people are unto him, and what a tender concern he has for them, Deut. xxxii. 10. Pſal. xvii. 8. Zech. ii. 8. And here it may deſign ſuch, as are moſt beloved by men, and are their moſt intimate acquaintance, and boſom friends; and yet theſe are to be parted with, when they prove ſnares and ſtumbling-blocks, or give offence, by endeavouring to draw into ſin, and from Chriſt: it is better for thee to enter into the kingdom of God with one eye; that kingdom, which God has prepared for his people, from the foundation of the world; and of his rich grace, gives unto them, and in which they will enjoy him to all eternity: than having two eyes, to be caſt into hell-fire. In the two inſtances before it is added, that never ſhall be quenched.

Ver. 48. Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched.] This is repeated again, not only to aſſure the truth of the thing, but to raiſe the attention of the mind unto it, and to fix an awful impreſſion upon it: the Perſic verſion renders it, from whence thou ſhalt never find redemption: there's no redemption from hell, as Origen and others have thought.

Ver. 49. For every one ſhall be ſalted with fire, &c.] That is, every one of thoſe that tranſgreſs the law of God, offend any that believe in Chriſt, retain their ſins, and ſinful companions; every one of them that are caſt into hell, where the worm of conſcience is always gnawing, and the fire of divine wrath is always burning, with that fire every one of them ſhall be ſalted: that fire ſhall be to them, what ſalt is to fleſh; as that keeps fleſh from putrefaction and corruption, ſo the fire of hell, as it will burn, torture, and diſtreſs rebellious ſinners, it will preſerve them in their beings; they ſhall not be conſumed by it, but continued in it: ſo that theſe words are a reaſon of the former, ſhewing and proving, that the ſoul in torment ſhall never die, or loſe any of its powers and faculties; and particularly, not its gnawing, torturing conſcience: and that the fire of hell is inextinguiſhable; for though ſinners will be inexpreſſibly tormented in it, they'll not be conſumed by it; but the ſmoke of their torments ſhall aſcend for ever and ever: and that they will be ſo far from being annihilated by the fire of hell, that they ſhall be preſerved in their beings in it, as fleſh is preſerved by ſalt: and every ſacrifice ſhall be ſalted with ſalt; referring to Lev. ii. 13. With all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer ſalt; not only the meat-offerings, but the burnt-offerings, and all others, were to be offered with ſalt [n]; of which, the Jews ſay the following things [o]: "It is an affirmative

[o] Maimon. Hilch. Iſſure Mizbeach, c. 5. §. 11, 12, 13.

[p] Vid. ib. in Miſn. Menachot, c. 3. §. 2.

“precept to ſalt all the ſacrifices, before they go up to the altar, as it is ſaid, Lev. ii. 13. With all thine offerings thou ſhalt offer ſalt; and there is nothing brought to the altar without ſalt, except the wine of drink-offerings, and blood, and wood; and this thing is a tradition, and there is no ſcripture to ſupport it; and the commandment is to ſalt the fleſh very well, as one ſalts fleſh for roaſting, who turns the part, and ſalts it; tho' if he ſalts the whole, with even one grain of ſalt, it is right: he that offers without any ſalt at all, is to be beaten; as it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not ſuffer the ſalt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking: and tho' he is to be beaten, the offering is right, and acceptable, except the meat-offering.——The ſalt, with which they ſalt all the ſacrifices, is from the congregation, as the wood; and a private perſon does not bring ſalt, or wood, for his offering, from his own houſe: and in three places [p] they put on ſalt, in the chamber of ſalt, and upon the aſcent of the altar, and upon the top of the altar: in the chamber of ſalt they ſalt the ſkins of the holy things; and upon the aſcent of the altar they ſalt the parts (of the ſacrifice); and upon the top of the altar they ſalt the handful, and the frankincenſe, and the meat-offerings, that are burnt, and the burnt-offerings of fowls.” Something of this kind alſo obtained among the Heathens, who thought their ſacrifices were not rightly offered, nor acceptable to God, unleſs ſalt was uſed with them [q]. Now our Lord in this has either reſpect to the ſame perſons, as before; and ſignifies hereby, that the wicked in hell ſhall be victims to divine juſtice, and ſacrifices to his wrath and vengeance; and that as the ſacrifices under the law were ſalted with ſalt, theſe ſhall be ſalted with the fire of hell, and ſhall never be utterly deſtroyed; but ſhall ever remain the objects of God's ſore diſpleaſure, and fiery indignation: or he may have reſpect to a different ſort of perſons, even to the ſaints and people of God, who are an holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice to him; and in the prophecy referred to in the context, Iſ. lxvi. 20. they are ſaid to be brought for an offering to the Lord——as the children of Iſrael bring an offering in a clean veſſel into the houſe of the Lord: and ſo as the ſacrifices of the Jews were ſalted with ſalt, and became acceptable to God; ſuch who are ſeaſoned with the grace of God, are preſerved from the corruptions of the world, are acceptable in the ſight of God, and are kept ſafe to his kingdom and glory.

Ver. 50. Salt is good, &c.] To make meat ſavoury, and keep fleſh from corrupting; and ſo is the grace of God, to ſeaſon mens hearts, make their diſcourſe ſavoury, and preſerve them from the corruption of ſin: and ſo men made partakers of the grace of God; they are good and uſeful to others, both by their words and actions, and eſpecially miniſters of the Goſpel, who are the ſalt of the earth, Matt. v. 13. ſee the note there; and here Chriſt may chiefly intend his apoſtles: but if the ſalt hath loſt its ſaltneſs, wherewith will ye ſeaſon it? there's no recovering it, it becomes good for nothing; ſee the note on Matt. v. 13. have ſalt in yourſelves; the doctrine of grace, and word of Chriſt, prudence in talk and converſation, and holineſs of heart and life, ſo as to behave wiſely towards them that are without: and have peace one with another; which the God of peace calls unto, the Goſpel of peace requires, and the grace of God teaches. Salt is an emblem of firm union, concord, and agreement; hence the covenant of peace is called a covenant of ſalt, Numb. xviii. 19. compared with ch. xxv. 12. This exhortation very appoſitely follows upon the making mention of ſalt, in different ſenſes; eſpecially, this exhortation was the more neceſſary to the diſciples at this time, ſince they had been very lately warmly diſputing the point among themſelves, who ſhould be greateſt in the kingdom of the Meſſiah; and which had occaſioned this diſcourſe of Chriſt's.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. AND he aroſe from thence, &c.] From Galilee, and particularly from Capernaum: and cometh into the coaſts of Judæa; into thoſe places, which bordered on that part of the land of Iſrael, called Judæa, as diſtinct from Galilee: by, or rather to the farther ſide of Jordan; which he croſſed at the bridge of Chammath: the particular place he came to was Bethabara; ſee John x. 40. and i. 28. where John formerly preached, and baptized: and the people reſorted unto him again; great multitudes followed him out of Galilee, and more doubtleſs flocked to him from the adjacent parts, when they heard of his coming again to them. And as he was wont, he taught them again: it had been his cuſtom before, and ſo it was whereever he went, to preach the word of God, and teach men what was profitable to them, and uſeful for the good of their immortal ſouls; and ſo he did now, and here; and not only ſo, but healed many of them of their bodily diſorders, as Matthew relates, ch. xix. 2.

Ver. 2. And the Phariſees came unto him, &c.] As they every where did; not to be inſtructed by him, but to enſnare him: and aſked him, is it lawful for a man to put away his wife? that is, as Matthew adds, for every cauſe, ch. xix. 3. ſee the note there: for a divorce might be lawfully made for a cauſe, or reaſon; namely, adultery, but not for any, or every cauſe; which is the ſenſe of this queſtion of the Phariſees; and which they put, not for information, but tempting him; trying to entangle him by oppoſing the authority of Moſes, ſhould he deny the lawfulneſs of divorces, or by objecting his former doctrine, Matt. v. 32. and ſo expoſe him as an inconſiſtent preacher, ſhould he allow them to be lawful for every reaſon. This clauſe is placed in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions before the queſtion.

Ver. 3. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Very prudently and wiſely, what did Moſes command you? according to Matthew, he put another queſtion to them; ſee ch. xix. 4. no doubt but both were put, and this after they had urged the authority and law of Moſes; and therefore he very pertinently aſks them, what Moſes had ſaid about divorces, what law he had left; and puts them upon producing and repeating it, that the ſenſe of it might be examined, and it be conſidered, upon what account it was given.

Ver. 4. And they ſaid, &c.] By way of reply, Moſes ſuffered to write a bill of divorcement, and to put her away. Moſes did not command them to divorc divorce their wives, only ſuffered them to do ſo; and gave orders that if they could not bear that they ſhould live with them, but would divorce them, that they ſhould give them a bill, which ſhould certify, they were ſo divorced, and then ſend them out of their houſes, free to marry other men; this law, or permiſſion, is in Deut. xxiv. 1. of the form of a bill of divorcement, ſee the note on Matt. v. 31.

Ver. 5. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] With reſpect to this command, or ſufferance of Moſes, which they urged: for the hardneſs of your heart he wrote you this precept; it was not becauſe it was right in its own nature, or according to the original will of God; but, becauſe the Jews were ſuch cruel, and hard-hearted men, that if this had not been permitted, ſome of them, that had wives not ſo agreeable to them, would have uſed them in a very inhuman manner, if not murdered them; and therefore to prevent further, and greater miſchief, Moſes indulged them with ſuch a precept; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 8.

Ver. 6. But from the beginning of the creation, &c.] Of the world, or of man: מתחלת ברייתו של עולם, from the beginning of the creation of the world, is a way of ſpeaking often uſed by the Jews [r]: the phraſe of the creation is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; and ſo it was in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and 'tis only read, from the beginning, as in Matt. xix. 4, 8. ſee the note there: God made them male and female; the firſt that were created, Adam and Eve, the firſt parents of mankind, the firſt couple that came together were one male and one female; ſo that there could be no polygamy or divorce: Adam could not have more wives than one; nor could he put away Eve, and marry another; no proviſion was made for any ſuch uſages and practices; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 4. In the Complutenſian edition, 'tis added, and ſaid, the following words.

Ver. 7. For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, and brethren and ſiſters, tho' without any foundation in the original text, in Gen. ii. 24. from whence this paſſage is cited; or in any copy of the Evangeliſt: and cleave to his wife; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 5.

Ver. 8. And they twain ſhall be one fleſh, &c.] This is the remaining part of the citation out of Gen. ii. 24. ſee the note on Matt. xix. 5. ſo then they are no more twain, but one fleſh; as Adam and Eve were both by creation and marriage: and ſo two perſons, a man and woman, being lawfully married together, become one fleſh, or one body, as the Arabic and Perſic verſions render the phraſe; and therefore the wife is to be loved by the huſband as his own body, and from whom there ſhould be no ſeparation, until death, but in caſe of adultery; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 6.

Ver. 9. What therefore God hath joined together, &c.] See the note on Matt. xix. 6.

Ver. 10. And in the houſe, &c.] To which Chriſt retired, after he had put the Phariſees to ſilence, and diſmiſſed the multitude: his diſciples aſked him again of the ſame matter; concerning the affair of divorces, he had been diſcourſing with the Phariſees about; ſome things being ſaid, they had not been uſed to, and which they did not thoroughly underſtand; and therefore choſe privately to converſe with him on this ſubject, for their further information.

Ver. 11. And he ſaith unto them, &c.] The ſame things as in Matt. v. 32. and xix. 9. ſee the notes there: whoſoever ſhall put away his wife, and marry another; when there is no uncleanneſs in the caſe; when his former wife has not injured him by violating the marriage-bed: committeth adultery againſt her; to the injury of his lawful wife; or upon her, or with her, with the perſon he marries. The Syriac and Perſic verſions leave out the phraſe, againſt her.

Ver. 12. And if a woman ſhall put away her huſband, &c.] Not that there was the ſame law, or the ſame ſufferance by the law of Moſes, for a woman to put away her huſband, as for the huſband to put away the wife; nor was it practiſed among the Jews, unleſs it became to be in uſe about this time, in their declining ſtate, having taken it from the Gentiles; of whom they ſay [s], that "they divorce one another: ſays R. Jochanan, "אשתו מגרשתו, his wife divorces him, and gives "him the dowry." So Salome, the ſiſter of Herod the great, ſent a bill of divorce to her huſband Coſtobarus; and in this ſhe was followed by Herodias, the daughter of Ariſtobulus, as Joſephus [t] relates; and which his own wife alſo did. And by ſuch examples the practice might prevail among the Jews: and we have a ſtory told [u] us of a holy man, and a holy woman, who were married, and had no children, וגרשו זה את זה, and they divorced one another; and the one went and married a wicked woman, and ſhe made him wicked; and the other went and married a wicked man, and ſhe made him righteous: but I do not find that this practice was approved, or eſtabliſhed by any rule, or canon. They allow [w] indeed a woman to write her huſband's divorce of her, with proper witneſſes; and they alſo oblige one, that was eſpouſed in her minority, and refuſes her huſband, when adult, to write a bill of refuſal; the form of that, and the rules about it, take as follow [x]: "they don't allow "one to marry a minor; he that marries a minor "that is fatherleſs, and ſhe is not pleaſed with her "huſband, lo! ſhe may refuſe, and go away, and "ſhe has no need of a divorce from him, becauſe "the eſpouſals of a minor are not perfect eſpouſals, "as we have explained: and ſo a minor, whom her "father marries, and ſhe becomes a widow, or is "divorced whilſt ſhe is a minor, lo! ſhe is as one "fatherleſs, in her father's life-time; and if ſhe "marries whilſt ſhe is a minor, ſhe may refuſe— "how does ſhe refuſe? ſhe ſays before two witneſſes, I don't like ſuch an one my huſband; or I "don't like the eſpouſals with which my father, "or my brother, eſpouſed me; and ſuch-like words "——The two, before whom the minor refuſes, "write for her; on ſuch a day, ſuch an one, the "daughter of ſuch an one, refuſed, before us, ſuch "an one her huſband; and they ſeal, and give it "to her: and this is the body, or ſubſtance of a "bill of refuſal——in ſuch a week, on ſuch a day "of the month, in ſuch a year, ſuch an one, the "daughter of ſuch an one, refuſed before us, and "ſaid, that my mother, or my brother, forced "me, and married me, or eſpouſed me, and I, "a minor, to ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one; "and now I reveal my mind before you, that I "do not like him, and I will not abide with him:

"and we have ſearched ſuch an one; and this is "manifeſt to us, that ſhe is yet a minor, and we "have written, and ſealed, and have given this to "her, for her juſtification, and a clear proof.

"ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, witneſs.

"ſuch an one, the ſon of ſuch an one, witneſs." and ſuch a writing was called, גט מיאון, a bill of refuſal, and ſometimes שטרי מיאונין, letters of refuſal[y]; but a bill of divorcement given by a married woman to her huſband, I have not met with. Juſtin Martyr ſpeaks[z] of a Chriſtian woman that, ρεπυδιον δυσα, gave a bill of divorce to her huſband: ſuch things, therefore, have been done, and might be done in Chriſt's time, to which he refers; and concerning which he ſays, that if a woman do ſo, and be married to another, ſhe committeth adultery; with the man ſhe marries, and againſt, and to the injury of her former huſband, unjuſtly left by her.

Ver. 13. And they brought young children to him, &c.] The parents, or friends, or nurſes of the children in thoſe parts, having heard of the fame of Jeſus; and having entertained an high opinion of him, as a great prophet, and a holy, good man, brought their children in their arms, or hands, that he ſhould touch them; as he did when he healed diſeaſed perſons, as theſe might be, tho' not expreſſed: and his diſciples rebuked thoſe that brought them; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 13.

Ver. 14. But when Jeſus ſaw it, &c.] Obſerved that his diſciples reproved thoſe that brought their children to him he was much diſpleaſed; with his diſciples, who took too much upon them; for they ought firſt to have known their maſter's will; whether it was his pleaſure to grant the favour deſired for theſe children, and not to have forbid them of themſelves: and ſaid unto them; the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion reads: ſuffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of ſuch is the kingdom of God; or of them who are, איך הלין, as theſe, as the Syriac verſion renders the words; or, as the Arabic, who are like to theſe; and the Perſic, who are like to theſe little children; in innocence and humility; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 14.

Ver. 15. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] A form of ſpeech uſed when our Lord was about to aſſeverate a thing, and aſſert ſomething of moment and importance, and which he would have attended to. Whoſoever ſhall not receive the kingdom of God; the Goſpel, and the myſteries of it: as a little child; laying aſide all pride and prejudice, attending thereunto with humility and meekneſs: he ſhall not enter therein; he ſhall attain to no true ſpiritual knowledge of the Goſpel; nor ſhould he be admitted into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and to the ordinances of it.

Ver. 16. And he took them up in his arms, &c.] Upon his arms, the Syriac verſion ſays; he put them into his boſom, according to the Ethiopic; and the Perſic renders it, he took them into his boſom: all which expreſſes great tenderneſs towards them, and affection for them: put his hands upon them, and bleſſed them. The Ethiopic verſion tranſpoſes theſe clauſes, and puts bleſſing firſt, contrary to the natural order of the words, and things; for he firſt put his hands on the children, according to the cuſtom of the Jews, and then prayed over them, and wiſhed all happineſs and proſperity to them; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 15.

Ver. 17. And when he was gone forth into the way, &c.] For when he had bleſſed the children he departed from the coaſts of Judæa, on the further ſide of Jordan, and ſteered his courſe towards Jeruſalem, ver. 32. and as he was on the road thitherwards, there came one running; a young man, a ruler among the Jews, and very rich, a perſon of great dignity, and large ſubſtance; he hearing that Chriſt was going from thoſe parts, ran in great haſte to him, to have ſome converſation with him, before he was entirely gone; and kneeled to him; as a token of great reſpect and civility: ſome verſions, as the Perſic and Ethiopic, render it, and worſhipped him; which muſt be underſtood not in a religious, but in a civil way: the words might be literally rendered, and kneeled him; and Dr. Lightfoot ſuſpects, that more is meant than bending his knees to Chriſt; that he alſo might take hold of the knees of Chriſt, and kiſs them, as was uſual with the Jewiſh Rabbins, and which he illuſtrates by ſeveral inſtances: and aſked him, good maſter, what ſhall I do that I may inherit eternal life? This man, though a young man, and alſo a rich man, was thoughtful of the world to come, and the life of it: he believed there was an eternal life after this ſtate of things, and ſo was no Sadducee; but he had wrong notions about the way and manner of attaining it: he thought it was to be had by the works of the law, which ſhows him to be a Phariſee; whereas eternal life is the gift of God, thro' the Meſſiah, the perſon he now applied to, and who had the words of eternal life; and to a more proper perſon he could not have put the queſtion, he being himſelf the way, the truth, and the life, or the true way to eternal life: and had he attended to his own words, which ſuggeſt, that eternal life is an inheritance, he might have learned, that it is not to be acquired by the induſtry and works of men; but, that it is the bequeſt of our heavenly father to his children, and comes by will, by promiſe, and as a free gift; ſo that it is not of the law; nor are they that are of the law heirs of it, Rom. iv. 14. Gal. iii. 18. ſee the note on Matt. xix. 16.

Ver. 18. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] The ſame as in Matt. xix. 17. ſee the note there. Why calleſt thou me good? This is ſaid, not as denying that he was good, or as being angry with him for calling him ſo, but in order to lead this young man to a true knowledge of him, and his goodneſs, and even of his proper deity: there is none good, but one, that is, God; ſome render it, but one God, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions; and ſo the words are a proof of the unity of the divine being, and agree with Deut. vi. 4. but are not to be underſtood to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, who, with the Father, are the one God: nor do theſe words at all militate againſt the deity of Chriſt, or prove that he is not God, as the Jew objects[a]; ſeeing this is not to be underſtood of the perſon of the Father, in oppoſition to the Son and Spirit, who are equally good: nor does Chriſt, in theſe words, deny himſelf to be God, but rather tacitly ſuggeſts it; ſince he is good in the ſame ſenſe in which God is good: in Matthew 'tis added, but if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments: this Chriſt ſaid not as his ſenſe, that the way to eternal life lies in keeping the commandments of the law; but he ſpeaks in the language of the Phariſees, and of this man; and his view is, to bring him to a ſenſe of the impoſſibility of obtaining eternal life by theſe things, as the ſequel ſhows: wherefore the above Jew[b] has no reaſon to confront the followers of Jeſus with this paſſage, as if it was a conceſſion of his, that it is impoſſible any ſhould be ſaved without keeping the commands of the law of Moſes.

[b] Ib.

Ver. 19. Thou knoweſt the commandments, &c.] Which God gave to Moſes on mount Sinai; theſe the Jews taught their children; ſo that this young man might reaſonably be thought to know what, and how many they were, tho' he was ignorant of the extent and ſpirituality of them: do not commit adultery, do not kill, do not ſteal, do not bear falſe witneſs, defraud not, honour thy father and mother. In which may be obſerved, that the ſtrict order in which the commandments ſtood is not kept; the ſeventh commandment, thou ſhalt not commit adultery, is ſet before the ſixth, thou ſhalt not kill; tho' the Arabic verſion places them in their order; and the fifth command, honour thy father and thy mother, is placed laſt of all: but a Jew has no reaſon to object to this, when it is a rule with them, that אין מוקדם ומאוחר בתורה[c], there is no firſt nor laſt in the law; that is, order is not ſtrictly attended to; but ſometimes, that which is firſt is mentioned laſt, and the laſt firſt. There is one precept, defraud not, wrong no man of his property, either by force or fraud, which none of the other Evangeliſts have. Dr. Hammond, and others, think, that it is an explanation of the tenth command, thou ſhalt not covet; ſignifying, that a man ſhould be ſo ſatisfied with his own condition, as not to deſire another's goods, or, by any means, ſeek to leſſen them to enlarge his own. A certain Jew[d] objects againſt our Lord Jeſus, that he did not mention the other precepts in Exod. xx. and Deut. v. by which he ſeems to mean the precepts of the firſt table, which reſpect the unity of God, and his worſhip, which are of greater moment: to which may be replied, that our Lord does ſuggeſt the unity of the divine being, and his eſſential, infinite, and independent goodneſs, which are the ground and foundation of his fear and worſhip in the preceding verſe; and beſides, as Biſhop Kidder obſerves[e], nothing is more common than to put ſome precepts for the whole; ſee Mic. vi. 8. yea, that Jeſus may be juſtified from the Old Teſtament in this method, as from Pſ. xv. 1. where a queſtion, very like this of the young man, is put; and yet, in anſwer to it we find nothing mentioned but obedience to the ſecond table: to which reply of the learned prelate, may be added, that Chriſt inſtances in the commandments of the ſecond table, as being more known, and better underſtood by this young man; thou knoweſt the commandments; that is, the following ones he mentions: and beſides the argument runs ſtrong from the leſſer to the greater, which is implied, that if the commands of the ſecond table, which reſpect the neighbour, are neceſſary to be obſerved, than much more thoſe which concern God himſelf; and if men fall ſhort in keeping the leſſer commands, it can hardly be thought they ſhould be perfect in the obſervance of greater ones; and ſo conſequently, and which is our Lord's drift, eternal life is never to be obtained by the works of the law.

Ver. 20. And he anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] With a great deal of pertneſs, maſter, all theſe have I obſerved from my youth; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 20. In a certain copy, Beza ſays, 'tis added, as there, what lack I yet? and ſo in one of Stephens's copies.

Ver. 21. Then Jeſus beholding him, loved him, &c.] Not as God, with that ſpecial love, with which he loves his people, who were given him by the father, are redeemed by his blood, whom he calls by his grace, juſtifies by his righteouſneſs, forgives their iniquities, and, at laſt, glorifies: but as man, he had an human affection for him; ſo far as there was any appearance of moral good in him, it was agreeable to him, who loves righteouſneſs, and hates iniquity: and though the young man betrayed much vanity, pride, and conceit, he did not uſe him roughly, but kindly, and tenderly; he beheld him, he looked wiſhly upon him, when he ſaid the above words; which look intimated, that he could not believe he had perfectly, and completely kept all the commandments; however, he did not chuſe to reproach him with a lye, and charge him with pride and arrogance, but gave him good words, and ſpoke friendly to him; and, as far as he could, commended him for his diligence in obſerving the commands: in this ſenſe the word is obſerved to be uſed by the Septuagint interpreters, as when it is ſaid of Ahab, 2 Chron. xviii. 2. that he perſuaded him (Jehoſhaphat), they render it, ηγαπα, he loved him to go up to Ramoth Gilead: he gave him good words, he ſpake friendly to him, and by fair ſpeeches prevailed upon him: and ſo when it is ſaid of the Iſraelites, Pſ. lxxviii. 36. they did flatter him, (God) they render it, ηγαπησαν, they loved him with their mouth; ſpoke very well to him, and of him, praiſed him, and his works, and in this way expreſſed affection to him, tho' it was only with their mouths. Moreover, Chriſt might not only ſpeak kindly to this young man, but he might make uſe of ſome external geſture; which ſhowed an human affection to him, and reſpect for him. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures it might be by kiſſing his head, which might be conveniently done, as he was now on his knees; and ſince this was frequently uſed by the Jewiſh doctors, as an expreſſion of reſpect, of which he gives various inſtances; and more might be added, eſpecially out of the book of Zohar, where we often read of one Rabbi kiſſing the head of another, or of his pupil. But the ſenſe of this phraſe, which pleaſes me beſt of all, is what may be collected from the uſe of it among the ſeventy interpreters, who often render the Hebrew רחם, which ſignifies to have compaſſion, or ſhew pity, by the word here uſed: ſo Prov. xxviii. 13. whoſo confeſſeth and forſaketh, ſhall have mercy, they interpret, αγαπηθησεται, ſhall be loved; and Hoſ. ii. 23. I will have mercy on her that had not obtained mercy, they render αγαπησω, I will love her that was not beloved; once more, Zech. x. 6. I will bring them again to place them, for I have mercy upon them, they tranſlate οτι ηγαπησα αυτους, becauſe I have loved them; ſee alſo Iſ. lx. 10. and then, according to this uſe of the word, the ſenſe is, that Jeſus looked upon him when he expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a pert manner, and had a compaſſionate concern for him; he pitied him for his ignorance of the law, in its ſpirituality and large extent; for his pride and vanity, his conceit of, and glorying in himſelf: wherefore, in order to mortify him, and abate theſe ſwelling thoughts of himſelf; he ſaid unto him, one thing thou lackeſt; before which laſt clauſe the Ethiopic verſion puts this, if thou wilt be perfect, out of Matt. xix. 21. ſee the note there: and the Coptic verſion, and two of Stephens's copies read it before the following, go thy way, ſell whatſoever thou haſt, and give to the poor, [d] R. Jacob Aben Amram, Porta Verit. num. 1026. Apud Kidder's Demonſtr. of the Meſſiah, par. 3. p. 50.

[e] Demonſtrat. ib. p. 50, 51.

and thou ſhalt have treaſure in heaven; and come, take up the croſs, and follow me. This young man's reigning ſin ſeems to have been an over-weaning affection for the things of this world; his riches were his idol, on which his heart was ſet, and in which he truſted: wherefore he was ſo far from keeping all the commandments, that he had not kept the firſt; thou ſhalt have no other gods before me: there was more than one thing wanting in him, but Chriſt takes notice of this as the firſt; and there was no need to mention any other, this touched him ſenſibly, and fully tried, and ſufficiently expoſed the vanity of his boaſted perfection. That clauſe, take up the croſs, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin verſion, as it is not mentioned by Matthew. The Ethiopic verſion reads it, the croſs of thy death, and places it before, come and follow me; as do alſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions; but the Arabic reads it laſt of all; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 21.

Ver. 22. And he was ſad at that ſaying, &c.] That he lacked one thing, and eſpecially that he ſhould be bid to ſell all that he had, and give it away; and what might add to his ſadneſs is, that he muſt take up the croſs of reproach, affliction, perſecution, and death; his countenance fell upon this, and went away grieved: finding that he muſt part with two things his heart was ſet upon, his idol of ſelf-righteouſneſs, and his mammon of unrighteouſneſs; the bladder of his pride was pricked, and his vanity and ſelf-conceit were expoſed; and he was called upon to part with his ſubſtance; all which were ſadly mortifying, and exceedingly diſagreeable to him: for he had great poſſeſſions; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 22.

Ver. 23. And Jeſus looked round about, &c.] To ſee what effect the diſcourſe he had with the young man, and the conſequence of it, had upon his diſciples; as alſo to raiſe their attention to what he was about to ſay: and ſaith unto his diſciples, how hardly ſhall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God? the Goſpel-diſpenſation, by embracing the doctrines, and ſubmitting to the ordinances of it; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 23.

Ver. 24. And the diſciples were aſtoniſhed at his words, &c.] For they expected, in a little while, that the kingdom of the Meſſiah would be ſet up in great worldly pomp and grandeur; and that all the rich men of the nation would come into it, become his ſubjects, and join to ſupport the glory and ſplendor of it: but Jeſus anſwereth again, and ſaith unto them, children: it was common with the Jews to call the diſciples, or ſcholars of the wiſe men, children; hence that ſaying of theirs [f], התלמידים קרוים בנים, the diſciples are called children, which they prove from 2 Kings ii. 3. Iſ. viii. 18. How hard is it for them that truſt in riches to enter into the kingdom of God! This he ſaid partly to confirm what he had before ſaid, at which his diſciples were aſtoniſhed; and partly to explain it, as that he was to be underſtood of ſuch that truſted in their riches, ſet their hearts upon them, and placed their hope and happineſs in them; and the great difficulty, or rather impoſſibility of ſuch, at leaſt continuing ſo, entering into the kingdom of God, is ſtill more ſtrongly expreſſed in the following words.

Ver. 25. It is eaſier for a camel, &c.] See the note on Matt. xix. 24.

Ver. 26. And they were aſtoniſhed out of meaſure, &c.] They were ſtill more amazed, their ſurprize encreaſed exceedingly upon our Lord's uſing the above compariſon; which, in their apprehenſion, ſhewed, that it was utterly impoſſible for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God; and they expreſſed their aſtoniſhment, ſaying, among themſelves, who then can be ſaved? in the Meſſiah's kingdom, if rich men are not? ſee the note on Matt. xix. 25. The Perſic verſion renders it, how can this man be ſaved? as if the words had a particular reſpect to the young man, that had great poſſeſſions, and was gone away ſorrowful.

Ver. 27. And Jeſus looking upon them, &c.] And by their countenances ſaw the ſurprize and anxiety of mind they were in, as well as by his omniſcience, knew their private reaſonings among themſelves: ſaith, with men it is impoſſible, but not with God; for with God all things are poſſible; even to reduce a camel to ſo ſmall a ſize, as to go thro' the eye of a needle; and to work upon a rich man's heart, ſo as to take him off of his truſt and confidence in his worldly riches, and bring him to a compliance with his will, and into his kingdom; and alſo to protect, and ſave his poor and mean followers, notwithſtanding all the difficulties, dangers, and oppoſitions they meet with; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 26.

Ver. 28. Then Peter began to ſay unto him, &c.] Not only obſerving that Chriſt promiſed treaſure in heaven to the young man, provided he ſold all that he had, and gave it to the poor; but being, in ſome meaſure, freed from that ſurprize and aſtoniſhment, which had ſeized him, and his fellow-diſciples, at the repreſentation of the difficulty of a rich man's entering into the kingdom of God, by the laſt words; and taking heart from thence, began to take notice of the following caſe, as an inſtance and illuſtration of what Chriſt had ſaid; for that ſame power, which had cauſed them to quit all their worldly ſubſtance for Chriſt, tho' it was but ſmall, could alſo work a like effect upon the heart of a man ever ſo rich: lo! we have left all, and have followed thee: in Matthew 'tis added, what ſhall we have therefore; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 27.

Ver. 29. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This Evangeliſt omits what Matthew relates; that whereas Peter, and his fellow-diſciples had followed Chriſt in the preſent time, hereafter, when he appeared in his glory, they ſhould ſit upon twelve thrones, and judge the twelve tribes of Iſrael; ſee Matt. xix. 28. and where 'tis added to the ſame ſenſe as here; there is no man that hath left houſe, or brethren, or ſiſter, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my ſake, and the Goſpel's; for the ſake of preaching, or profeſſing Chriſt, and his Goſpel. The word wife is left out in the Vulgate Latin verſion, perhaps becauſe it is not repeated in the following verſe; but all copies, and other verſions have it; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 29.

Ver. 30. But he ſhall receive an hundred fold now in this time, &c.] Not that he ſhould have an hundred houſes, brethren, &c. but that he ſhould enjoy that even in this preſent life, which was an hundred times better than any of the things mentioned; namely, houſes, and brethren, and ſiſters, and mothers, and children, and lands; ſee the note on Matt. xix. 29. 'tis added here, with perſecutions. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read in the ſingular, with perſecution; ſignifying that this muſt b expected amidſt the greateſt happineſs, and highe enjoyments of this life; tho' often even that whic the ſaints enjoy, whilſt they are, in the ſevere manner, perſecuted for Chriſt, is an hundred times better than, yea, infinitely above, all that they part with, or loſe for his ſake; and ſo is an ample compenſation for all: and yet this is not all they ſhall have; for it follows, and in the world to come eternal life: ſo that they will be doubly recompenſed; once in this life, and again in the other world: in the Targum on Cant. viii. 7. is a paſſage ſomewhat like this, where the Lord of the world is repreſented ſaying; “if a man will give all the ſubſtance “of his houſe to obtain wiſdom in the captivity, “I will return unto him, כפול לעלמא דאתי, “double in the world to come.”

Ver. 31. But many that are firſt ſhall be laſt, &c.] See the note on Matt. xix. 30.

Ver. 32. And they were in the way, &c.] Upon the road, having left the coaſts of Judæa on the farther ſide of Jordan: going up to Jeruſalem; to the paſſover there, which was to be in a ſhort time, and where Chriſt was to ſuffer and die; for this was the laſt journey he took, and the laſt paſſover he was to eat there: and Jeſus went before them; as their fore-runner, their guide and leader, with unconcernedneſs and intrepidity; though he knew what would befal him, and what deſigns were forming againſt him: and this he did to inſpire his diſciples with courage, and to leave them an example that they ſhould tread in his ſteps: and they were amazed; at his readineſs to go up to Jeruſalem, and the chearful ſpirit he diſcovered, when he had ſo many, and ſuch powerful enemies at that place, in going to which he expoſed himſelf to the greateſt dangers. And as they followed; for they did not chuſe to leave him, but were determined to continue with him at all events, tho' they were afraid; what would be the conſequence of it to themſelves, as well as to him; for they being his followers, could not expect any other than ill uſage from his enemies. And he took again the twelve; the diſciples, as he had done before, ch. viii. 31. and began to tell them what things ſhould happen unto him; being what were determined by God, agreed unto by himſelf, and foretold in the ſcriptures; for theſe were not caſual and contingent events.

Ver. 33. Saying, behold we go up to Jeruſalem, &c.] They were now upon the road thither. And the ſon of man; meaning himſelf, ſhall be delivered unto the chief-prieſts, and unto the Scribes; by the determinate counſel, and fore-knowledge of God, and by the means of a treacherous diſciple of his, Judas. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, and to the elders; but this is not in any of the copies, nor in other verſions: and they ſhall condemn him to death; as they did in the palace of the high-prieſt, nemine contradicente; ſee ch. xiv. 64. and ſhall deliver him to the Gentiles; the Romans, to Pontius Pilate, the Roman governor; either becauſe they had not then power to put him to death themſelves, or becauſe they were deſirous he ſhould die the death of the croſs, a Roman puniſhment.

Ver. 34. And they ſhall mock him, and ſhall ſcourge him, &c.] The Gentiles, as the Roman ſoldiers did; the one at the connivance, and the other by the order of their governor: and ſhall ſpit upon him; on his face, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, and as they did; ſee ch. xv. 19. This clauſe is placed by the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, between the two former; though, according to the order in which theſe things were executed, he was firſt ſcourged, then mocked, and then ſpit upon: all which expreſs both the cruel and indecent uſage he was to meet with: and ſhall kill him, and the third day he ſhall riſe again. The Perſic verſion between theſe two clauſes read, and ſhall put him in a grave; which is not in any copy of this text, nor in any other verſion; nor indeed was this done by the Gentiles, but by Joſeph of Arimathea.

Ver. 35. And James, and John, the ſons of Zebedee, came unto him, &c.] Along with their mother, who was their mouth, and ſpoke for them, and they by her: ſaying, maſter, we would that thou ſhouldſt do for us whatſoever we ſhall deſire: that is, we earneſtly deſire, that whereas we have a favour to aſk of thee, that thou wouldſt not deny us it, be it what it will; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 20.

Ver. 36. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] And alſo to their mother, and to them by her, what would ye that I ſhould do for you? Chriſt inſiſts upon their telling him the particular thing they wanted to have done for them, before he would give them any promiſe, tho' he knew very well what it was they were deſirous of.

Ver. 37. They ſaid unto him, &c.] By their mother, or ſeconding her motion: grant unto us that we may ſit, one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory; or glorious kingdom, which they expected would be quickly ſet up; and which they might conclude from his having lately promiſed to all the twelve, that when he ſhould ſit on his throne, they ſhould ſit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael; and from his having juſt now mentioned his riſing from the dead, which they might underſtand of ſome revival, or breaking forth of this glorious ſtate; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 21.

Ver. 38. But Jeſus ſaid unto them, &c.] Not by granting them what they deſired, but by obſerving their ignorance to them; ye know not what ye aſk: for ſometimes good men are ignorant petitioners at the throne of grace; they are under the influence of their own ſpirits, and not the Spirit of God; they are prompted to aſk things from a ſelfiſh principle, and not with a view to the glory of God, and their own ſpiritual welfare, and that of others: and indeed, the beſt of ſaints know not what they ſhould pray for as they ought; and always ſtand in need of the help, aſſiſtance, and interceſſion of the Spirit of God; who is a Spirit of grace and ſupplication, and ſearches the deep things of God, and knows his mind and will, and what is ſuitable and convenient for his people; and whenever they pray without him, there is much darkneſs and ignorance in them, and in their petitions. In particular, theſe diſciples knew not what they were aſking for; they had no true notion of Chriſt's kingdom and glory, they were aſking the chief places in; they were dreaming of worldly glory and grandeur, in which they imagined the kingdom of the Meſſiah would quickly appear: whereas his kingdom, in the preſent ſtate of things, is not of this world, but of a ſpiritual nature; namely, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which lies in the miniſtration of his word and ordinances, and in the diſtribution of his gifts and grace; and his kingdom and glory in the world to come, are things which eye has not ſeen, nor ear heard: they talked of things which would never be, either in Chriſt's kingdom, in earth, or in heaven; fancying there would be poſts of honour and profit, which ſome would be advanced to in it, ſignified by ſitting at his right hand and left; whereas in the Goſpel church-ſtate, the apoſtles, governors, and officers of the church were alike, and had no ſuperiority over one another, but were all brethren, having one maſter, Chriſt; and the members of the churches are of the ſame body, and members one of another; and in the ultimate glory, there will be no degrees, but all the ſaints will ſhare the ſame happineſs: can ye drink of the cup that I drink of, and be baptized with the baptiſm that I am baptized with? Which Chriſt ſpeaks of in the preſent time, partly becauſe his ſorrows and ſufferings were already begun: he had already been drinking of the cup of ſorrows, being a man of ſorrows and acquainted with griefs, all his days; and he was wading in the waters of affliction, though as yet they were not come into his ſoul, and he as it were immerſed in them; he was not yet baptized with the bloody baptiſm he came into this world for, and he was deſirous of, Luke xii. 50. and partly becauſe of the certainty of theſe things, the cup was not to paſs from him, and the baptiſm of his ſufferings was to be ſurely accompliſhed; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 22.

Ver. 39. And they ſaid unto him, we can, &c.] That is, drink of Chriſt's cup, and be baptized with his baptiſm, which is another inſtance of their ignorance; for as they knew not the glorious ſtate of things, and the nature of it, they deſired places in, ſo they were unacquainted with themſelves; they were ignorant of their own weakneſs, as well as of the greatneſs of the ſufferings Chriſt ſhould endure, or even they ſhould be called unto: had they had a juſt notion of either, they would not have expreſſed themſelves in this manner, without any mention of the grace of God, or any dependance on the ſtrength of Chriſt; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 22. And Jeſus ſaid unto them, ye ſhall indeed drink of the cup that I drink of, and with the baptiſm that I am baptized withal, ſhall ye be baptized; meaning, not that they ſhould undergo the ſame ſufferings he did, and much leſs for the ſame end and purpoſe: he trod the wine-preſs alone, and bore the whole puniſhment, due to the ſins of his people, himſelf; and of them, there were none with him, to take a part: but that they ſhould endure ſufferings, in ſome ſort like to his, for his ſake, as they both afterwards did; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 23.

Ver. 40. But to ſit on my right hand and on my left, is not mine to give, &c.] There being no ſuch places in his kingdom, in the ſenſe they petitioned; and as for the glories of the heavenly ſtate, or eternal life, the gift of theſe was not to be ſettled now, it being done already: and though he had a power to give, yet only to them, who were given him of his Father, and who were ordained to ſuch happineſs, as it follows: but it ſhall be given to them for whom it is prepared; that is, of his Father, as is expreſſed in Matt. xx. 23. which is not to be underſtood as excluding theſe two perſons, but as including all others with them, for whom the kingdom was prepared, before the foundation of the world: the Ethiopic verſion therefore wrongly renders the words, but to ſit on my right hand and on my left, I do not give to you, it is prepared for others: the Jew [g] very badly concludes from hence againſt the deity of Chriſt, and his unity with the Father, he not having power to do this; whereas Chriſt does not ſay he had no power to give this honour, but only deſcribes the perſons to whom he ſhould give it; and theſe being perſons, for whom it is prepared by his Father, inſtead of deſtroying, proves their unity.

Ver. 41. And when the ten heard it, &c.] The requeſt made by the ſons of Zebedee, or their mother for them: they began to be much diſpleaſed with James and John; Matthew ſays, they were moved with indignation againſt them; they were filled with wrath, and were very angry with them; which they ſhewed in their countenances, and by their behaviour towards them, as well as by words: the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, they began to murmur againſt them; they highly reſented it, and were ready to break out into an open quarrel upon it; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 24.

Ver. 42. But Jeſus called them to him, &c.] Who were at ſome little diſtance from him, though ſo nigh, that he could diſcern the heat and paſſion they were in, and knowing that they had the ſame ambitious views with the two brethren: and ſaith unto them; to check their pride and vanity, and reprove them for their ambitious deſires of ſuperiority and pre-eminence over one another; by ſhewing them, that this was a part which the Heathens, that knew not God, acted, and therefore was very unbecoming them: you know that they which are accounted, or ſeem to, or rather do, rule over the Gentiles; or are reckoned worthy of government, who are, חשובים, men of honour, reputation, and eſteem; who are either by birth, or merit, thought to be deſerving of high places: theſe exerciſe lordſhip over them; rule over them, in a lordly, tyrannical, and arbitrary way: and their great ones; their nobles and lords under them, exerciſe authority over them; the Gentiles; by a delegated power, from thoſe who have the ſupreme rule; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 25.

Ver. 43. But ſo ſhall it not be among you, &c.] Or ſo let it not be, as in many copies; or, as the Perſic verſion renders it, it ought not to be ſo among you; ſuch a lordly ſpirit does not become you; this is heatheniſh: but whoſoever will be great among you, ſhall be, as in Matthew, let him be, your miniſter. This was juſt the reverſe of what the two diſciples were ſeeking for; they were indeed for being miniſters, but then they were for being prime miniſters of ſtate; and would have had all the reſt ſubject to them, and attendants on them, to be ſent out and employed as they ſhould think fit: whereas the only way to preferment and greatneſs in Chriſt's kingdom, or in the Goſpel church-ſtate, is to labour in the work of the miniſtry, more abundantly than others; to take great pains, and endure great hardſhips, in order to bring great glory to God, and do great good to the ſouls of men; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 26.

Ver. 44. And whoſoever of you will be the chiefeſt, &c.] Is deſirous of the higheſt place, and the greateſt honour, ſhall be ſervant of all: for the miniſters of the Goſpel, are not only the ſervants of Chriſt Jeſus, but alſo of the churches for his ſake; and in ſerving them, they ſerve Chriſt: not that they are to be the ſervants of men, and to take their inſtructions from them, and act according to rules preſcribed by them; or ſeek to pleaſe men, for then they would not be the ſervants of Chriſt: but they become ſervants to all, that they may win ſouls to Chriſt, and increaſe his churches, and enlarge his intereſt; and ſuch as are moſt uſeful this way, are the chiefeſt in the Goſpel church-ſtate; they are honoured by Chriſt, and eſteemed by his people; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 27.

Ver. 45. For even the Son of man, &c.] That is, Chriſt himſelf; a name, by which he frequently goes, both in the Old and New Teſtament: to the arguments before produced, Chriſt adds his own example, to teach his diſciples humility, and lowlineſs of mind, and to check their ambitious views and deſires: came not to be miniſtred unto: not but that he was miniſtred unto, even by the angels of God; who miniſtred to him in the wilderneſs, after he had been tempted by ſatan; and he was alſo miniſtred unto by ſome women, out of their ſubſtance; but theſe ſhew the low eſtate he was in, to ſtand in need of ſuch miniſtrations: here the ſenſe is, that he did not appear as an earthly prince, with a fine equipage, a large retinue and attendance, but to miniſter; to be a ſervant, as he is in his mediatorial office and capacity: he was ſent, and came as the ſervant of the Lord; and he miniſtred in his prophetic office, the Goſpel unto men; and went about in the form of a ſervant, doing good, miniſtring medicine both to the ſouls and bodies of men: but the great work he came about, was the work of man's redemption; which he willingly and chearfully undertook, diligently and faithfully proſecuted, and has compleatly finiſhed; to which reſpect is had in the next clauſe: and to give his life a ranſom for many; even for all the elect of God, to redeem them from ſin, ſatan, and the law; and ſecure them from the wrath of God, and eternal death; and this he has done, by laying down his life as the ranſom price for them; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 28.

Ver. 46. And they came to Jericho, &c.] Chriſt and his diſciples, from the coaſts of Judæa, beyond Jordan, in their way to Jeruſalem; where Chriſt met with Zaccheus and converted him, and after ſome ſhort ſtay at his houſe, departed thence: and as he went out of Jericho with his diſciples, and a great number of people; which followed him out of that city, to go with him to Jeruſalem, being but ten miles off: blind Bartimeus the ſon of Timeus, ſat by the high-way ſide begging; who was one of the two blind men, Matthew makes mention of, in ch. xx. 30. ſee the note there.

Ver. 47. And when he heard that it was Jeſus of Nazareth, &c.] That paſſed by, as reads the Perſic verſion; which he might learn, by enquiring the meaning of ſuch a multitude of people, and the noiſe; or he might hear his name frequently mentioned, and it ſaid, that he was coming, or paſſing by: he began to cry out; aloud, and with great vehemency, and often repeating it: and ſay, Jeſus thou ſon of David, have mercy on me: he did not call him Jeſus of Nazareth, as the common people did, but Jeſus the ſon of David, a title of the Meſſiah; nor did he aſk for money, but for mercy; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 30.

Ver. 48. And many charged him that he ſhould hold his peace, &c.] And be ſilent, and not call him the ſon of David, at leaſt; nor aſk any thing of him: but he cried the more a great deal; he lifted up his voice more loudly, and repeated the ſame words quicker and oftener, and with greater vehemency and importunity: thou ſon of David, have mercy on me; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 31.

Ver. 49. And Jeſus ſtood ſtill, &c.] Hearing his voice, and knowing what charges and reproofs were given him to be ſilent: and commanded him to be called; and led and brought unto him: this order was given, either to his diſciples, or to ſome of the multitude, probably the latter: and they call the blind man, ſaying unto him, be of good comfort, riſe, he calleth thee; or becauſe he calleth thee, as the Arabic verſion renders it; ſuggeſting, that ſome hopes might be conceived from thence, that ſomething would be done in his favour. The Perſic verſion renders it, our maſter calleth thee; ſo that that interpreter thought, that the diſciples were the perſons that were ordered to call, and did call the blind man: the word riſe, is left out in the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions. It may be obſerved from hence, that ſuch whom Chriſt effectually calls by his grace, of which this inſtance is emblematical, have reaſon to be of good comfort; or that effectual vocation is a ground of comfort: called ones may take comfort from it, and be aſſured that they are loved by God; ſince it is a fruit, effect, and evidence, of God's everlaſting love to them; and that they are the choſen of God, for, whom he did predeſtinate, he calls; and that they are Chriſt's, and are redeemed by him, ſeeing he has called them by name: and they may expect all good things from him; ſeeing they are called according to grace, given them in him before the world began; and are called to the participation of the bleſſings of grace; and it is affirmed that all things work together for their good: wherefore they may live in the faith of eternal glory and happineſs; ſince they that are called, are juſtified, and ſhall be glorified.

Ver. 50. And he caſting away his garment, &c.] His upper garment, and which no doubt was little worth; though this he did, that he might make the quicker diſpatch to Chriſt: roſe; from off the bank, or ground, whereon he ſat, in an inſtant; and ſprung up, as the Vulgate Latin, and Beza's ancient copy read, with great nimbleneſs, and in haſte: and came to Jeſus; being led by the perſons, that were ſent to call him. It may be obſerved from hence, that ſuch who are effectually called by the grace of Chriſt, of which this man was an emblem, hate the garment ſpotted with the fleſh; and put off the old man, as to the former converſation, being called by an holy God, with an holy calling, to holineſs in heart and life; and that by the Goſpel, which teaches to deny ſin, and live a holy converſation: and theſe alſo caſt away the garment of their own righteouſneſs, it being as fig-leaves, a ſpider's web, filthy rags, and a beggarly robe, as this man's was; and come nakedly to Chriſt, for righteouſneſs, and renounce their own in point of juſtification, that being an hindrance to their coming to him for his. The Goſpel reveals a better righteouſneſs to them than their own, more ſuitable to them, who are called from the dunghill, to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory; and then ſuch riſe in the ſtrength of grace, and come forth to Chriſt, for righteouſneſs, peace, pardon, life, and ſalvation.

Ver. 51. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] Being come to him, and ſtanding before him: what wilt thou that I ſhould do unto thee? What means this vehement cry? what is it thou deſigneſt by mercy? is it money thou aſkeſt for, to relieve thy wants? or is it that thy ſight may be reſtored? The blind man ſaid unto him, Lord; Rabboni, or, as the Syriac verſion reads it, Rabbi; thou great maſter in Iſrael, and Lord of the whole world, my requeſt to thee, and which thou art able to effect, is, that I might receive my ſight; ſee the note on Matt. xx. 33.

Ver. 52. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, go thy way, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads it, חזא, ſee; receive thy ſight, be it unto thee as thou doſt deſire; and which is the ſenſe of, go thy way; to thine own houſe, or place of abode; and about thy buſineſs, thy requeſt is granted: thy faith hath made thee whole; or ſaved thee; and which reſpected not only the power of Chriſt in reſtoring his ſight, but his faith in Jeſus as the Meſſiah, the ſon of David: ſo that by Chriſt, the object of his faith, he was ſaved, both in ſoul and body; and had his ſpiritual ſight, before he had his bodily ſight, and both from Chriſt: and immediately he received his ſight; or ſaw again as well as ever he did, or as other men;

and followed Jeſus in the way; that is, to Jeruſalem. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, read him, inſtead of Jeſus; but the Syriac and Perſic verſions, read neither. This man was an emblem of the people of God, before, at, and after converſion: before converſion; for, as he was blind, ſo are they; they are without any ſpiritual ſight and diſcerning of God, as in Chriſt, as the God of all grace, as their covenant God and Father; and of themſelves, being without any true ſight of ſin, or ſenſe of their ſtate and condition; and of Chriſt, and of the way of peace, life, and ſalvation by him, ſeeing no beauty in him, nor any need they ſtand in of him; and of the Spirit, of his perſon, grace, and operations, of the things of the Spirit, which they know not, becauſe they are ſpiritually diſcerned: at converſion; when they receive their ſight from Chriſt, as he did, are made light in the Lord, and become the children of the day; when the eyes of their underſtandings are enlightened, to ſee their ſad and ruinous ſtate, the pollution of their hearts, the ſinfulneſs of their thoughts, as well as of their actions; the imperfection and inſufficiency of their righteouſneſs, to juſtify them before God; the lovelineſs of Chriſt, the fulneſs of his grace, and righteouſneſs; the ſuitableneſs, ability, and willingneſs of him, as a Saviour; and that ſalvation by him, is all of free-grace; and that eternal glory and happineſs, is ſecured by him, for them. All which light they have, not from themſelves, nor from any mere creature, but from Chriſt; and which they receive as a benefit and favour; they have it as a gift, and in a way of receiving; and that at once, ſuddenly, and immediately: and after converſion; for, as this man, when he had received his ſight from Chriſt, followed him in the way; ſo the people of God, being enlightened by Chriſt, follow him as their leader and commander, as the captain of their ſalvation, as the ſhepherd of the flock, as their guide and forerunner, as their pattern and exemplar, and as the light of the world: him they follow and imitate, in the duties of morality, in the way of publick inſtituted worſhip, and in Goſpel ordinances; as baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper: and to follow him in the way of duty, is ſafe, honourable, pleaſant, comfortable, and profitable; it iſſues in good here, and in happineſs hereafter.

CHAP. XI.

Ver. 1. AND when they came nigh to Jeruſalem, &c.] The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, when he came nigh; that is, Jeſus; though not without his diſciples, nor the multitude: unto Bethphage and Bethany; two places ſo called, near Jeruſalem: Bethphage began where Bethany ended, and reached to the city itſelf. The Vulgate Latin only makes mention of Bethany; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 1. At the mount of Olives; near which, the above places were: he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples; perhaps Peter and John.

Ver. 2. And ſaith unto them, go your way into the village, &c.] Either of Bethany or of Nob. The Ethiopic verſion renders it the city, and ſo reads a copy of Stephens's: ſome have thought the city of Jeruſalem is intended, but without any reaſon; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 2. over-againſt you. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, over-againſt us: the ſenſe is the ſame; for Chriſt and his diſciples were together: this ſuits with either of the above-mentioned places: and as ſoon as ye be entered into it; are come to the town's end, and to one of the firſt houſes in it, ye ſhall find a colt tied: Matthew ſays, an aſs tied, and a colt with her; both no doubt true: whereon never man ſat; which had never been backed and broke, and which makes it the more wonderful, that Chriſt ſhould chuſe to ride upon it, and that that ſhould quietly carry him: looſe him, and bring him; that is, away to me.

Ver. 3. And if any man ſay unto you, &c.] As very likely they would, and it would be ſtrange if they ſhould not ſay ſomething to them, eſpecially the owners of it: why do ye this? Why do ye untie the aſs, and attempt to carry it away, when it is none of your own, and it belongs to another man? Say ye that the Lord hath need of him; our Lord and yours, the Lord of heaven and earth, and all things in it; it looks as if this title, the Lord, was what Jeſus was well known by; ſee John xi. 28. unleſs it can be thought, that the owners of the colt were ſuch, that believed in Chriſt, as is not improbable; and ſo would at once underſtand by the language who it was for, and let it go: and ſtraightway he will ſend him hither; as ſoon as ever he hears that the Lord, by whom he would preſently underſtand Jeſus wanted him for his preſent purpoſe; he'll ſend him with all readineſs and chearfulneſs, without the leaſt heſitation, or making any diſpute about it.

Ver. 4. And they went their way, &c.] The two diſciples went to the village, where Chriſt ſent them, without objecting any difficulties that might preſent, in the execution of theſe orders: and found the colt tied by the door without; in the ſtreet, faſtened to the door of the owner's houſe, at the town's end: in a place where two ways met; to go into, and out of the village; at the corner houſe, where two ways met; ſo that the place was very publick, and ſuch an affair could not be tranſacted, without being ſeen: and they looſe him; as ſoon as ever they came to the place, they immediately began to untie the colt, and were going away with him.

Ver. 5. And certain of them that ſtood there, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, who walked there; who were either ſtanding hard by, or walking about the place, being inhabitants of it; and either the owners of the colt, or their ſervants, or both: ſaid unto them, what do ye looſing the colt? What do ye mean by it? do you intend to take the colt away? what buſineſs have you with it? what right have you to do ſo? and what's your end in it? or reaſon for it?

Ver. 6. And they ſaid unto them, &c.] The very expreſs words, even as Jeſus had commanded: not that theſe were the words they ſaid, but the Lord hath need of him: upon which they ſaid no more, were ſatisfied and contented, that they ſhould untie the colt, and take it with them: and they let them go; and the colt with them, very freely; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 6.

Ver. 7. And they brought the colt to Jeſus, &c.] Where he was, and caſt their garments on him; their cloaths to be inſtead of a ſaddle, for Chriſt to ſit upon: and he ſat upon him; or Jeſus rode on him, as the Syriac verſion renders it. The Ethiopic verſion reads, they made him to mount him; that is, the diſciples aſſiſted him in getting upon it, and having mounted it, he ſat on it without any trouble, though it had never been backed before, and rode on his way to Jeruſalem; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 7.

Ver. 8. And many ſpread their garments in the way, &c.] Inſtead of carpets to ride on, and in honour to him as a king: and others cut down branches off the trees, and ſtrawed them in the way; in token of joy, as at the feaſt of tabernacles; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 8.

Ver. 9. And they that went before, and they that followed, &c.] They that came from Jeruſalem to meet him, and they that followed him from Jericho, and other parts; which two bodies, the one went before him, and the other followed after him: and cried, ſaying, Hoſanna, bleſſed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 9.

Ver. 10. Bleſſed be the kingdom of our father David, &c.] It was more uſual with the Jews to call Abraham their father; but, becauſe the Meſſiah was David's ſon, therefore, with reſpect to him, they here call him their father: and their meaning is, let the kingdom promiſed to our father David, and to his ſeed for ever, that cometh in the name of the Lord; which is now coming, and appears in the auſpicious reign and government of his Son, the Meſſiah, who is cloathed with majeſty and authority; be proſperous and ſucceſsful, and be eſtabliſhed, and endure for ever; to the glory and happineſs of him as king, and of all the ſubjects of it. Unleſs the words ſhould be rendered, as by their ſituation they may be, thus, bleſſed be the kingdom that cometh in the name of the Lord, of our father David; and the ſenſe be, let the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which is now come, and is ſet up in his name, who, as God, is David's Lord, greatly flouriſh, and long continue; may its king be bleſſed, and all its ſubjects happy. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out the clauſe, in the name of the Lord; it is alſo left out in Beza's ancient copy, and in another; but the Ethiopic verſion retains it, reading it in the name of God. 'Tis added, Hoſanna in the higheſt; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 9.

Ver. 11. And Jeſus entered into Jeruſalem, &c.] In this publick manner, riding upon an aſs, with the multitude attending him, ſome going before, and others after, crying Hoſanna to him: and into the temple; which he rode up directly to; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the copulative and; his great concern being there; and having diſmounted, and diſmiſſed the colt, and ſent it by proper perſons to the owner of it, he went into the temple, into the court of the Gentiles; where he found and overturned the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves, and healed the lame and the blind: and when he had looked round about upon all things; that is, in the temple, as the Lord and proprietor of it; and made a thorough viſitation of it, and ſearch into it, and corrected what was amiſs in it: and now the even-tide was come, he went out unto Bethany with the twelve; having ſpent great part of the day in reforming abuſes in the temple, in healing diſeaſes, and diſputing with the chief prieſts and Scribes: the evening being come, he did not think fit, for ſome reaſons, to ſtay in the city; but went out to Bethany, which was near two miles off, and lodged there; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 17.

Ver. 12. And on the morrow, &c.] The next day early in the morning, when they were come from Bethany; Chriſt, and his twelve diſciples. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, when he came out of Bethany; though not alone, but with the twelve diſciples; who went with him there, and returned with him, as appears from ver. 14. as he and they came out of that place betimes in the morning, having eat nothing, before they came from thence, he was hungry; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 18.

Ver. 13. And ſeeing a fig-tree afar off, &c.] By the way-ſide, at ſome diſtance from him: having leaves; very large and ſpreading, which made a great ſhow, as if there might be fruit on it: he came; unto it; either he went out of his way to it, or having ſeen it before him a good way off, at length came up to it: if haply he might find any thing thereon; that is, any fruit; for he ſaw at a diſtance, there were leaves upon it; and which was the more remarkable, ſince it was the time of the fig-tree juſt putting forth its tender branches, leaves, and fruit: and when he came to it, he found nothing but leaves; no fruit at all upon it, contrary to his expectation as man, and the promiſing appearance the tree made: for the time of figs was not yet; or, for it was not the time of figs; for the word yet, is not in the text: and the words ſeem rather to be a reaſon, why Chriſt ſhould not have expected fruit on it, than that he ſhould: but the ſenſe is, either becauſe the time of gathering figs was not come; and ſince therefore they were not gathered, he might the rather hope to find ſome on it; or becauſe it was not a kind ſeaſon for figs, a good fig year; and this tree appearing in ſuch a flouriſhing condition, might raiſe his expectation of finding fruit, yet he found none but leaves only; becauſe it was ſo bad a ſeaſon for figs, that even the moſt promiſing trees had none upon them: or this tree being of an uncommon ſort, though Chriſt expected to find no fruit on other trees, becauſe the time of common figs was not come, yet he might hope to find ſome on this. Some criticks neglecting the accents, render the words, where he was, it was the ſeaſon of figs; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 19.

Ver. 14. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto it, &c.] The fig-tree; a Jewiſh way of ſpeaking, often uſed when nothing before is ſaid; the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out the word anſwered, as they do alſo the word Jeſus; and which is likewiſe omitted by the Vulgate Latin, though the other is retained: no man eat fruit of thee hereafter for ever; which is all one, as if he had ſaid, as the other Evangeliſt does, let no fruit grow on thee; for where no fruit is, none can be had, or eaten of. This tree may not only be an emblem of the Jewiſh people, who made a great ſhow of religion, and enjoyed a great many privileges; and from whom, ſpeaking after the manner of men, the fruits of good works, righteouſneſs, and holineſs, might have been hoped and looked for; when inſtead thereof, there was nothing but talk about them, and an obſervance of ſome inſignificant rites and traditions of the elders; on which account, utter ruin and deſtruction enſued; but alſo of any outward profeſſor of religion, who enjoying the means of grace, and making great pretenſions to devotion and piety, it might be expected that he ſhould do good works, well pleaſing to God, and bring forth fruit to the glory of his name: whereas he only talks of good works, but does none; at leaſt, no fruits of grace and righteouſneſs, are to be found on him; and at the laſt day, he'll be caſt as dry wood, as a withered branch, into everlaſting burnings, being fit fuel for them. And his diſciples heard it; this ſaying, as the Perſic verſion adds, and took notice of it, being in company with him.

Ver. 15. And they came to Jeruſalem, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, he came; that is, Chriſt; but not alone, for his diſciples were with him: Beza ſays, that one exemplar he had met with, adds again, and ſo one of Stephens's copies; for they had been there the day before: and Jeſus went into the temple; the Syriac and Perſic verſions add, of God; into the court of the Gentiles, as he did the preceding day: and began to caſt out them that bought and ſold in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money-changers, and the ſeats of them that ſold doves; which was done, as Matthew relates, the ſame day that he made his publick entry into Jeruſalem: wherefore it is highly probable, that upon Chriſt's leaving the city, they returned again, and were the next morning ſitting and trafficking in the temple as before; and were drove out again by Chriſt, who, upon his return, found them there. They that bought and ſold in the temple, were thoſe that bought and ſold lambs for the paſſover, which was now at hand; and the ſheep and oxen for the Chagiga, or feaſt the day following; as well as doves hereafter mentioned, for lying-in women, and ſuch as had fluxes: and that part of the temple where this traffick was carried on, was in a large ſpace within the area of the temple, where ſhops were built for that purpoſe: and by the money-changers, whoſe tables are ſaid to be overthrown, are meant, ſuch as ſat at tables to receive the half ſhekel; who changed thoſe that brought whole ſhekels, or foreign money; and who had ſo much for changing, which was called Kolbon; from whence they had the name of Collybiſtæ, in the text: and doves, as before obſerved, were the offering of the poorer ſort of women after lying-in, at the time of their purification, and of profluvious perſons; of which many came from all parts, at the time of the paſſover: upon which account, there was a great demand for theſe creatures; and many ſat upon ſeats to ſell them, which Chriſt overturned; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 12.

Ver. 16. And would not ſuffer that any man, &c.] He was more ſtrict and ſevere than the day before; and gave orders, that they ſhould be ſo far from being allowed to ſit and trade in that ſacred place, that no man ſhould carry any veſſel through the temple; ſhould make a thoroughfare of it, by carrying through to any other place, any veſſel that was for common uſe, or any ſort of burden whatever: and this they could not well find fault with, nor complain of, ſince it was agreeable to one of their own canons; for they ſay[b], "a man may not go into the mountain of the houſe, with his ſtaff (in his hands;) nor with ſhoes (on his feet;) nor with his girdle, and his money in it; nor with a bag thrown over his ſhoulders; nor with duſt upon his feet; nor might he make it, קפנדריא, a thoroughfare, and much leſs ſpit in it."

Ver. 17. And he taught, ſaying unto them, is it not written, &c.] In Iſa. lvi. 7. My houſe ſhall be called of all nations, the houſe of prayer? For not only the Jews went up to the temple to pray, ſee Luke xviii. 10. but the Gentiles alſo, who became of the Jewiſh religion, and had a court built for that purpoſe; and ſo the whole temple, from hence, was called an houſe of prayer: and the meaning is, not only that it ſhould be called ſo by the Gentiles, but that it ſhould be ſo to them, and made uſe of by them as ſuch. Jarchi's note on the clauſe in Iſa. lvi. 7. is, "not for Iſrael only, but alſo for the proſelytes." But ye have made it a den of thieves; for no other, in our Lord's eſteem, were the buyers and ſellers of ſheep, oxen, and doves, and the money-changers, and the prieſts that encouraged them, and had a profit out of them: now theſe had their ſeats, ſhops, and tables, within the mountain of the houſe; and even in that part of it, which was aſſigned to the Gentiles, the nations of the world, who became proſelytes, and came up to Jeruſalem to worſhip there at certain times; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 13.

Ver. 18. And the Scribes and chief prieſts heard it, &c.] The reproof he gave to the money-changers, and buyers, and ſellers in the temple; and his ſtrict prohibition that none ſhould carry any veſſels through it; and the argument he uſed from the prophecy of Iſaiah, and the ſharp rebuke he gave for the profanation of the holy place: and ſought how they might deſtroy him: they took counſel together to take away his life, for they hated reformation: for they feared him; leſt he ſhould go on to make great changes and alterations among them, which would affect their credit and character, and their gains alſo, and draw the people after him: becauſe all the people were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine; both as to the matter of it, which were ſuch words as never man ſpake; and as to the manner of it, being with ſuch majeſty, power, and authority, as the Scribes and Phariſees taught not with; and alſo at the miracles, by which it was confirmed, as well as at the reformation and diſcipline he was introducing; which was done with ſuch an air of ſovereignty and power, as was amazing.

Ver. 19. And when even was come, he went out of the city, &c.] Of Jeruſalem, as he did the evening before, and for the ſame reaſons: probably he went to Bethany, where he had lodged the laſt night, with Lazarus, Martha, and Mary; or to the mount of Olives, where he ſometimes ſpent the night in prayer: the Syriac verſion renders it, they went out; for Chriſt took his diſciples with him, as is evident from the following verſe.

Ver. 20. And in the morning as they paſſed by, &c.] The fig-tree; when they returned the next morning from Bethany, or the mount of Olives, or the place wherever it was, they had been that night: they ſaw the fig-tree dried up from the roots; they did not ſee it immediately wither as it did, nor could they ſee it, as they went from Jeruſalem to this place, becauſe it was then in the evening; but in the morning as they came along, they obſerved it; not only that the tender branches and boughs of it, but the trunk and body of the tree, and even the roots of it, were all dried up; ſo that it was entirely dead, and there was no room ever to expect it would revive, and bear any more fruit.

Ver. 21. And Peter calling to remembrance, &c.] Not ſo much the tree, and its ſpreading leaves, and the greatneſs of it, and the flouriſhing condition it was in, the other day, as the imprecation of Chriſt upon it: ſaith unto him, Maſter, behold the fig-tree which thou curſedſt, is withered away; which he obſerved, as matter of aſtoniſhment, and as an inſtance of Chriſt's ſurprizing power and authority; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 20.

Ver. 22. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaith unto them, &c.] To all the diſciples; for what Peter ſaid, he ſaid in the name of them all; and according to Matthew, the diſciples ſaid, how ſoon is the fig-tree withered away? To which this is an anſwer; though the Arabic verſion renders it, to him; as if the words were directed particularly to Peter: hav fait

[b] Miſn. Beracot, c. 9. §. 5. Vid. T. Bab. Beracot, fol. 62. 2. & Yebamot, fol. 6. 2. & Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 70. 3. & Ma
mon. Hilch. Beth Habbechira, c. 7. §. 1, 2, 3.

faith in God; or the faith of God, ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; that is, exerciſe, and make uſe of that faith which has God for its author, which is the work of God, and of his operation, a free-grace gift of his; and which has God for its object; and is ſupported by his power, and encouraged by his goodneſs, truth, and faithfulneſs: and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, believe in God; not only that ſuch things may be done, as the drying up a fig-tree, but thoſe that are much greater.

Ver. 23. For verily I ſay unto you, that whoſoever ſhall ſay unto this mountain, &c.] The mount of Olives, at, or near which they now were, be thou removed, and be thou caſt into the ſea; that is, of Galilee, which was neareſt, and yet many miles off: and ſhall not doubt in his heart, but ſhall believe that thoſe things which he ſaith ſhall come to paſs; not only as to removing a mountain, and caſting it into the ſea, but any thing equally difficult; he ſhall have whatſoever he ſaith: whatever he commands ſhall be done; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 21.

Ver. 24. Therefore I ſay unto you, &c.] For encouragement in prayer more particularly, without which nothing ſhould be attempted, and eſpecially which is above the power of nature, and is of a miraculous kind: whatſoever things ye deſire when ye pray; that is, according to the revealed will of God, is for the confirmation of his Goſpel, and for the glory of his name: believe that ye receive them, and ye ſhall have them; the petitions that are deſired, and the things aſked in them: that is, be as much aſſured of having them, as if you had already received them, and you ſhall have them; for the ſenſe can never be, that they ſhould believe they received them before they had them; this would be a contradiction in terms; and Beza's ancient copy, and one of Stephens's copies read it, believe that ye ſhall receive, as in Matt. xxi. 22. and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion; with which agree the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, which render it, believe that ye ſhall enjoy, or obtain; and the Syriac verſion, believe that ye are about to receive; and great faith it is ſo to believe; and this is the prayer of faith; ſee 1 John v. 14, 15.

Ver. 25. And when ye ſtand praying, &c.] Are about to engage in that work, or are engaged in it, performing it in ſuch a poſture; for ſtanding was an uſual poſture in praying; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 5. forgive, if ye have ought againſt any, that your father alſo in heaven may forgive you your treſpaſſes. The ſenſe is, that if, while a man is praying, it comes into his mind that ſuch an one has committed a treſpaſs againſt him, has done him an injury, of which he has juſt reaſon to complain; but inſtead of complaining of it before God, and calling upon him to avenge his cauſe, he ſhould immediately in his heart, and from his heart, forgive him, even tho' he is not preſent to acknowledge his ſin, and aſk his pardon; and ſuch an one may expect forgiveneſs of God, and a manifeſtation of it to his ſoul; which is one of the things he is conſtantly praying for, as his daily caſe makes it neceſſary: not that it is to be underſtood as tho' his forgiving the perſon that has offended him, is the cauſe, or condition, of his receiving remiſſion of ſin at the hand of God; for then it would not be thro' the blood of Chriſt, and according to the riches of his grace; but this points at a temper and diſpoſition of mind well-pleaſing to God, and deſcribes perſons who may expect this favour from him; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 14.

Ver. 26. But if ye do not forgive, &c.] Freely and fully, ſuch as have treſpaſſed againſt you, remit the debts they owe, and paſs by the offences and injuries done you, and put up with every affront and indignity: neither will your heavenly father forgive your treſpaſſes; that is, ſuch perſons don't appear to have any true, or right notions of forgiveneſs; nor is there any evidence that their hearts are duly affected, or truly impreſſed with a ſenſe of it; nor can they, upon their own principles and conduct, expect it: not but that to whomſoever God ſtands in the relation of a father, and they are his children by adopting grace; theſe he pities and pardons, for Chriſt's ſake; the ſame covenant which contains the bleſſing of adoption, provides for pardoning mercy, and a non-remembrance of ſin; the ſame perſons that are predeſtinated to the adoption of children by Chriſt, and whom he has redeemed, that they might receive it, have the forgiveneſs of their ſins, according to the riches of God's grace; for redemption and forgiveneſs of ſins go together; and as many as are the children of God by faith in Chriſt, by the ſame faith receive the remiſſion of ſins; and without a view of pardon thro' the blood of Chriſt, a child of God can't draw nigh to its heavenly father, with that boldneſs, and chearfulneſs, and filial fear it ſhould; but there is forgiveneſs with him, that he may be feared; to whomſoever God ſtands in the relation of a Covenant-God and Father, to them he manifeſts himſelf as a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin: unleſs the word Father here is not to be taken for ſuch a ſpecial relation of grace, but only as expreſſive of him as the God of nature and providence, who has made, and takes care of all his creatures; in which ſenſe he is the Father of all; as it is ſaid, have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? Mal. ii. 10. and ſo our heavenly father, or our father which is in heaven, may be ſo called only from the place where he dwells; and not from the grace he beſtows on men, making them partakers of his heavenly gifts and calling, and bleſſing them in heavenly places, or things in Chriſt Jeſus: in the former view of him it will not neceſſarily follow, that he does forgive ſin, whereas under the latter conſideration of him it will; for forgiveneſs is one of the heavenly gifts and things which he bleſſes his children with; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 15.

Ver. 27. And they come again to Jeruſalem, &c.] The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, he came, which muſt be underſtood with his diſciples; for they never parted from him till he was apprehended in the garden. Luke ſays, ch. xx. 1. that it was on one of thoſe days; and the Perſic verſion here reads, on another day: it was the day after the curſing of the fig-tree, and two days after his publick entrance into Jeruſalem: and as he was walking in the temple; not alone, but his diſciples with him, and a multitude of people, whom he was teaching and preaching the Goſpel to, as he walked to and fro; and whilſt he was there employed, there come to him the chief-prieſts, and the Scribes, and the elders; the Jewiſh Sanhedrim; for of theſe, that great council of the nation conſiſted; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 23.

Ver. 28. And ſay unto him, by what authority doſt thou do theſe things? &c.] Enter into the temple, as if he was Lord of it; and correct in ſuch a magiſterial way every thing he thought an abuſe in it; do the miracles he did, as healing the lame, and blind; and take upon him to inſtruct the people, ple, a work he was now engaged in: and who gave thee this authority to do theſe things? ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 23.

Ver. 29. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Being not in the leaſt intimidated by ſuch a body of men: I will alſo aſk of you one queſtion; or one word, or one thing; λογος, here anſwers to the Hebrew word דבר, which ſignifies both word and thing: and anſwer me, and I will tell you by what authority I do theſe things; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 24.

Ver. 30. The baptiſm of John, &c.] The doctrine of which he was the firſt preacher, and the ordinance of which he was the firſt adminiſtrator: was it from heaven, or of men? was it of divine, or of human inſtitution? anſwer me; directly and plainly, without any ſhuffling, or evaſion: 'tis a fair queſtion, and may be anſwered; and the anſwer to it our Lord ſuggeſts would naturally lead to a proper one to their queſtion; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 25.

Ver. 31. And they reaſoned with themſelves, ſaying, &c.] Privately; perhaps, they withdrew at a little diſtance for a ſhort time, and conſulted among themſelves what anſwer to return; and the amount of their reaſonings were this; if we ſhall ſay from heaven, he will ſay, why then did ye not believe him? that is, ſhould they ſay that John had a divine commiſſion for what he ſaid and did, they were aware that Chriſt would reply, why did not ye give credit to him? and had you done ſo, ſeeing he teſtified of me, you would have had no occaſion to have put the above queſtion; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 25.

Ver. 32. But if we ſhall ſay, of men, &c.] That John's baptiſm was an human invention, and he had no authority from God to preach and adminiſter it, they feared the people; leſt being enraged thereby they ſhould, at once, riſe up, and deſtroy them: for all men counted John that he was a prophet indeed; a real prophet, one truly ſent from God, and had his commiſſion and credentials from him: this was the general ſentiment of the people; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 26.

Ver. 33. And they anſwered and ſaid unto Jeſus, &c.] Being reduced by this dilemma to the greateſt ſtreight and difficulty; we cannot tell: they could, if they would, but they did not care to tell; they knew if they did, they ſhould expoſe themſelves, one way or another: and Jeſus anſwering, ſaith unto them, neither do I tell you by what authority I do theſe things; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 27.

CHAP. XII.

Ver. 1. AND he began to ſpeak unto them by parables, &c.] As of the two ſons the father bid go to work in the vineyard; and of the planting of a vineyard, and letting it out to huſbandmen, as here; tho' the latter is only related by this Evangeliſt, yet both are by Matthew. This was not the firſt time of his ſpeaking by parables to the people, though it might be the firſt time he ſpake in this way to the chief-prieſts and elders, and who are particularly deſigned in them. A certain man planted a vineyard. The Perſic verſion adds, with many trees; that is, with vines, tho' ſometimes other trees, as fig-trees, were planted in vineyards; ſee Luke xiii. 6. This man is, by the Evangeliſt Matthew, called an houſholder; by whom is meant God the Father, as diſtinguiſhed from his Son, he is afterward ſaid to ſend: and by the vineyard, planted by him, is meant the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts, the men of Iſrael, Iſ. v. 1, 7. and ſet an hedge about it, or wall, as the Perſic verſion renders it; meaning either the law, not the Jews oral law, or the traditions of the elders, which were not of God's ſetting, but the ceremonial and moral law; or the wall of protection by divine power, which was ſet around the Jewiſh nation, eſpecially when they went up to their ſolemn feaſts. And digged a place for the wine-fat. The Syriac and Arabic verſions add, in it; and the Perſic verſion, in the vineyard; for this was made in the vineyard, where they trod and ſqueezed the grapes when gathered; and may deſign the altar in the houſe of the Lord, where the libations, or drink-offerings, were poured out; and built a tower. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions add, in it; for this alſo was built in the vineyard, and may intend either the city of Jeruſalem; or the temple in it, the watch-houſe where the prieſts watched, and did their ſervice, day and night. And let it out to huſbandmen; or workmen, as the Arabic verſion renders it, who wrought in it, and took care of the vines. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and ſet over it a worker and keeper of the vineyard; by whom are meant the prieſts and levites, to whom were committed the care of the people, with reſpect to religious things: and went into a far country; left the people of the Jews to theſe huſbandmen, or rulers, whether civil or eccleſiaſtical, but chiefly the latter, to be inſtructed and directed by them, according to the laws and rules given them by the Lord; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 33.

Ver. 2. And at the ſeaſon he ſent unto the huſbandman a ſervant, &c.] The Evangeliſt Matthew ſays, when the time of the fruit drew near; and ſo the Perſic verſion here reads. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, in its own time, or ſeaſon, which was the fourth year from the planting of it; and then it was holy to the Lord; and might not be eaten until the fifth year, Lev. xix. 23, 24, 25. According to the Jewiſh canons[1], a vineyard of the fourth year was marked with clods of earth, to ſhow it was not to be eaten of; and the fruit of it was brought up to Jeruſalem, from every place that was but a day's journey from thence, there to be eat, or redeemed. Now by the ſervant are intended the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who were ſent to the Jews to call upon them to bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs; for not a ſingle perſon, but a ſett of men are here deſigned; and the Evangeliſt Matthew expreſſes it in the plural number, ſervants: that he might receive from the huſbandmen the fruit of the vineyard; by the hands of his ſervants; for in Matthew it is, that they might receive, &c. ſuch as righteouſneſs and judgment, truth and holineſs, ſo as to give an account of them, which might have been expected from a people under ſuch advantages, Iſ. v. 7. ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 34.

Ver. 3. And they caught him, &c.] This clauſe is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, tho' it ſeems proper to be retained; and denotes the rudeneſs and violence with which the prophets of the Lord were uſed by the Jewiſh nation: and beat him; either with their fiſts, or with rods, and ſcourges, till the ſkin was flead off: and ſent him away empty; without any fruit to carry with him, or give an account of, to the owner of the vineyard.

Ver. 4. And again he ſent unto them another ſervant, &c.] Another ſett of good men, to inſtruct, adviſe, and counſel them, and exhort them to their duty; ſuch as were Iſaiah, Zechariah, and others: and at him they caſt ſtones, and wounded him in the head; for ſome of theſe were ſtoned, as well as ſawn aſunder, and ſlain with the ſword; though, it ſeems, that this ſervant, or this ſett of men, were not ſtoned to death, becauſe he was afterwards ſaid to be ſent away: nor could the ſtoning be what was done by the order of the Sanhedrim, which was done by letting an heavy ſtone fall upon the heart[k]; but this was done by all the people, by the outragious zealots, in the manner Stephen was ſtoned. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, the uſual ſenſe of the Greek word may be retained; which ſignifies to reduce, or gather into a certain ſum: and ſo as this ſervant was ſent to reckon with theſe huſbandmen, and take an account from them of the fruit of the vineyard, one caſt a ſtone at him, ſaying, there's fruit for you; and a ſecond caſt another ſtone, ſaying the ſame thing; and ſo they went on one after another, till at laſt they ſaid, in a deriding way, now the ſum is made up with you: and ſent him away ſhamefully handled; with great ignominy and reproach.

Ver. 5. And again he ſent another, &c.] That is, another ſervant, or ſett of men; it may be in the times of the Maccabees, who were uſed in a very inhuman manner; ſee Heb. xi. 37, 38. and him they killed; either with the ſword, or by inflicting ſome capital puniſhment, as ſtoning, ſtrangling, &c. and many others; that is, either the owner of the vineyard ſent many other ſervants, or the huſbandmen ill uſed many others that were ſent to them: beating ſome; with their hands, or with ſcourges; and killing ſome; in one or other of the above ways.

Ver. 6. Having yet therefore one ſon, his wellbeloved, &c.] The Meſſiah, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the one, and only Son of God his Father, his only-begotten Son, for he has no other Son in the ſame way of filiation; and who is his dear Son, the Son of his love, who was loved by him before the foundation of the world; and whom he declared to be his beloved Son, both at his baptiſm, and at his transfiguration upon the mount, by a voice from heaven: this Son he having with him, in his boſom, as one brought up with him, and rejoicing before him, he ſent him alſo laſt unto them; after all the prophets had been with them, when the laſt days were come, the end of the Jewiſh ſtate, civil and eccleſiaſtical; ſee Heb. i. 1. ſaying, they will reverence my Son. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read, perhaps they will reverence my Son, as in Luke xx. 13. ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 37.

Ver. 7. But thoſe huſbandmen ſaid among themſelves, &c.] This, in the Perſic verſion, is introduced thus, when the vine-dreſſers ſaw the Son of the Lord of the vineyard; agreeable to Matt. xxi. 38. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and the ſervants ſaid; not the ſervants that had been ſent, but the workmen in the vineyard: this is the heir; that is, of the vineyard, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it: they knew him by the propheſies of the Old Teſtament which had deſcribed him, and by the miracles which were wrought by him; and they could not deny but that the vineyard of the houſe of Judah belonged to him, and he was right heir to the throne of Iſrael; tho' they refuſed to embrace him, confeſs him, and declare for him: but, on the other hand, ſaid, come, let us kill him, and the inheritance ſhall be ours; that is, the vineyard, as the Perſic verſion again reads. The prieſts, Scribes, and elders of the people conſulted together to take away his life, with this view; that they might continue in the quiet poſſeſſion of their nation, temple, and worſhip, in the office they bore, and in the privileges they partook of; and that the Romans might not come, and take away their place and nation, John xi. 47, 48. ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 38.

Ver. 8. And they took him, and killed him, and caſt him out of the vineyard.] They ſent their officers and ſervants, and apprehended him in the garden; they delivered him to the Gentiles, who were without the vineyard, and by whom, at their inſtigation, he was put to death, even to the death of the croſs. The Ethiopic verſion reads it in the ſame order as in Matthew; they caſt him out of the vineyard, and killed him; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 39.

Ver. 9. What ſhall therefore the Lord of the vineyard do? &c.] The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions add, to them; that is, to the huſbandmen, as is expreſſed in Matt. xxi. 40. ſee the note there: he will come and deſtroy the huſbandmen, and will give the vineyard unto others. As the former clauſe contains a queſtion put by Chriſt upon his having finiſhed the parable, this is an anſwer to it, given by the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, in whoſe preſence, and for whoſe ſake it was delivered; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 41.

Ver. 10. And have ye not read this ſcripture? &c.] In Pſ. cxviii. 22, 23. theſe are the words of Chriſt, directed to the above perſons, who were, many of them, teachers of the people, and therefore ought to have read the ſcriptures, and have taken notice of, and conſidered more eſpecially ſuch as reſpected the Meſſiah, as this paſſage did, and was very appoſite to the caſe in the parable Chriſt had reſpect unto: the ſtone which the builders rejected, is become the head of the corner: by the ſtone is meant the ſame with the ſon and heir in the parable, even himſelf, the true Meſſiah; and by the builders, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, the ſame with the huſbandmen, whoſe rejection of the ſtone, or of the Meſſiah, is ſignified by their ſeizing him, caſting him out of the vineyard, and killing him; and yet notwithſtanding all this, according to this ſcripture, he was to be, and now is become, the head of the corner, exalted above angels and men, at the right hand of God; ſee the note on Matt. xxi. 42.

Ver. 11. This was the Lord's doing, and it is marvellous in our eyes.] That is, the exaltation of the Meſſiah, after he had been ſo ill treated, and at laſt put to death by the Jews. Theſe words are a continuation of the paſſage cited out of the cxviiith pſalm.

Ver. 12. They ſought to lay hold on him, &c.] That is, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, after they had heard the parables he ſpake to them, were greatly irritated, and provoked, and had a good will to have ſeized him, and carried him away, and have had him before their court, and condemn him: but feared the people; leſt they ſhould riſe up in his defence, and fall on them; for many of them liked, and were attached to his miniſtery; and others had received favours of one kind or another from him thro' his miracles: for they knew that he had ſpoken the parable againſt them; and that they were the huſbandmen deſigned, who had not brought the fruit of the vineyard to their Lord, but had ill treated his ſervants, and would his ſon. And they left him; in the temple, not daring to do any thing to him: and went their way; to their council-chamber, perhaps to conſult what meaſures to take, and how to deſtroy him.

[k] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 6. §. 4.

Ver. 13. And they ſend unto him, &c.] That is, the chief-prieſts, Scribes, and elders, who had been with Jeſus in the temple, and were ſilenced by his reaſonings, and provoked by his parables; and therefore left him, and went together to conſult what methods they ſhould take to get him into their hands, and be revenged on him; the reſult of which was, they ſend to him certain of the Phariſees. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read Scribes, who were the more ſkilful and learned part of that body of men, and ſcrupled paying tribute to Cæſar, he being an Heathen prince, and they the Lord's free people: and of the Herodians; who were, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, of the houſhold of Herod; his ſervants and courtiers, and conſequently in the intereſt of Cæſar, under whom Herod held his government, and muſt be for paying tribute to him: theſe two parties, of ſuch different ſentiments, they ſent to him, to catch him in his words; or in word, or diſcourſe; either with their word, the queſtion they ſhould put to him, or with his word, the anſwer he ſhould return: and ſo the Ethiopic verſion ſupplies it, reading it, with his own word; they thought they ſhould unavoidably catch him, one way or other; juſt as a prey is hunted, and taken in a net or ſnare, as the word uſed ſignifies: for if he declared againſt giving tribute to Cæſar, the Herodians would have whereof to accuſe him, and the Phariſees would be witneſſes againſt him; and if he ſhould be for it, the latter would expoſe him among the people, as an enemy to their civil liberties, and one that was for ſubjecting them to the Roman yoke, and conſequently could not be the Meſſiah and deliverer they expected; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 16.

Ver. 14. And when they were come, &c.] Unto Jeſus in the temple: they ſaid unto him, maſter; they ſaluted him in like manner, as they did their doctors and Rabbins, calling him Rabbi, tho' they were not his diſciples; but one part of them were the diſciples of the Phariſees, and the other had Herod for their maſter: we know that thou art true; an honeſt, ſincere, and upright man, and careſt for no man, for thou regardeſt not the perſon of men; no, not Cæſar himſelf; but teacheſt the way of God in truth; inſtructeſt men in the word, will, and worſhip of God, with all integrity and faithfulneſs; anſwer therefore this queſtion, is it lawful to give tribute to Cæſar or not? The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, head-money; and ſo it is read in Beza's moſt ancient copy; a tax that was levied on the heads of families, or on every particular head in a family; ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 16, 17.

Ver. 15. Shall we give, or not give? &c.] They not only aſk whether it was lawful, but whether alſo it was adviſeable to do it, that they might not only accuſe him of his principles, but charge him with perſuading, or diſſuading in this caſe. Theſe words are left out in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: but he knowing their hypocriſy; expreſſed in their flattering titles and characters of him, and which lay hid in their ſecret deſigns againſt him; which being thoroughly known to him, ſaid unto them, why tempt ye me? bring me a penny, that I may ſee it; what it is, that is required for tribute; ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 18, 19.

Ver. 16. And they brought it, &c.] The penny, which was a Roman one, and worth ſeven-pence half-penny of our money: and he ſaith unto them, whoſe is this image, and ſuperſcription? for it had the head of an emperor upon it, very likely the image of the then reigning emperor Tiberius, and a ſuperſcription on it, expreſſing his name, and perhaps a motto along with it: and they ſaid unto him, Cæſar's; one of the Roman emperors, Auguſtus, or Tiberius; moſt probably the latter; ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 20, 21.

Ver. 17. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, &c.] Very wiſely and pertinently, render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's; or to the king, which are the king's, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it: and to God the things that are God's; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 21. and they marvelled at him; at his wiſdom and prudence in returning ſuch an anſwer, which cut off all occaſion againſt him.

Ver. 18. Then came unto him the Sadducees, &c.] The ſame day, immediately after he had ſilenced the Phariſees and Herodians: theſe were a ſett of men diſtinct from the former, in ſome of their ſentiments, eſpecially in their religious ones, and particularly in the following: which ſay there is no reſurrection; of the dead, in a literal ſenſe, either general or particular; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 23. and they aſked him, ſaying; as in the next verſe.

Ver. 19. Maſter, Moſes wrote unto us, &c.] Has left in writing for us the following precept to obſerve; for they acknowledged the writings of Moſes, and indeed all the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament; adhering to the literal ſenſe of them, and rejecting the traditional interpretation of them by the Rabbins: if a man's brother die, and leave no children, that his brother ſhould take his wife, and raiſe up ſeed unto his brother; which is the ſenſe of the law in Deut. xxv. 5. ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 24.

Ver. 20. Now there were ſeven brethren, &c.] In a certain family, at a certain place; perhaps at Jeruſalem, who were brethren by the father's ſide; for ſuch only were reckoned ſo, and ſuch only did this law oblige: and the firſt took a wife, and dying left no ſeed; no child: hence it's clear that the ancient Jews uſed the word ſeed, of a ſingle perſon, as theſe Sadducees did; though modern ones deny ſuch an uſe of it in our preſent controverſies with them about the ſenſe of Gen. iii. 15. and xxii. 18. ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 25.

Ver. 21. The ſecond took her, &c.] To wife, married her, as the next eldeſt brother, by the above law was obliged to: and ſo the Jewiſh[l] canon upon it runs thus; "the command is, בגדול, for "the eldeſt to marry his brother's wife: if he will "not, they go to all the brethren; if they will "not, they return to the eldeſt, and ſay, the com"mand is upon thee, either pluck off the ſhoe, "or marry." Maimonides[m] relates it in this manner; "if a man dies, and leaves many brethren, "the command is upon the eldeſt to marry, or "pull off the ſhoe; as it is ſaid, Deut. xxv. 6. "and it ſhall be the firſt-born which ſhe beareth. "From tradition 'tis learned, that it does not ſpeak "but of the firſt-born among the brethren; and "it is all one as if it was ſaid, the eldeſt of the "brethren ſhall ſucceed in the name of his brother "that is dead; and this is what is ſaid, which ſhe "beareth: the ſenſe is, which the mother has born, "and not which the brother's wife beareth; if the “ eldeſt will not marry her, they go round to all the brethren; and if they will not, they return to the eldeſt, and ſay, upon thee is the command, either pluck off the ſhoe, or marry; and they don't compel him to marry, but they compel him to pluck off the ſhoe;” i. e. in caſe he will not marry. And died, neither left he any ſeed, and the third likewiſe; married her, and died without iſſue, as the ſecond did. The Perſic verſion adds, and the fourth, and fifth; for ſo they all did to the ſeventh.

Ver. 22. And the ſeventh had her, and left no ſeed, &c.] All the ſeven brethren married her, one after another, and neither of them had any children by her: and laſt of all the woman died alſo; after all the ſeven brethren, to whom ſhe had been married.

Ver. 23. In the reſurrection therefore, when they ſhall riſe, &c.] This laſt clauſe, when they ſhall riſe, is omitted in two copies of Beza's, and in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, becauſe, perhaps, it might be thought ſuperfluous; but this is agreeable to the way of ſpeaking and writing with the Jews: ſo in the Targum on Zech. iii. 7. באחיות מיתיא אחינך, in the quickening of the dead I will quicken thee; or, in the reſurrection of the dead I will raiſe thee. The queſtion put on ſuppoſition of a reſurrection, and that theſe ſeven brethren, and the wife they all had ſhould riſe, then is, whoſe wife ſhall ſhe be of them? of the ſeven brethren; for the ſeven had her to wife. She was, according to law, the lawful wife of all ſeven; what particular and ſpecial claim could one have to her above the reſt? ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 28.

Ver. 24. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, &c.] Which they thought he was not able to do, but would have been ſilenced at once by them, as many of their antagoniſts had been: do ye not therefore err, becauſe ye know not the ſcriptures, neither the power of God? what is expreſſed in Matthew affirmatively, is here put by way of interrogation, which, with the Jews, was a more vehement way of affirming; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 29.

Ver. 25. For when they ſhall riſe from the dead, &c.] Theſe ſeven brethren, and the woman; and ſo any, and every other: they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; there will be no ſuch natural relation ſubſiſting, nor any need of any: but are as the angels which are in heaven; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 30.

Ver. 26. And as touching the dead, that they riſe, &c.] For the proof of the doctrine of the reſurrection of the dead, have ye not read in the book of Moſes; that is, in the law of Moſes; for though it was divided into five parts, it was but one book; juſt as the pſalms are called the book of pſalms, Acts i. 20. and the prophets, the book of the prophets, Acts vii. 42. The book of Exodus is particularly intended; for the paſſage referr'd to is in Exod. iii. 6. how in the buſh God ſpake unto him, or out of the buſh, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; ſaying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Iſaac, and the God of Jacob? ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 31, 32.

Ver. 27. He is not the God of the dead, &c.] This is our Lord's reaſoning upon the paſſage; ſhewing from hence, that ſince God is the God of theſe perſons, they muſt be now alive in their ſouls, for God is not the God of the dead; and that their bodies muſt riſe again, or he will not be the God of their whole perſons; but the God of the living: the word God, in this clauſe, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, but retained in the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 32. ye therefore do greatly err; ſignifying, that it was not a ſlight miſtake, an error of ſmall importance, but a very great one; inaſmuch as it was contrary to the ſcriptures, and derogated from the power of God, and deſtroyed that covenant-intereſt, which God has in his people, and particularly in the principal men of their nation, who were the fathers and founders of them.

Ver. 28. And one of the Scribes came, &c.] Matthew calls him a lawyer, an interpreter of the law, as a Scribe was: and having heard them reaſoning together; being preſent at the diſpute between Chriſt and the Sadducees, which he diligently attended to: and perceiving that he had anſwered them well; in a moſt beautiful manner. The Jews have adopted the very Greek word here uſed, and make uſe of it in the ſame ſenſe as אמר ליה קאלום [n], he anſwered him well; or, as the Gloſs upon it, praiſeworthily; in a manner deſerving praiſe; and is the ſame with שפיר קאמרת [o], thou haſt ſaid well, or beautifully; and ſo the anſwer here was with great ſolidity, and judgment, and ſtrength of argument, to their utter confuſion and ſilence; whereby he underſtood he had conſiderable knowledge in the law, and yet was willing to try if he could not puzzle him with a queſtion relating to it: aſked him, which is the firſt commandment of all? of all the commandments in the law, moral and ceremonial.

Ver. 29. Jeſus anſwered him, the firſt of all the commandments is, &c.] Chriſt replied at once, without taking any time to conſider of it, that the chief and principal of all the commands of the law, and what is of the greateſt importance is, hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord. The Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions read, one God; but the Syriac, and Ethiopic render it, one Lord; and that rightly, agreeable to the Greek text, and to Deut. vi. 4. from whence this is taken. This paſſage of ſcripture, to the end of the ninth verſe, is the firſt of the ſections which were put into their phylacteries; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 5. and was repeated twice every day, morning and evening; which is by the Jews called from the firſt word קריאת שמע, the reading of the Shema: concerning the exact time of the reciting of this, morning and evening, and of the poſture in which they do it, reclining in the evening, and ſtanding in the morning, and of the prayers before and after it, various rules are given in their Miſna [p], or oral law; it is a precept of great eſteem and veneration with them, and attended to with much ſolemnity. The account Maimonides [q] gives of it is this: “twice every day they read Keriath Shema (i. e. hear O Iſrael, &c.) in the evening and in the morning, as it is ſaid, Deut. vi. 7. When thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up; in the hour it is the cuſtom of men to lie down, and this is night; and in the hour it is the cuſtom of men to ſtand, and this is day: and what does he read? three ſections; and they are theſe, hear, &c. Deut. vi. 4. and it ſhall come to paſs if ye ſhall hearken, &c. Deut. xi. 13. and Moſes ſaid, &c. Exod. xiii. 3. and they read the ſection, hear O Iſrael firſt, becauſe there is in it the unity of God, and the love of him and his doctrine; for it is, העקר הגדול, the great root, or foundation, on which all hangs or depends.” And it is obſervable, that the laſt letter of the word hear, and the laſt of the word one, are both written in very large characters in the Hebrew Bible, to denote the greatneſs of the command, and to cauſe attention to it. The Jews ſeek for myſteries in theſe letters, and think the unuſual ſize of them, points at ſome very great things: they obſerve, that the firſt of theſe letters is numerically ſeventy, and directs to the ſeventy names of the law, and the ſeventy ways in which it may be interpreted, and the ſeventy nations of the world, from whom the Iſraelites are diſtinguiſhed, by their belief of the one God; and that the latter ſtands for the number four, and ſhews that the Lord is the one God, in heaven and in earth, in all the world, and in the four parts of it; and that both theſe letters put together, make a word, which ſignifies a witneſs; ſhewing that this paſſage is a glorious teſtimony of the unity of God, and that the Iſraelites are witneſſes of it, by believing and profeſſing it; and that ſhould they depart from the faith of it, God would be a witneſs againſt them: and now, though there is no ſolid foundation for ſuch interpretations, yet this ſhows what an opinion they had of the greatneſs of this command; to which may be added, they aſk [s], "why does, "hear O Iſrael, &c. go before that paſſage in Deut. "xi. 13. And it ſhall come to paſs, if ye ſhall hearken "diligently unto my commandments, &c. but becauſe "a man muſt take upon him, firſt the yoke of the "kingdom of heaven, and after that he muſt take "upon him the yoke of the commandments." The ſenſe is, that he muſt firſt make a confeſſion of his faith in God, which is contained in Deut. vi. 4. and then he muſt obey his commands; ſo that they plainly conſidered this, as the firſt and greateſt of all. Theſe words are frequent in the mouths of the modern Jews, in proof of the unity of God, and againſt a plurality in the deity; but the ancient ones, not only conſider them as a good and ſufficient proof, that there is but one God, but as expreſſive of a trinity in the Godhead: with a view to this text they obſerve [t], that "Jehovah, our God, "Jehovah; theſe are, תלת דרגין, three degrees (or "perſons) with reſpect to this ſublime myſtery, in "the beginning, God, or Elohim, created, &c." And again [u], "there is an unity which is called "Jehovah the firſt, our God, Jehovah; behold! "they are all one, and therefore called one: lo! "theſe three names are as one; and although "we call them one, and they are one; but by "the revelation of the Holy Ghoſt it is made "known, and they are by the ſight of the eye to "be known, that theſe three are one (ſee 1 John v. 7.) "and this is the myſtery of the voice that is heard; "the voice is one; and there are three things, fire, "and wind, and water, and they are all one, in "the myſtery of the voice, and they are not but "one: ſo here, Jehovah, our God, Jehovah, "theſe, תלתא גוונין, three modes, forms, or things, "are one." Once more they [w] ſay, "there are "two, and one is joined to them, and they are "three; and when they are three, they are one: "theſe are the two names of hear O Iſrael, which "are Jehovah, Jehovah, and Elohenu, or our "God, is joined unto them; and it is the ſeal of "the ring of truth." To which I ſhall ſubjoin one paſſage more, where R. Eliezer is aſking his father R. Simeon ben Jochai, why Jehovah is ſometimes called Elohim, he replies [x], among other things; "come ſee, there are, ג דרגין, three degrees, (or "perſons) and every degree is by itſelf; although "they are all one, and bound together in one, and "one is not ſeparated from another." To believe this, is the firſt and chief commandment in the law, and is the principal article of the chriſtian faith; namely, to believe that there is one God, and that there are three perſons, Father, Son, and Spirit, in the Godhead.

Ver. 30. And thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God, &c.] Which is to be underſtood of the one God, Father, Son, and Spirit; for all the three divine perſons are to be equally loved, being poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections and excellencies, and having done the ſame works, and having beſtowed like benefits and favours upon men: and though there is now no principle of love to God in men; but, on the contrary, men are enemies to God in their minds, which appears by their wicked works; yet this commandment is ſtill in force, and the obligation to it is the ſame; the fall of man, the corruption of nature, and the impotency, and even averſion in man to obſerve this command, do not make it null and void: and in regeneration, when God puts his laws into the heart, and writes them in the mind; love is produced in ſuch perſons, to God the Father, who has begotten them again, according to his abundant mercy; and to Chriſt, who has ſaved them from their ſins; and to the bleſſed Spirit, who has quickened and comforted them: and this love is in ſome meaſure exerciſed as it ſhould be, and as here directed to, with all thy heart, and with all thy ſoul, and with all thy mind; that is, with all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; or with the affections, as under the influence and guidance of the more noble faculties of the ſoul, the mind, the underſtanding, judgment, and will: it is added here, which is not in Matthew, and with all thy ſtrength; which anſwers to the phraſe in Deut. vi. 5. with all thy might; that is, with the greateſt vehemency of affection, in the ſtrongeſt expreſſions of it, and with all the ſtrength of grace a man has. This paſſage follows the former in Deut. vi. 5. and is what is only cited in Matt. xxii. 37. ſee the note there.

Ver. 31. And the ſecond is like, &c.] Unto it, as in Matt. xxii. 39. and ſo it is read here in two ancient copies of Beza's, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; namely this, thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as thyſelf. This commandment ſtands in Lev. xix. 18. and reſpects not an Iſraelite only, or one of the ſame religion with a man's ſelf, or his intimate friend and acquaintance, or one that lives in the ſame neighbourhood; but any man whatever, to whom affection ſhould be ſhown, and good ſhould be done to him, and for him, as a man would have done to and for himſelf; as much as lies in his power, both in things temporal and ſpiritual; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 39. There is none other commandment greater than theſe; in the whole law, moral or ceremonial; not the ſabbath, nor circumciſion, nor the phylacteries, nor the fringes on the borders of the garments, nor any other.

Ver. 32. And the Scribe ſaid unto him, &c.] This reply of the Scribe, is not related by Matthew; well, Maſter, thou haſt ſaid the truth; what tho haſt ſaid is truth, and thou haſt expreſſed it in moſt beautiful manner: the Scribe was charme with his anſwer, and could not forbear ſpeaking i commendation of it, and even before the multitud and thoſe of his own ſect: this was a rare and u common inſtance; it was not uſual with the Scrib and Phariſees, whatever convictions they were laid under, either by the miracles or diſcourſes of Chriſt, to own any thing, or make any conceſſions in his favour, or ſpeak in his praiſe; but this man not only commends him, but gives reaſons for it, and confirms the doctrine he taught in his own words; for there is one God, and there is none other but he. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the word God; but it is in the Greek copies, and rightly retained in other verſions: for the ſenſe is, that there is one God, and but one; and which is perfectly agreeable to the chriſtian doctrine, of a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; for though the Father is God, the Son is God, and the Holy Spirit is God, yet there are not three Gods, but one God. Nor are we to imagine, that this man ſaid or thought any thing to the contrary, or had it in his mind to oppoſe the doctrine of the Trinity; which, though more clearly revealed in the New Teſtament, was not unknown to the ancient Jews, and might be learned from the writings of the Old Teſtament: but this he ſaid, in oppoſition to the many idols, and fictitious deities of the Gentiles; and if he ſpake in the Hebrew language, as it is probable he did, there muſt be a beautiful paranomaſia in his words; for there is, אחד, Achad, one God; and there is none, אחר, Achar, other but he: and it is obſerved by a Jewiſh writer [y], that the reaſon why the laſt letter of, אחד, one, is greater than the reſt, as before obſerved, in ver. 29. is, that there might be no miſtake of ד for ר, which are much alike; and if miſtook, the word would ſignify another, and not one: but this is done, leſt a man ſhould miſtake, and worſhip another, and not the one God.

Ver. 33. And to love him with all the heart, &c.] That is, the one God, with a ſincere hearty love and affection; and with all the underſtanding; of his being, perfections, and works, which will ſerve to draw the affections to him: this clauſe anſwers to that, with all thy mind, in ver. 30. and with all the ſoul; with all the powers and faculties of it: and with all the ſtrength; a man has, or is given him; with all the vehemency and fervency of ſoul he is maſter of: and to love his neighbour as himſelf; which are the two great commandments of the law: is more than all whole-burnt-offerings and ſacrifices; that is, more excellent in their nature, more acceptable to God, and more uſeful among men, than all the rituals of the ceremonial law, than any ſacrifice whatever: for the two words here uſed, burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, include all offerings; as thoſe which were wholly conſumed upon the altar, and thoſe of which part was given to the prieſts; and all ſin-offerings, meat-offerings, and peace-offerings, and whatever elſe. This man had now at leaſt a different ſenſe of things, from the reſt of his brethren; who placed religion, chiefly in the obſervance of the rituals of the law, and the traditions of the elders; and neglected the duties of the moral law, reſpecting God and their neighbour; things which are to be preferred and attended to, before any ceremonial inſtitutions, and eſpecially the inventions of men. This entirely agrees with the ſenſe of the paſſage in Hoſ. vi. 6. For I deſired mercy and not ſacrifice; that is, willed and required, that men ſhould ſhew mercy to one another; or that every one ſhould love his neighbour as himſelf, and attend to this, rather than to the offering of any ceremonial ſacrifice; this being more delightful and well-pleaſing to God, than that; and the knowledge of God; of his unity, perfections, and glory more than burnt-offerings; which were entirely devoted to him: and it alſo agrees with the ancient ſentiments of the people of God; ſo Samuel ſays to Saul, Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? behold, to obey is better than ſacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams, 1 Sam. xv. 22. And yet it may be obſerved, that there is ſome likeneſs between theſe things, burnt-offerings and ſacrifices, and the love of God and love to our neighbour; though the latter, are greatly preferable to the former; true love to God, being no other than the offering up of the ſoul, as a whole burnt-offering to God, in the flames of love to him; and love to the neighbour, or doing good and communicating to him, is a ſacrifice well pleaſing to God.

Ver. 34. And when Jeſus ſaw that he anſwered diſcreetly, &c.] Wiſely and prudently, as a man of ſenſe and underſtanding; by taking in the ſeveral parts of our Lord's anſwer very diſtinctly, and reaſoning upon them, and confirming them: he ſaid unto him, thou art not far from the kingdom of God; not meaning from heaven, and eternal happineſs; for right and diſtinct notions of the above commandments, and even the performance of them by a ſinful and imperfect creature, can neither give a man a title to, or bring him near, or introduce him into the heavenly glory, which is a pure gift of God's grace: but our Lord's ſenſe is, that he was not far off from the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and was in a fair way of entering into it; his ſentiments were very near to ſuch, who became followers of Chriſt, and embraced the doctrines, and ſubmitted to the ordinances of the Goſpel-ſtate; ſince he preferred thoſe things, which related to the knowledge of the being and perfections of God, to the love and worſhip of God, and to the good of his neighbour, before the ceremonies of the law; which were quickly to be aboliſhed, and make way for the ſetting up of the kingdom of God, or of the Meſſiah, in a more glorious and viſible manner. Indeed there are ſome perſons, who ſeem not far off from the kingdom of God, in the other ſenſe of the phraſe, as it may reſpect eternal glory and happineſs, who will never enter into it: there are ſome that ſeem very devout and religious; hear the word, attend on all ordinances, join themſelves with a church, ſubmit to baptiſm, and ſit down at the Lord's table, and live a moral life and converſation, and yet are deſtitute of the grace of God; yea, there are ſome who have clear notions of the Goſpel, and make a bright profeſſion of it, and yet have no experience of the power of it upon their hearts, and have not the oil of grace there; and even hold this profeſſion to the end, and yet come ſhort of the kingdom and glory of our Lord Jeſus: ſuch are almoſt chriſtians, but not altogether; virgins, but fooliſh ones; have lamps, but no oil; come as far as the door, but that is ſhut upon them. And no man after that, durſt aſk him any queſtion; in any captious manner, in order to enſnare him; finding they could get no advantage, or occaſion againſt him that way; he having ſilenced the Herodians, Sadducees, Scribes, and Phariſees.

Ver. 35. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid, &c.] To the Phariſees that were gathered together about him; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 41. While he taught in the temple; whilſt he was in the temple, and as he was teaching the people there; among other things in his doctrine, he put this queſtion, how ſay the Scribes, [y] Baal Hatturim, ib.

Scribes, that Chriſt is the Son of David? Not that Chriſt meant to deny, or invalidate the truth of this; for the Meſſiah was certainly to be the ſon of David, and was; but he wanted to know, inaſmuch as they commonly ſaid, and inſtructed the people to believe, and it was in general believed by them, that he was David's ſon, how they could reconcile this to his being the Lord of David; or how they could give out, that he was only and merely the ſon of David, when he was David's Lord. Matthew relates the matter thus; that Chriſt firſt put theſe queſtions to them, what they thought of the Meſſiah, and whoſe ſon he was; and that they immediately replied, he was the ſon of David: wherefore this queſtion ſeems to be put upon that, with another along with it, how then doth David in ſpirit call him Lord? ſee the notes on Matt. xxii. 42, 43.

Ver. 36. For David himſelf ſaid by the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] In Pſal. cx. 1. being inſpired by the Spirit of God: the Lord ſaid to my Lord, ſit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy footſtool. This is a proof, that David did call Chriſt his Lord; and that he called him ſo in ſpirit; ſince theſe words were delivered by him under the inſpiration of the Holy Spirit: that the pſalm was wrote by David, the title ſhews; and that he ſpake it as he was influenced by the Holy Ghoſt, our Lord declares: the paſſage relates to what God the Father ſaid to Chriſt, when being riſen from the dead, he aſcended on high, and entered into the moſt holy place; he bid him ſit down at his right hand, as having done the work of man's ſalvation, he was ſent about, to full ſatisfaction; and as a mark of affection to him, and honour conferred upon him in the human nature; where he ſhould continue, till all his enemies, Jews, Pagans, Papiſts, and Mahometans, as well as ſatan, and all his principalities and powers, were ſo ſubdued under him, as to be as a footſtool to his throne: and when David prophetically ſpeaks of this, he calls the Meſſiah his Lord; ſaying, the Lord ſaid to my Lord; on which account the prophecy is cited; who was ſo, as he is God, and his Creator and Redeemer. That this prophecy is a prophecy of the Meſſiah, and is applicable to no other but he; and is therefore pertinently cited, and applied to him here, ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 44.

Ver. 37. David therefore himſelf, calleth him Lord, &c.] David, whoſe ſon you ſay the Meſſiah is, ſpeaks of him as one ſuperior to himſelf; as Lord, and as his Lord: whence is he then his ſon? from what paſſage of ſcripture does it appear, that he is his ſon? and how can theſe two different characters of him, be made to agree in him? Our Lord meant by this, to obſerve to them, that the Meſſiah was God, as well as man; that he was not merely the ſon of David, as was commonly received, or a mere man, but that he had a ſuperior nature, in which he was David's Lord, and even Lord of all. This is a Talmudic way of ſpeaking, frequently uſed when a proof from ſcripture, or reaſon, is demanded to ſupport any opinion or article of faith; as, מניין האי סברא, from whence is this opinion[z]? what proof is there of it? And again it is ſaid[a], מניין לתחיית המתים, from whence is the proof of the reſurrection of the dead out of the law? It is ſaid, Exod. vi. 4. and I have alſo eſtabliſhed, &c. Sometimes it is expreſſed thus[b], מנא ידעינן, from whence do we know that it is ſo? And ſometimes the word is doubled[c]; ſays R. Simeon ben Lekiſh, there is an intimation out of the law, concerning that which is torn, מניין מניין, from whence, from whence? Exod. xxii. 31. Neither ſhall ye eat any fleſh that is torn, &c. But the Scribes produced neither ſcripture nor reaſon to ſupport their aſſertion, though it was true; becauſe they could not reconcile it with the paſſage cited by Chriſt. And the common people; or the whole multitude, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; or a great multitude, as the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions; or all the people, as the Ethiopic; all but the Scribes and Phariſees, the populace in general, heard him gladly; with great pleaſure and ſatiſfaction, obſerving that his doctrine was ſuperior to that of any of the ſects among them; particularly his reaſoning about the Meſſiah, was liſtened to with great attention, and who, no doubt, could gladly have heard how theſe things could be reconciled; but we read not that any anſwer was returned to our Lord's queries, either by himſelf or any other.

Ver. 38. And he ſaid unto them in his doctrine, &c.] As he was preaching, not to the Scribes and Phariſees, but to the multitude, and to his diſciples particularly; and to them in the audience of the people, as appears from Matt. xxiii. 1. and Luke xx. 45. Beware of the Scribes; for though he had juſt ſpoken favourably of one of them, this was but a ſingle man, and a ſingular inſtance; the body of that ſett of men, were very bad in their principles and practices, and therefore to be avoided, and that for the reaſons following: which love to go in long cloathing; the Perſic verſion renders it, who affect to walk in coats and garments conſpicuous, and in long robes; ſuch as were very particular, and different from others, and out of the common way of apparel; and ſo were obſervable and taken notice of by others: very likely it may have reference to the uncommon length of their fringes on the borders of their outward garment, which they enlarged beyond others; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 5. and love ſalutations in the market-places; or ſtreets, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, in any publick places, where there was a reſort of men, and they were taken notice of, with reſpect, in a publick manner. The Syriac and Perſic ſupply the word love, as we do from Matt. xxiii. 6, 7. ſee the note there.

Ver. 39. And the chief ſeats in the ſynagogues, &c.] Where the rulers of the ſynagogue, and the elders of the people ſat; ſee the note on Matt. xxiii. 6. And the uppermoſt rooms at feaſts; or the firſt and chief places where they ſat, or rather lay along at publick entertainments; ſee the note as before.

Ver. 40. Which devour widows houſes, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxiii. 14.

Ver. 41. And Jeſus ſat overagainſt the treaſury, &c.] The Arabic verſion reads, at the door of the treaſury; the place where the cheſts ſtood, into which money was put for various uſes: there were thirteen cheſts in the temple[d]; ſix of them were, לנדבה, for voluntary oblations, or free-will offerings; for what remained of the ſin-offering, and of the treſpaſs-offering, and of the turtles; for thoſe that had fluxes, and for lying-in women; and of the ſacrifices of the Nazarite, and of the treſpaſs-offering for the leper; and the laſt was for a free-will offering in general; and into one of theſe cheſts, or all of them, was the money caſt, afterwards ſpoken of. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, over- overagainſt the alms-cheſt; but this contribution in the temple, was not for the maintenance of the poor, but for the ſupply of ſacrifices, and other things, as now mentioned. Jeſus having done preaching, and the Scribes and Phariſees having left him, and the multitude being diſmiſſed, he ſat down, being weary, and reſted himſelf in this place: and beheld; with pleaſure, how the people, of all ſorts, rich and poor, caſt money into the treaſury; into one or other of the above cheſts: the word rendered money, ſignifies braſs, which the Jews call, מעות; for they had ſhekels of braſs, as well as ſilver; and brazen pence, as well as ſilver pence [e]; and alſo Pruta's, or mites of braſs [f]; and ſuch, the poor woman caſt in: and many that were rich caſt in much: they gave very liberally and largely, as they were poſſeſſed with much worldly ſubſtance; for though religion was at a low ebb with them, yet they took care to ſupport the external and ritual part of it.

Ver. 42. And there came a certain poor widow, &c.] Among the many that came to offer their gifts freely, there came one that was particularly taken notice of by Chriſt; and ſhe was a widow, had no huſband to provide for her, and was a poor one; had no ſubſtance left her by her huſband to ſupport her with; very likely ſhe was an inhabitant of Jeruſalem: and ſhe threw in two mites, which make a farthing; a quadrant, which was the fourth part of the Roman aſſis, or farthing; which ſeems to be much the ſame with the τεταρτημοριον of the Greeks, which is ſaid [g] to be, "the fourth part of "an obolus (the leaſt Athenian coin) that is, two "braſs pieces." Theſe mites ſeem to be the ſame with the Pruta's, the Jews often ſpeak of; who ſay [h], that a Pruta is the eighth part of an Italian farthing; though ſome make it to be the ſixth: hence the Syriac verſion here renders it, two menin, that is, eighths; and the Jeruſalem Talmud expreſsly ſays [i], that, שני פרוטות קרדינטס, two Pruta's make a Quadrant, the very word here uſed: and that the Jews took the free-will offerings of the poor as well as the rich, though ever ſo little, is clear from this canon of theirs [k]; "a poor man "that gives a Pruta, or mite, into the alms-diſh, "or a Pruta into the poor's cheſt, they take it of "him; but if he does not give, they don't oblige "him to give." Nor were they obliged to caſt into the treaſury; but if they did, they received it, be it leſs or more: and indeed, the rich might throw in as little as they pleaſed: as for inſtance; into the cheſt for gold, they might throw in as little as the weight of a barley-corn of gold; and into the cheſt for frankincenſe, as little as the weight of a barley-corn of frankincenſe [l]. The Perſic verſion here, different from all others, inſtead of two mites, renders it, two bottoms of thread, or yarn.

Ver. 43. And he called unto him his diſciples, &c.] Who were at ſome little diſtance from him, he having finiſhed his diſcourſes: and ſaith unto them, verily I ſay unto you; a way of ſpeaking he often uſed, when he was about to deliver ſomething of importance, and not ſo eaſy of belief, and which required attention, and what he ſolemnly affirmed: that this poor widow, pointing to her, hath caſt more in, than all they which have caſt into the treaſury: not that ſhe had caſt in more, or ſo much as any one of them as to value and ſubſtance, much leſs more than them all put together; but that ſhe had caſt in more in proportion to what ſhe had, than they had in proportion to their ſubſtance; and that her's, though very ſmall in itſelf, and might be contemptible to others, yet it was more in the account of God and Chriſt, and more highly valued and eſteemed of by them, than all that the rich men put in: ſince what ſhe gave, ſhe gave in faith, and from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God; when theirs was given only in hypocriſy, to make an outward ſhow, and to be ſeen of men.

Ver. 44. For all they did caſt in of their abundance, &c.] Or ſuperabundance, as the Arabic verſion renders it; or ſuperfluity, as the Ethiopic: they abounded in the things of the world, of which they gave only a part; and though they might give much, yet they could eaſily ſpare it, and had enough remaining: but ſhe, of her want; or penury, as in Luke xxi. 4. ſee 2 Cor. viii. 2. did caſt in all that ſhe had, even all her living; her whole ſubſtance, all that ſhe had in the world; what was to have bought her food, for that day; ſhe left herſelf nothing, but gave away all, and truſted to providence for immediate ſupply.

CHAP. XIII.

Ver. 1. AND as he went out of the temple, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, as they went out; Chriſt and his diſciples: for when Chriſt went out of the temple, the diſciples went out with him; or at leaſt very quickly followed him, and came to him, as appears from what follows; tho' the true reading is, as he went out: and the Syriac and Perſic verſions are more expreſs, and read, as Jeſus went out; for having done all he intended to do there, he left it, never more to return to it: one of his diſciples; it may be Peter, who was generally pretty forward, and commonly the mouth of the reſt, as this diſciple was, whoever he was: the Perſic verſion reads, the diſciples; and Matthew and Luke repreſent them in general, as obſerving to Chriſt, the beauty and grandeur of the temple, as this diſciple did: who ſaith unto him, Maſter, ſee what manner of ſtones and what buildings are here. The temple, as repaired by Herod, was a very beautiful building, according to the account the Jews give of it, and its ſtones were of a very great magnitude; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 1.

Ver. 2. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, unto them; and ſo Beza's moſt ancient copy; but as that queſtion is put by one, the reply is made to him: ſeeſt thou theſe great buildings? how beautiful and ſtrong they are. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, add the word all; and the ſenſe is, doſt thou take a ſurvey of all theſe buildings, and of the whole of this ſtately edifice? and doſt thou not admire the ſtrength and grandeur of them? and doſt thou not think they will be of long duration, and that the demolition of them is ſcarcely poſſible? There ſhall not be left one ſtone upon another. The Syriac and Arabic verſions add, here; as in Matt. xxiv. 2. and ſo it is read in four of Beza's copies, and in others: that ſhall not be thrown down; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 2.

Ver. 3. And as he ſat upon the mount of Olives, &c.] On the eaſt of Jeruſalem: overagainſt the temple; where he could have a full view of it; the eaſtern wall of the temple being lower than the reſt; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 3. Peter, and John, and James, and Andrew, aſked him privately; apart from the reſt of the diſciples, they being, eſpecially the firſt three, his favourites, and very familiar with him.

Ver. 4. Tell us when ſhall theſe things be? &c.] When the temple will be deſtroyed, and theſe fine buildings ſhall be demoliſhed, and not one of theſe large ſtones ſhall be left upon another: and what ſhall be the ſign when all theſe things ſhall be fulfilled? And what is the ſign of his coming, and of the end of the world, as Matthew relates; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 3.

Ver. 5. And Jeſus anſwering them, &c.] His four diſciples, Peter, John, James, and Andrew: began to ſay; or ſaid, a way of ſpeaking frequent with this Evangeliſt: take heed leſt any man deceive you; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 4.

Ver. 6. For many ſhall come in my name, &c.] Taking upon them the name of the Meſſiah: ſaying, I am Chriſt; the word Chriſt, is rightly ſupplied from Matt. xxiv. 5. otherwiſe in the original it is only, I am; which the Perſic verſion doubles, reading it, I am indeed, I am; he that was promiſed and expected, the true Meſſiah; he that was to come: and ſhall deceive many; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 5.

Ver. 7. And when ye ſhall hear of wars, and rumours of wars, &c.] Among the Jews themſelves, and with the Romans: be not troubled; keep your place, abide by your work, go on preaching the Goſpel, without diſtreſſing yourſelves about the event of things: for ſuch things muſt needs be; being decreed by God, foretold by Chriſt, and made neceſſary by the ſins of the people: but the end ſhall not be yet; of the temple, of Jeruſalem, and of the Jewiſh ſtate and nation; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 6.

Ver. 8. For nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, &c.] The nations of the world one againſt another, and the Romans againſt the Jews, and the Jews againſt them: and kingdom againſt kingdom; which is a ſynonymous phraſe with the former, and what the Jews call, מלות שונות, different words, expreſſing the ſame thing, often uſed in their commentaries: and there ſhall be earthquakes in divers places; of the world: and there ſhall be famines; eſpecially in Judæa, as in the times of Claudius Cæſar, and at the ſiege of Jeruſalem: and troubles; publick ones of various ſorts, as tumults, ſeditions, murders, &c. This word is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions. Theſe are the beginnings of ſorrows; as of a woman with child, as the word ſignifies; whoſe pains before, though they are the beginnings and pledges of what ſhall come after, are not to be compared with thoſe that immediately precede, and attend the birth of the child: and ſo all thoſe troubles, which ſhould be ſome time before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, would be but ſmall, but light afflictions, the beginning of ſorrows, in compariſon of what ſhould immediately go before, and attend that deſolation; ſee the notes on Matt. xxiv. 7, 8.

Ver. 9. But take heed to yourſelves, &c.] This does not ſo much regard their doctrine and converſation, they were to take heed to; in which ſenſe this phraſe is ſometimes uſed; but the ſecurity of their perſons and lives; and the advice is, to take care of themſelves, as much as in them lay, how they came into the hands of the perſecuting Jews, and expoſed themſelves to danger, when at any time it could be avoided: for they ſhall deliver you up to councils; their greater and leſſer Sanhedrim; the one conſiſting of ſeventy-one perſons, the other of twenty-three, and the leaſt of three only; and before the greater of theſe, Peter and John were brought, quickly after the aſcenſion of Chriſt: and in the ſynagogues ye ſhall be beaten; with forty ſtripes ſave one, as the apoſtle Paul was; five times: and ye ſhall be brought before rulers; governors of Roman provinces, as the ſame apoſtle was; before Gallio; Feſtus, and Felix: and kings for my ſake; for the ſake of profeſſing Chriſt, and preaching his Goſpel; as ſome of the apoſtles were; before Herod; Agrippa; Nero, Domitian, and others: for a teſtimony againſt them; both againſt the rulers and kings before whom they ſhould be brought, and bear a teſtimony for Chriſt, and againſt the Jews, who ſhould bring them thither; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 17, 18.

Ver. 10. And the Goſpel muſt firſt be publiſhed among all nations.] The Syriac verſion reads, my Goſpel; the Goſpel which Chriſt was the author, ſubject, and preacher of; this muſt be publiſhed. There was a neceſſity of the promulgation of it by the will of God, the command and commiſſion of Chriſt; and for the gathering in of the Jews, that were the elect of God, among all nations of the world, eſpecially in the Roman Empire; and that firſt, or before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 14.

Ver. 11. But when they ſhall lead you, and deliver you up, &c.] Lead to councils and courts of judicature, and deliver up to kings and rulers, to the civil magiſtrate, to be puniſhed by the ſecular arm: take no thought before hand; be not previouſly anxious, and carefully ſollicitous, in a diſtreſſing way: what ye ſhall ſpeak; to kings and rulers, by way of apology for yourſelves, and your own innocence, and in defence of the Goſpel: neither do ye premeditate; or meditate, as the generality of copies read: Beza ſays in one copy it is read, premeditate; and ſo in one of Stephens's, as we render it: this clauſe is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: but whatſoever ſhall be given you in that hour; whatever ſhall be immediately ſuggeſted to your thoughts, be put into your minds, and laid upon your hearts: that ſpeak ye; freely and boldly, without the fear of men: for it is not ye that ſpeak, but the Holy Ghoſt: not but that they did ſpeak, but they were not the principal authors, either of the matter they ſpoke, or of the words and language in which they ſpoke; they were only the inſtruments of the Holy Ghoſt; they ſpoke as they were moved by him: hence their wiſdom and eloquence in their ſelf-defence, were amazing, and their arguments ſtrong and unanſwerable; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 19, 20.

Ver. 12. Now the brother ſhall betray the brothe to death, &c.] Signifying, that ſuch ſhould be th rage of men, particularly the Jews, againſt Chri and his Goſpel, that thoſe that were in the neare relation, were of the ſame fleſh and blood, chi dren of the ſame parents, ſhould betray and deliv up each other into the hands of the civil magiſtrat in order to be put to death: and the Father, Son, and children ſhall riſe up againſt their paren and ſhall cauſe them to be put to death; things u natural and ſhocking; ſee the note on Matt. x. 2

Ver. 13. And ye ſhall be hated of all men, &c Not only of your friends and relations, of yo countrymen the Jews; but of all men, the gene lity of men, in all nations of the world, wherever they came: for my name ſake; for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, they profeſſed and preached: but he that ſhall endure; reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions, patiently; or perſevere in the faith of Chriſt, in the profeſſion of his name, and in preaching his Goſpel: to the end; of ſuch troubles, and of life: the ſame ſhall be ſaved; if not with a temporal, yet with an everlaſting ſalvation; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 22. and xxiv. 13.

Ver. 14. But when ye ſhall ſee the abomination of deſolation, &c.] The Roman army encompaſſing Jeruſalem, which was an abomination to the Jews; and an impure ſign of their deſtruction, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; and a deſolating one to their nation, city, and temple: ſpoken of by Daniel the prophet, in Dan. ix. 27. This clauſe is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, and was not found by Beza, in two of his copies, and is thought to be tranſcribed from Matthew: ſtanding where it ought not; round about the city, in the midſt of it, and even in the temple: in one of Beza's exemplars 'tis added, in the holy place, as in Matthew; and ſo 'tis read in the Ethiopic verſion: let him that readeth underſtand; either the paſſage in Daniel, or the citation of it by the Evangeliſt, when he ſhall ſee this come to paſs: this ſeems to be rather the words of the Evangeliſt, than of Chriſt; ſince this was not written (and ſo not to be read) but ſpoken by Chriſt; and ſince his uſual phraſe was, he that hath ears, let him hear: though indeed the ſame exhortation is in Matthew, and may be underſtood of Chriſt, as it may refer to the written prophecy in Daniel, and indeed to the Goſpel, which might be read before this event came to paſs; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 15. Then let them that be in Judæa, flee to the mountains; they that are in Jeruſalem, or in any of the cities and towns of Judæa, let them make their eſcape, as ſoon as poſſible, to the mountainous parts of the country; where they may be more ſafe from the devaſtations of the Roman army; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 16.

Ver. 15. And let him that is on the houſe top, &c.] On the battlements of the houſe, either for diverſion or devotion: not go down into the houſe; in the inner way by the ſtairs, or ladder within doors: neither enter therein; being come down from the top of the houſe, by ſtairs, or a ladder without, which was uſual: to take any thing out of his houſe; to take care of his goods, or take any thing along with him, that might be uſeful in his flight, and journey, and ſtay abroad; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 17.

Ver. 16. And let him that is in the field, &c.] At work, in any ſort of buſineſs there, not turn back again: either to his own houſe, or rather to that part of the field where he laid down his cloaths: for to take up his garment; but let him flee without it, or otherwiſe he would be in great danger; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 18.

Ver. 17. But wo to them that are with child, &c.] Who becauſe of their burdens, would be very unfit for, and very uncapable of fleeing with any haſte; and therefore very liable to fall into the hands of the enemy, and become their prey: and to them that give ſuck in thoſe days; who could not bear to leave their children behind, and yet would not be able to carry them with them; at leaſt not without great trouble, and which would much retard their flight, and endanger their being taken by the enemy; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 19.

Ver. 18. And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter.] When days are ſhort, roads bad, the weather inclement; and when to lodge in mountains, is very incommodious, and uncomfortable. The Perſic verſion adds, neither on the ſabbath-day; as in Matt. xxiv. 20. ſee the note there.

Ver. 19. For in thoſe days ſhall be affliction, &c.] What with the cloſe ſiege of the Romans; the fury of the zealots, and ſeditious; the rage of different parties among the Jews themſelves; the ravage of the ſword, both within and without, together with dreadful plagues and famines: ſuch as was not from the beginning of the creation which God created, unto this time, neither ſhall be; of which there never was the like in any age, and cannot be paralleled in any hiſtory, ſince the beginning of time, or the world was made, or any thing in it, down to that period; nor ever will the like, befal any one particular nation under the heavens, to the end of the world; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 21.

Ver. 20. And except that the Lord had ſhortened thoſe days, &c.] Had determined that thoſe days of affliction ſhould be but few, and not laſt long; that the ſiege ſhould not be longer continued, and the devaſtations within and without be prolonged: no fleſh ſhould be ſaved; there would not have been a Jew left; that nation and race of men muſt have been utterly deſtroyed from off the face of the earth: but for the elects ſake, whom he hath choſen; in Chriſt, unto eternal ſalvation; who were either then upon the ſpot, called or uncalled, or that were to ſpring from them in ſucceeding times: he hath ſhortened the days; he hath determined they ſhall be but few, that a remnant might be ſaved, and among them his elect; or from whom ſhould deſcend, ſuch as he had choſen, and who ſhould be ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation: for though the people in general have been given up to blindneſs and unbelief, yet they are preſerved as a diſtinct people in the world; and in the latter day will be called and converted, and all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved: and therefore it was the will of God to ſhorten thoſe days of affliction, that they might not be entirely cut off, but that a number might be left, as a ſtock for future ages; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 22.

Ver. 21. And then if any ſhall ſay unto you, &c.] During thoſe days of tribulation and affliction, or when ſhortened and at an end: lo, here is Chriſt, or lo, he is there; the Meſſiah has appeared in ſuch or in ſuch a place, to deliver you from your national diſtreſſes and calamities, and from the Roman yoke and bondage: believe him not; give no credit to ſuch a report, for the reaſon following; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 23.

Ver. 22. For falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets ſhall riſe, &c.] As there did, both before and after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: and ſhall ſhew ſigns and wonders; as they pretended to do, and did, at leaſt to the appearance of people: to ſeduce, if it were poſſible, even the elect; who were choſen in Chriſt, unto eternal life; in conſequence of which, they truly believed in him, and were conſtant followers of him; but this was not poſſible: though ſuch was the force of their deception, that there was apparent danger of it, were it not for the power and grace of God; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 24.

Ver. 23. But take ye heed, &c.] The Perſic verſion adds, of them; of the falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets: for tho' the purpoſes of God, concerning the ſalvation of his elect, are infruſtrable; his promiſes are yea and amen; his grace is efficacious and irreſiſtible, and his power uncontroulable; and the ſalvation of his choſen ones certain; yet it becomes them to be on their guard againſt every deception, and temptation, and to make uſe of all means for their perſeverance: behold, I have foretold you all things; relating to the deſtruction of the temple, city, and nation of the Jews; the ſigns that would go before it, as the diſciples had deſired; the miſeries and calamities that would attend it, and the danger they would be expoſed to thro' falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets; and therefore would be inexcuſable, if they did not obſerve the caution he now gave them: and moreover, when all theſe ſhould be accompliſhed, they would remember that he had told them of them before-hand; which would be a proof of his omniſcience, and ſo an eſtabliſhment of them in the truth of him, as the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 25.

Ver. 24. But in thoſe days after that tribulation, &c.] That is, after the deſtruction of the city and temple of Jeruſalem, and the miſeries and calamities attending it, in the times immediately following it; ſee Matt. xxiv. 29. the ſun ſhall be darkened: ſo the ſhekinah, or glory of the divine majeſty was withdrawn, and all the ſymbols of the divine preſence were gone, when the temple was deſtroyed: and the moon ſhall not give her light; the ceremonial law, which tho' aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt, was obſerved by the Jews as long as the temple ſtood; but now ceaſed, particularly that principal branch of it, the daily ſacrifice; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 29.

Ver. 25. And the ſtars of heaven ſhall fall, &c.] The Jewiſh Rabbins and Doctors, who fell off from the written word, and compiled their Miſna, or oral law, their book of traditions, and ſet it up above the bible, the foundation of which was laid immediately upon their diſperſion. And the powers that are in heaven ſhall be ſhaken; the ordinances of the legal diſpenſation, which were ſhaken before, but now ſo ſhaken as to be removed; compare Hagg. ii. 6. with Heb. xii. 26, 27. ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 29.

Ver. 26. And then ſhall they ſee the Son of man, &c.] Not in perſon, but in the power of his wrath and vengeance; of which the Jews then had a convincing evidence, and full proof; and even of his being come in the fleſh, as if they had ſeen him in perſon: this ſhows, that the ſign of the Son of man, in Matt. xxiv. 30. is the ſame with the Son of man: coming in the clouds with great power and glory; not to judgment, but having taken vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, to ſet up his kingdom and glory in the Gentile world; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 30.

Ver. 27. And then he ſhall ſend his angels, &c.] The miniſters of the Goſpel to preach it, and plant more churches among the Gentiles, ſince that at Jeruſalem was entirely broken up: and ſhall gather together his elect; that is, he the Son of man, or Chriſt, ſhall gather them by the miniſtry of his ſervants; or they ſhall gather them, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; and as Beza ſays it is read in a certain copy: theſe miniſters ſhall be the means of gathering ſuch whom God has choſen from all eternity, to obtain ſalvation by Chriſt, out of the world, and unto Chriſt, and into a Goſpel church-ſtate: even from the uttermoſt part of the earth, to the uttermoſt part of the heaven; be they where they will, on earth, and under the whole heavens; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 31.

Ver. 28. Now learn a parable of the fig-tree, &c.] Our Lord was now upon the mount of Olives, in one part of which fig-trees grew in great plenty, and one, or more, might be near, and in view; and it was the time of year, the paſſover being at hand, for its putting forth: when her branch is yet tender; and ſoft and opening, thro' the ſap now in motion: and putteth forth leaves; from the branches: ye know that ſummer is near; from ſuch an appearance on the fig-tree; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 32.

Ver. 29. So ye in like manner, &c.] This is an accommodation of the parable to the preſent caſe: when ye ſhall ſee theſe things come to paſs; the ſigns preceding the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and eſpecially the abomination of deſolation, or the Roman army ſurrounding it: know that it, or he, is nigh, even at the doors; either that the deſtruction of Jeruſalem is near; or that the ſon of man is juſt ready to come to take vengeance on it; or, as Luke ſays, ch. xxi. 31. the kingdom of God is nigh at hand; or a more glorious diſplay of the kingly power of Chriſt, in the deſtruction of his enemies, and a greater ſpread of his Goſpel in the Gentile world; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 33.

Ver. 30. Verily I ſay unto you, that this generation ſhall not paſs, &c.] Not the generation of men in general, or Jews in particular, nor of Chriſtians; but that preſent generation of men, they ſhould not all go off the ſtage of life, till all theſe things be done; which were now predicted by Chriſt, concerning the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, the ſigns of it, and what ſhould immediately follow upon it; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 34.

Ver. 31. Heaven and earth ſhall paſs away, &c.] Which may be underſtood either affirmatively, as what will be at the ſecond coming of Chriſt; or comparatively, rather than any thing ſaid by Chriſt ſhould; and ſo ſhows the certainty and irreverſibleneſs of his predictions, as it follows: but my words ſhall not paſs away; which is true of all the words of Chriſt he ever ſpake, and here particularly relates to thoſe he had juſt delivered, concerning the calamities that ſhould come upon the Jewiſh nation; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 35.

Ver. 32. But of that day, and of that hour, &c.] Of Jeruſalem's deſtruction; for of nothing elſe had Chriſt been ſpeaking; and, it's plain, the words are anaphorical, and relate to what goes before: knoweth no man; nay, they that lived to ſee it, and have ſpoken of it, are not agreed about the particular day, when it was; much leſs did they know it before hand, or could ſpeak of it, and make it known to others: no, not the angels which are in heaven; who are acquainted with many of the divine ſecrets, and have been employed in the imparting them to others, and in the executing divine purpoſes: neither the Son; Chriſt, as the Son of man; tho' he did know it as the Son of God, who knows all things, and ſo this; but as the Son of man, and from his human nature he had no knowledge of any thing future: what knowledge he had of future things in his humanity, he had from his deity; nor, as man, had he any commiſſion to make known, nor did he make known the day of God's vengeance on the Jews: but the Father; who has the times and ſeaſons in his own power, for the executing of any particular judgment on a nation, or the general one; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 36.

Ver. 33. Take ye heed, watch and pray, &c.] This ſeems to be the principal reaſon why the day and hour of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, tho' known by the Father, were not made known to any man, neither to the angels, nor by them; nor to the Son of man in the days of his fleſh, nor by him when on earth; that his people might be upon their guard, againſt falſe Chriſts, and prophets, and their deception; and watch unto prayer, and in it, leſt they fell into temptation, and that day ſhould come upon them unawares: for ye know not when the time is; the exact and preciſe time: for tho' the people of God had notice of it, and were ſenſible it was at hand, and did make their eſcape out of Jeruſalem; yet they knew not the exact time, but that it might be ſooner or later; and the unbelieving Jews were blinded, and in the dark about it to the very laſt; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 42.

Ver. 34. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, &c.] Or this caſe of the Son of man's coming to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, is like a man that takes a journey into a far country. This puts me in mind of a queſtion aſked[m] by the Jews; "what is דרך רחוקה, a far journey? from Modiim, and without." Now Modiim, according to the Gemara[n], and commentators[o] on this paſſage, was a place fifteen miles from Jeruſalem; ſo that, according to them, fifteen miles were reckoned a far journey[p]. Who left his houſe; and his goods in it, to the care and management of others during his abſence: and gave authority to his ſervants; to govern his houſe, and exerciſe power one over another, according to their different ſtations: and to every man his work; which he was to do, while he was gone, and to give him an account of when he returned: and commanded the porter to watch; his houſe, and take care that it was not broke open by thieves, and plundered of the ſubſtance that was in it. So Chriſt, when he aſcended on high, went to heaven, the land afar off; left his houſe, his church, particularly in Judæa, and at Jeruſalem, to the care of his apoſtles, and gave authority to govern it, according to the laws, rules, and directions preſcribed by him; and aſſigned every man his particular work, for which he gave him proper gifts and abilities; and ordered the porter to be on his watch, not Peter only, but all the apoſtles and miniſters, whoſe buſineſs it is to watch over themſelves, and the ſouls of men committed to their care.

Ver. 35. Watch ye therefore, &c.] Againſt falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, over yourſelves, and the whole church; for the words are particularly addreſſed to the diſciples of Chriſt: for ye know not when the maſter of the houſe cometh; when Chriſt, of whom the whole family in heaven, and in earth, is named, who is a Son in his own houſe, is an high-prieſt over the houſe of God, and Lord of his church and people, whom he has bought with his blood, and provides for with his grace, and by his Spirit, when he will come to break up houſekeeping with the Jews, and bring his wrath upon them to the uttermoſt: whether at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning. This is agreeable to the diviſion of the night among the Jews, who ſpeak of the firſt watch, the middle of the night, the cock crowing, and morning, as diſtinct from each other. The three firſt of theſe we have in one paſſage[q]: "every day they remove the aſhes from the altar, בקריאת הגבר, at cock crowing, or near it, either before, or after it; and on the day of atonement, מחצות, at midnight; and on the feaſt days, at the firſt watch;" the ſame with the evening here: and elſewhere the morning and cock crowing are diſtinguiſhed[r]; "for a faſt of the congregation, how long may a man eat and drink? until the pillar of the morning aſcends, (or until it is morning) the words of R. Eliezer ben Jacob; R. Simeon ſays, until cock crowing." And ſo the phraſe, from cock crowing till morning, is uſed by them[s]. The Romans alſo divided the night in like manner, into evening, the dead of the night, or midnight, cock crowing, and the morning[t]. The alluſion ſeems to be to the time of the preſident of the temple's coming into it, who had the management of the affairs of it, and of appointing to each prieſt his work: 'tis ſaid[u], "whoever would remove the aſhes from the altar, roſe up early, and waſhed himſelf before the preſident came; but in what hour does the preſident come? not at all times alike: ſometimes he comes, מקריאת הגבר, at cock crowing, or near it, before it, or after it; and the preſident comes and knocks for them, and they open to him; and he ſays unto them, whoſoever has waſhed himſelf, let him come and caſt lots: they caſt lots, and he is worthy whom he counts worthy." Such who underſtand theſe words of Chriſt's coming by death, or at judgment, apply theſe ſeaſons to the ſeveral ages of men, as childhood, youth, manhood, and old age.

Ver. 36. Leſt coming ſuddenly, &c.] Unthought of, and unexpected, at an unawares: he find you ſleeping; inactive in the exerciſe of grace, and negligent in the performance of duty; unprepared for his coming, and unfit for ſervice.

Ver. 37. And what I ſay unto you, &c.] The four diſciples, Peter, James, John, and Andrew, who came privately to him, and put to him the queſtions, which occaſioned this long diſcourſe; ſee ver. 3, 4. I ſay unto all. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, you all; meaning all the reſt of his apoſtles, and all his diſciples and followers in Jeruſalem, and in all Judæa; who were all concerned in theſe things, and whom it became to watch, and be upon their guard, and caſt off all ſloth and negligence; ſince they knew not how ſoon the Son of man would come, and all theſe evil things would be brought upon the Jewiſh nation, city, and temple: and the ſame exhortation is ſuitable to ſaints in all ages, times, and places, on account of the various ſnares, temptations, and evils, that they are liable to, the ſuddenneſs of death, and the uncertainty of the ſecond coming of Chriſt.

CHAP. XIV.

Ver. 1. AFTER two days was the feaſt of the paſſover, &c.] That is, two days after Chriſt had delivered the foregoing diſcourſe concerning the deſtruction of the temple at Jeruſalem, was the feaſt of the paſſover; which was kept in commemoration of God's paſſing over the houſes of the Iſraelites, when he deſtroyed the firſt-born of Egypt, and made way for the deliverance of the children of Iſrael from thence; and which was kept by eating the paſſover-lamb; and which, properly ſpeaking, is the feaſt of the paſſover: and of unleavened bread; which was the ſame feaſt with the other, called ſo from the unleavened bread which was then eaten; tho' with this difference, the paſſover-lamb was only eaten on the firſt night, but unleavened bread was eat for ſeven days together. The Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, the paſſover of unleavened bread, leaving out the copulative and. And the chief-prieſts and Scribes ſought how they might take him by craft; that is, Jeſus, and put him to death: for which purpoſe they aſſembled together in Caiaphas the high-prieſt's palace, and there took counſel together how to accompliſh it; ſee Matt. xxvi. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 2. But they ſaid not on the feaſt day, &c.] The feaſt of the paſſover, and of unleavened bread, which was nigh at hand, and would be two days hence, when there would be a great concourſe of people from all parts to keep it; and therefore they did not chuſe to ſeize him, and put him to death at that time, leſt there ſhould be an uproar of the people; or among them, leſt they ſhould riſe in his favour, and reſcue him out of their hands; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 5.

Ver. 3. And being in Bethany, &c.] A place about two miles from Jeruſalem, whither he retired after he had took his leave of the temple, and had predicted its deſtruction; a place he often went to, and from, the laſt week of his life; having ſome dear friends, and familiar acquaintance there, as Lazarus, and his two ſiſters, Martha and Mary, and the perſon next mentioned: in the houſe of Simon the leper; ſo called becauſe he had been one, and to diſtinguiſh him from Simon the Phariſee, and Simon Peter the apoſtle, and others; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 6. as he ſat at meat there came a woman; generally thought to be Mary Magdalene, or Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus: having an alabaſter box of ointment of ſpikenard; or pure nard, unmixed and genuine; or liquid nard, which was drinkable, and ſo eaſy to be poured out; or piſtic nard, called ſo, either from Piſta, the name of a place from whence it was brought, or from Piſtaca, which, with the Rabbins, ſignifies maſte; of which, among other things, this ointment was made. Moreover, ointment of nard was made both of the leaves of nard, and called foliate nard, and of the ſpikes of it, and called, as here, ſpikenard. Now ointment made of nard was, as Pliny ſays [w], the principal among ointments. The Syriac is, by him, ſaid to be the beſt; this here is ſaid to be very precious, coſtly, and valuable: and ſhe brake the box. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it, ſhe opened it; and the Perſic verſion, ſhe opened the head, or top of the bottle, or vial: and poured it on his head; on the head of Chriſt, as the ſame verſion expreſſes it; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 7.

Ver. 4. And there were ſome that had indignation within themſelves, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, ſome of the diſciples; agreeable to Matt. xxvi. 8. particularly Judas, and others might be incenſed by his means: and ſaid, why was this waſte of the ointment made? ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 8.

Ver. 5. For it might have been ſold for more than three hundred pence, &c.] Which was to the value of our money nine pounds, ſeven ſhillings, and ſixpence: and given to the poor; which was thought to be a better way of expending it, than by pouring it on the head of Chriſt: and they murmured againſt her; that ſhe ſhould laviſh ſo much money away in ſuch an imprudent manner; they reproved her for it, expreſſed much reſentment at it, and were very angry with her upon the account of it; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvi. 8, 9.

Ver. 6. And Jeſus ſaid, let her alone, &c.] Jeſus knowing the ſecret indignation of ſome of his diſciples, and their private murmurings at the woman, and their continual teizings of her, becauſe of the expence of the ointment, ſaid to them, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read; or to the diſciples, as the Perſic, let the woman alone, ceaſe to chide and reprove her for what ſhe has done; why trouble ye her? why do you grieve her, by charging her with imprudence and extravagance, as if ſhe had been guilty of a very great crime? ſhe is ſo far from it, that ſhe hath wrought a good work on me; ſhe has done me an honour; expreſſed faith in me, and ſhewn love to me, and ought to be commended, and not reproved; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 10.

Ver. 7. For ye have the poor with you always, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxvi. 11. and whenſoever ye will ye may do them good; by feeding them when hungry, cloathing them when naked, and ſupplying them with the neceſſaries of life: but me ye have not always; meaning, with reſpect to his bodily preſence, which, in a ſhort time, would be removed from them, and they would have no opportunity of ſhewing him any ſuch outward reſpect perſonally; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 11.

Ver. 8. She hath done what ſhe could, &c.] What ſhe had in her heart, and in the power of her hands to do; ſhe hath done according to her ability, and her good-will; and if ſhe had not done it now, ſhe could not have done it at all. She is come aforehand to anoint my body to the burying; or, as if it was to bury me, as the Syriac verſion renders it. Chriſt ſignifies by this, that he ſhould ſhortly die, and that this woman came before-hand to anoint him, and, as it were, to perform the funeral rites before he was dead; it being revealed to her by the Spirit, that Jeſus would quickly die, and ſhe ſhould not be able to perform this good work when dead, and therefore came to do it before; or, at leaſt, ſhe was directed by the Spirit of God, becauſe ſhe would be prevented doing it afterwards; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 12.

Ver. 9. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] And you may aſſure yourſelves of the truth of it: whereſoever this Goſpel, of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, ſhall be preached throughout the whole world, as it ſhall be, this alſo that ſhe hath done ſhall be ſpoken of for a memorial of her; in remembrance of her, and her work, and in commendation of her faith, love, and duty; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 13.

Ver. 10. And Judas Iſcariot, one of the twelve, &c.] Apoſtles of Chriſt; who was the principal perſon that had indignation at the woman, and murmured againſt her, for the profuſion of the ointment: went unto the chief-prieſts; as ſoon as this affair was over, and Chriſt had defended the woman's conduct to his ſhame and ſilence: he immediately went out of the houſe, where they were, and ſet out from Bethany to Jeruſalem; and underſtanding the chief-prieſts were in conſultation together at Caiaphas's houſe, how to apprehend Jeſus, and put him to death, went directly to them, unſent for, and unthought of by them: to betray him unto them; which ſatan had put into his heart, and what his avarice and revenge for the late action of the woman, and Chriſt's defence of it, prompted him to; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 14.

Ver. 11. And when they heard it, they were glad, &c.] That ſuch an opportunity offered, and from ſuch a quarter, by one of his own diſciples; ſo that it might be done more ſecretly and effectually, and with leſs blame to themſelves: and promiſed to give him money; any ſum he ſhould aſk; and what was agreed upon were thirty pieces, or ſhekels of ſilver; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion here, inſtead of money, reads, thirty pieces of ſilver; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 15. And he ſought how he might conveniently betray him; after this promiſe, and upon this agreement: henceforward he ſought the moſt fitting opportunity, and the beſt ſeaſon of betraying his maſter into the hands of theſe men, when he was alone, and the multitude abſent, and there was no danger of a tumult, or a reſcue; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 16.

[w] Nat. Hiſt. l. 12. c. 12.

Ver. 12. And the firſt day of unleavened bread, &c.] Being come, which was the fourteenth of Niſan: when they killed the paſſover; that is, the Jews, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions ſupply; for any Iſraelite, that was not a prieſt, might ſlay it: their canon runs thus [x]; "an Iſraelite kills (the paſſover) and a prieſt receives (the blood) and gives it to his neighbour, and his neighbour to his neighbour, and he receives (the baſon) full, and returns it empty; the prieſt that is near to the altar ſprinkles it, at one ſprinkling, over-againſt the bottom of it." Upon which the commentators [y] obſerve, that the ſlaying of the paſſover by ſtrangers; that is, ſuch as are not prieſts, is lawful. And ſo Philo the Jew, ſpeaking of the paſſover, ſays [z]; "at which time the common people do not bring their ſacrifices to the altar, and the prieſts ſlay; but by the command of the law, συμπαν το εθνος, the whole nation, does the work of a prieſt; every one particularly bringing the ſacrifices for himſelf, and then ſlaying them with his own hands." But then it was always killed in the court of the temple, and after the middle of the day; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 17. his diſciples ſaid unto him, where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayſt eat the paſſover; for it was now Thurſday morning, and the paſſover was to be ſlain after the middle of the day, between the two evenings, and eat in Jeruſalem at night; and they were now at Bethany, near two miles from the city; and it was uſual for ſervants to get ready the paſſover for their maſters; ſee the note, as above.

Ver. 13. And he ſendeth forth two of his diſciples, &c.] Peter and John, as appears from Luke xxii. 8. and ſaith unto them, go ye into the city; the city of Jeruſalem; for there only the paſſover might be eaten, Deut. xxvi. 2. and there ſhall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water; a ſervant of the maſter of the houſe that was ſent for water, to mix with the wine, at the paſſover: follow him; into the houſe to which he goes.

Ver. 14. And whereſoever he ſhall go in, &c.] Into whatſoever houſe he ſhall enter, go in after him: and ſay ye to the good man of the houſe; the owner, and maſter of it, who might be Nicodemus, or Joſeph of Arimathea, or ſome man of note and wealth in Jeruſalem, that might have ſome knowledge of Chriſt, and faith in him, tho' he did not openly profeſs him; ſince by only ſaying what follows, he would at once, as he did, direct them to a ſuitable and convenient room; the maſter ſaith. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, our maſter ſaith: he that is yours, and ours, our maſter Jeſus; tho' that is not expreſſed, yet it was underſtood by the maſter of the family; which confirms the above conjecture, that he was a ſecret diſciple of Chriſt. Where is the gueſt-chamber; the chamber provided for gueſts that might be expected at the paſſover: where I ſhall eat the paſſover with my diſciples? where it might be done conveniently, and in a proper and comfortable manner; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 18.

Ver. 15. And he will ſhew you a large upper room, &c.] A room in the higheſt part of the houſe, large enough for ſuch a company, for thirteen perſons, which was the number of Chriſt and his diſciples: furniſhed and prepared; with a table, and a ſufficient number of couches to ſit, or lie upon, and with all proper veſſels neceſſary on ſuch an occaſion: there make ready for us; the paſſover.

Ver. 16. And his diſciples went forth, &c.] The two diſciples, as the Arabic verſion has it, Peter and John, ſet out from Bethany to Jeruſalem directly: and came into the city; the city of Jeruſalem: and found as he had ſaid unto them; a man bearing a pitcher of water, whom they followed to the houſe he went into, and addreſſed the maſter of the houſe, as Jeſus had bid them; when he ſhewed them an upper room, very commodious and fit for the purpoſe, as Chriſt had ſaid; and which is a conſiderable proof of the preſcience of Chriſt: and they made ready the paſſover; they bought a lamb; they had it killed in the temple, according to rule; and they brought it to the houſe, where they were to ſup, and got it roaſted; and provided unleavened bread, and wine, and bitter herbs, and every thing that was proper for the feaſt; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 19.

Ver. 17. And in the evening he cometh with the twelve, &c.] In the afternoon, as it is very reaſonable to ſuppoſe, Chriſt ſet out from Bethany with the reſt of the twelve, with the other nine, and came to Jeruſalem; where they were joined by Judas, who had covenanted with the chief-prieſts to betray him, and by Peter and John, who had been ſent before to prepare the paſſover; and when it was night, when the ſecond evening had took place, he went with all twelve of them to the houſe, where the proviſion to eat the paſſover together was made for them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 20.

Ver. 18. And as they ſat and did eat, &c.] Or as they lay along; for ſuch was their poſture at the eating of the paſſover; ſee the note as before: Jeſus ſaid, verily I ſay unto you, one of you which eateth with me ſhall betray me; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 21.

Ver. 19. And they began to be ſorrowful, &c.] And were ſo, all but Judas, at this ſaying of Chriſt's: and to ſay unto him, one by one; even till it came to Judas himſelf, is it I? that ſhall betray thee; and another ſaid, is it I? This clauſe is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in two of Beza's copies; and indeed ſeems to be redundant, ſince the diſciples are ſaid before to expreſs themſelves in this manner, one by one; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 22.

Ver. 20. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] In order to relieve their minds, and point out the particular perſon: it is one of the twelve, that dippeth with me in the diſh; juſt at that very inſtant; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 23.

Ver. 21. The Son of man indeed goeth, &c.] Out of this world by death, as it is written; both in the book of God's decrees, and in the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament: but wo to that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed; whoſe ſin will not be excuſed, nor leſſened by fulfilling the decrees of God, and by accompliſhing the prophecies of the bible: good were it for that man if he had never been born; ſo aggravating will be his crime, ſo dreadful his puniſhment; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 24.

Ver. 22. And as they did eat, &c.] The paſchal lamb, and the unleavened bread, juſt at the concluſion of that feaſt: Jeſus took bread, and bleſſed, and brake it; beginning and inſtituting a new feaſt, to be kept in after-times, in commemoration of his ſufferings and death, now near at hand; and gave to them, the diſciples, and ſaid, take, eat: the word eat is not in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and is wanting in ſome copies: this is my body; a figure and repreſentation of it; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 26.

Ver. 23. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, &c.] Over it, and for it, by bleſſing it, and appropriating it to the preſent uſe and ſervice: he gave it to them; his diſciples, and they all drank of it; Judas, as well as the reſt, as he bid them do; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 27.

Ver. 24. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Not after they had drank of it, but before, and as he gave it to them: this is my blood of the New Teſtament which is ſhed for many; in Matthew 'tis added, for the remiſſion of ſins; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 28.

Ver. 25. Verily I ſay unto you, &c.] This ſeems to have been ſaid after the eating of the paſſover, according to Luke xxii. 18. but was, in reality, not till after the Lord's ſupper was ended, and the laſt cup was drank, which was wont to be drank at the paſſover: I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine; that is, wine, until that day that I drink it new; in a figurative and myſtical ſenſe; by which are meant the joys of heaven: in the kingdom of God; Father, Son, and Spirit, upon the general reſurrection of the dead, when the kingdom of the Mediator will be delivered up, and there will be no diſtinction of government; but God, Father, Son, and Spirit will be all in all, and ſhall reign in the ſaints, and they with them, to all eternity; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 29.

Ver. 26. And when they had ſung an hymn, &c.] The Hallell, uſed at the paſſover: they went out into the mount of Olives; Chriſt, and eleven of his diſciples; for Judas now ſeparated from them, and went to the chief-prieſts to acquaint them how things were, where Jeſus was going, and where they might apprehend him; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 30.

Ver. 27. And Jeſus ſaith unto them, &c.] As they were going to the mount of Olives. The Perſic verſion reads, in this place; meaning the mount of Olives, having got thither: all ye ſhall be offended becauſe of me this night; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 31. for it is written in Zech. xiii. 7. I will ſmite the ſhepherd, and the ſheep ſhall be ſcattered: Chriſt is meant by the ſhepherd, and the apoſtles by the ſheep. The Syriac verſion reads, his ſheep.

Ver. 28. But after that I am riſen, &c.] From the dead, which, for their comfort, he aſſures them of; tho' they would be offended and diſcouraged at the ſeizing, and condemning, and crucifixion of him: I will go before you into Galilee; the place of their nativity, and where he had often converſed with them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 32.

Ver. 29. But Peter ſaid unto him, &c.] Being greatly moved at what Chriſt had ſaid, that all of them would be offended with him that night, and run away from him, and be ſcattered from him, and one another: altho' all ſhall be offended, yet will not I; tho' all the reſt of the diſciples, the other ten, ſhould do as Judas had done, ſhould fall off from Chriſt, and either betray him, or deny him, or, at leaſt, turn their backs on him, yet he would do neither; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 33.

Ver. 30. And Jeſus ſaith unto him, verily I ſay unto thee, &c.] As confident as thou art of ſtanding by me, and abiding with me; that this day, which was then begun; for the Jews reckoned their days from evening, as in Gen. i. 5. even in this night; this night to be obſerved, this night of the paſſover, before it is paſt: before the cock crow twice; for there was a firſt and ſecond cock crowing, the one at midnight, and the other near break of day, and which laſt is properly the cock crowing: the word twice is left out in the Ethiopic verſion: thou ſhalt deny me thrice; as he did; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 34.

Ver. 31. But he ſpake the more vehemently, &c.] With a louder voice; with more ſpirit and eagerneſs; in a more peremptory and ſelf-confident way. If I ſhould die with thee, I will not deny thee in any wiſe. The Syriac verſion adds, O my Lord; my dear Lord, I will never deny thee upon any conſideration whatever; and the Perſic verſion, O Lord: likewiſe alſo ſaid they all; as he ſaid, ſo ſaid all the diſciples, as the Syriac verſion reads it; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 35.

Ver. 32. And they came to a place which is named Gethſemane, &c.] At the foot of the mount of Olives, where the olives, which grew in great plenty on the mount, were preſſed; and where our Lord began to be bruiſed for our ſins: and he ſaith to his diſciples; to eight of them: ſit ye here while I ſhall pray; at ſome diſtance from hence; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 36.

Ver. 33. And he taketh with him Peter, and James, and John, &c.] Who were witneſſes of his transfiguration on the mount, and now of his ſorrows in the garden: and began to be ſore amazed; to be in great conſternation and aſtoniſhment, at the ſight of all the ſins of his people coming upon him; at the black ſtorm of wrath, that was gathering thick over him; at the ſword of juſtice, which was brandiſhed againſt him; and at the curſes of the righteous law, which, like ſo many thunder-bolts of vengeance, were directed at him: no wonder it ſhould be added, and to be very heavy; both with ſin and ſorrow; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 37.

Ver. 34. And ſaith unto them, &c.] The above three diſciples; my ſoul is exceeding ſorrowful unto death: he was ſurrounded with ſorrow, and it preſſed him ſo hard, and cloſe, on every ſide, that he was juſt ready to die with it: tarry ye here and watch: in Matthew 'tis added, with me; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 38.

Ver. 35. And he went forward a little, &c.] About a ſtone's caſt, Luke xxii. 41. and fell on the ground, and prayed: he fell on his face to the ground, which was a praying poſture. One of the Jewiſh canons concerning it, is this [a]: “ worſhipping, how is it “ done? after a man has lifted up his head, he “ bows it five times, he ſits upon the ground, and “ falls upon his face, ארצה, to the ground, and ſupplicates with whatſoever ſupplication he pleaſes: “ worſhipping, or bowing, is the ſtretching out of “ hands and feet, until a man is found caſt upon “ his face to the ground.” See the note on Matt. xxvi. 39. The ſupplication Chriſt made in this poſture was, that if it were poſſible the hour might paſs from him; the time fixed and agreed upon for his ſufferings and death; that is, that it might paſs without his enduring them, if there was any poſſibility of excuſing him, and of his peoples being ſaved without them; ſee the note, as before.

[a] Maimon. Hilch. Tephilla, c. 5. §. 13.

Ver. 36. And he ſaid, Abba, Father, &c.] In the original text, the former of theſe is a Syriac word, and the latter a Greek one, explanative of the former, as in Rom. viii. 15. and Gal. iv. 6. or the repetition is made, to expreſs the vehemency of his affection, and his ſtrong confidence in God, as his Father, amidſt all his diſtreſs, as the Syriac verſion renders it, אבא אבי, Abba, my Father; or my Father, my Father; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion: all things are poſſible unto thee; ſo Philo the Jew [b], taking notice of Iſaac's queſtion about the burnt-offering, and Abraham's anſwer to it, repreſents the latter as adding, in confirmation of it, “all things “are poſſible to God, and which are both difficult “and impoſſible to be done by men;” ſuggeſting, that God could eaſily provide a lamb for a ſacrifice: and Chriſt here intimates, that every thing conſiſtent with his perfections, counſels, and covenant, were poſſible to be done by him; and how far what he prays for, was agreeable to theſe, he ſubmits to him, and to his ſovereign will: take away this cup from me; nevertheleſs, not what I will, but what thou wilt; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 39.

Ver. 37. And he cometh and findeth them ſleeping, &c.] His three diſciples, Peter, James, and John: and ſaith unto Peter; particularly, he having ſo lately aſſerted with ſo much confidence, his love to Chriſt, and cloſe attachment to him: Simon, ſleepeſt thou? Chriſt calls him by the name he firſt went by, and not by that which he had given him, Cephas, or Peter; he not now having that firmneſs and conſtancy, though he boaſted of it, which anſwers to that name: couldſt thou not watch one hour? The Arabic and Perſic verſions add, with me; and ſo does the Complutenſian edition; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 40.

Ver. 38. Watch ye and pray, leſt ye enter into temptation, &c.] Of denying Chriſt, and falling off from him, which would quickly offer to them, when they ſhould ſee him apprehended, bound, and led away. The Spirit truly is ready. The Perſic verſion renders it, my mind; as if the Spirit or Soul of Chriſt was meant; whereas it is either to be underſtood of the evil ſpirit, ſatan, who was diſpoſed to attack them, and eſpecially Peter, whom he deſired to have, and ſift as wheat; or elſe the ſpirit of the diſciples, their renewed ſpirit, which was ready and diſpoſed for watching and praying, and willing to abide by Chriſt: but the fleſh is weak; they were but fleſh and blood, and ſo not a match of themſelves for ſo powerful an adverſary as ſatan, and therefore had need to watch and pray; or their body, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it, was weak, and ſubject to drowſineſs and ſleep; and eſpecially they were weak and feeble, and very unequal of themſelves for ſpiritual exerciſes, as they had fleſh, or a corrupt nature in them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 41.

Ver. 39. And again he went away, &c.] To the ſame place, or at much ſuch a diſtance from them, as before: and prayed and ſpake the ſame words; or word, that is, the ſame matter; for λογος here, anſwers to דבר, which ſignifies a thing, or matter, as well as word: Chriſt prayed to the ſame effect, for matter and ſubſtance the ſame as before, though not in the ſame expreſs words, as is clear from Matt. xxvi. 39, 42.

Ver. 40. And when he returned, he found them aſleep again, &c.] Notwithſtanding the expoſtulation he had uſed with them, the exhortation he had given them, and the danger he had ſuggeſted to them: for their eyes were heavy; with ſleep and ſorrow: neither wiſt they what to anſwer him; partly through confuſion and ſhame, not knowing how to excuſe themſelves; and partly, through their being ſtupified with ſleep and grief.

Ver. 41. And he cometh the third time, &c.] After he had prayed a third time, to the ſame purport as before: and ſaith unto them, ſleep on now, and take your reſt; which words are ſpoken ironically: it is enough; or the end is come, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, of watching and praying: the hour is come, behold, the Son of man is betrayed into the hands of ſinners; both Jews and Gentiles, by one of his own diſciples; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 45.

Ver. 42. Riſe up, let us go, &c.] To meet the enemy and the danger; for there is no eſcaping: lo, he that betrayeth me is at hand; Judas, that he had hinted at ſupper ſhould betray him, was now about doing it; and was juſt now coming upon him, in order to deliver him into the hands of the Jews, and the Roman band of ſoldiers; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 46.

Ver. 43. And immediately while he yet ſpake, &c.] The above words: cometh Judas one of the twelve; apoſtles of Chriſt, and which was an aggravation of his wickedneſs: the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions add, Iſcariot; and ſo it is read in one of Beza's copies. The Ethiopic verſion reads, one of the ten, very wrongly: and with him a great multitude; a band of men and officers, with many of the chief-prieſts and captains of the temple, and elders of the people, that mixed themſelves with the croud, to ſee how things would iſſue: with ſwords and ſtaves; which they intended to make uſe of, ſhould any reſiſtance be made in apprehending him, or any attempt to reſcue him: from the chief prieſts, and the Scribes, and the elders; from the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of theſe; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 47.

Ver. 44. And he that betrayed him, had given them a token, &c.] A common ſign, in which they agreed; and ſo this ſame Greek word is uſed by the Jews [c]: “ſaid R. Phinehas in the name of R. “Reuben, did you ever ſee one man go out of the “north, and another from the ſouth, and meet “each other, except they made, סימנא, a com- “mon ſign between them.” Such an one the traitor gave his company; ſaying, whomſoever I ſhall kiſs, the ſame is he; Jeſus of Nazareth, who was to be delivered to them: take him, and lead him away ſafely; with care and caution, leſt he ſhould get out of their hands, and make his eſcape, as he had ſometimes done: the word ſafely, is omitted in the Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions. The Vulgate Latin renders it cautiouſly, and ſo does the Syriac verſion, which joins it to the words, take him; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 48.

Ver. 45. And as ſoon as he was come, &c.] To the place where Jeſus was: he goeth ſtraightway to him; alone; as if he had nothing to do with the company behind, and as if he was his friend, and concerned for his ſafety: and ſaith, Maſter, Maſter; expreſſing great affection for him, and reſpect to him, by repeating this word. The Ethiopic verſion has it but once, and ſo two exemplars of Beza's; and the Vulgate Latin reads, hail, Maſter, as in Matt. xxvi. 49. and kiſſed him; ſee the note there.

Ver. 46. And they laid hands on him, and took him.] After Chriſt had ſaid to Judas, friend, wherefore art thou come? as in Matthew; and alſo, Judas, das, betrayeſt thou the Son of man with a kiſs? as in Luke; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 50.

Ver. 47. And one of them that ſtood by, &c.] One of the diſciples that ſtood by Jeſus, as Judas was betraying him, and the ſoldiers were laying hold on him, Peter by name: drew a ſword, and ſmote a ſervant of the high prieſt, and cut off his ear; his right ear, the ſervant's name was Malchus; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 51.

Ver. 48. And Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] To the chief prieſts, and captains of the temple, and the elders, that came with the band and officers, as appears from Luke xxii. 52. The Perſic verſion reads, to the multitude: are ye come out as againſt a thief, with ſwords and with ſtaves, to take me? ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 55.

Ver. 49. I was daily with you in the temple, &c.] That is, for ſeveral days paſt; ever ſince he made his publick entry into Jeruſalem: teaching; the people, in a publick manner: and ye took me not; did not attempt to lay hands on him, ſeize him, and carry him away; which he ſignifies might have been eaſily done; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 55. But the ſcriptures muſt be fulfilled; which ſpoke of the betraying him by Judas; and of their taking him in this private and ſecret manner; and of the flight of the diſciples from him, next mentioned; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 56.

Ver. 50. And they all forſook him and fled.] That is, his diſciples, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; and who ſeem to have tranſcribed it from Matthew, and leſt it ſhould be thought, that the multitude whom Chriſt addreſſed, were intended.

Ver. 51. And there followed him a certain young man, &c.] Some think this was John, the beloved diſciple, and the youngeſt of the diſciples; others, that it was James, the brother of our Lord; but he does not ſeem to be any of the diſciples of Chriſt, ſince he is maniſeſtly diſtinguiſhed from them, who all forſook him and fled: ſome have thought, that he was a young man of the houſe, where Chriſt and his diſciples eat their paſſover; who had followed him to the garden, and ſtill followed him, to ſee what would be the iſſue of things: but it ſeems moſt likely, that he was one that lived in an houſe in Gethſemane, or in or near the garden; who being awaked out of ſleep with the noiſe of a band of ſoldiers, and others with them, leaped out of bed, and ran out in his ſhirt, and followed after them, to know what was the matter: having a linen cloth caſt about his naked body; which was either his ſhirt in which he lay, or one of the ſheets, which he took and wrapped himſelf in, not ſtaying to put on his cloaths: though the word Sindon, is uſed both by the Targumiſts [d] and Talmudiſts [e], for a linen garment; and ſometimes, even for the outer garment, to which the fringes were faſtened [f]; and he might take up this in haſte, and ſlip it on, without putting on any inner garment: the word body, is not in the text, and the phraſe επι γυμνȣ, may be rendered, upon his nakedneſs; and anſwers to, ערות, in Gen. ix. 23. and Lev. xx. 11, 17, 19, 20, 21. and the meaning be, he had only a piece of linen wrapped about his middle, to cover his nakedneſs; and in this garb ran out, to ſee what was doing: and the young men laid hold on him. The Roman ſoldiers, who were commonly ſo called; ſo David's ſoldiers are called young men, that were with him, 1 Sam. xxi. 4, 5. theſe attempted to lay hold on this young man, taking him to be a diſciple of Chriſt, or one at leaſt affected to him, and did take hold of his linen cloth. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, leave out the words, the young men. The deſign of Mark in relating this incident, is to ſhew the rage and fury of theſe men; who were for ſparing none that appeared to be, or were thought to be the followers of Chriſt; ſo that the preſervation of the diſciples, was entirely owing to the wonderful power of Chriſt.

Ver. 52. And he left the linen cloth, &c.] In their hands, ſo the Perſic verſion renders it; juſt as Joſeph left his garment in the hands of his miſtreſs, Gen. xxxix. 12. and fled from them naked; to the houſe from whence he came. The Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the words from them.

Ver. 53. And they led Jeſus away to the high-prieſt, &c.] Caiaphas, as is added in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions. This was done, after they had took Jeſus and bound him, and after they had had him to Annas, who ſent him bound to Caiaphas; ſee John xviii. 12, 13, 24. and with him, the high-prieſt Caiaphas, were aſſembled all the chief prieſts, and the elders, and the Scribes; even the whole Sanhedrim, who met at Caiaphas's houſe, and were waiting there for Jeſus; whom Judas with his band of ſoldiers and others, were gone to ſecure, and bring before them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 57.

Ver. 54. And Peter followed him afar off, &c.] And ſo did another diſciple, perhaps John; John xviii. 15. who having ſomewhat recovered themſelves from their fright, turned back, and followed Jeſus, and the company that led him away; keeping at ſome diſtance, that they might not be obſerved, and expoſed to danger; and proceeded till they came to Jeruſalem, and to the place where the Sanhedrim were convened; and the other diſciple went in along with Jeſus; and Peter afterwards, by his means, got in: even into the palace of the high-prieſt; being let in by her that kept the door, at the motion of the other diſciple: and he ſat with the ſervants; as if he was one of them, and had no concern with Jeſus: and warmed himſelf at the fire; or light, as the Greek word ſignifies, and anſwers to the Hebrew word, אור, by which both light and fire are expreſſed; of which, take an inſtance or two, in the room of many [g]: "a murderer that ſtrikes his neighbour with a ſtone, or with iron, and plunges him into water, or into האור, fire, ſo that he can't get out, and dies, is guilty." Again [h], "a book which, האור, fire takes hold upon on one ſide, he puts water on the other; and if it is quenched, it is quenched; if the fire takes hold on both ſides, he opens it, and reads in it; and if it is quenched, it is quenched: a cloak which fire takes hold upon on one ſide, he puts water on the other ſide; and if it is quenched, it is quenched; if the fire takes hold on it on both ſides, he takes it and wraps himſelf in it, and if it is quenched, it is quenched." So we read [i] of אור של גיהנם, the fire of hell; and Ur of the Chaldees has its name from the fire, that was worſhipped there, as a ſymbol of the ſun: and fire was the אור, or light, created on the firſt day, Gen. i. 3. ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 58.

Ver. 55. And the chief prieſts and all the council, &c.] Eſpecially the former, who were of all moſt buſy and active in this matter: ſought for witneſs againſt againſt Jeſus to put him to death; on which they were determined, right or wrong; in this they went contrary to one of their own canons, which runs thus [k]: "in pecuniary cauſes, they begin either for abſolution, or condemnation; but in capital cauſes, "they begin for abſolution, and do not begin for "condemnation." That is, they begun with ſuch evidences, as tended to acquit a man, and not with ſuch as ſerved to condemn him; whereas this court was only ſeeking for ſuch evidence to begin with, that they might condemn Jeſus to death: and found none; that would anſwer their purpoſe; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 59.

Ver. 56. For many bare falſe witneſs againſt him, &c.] The word falſe, is not expreſſed in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; which only ſignify, that they bore witneſs againſt him, accuſed him of, and laid many things to his charge: but their witneſs agreed not together; which ſhewed it to be falſe, and ſo not to be admitted; for witneſſes were to be as one in their teſtimony, or not to be received: the rules concerning them with the Jews, are theſe [l]; "the tradition is, for ever let not their teſtimony "be joined together, unleſs they both ſee, כאחד, "as one: ſays R. Joſhua ben Korcha, even one after "another; and their teſtimony is not ratified in the "council, until they both witneſs as one." Tho' this is not ſo much the ſenſe of the paſſage here; it was not the falſhood of their teſtimony, which this council was unconcerned about, or the contradiction that was in it, which does not appear; but their teſtimonies were not, ισαι, equal, or anſwerable to the wiſhes of the council; they were not ſufficient to prove a capital crime upon him, in order to put him to death, which was what they wanted: they only reſpected ſome light and trivial matters, and did not amount to a charge of blaſphemy, or ſedition.

Ver. 57. And there aroſe certain, &c.] Two falſe witneſſes, as in Matt. xxvi. 60. who ſtood up in court; for witneſſes were obliged to ſtand, whilſt they gave in their teſtimony: "ſays R. Bo, in the "name of R. Hona, witneſſes ought, לעמוד, to "ſtand, whilſt they bear witneſs; as it is ſaid, "Deut. xix. 17. Both the men ſhall ſtand [m], &c." And bare falſe witneſs againſt him, ſaying; as follows.

Ver. 58. We heard him ſay, &c.] In a diſcourſe of his, recorded in John ii. 19. I will deſtroy this temple that is made with hands, and within three days I will build another made without hands; which was a very falſe teſtimony; for Chriſt did not ſay he would deſtroy any temple at all, only put the Jews on doing it; much leſs did he point at, or deſign the temple of Jeruſalem, but his own body; nor did he uſe the diſtinction of a temple, made with and without hands; nor did he affirm that he would build another; only ſaid, he would raiſe up in three days, that which they ſhould deſtroy. By this teſtimony theſe witneſſes would ſuggeſt, that Chriſt had a deſign upon their temple to demoliſh it, and that he muſt be a ſorcerer, or a magician, to pretend to build a temple without hands in three days time; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 61.

Ver. 59. But neither ſo did their witneſs agree together.] Their witneſs did agree together, for they both witneſſed the ſame thing; but not ſo as to found upon it the charge of a capital crime againſt him; their witneſs was not ſo, ιση, equal, was not anſwerable to their deſires, nor ſufficient to convict him of a capital crime, for which they could condemn him to death, as before obſerved on ver. 56.

Ver. 60. And the high prieſt ſtood up in the midſt, &c.] Of the Sanhedrim, of which he was now preſident: he ſat at the head of them, and Ab Beth Din, or the father of the council, at his right hand; and the reſt of the council ſat before him, in a ſemicircular form, as the half of a round corn floor, ſo that the preſident and the father of the council, could ſee them [n]; for they were all before him, he being ſituated in the middle, right againſt them; ſo that when he ſtood up, he might be ſaid to ſtand in the midſt of them: and aſked Jeſus, ſaying, anſwereſt thou nothing? For he had made no reply to the ſeveral witneſſes, that came againſt him: what is it which theſe witneſs againſt thee? Is it true, or falſe? ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 62.

Ver. 61. But he held his peace, and anſwered nothing, &c.] Knowing it would be to no purpoſe, and ſignifying hereby, that the things alledged againſt him, were unworthy of an anſwer: again the high-prieſt aſked him, and ſaid unto him, art thou the Chriſt, the Son of the Bleſſed? The Vulgate Latin adds, God: in Matthew it is God only. This is one of the names and epithets of God, with the Jews; nothing is more common in their writings, than this abbreviature, הקבה; which is, הקדוש ברוך הוא, the holy bleſſed he; who is bleſſed in himſelf, and the fountain of all bleſſedneſs to his creatures, and who is bleſſed and praiſed by angels and ſaints; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 63.

Ver. 62. And Jeſus ſaid, I am, &c.] That is, the Son of God; in proof of which he adds, and ye ſhall ſee the Son of man ſitting on the right-hand of power; that is, of God, who is all power, the Lord God almighty: and coming in the clouds of heaven; either at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, or at the laſt day, referring to the prophecy in Dan. vii. 13. ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 64.

Ver. 63. Then the high prieſt rent his cloaths, &c.] As was uſual upon hearing blaſphemy; which he now ſuppoſed the caſe, or at leaſt would have it ſo thought: and ſaith, what need we any further witneſſes? or trouble ourſelves to ſee for any more, or to hear and take the depoſitions of any others; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 65.

Ver. 64. Ye have heard the blaſphemy, &c.] The manifeſt blaſphemy, as the Arabic verſion renders it; and out of his own mouth, as the Syriac verſion adds, agreeable to Luke xxii. 71. what think ye? what ſentence is to be paſſed upon him? And they all condemned him to be guilty of death; excepting Joſeph of Arimathea, Luke xxiii. 51. ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 66.

Ver. 65. And ſome began to ſpit on him, &c.] The men that held him, Luke xxii. 63. fulfilling the prophecy in Iſa. l. 6. and to cover his face; with a vail, or linen cloth, to blindfold him, as a perſon unworthy to behold the light; or rather, in order to make ſport with him: and to buffet him; with their double fiſts; and to ſay unto him, propheſy. The Arabic verſion adds, unto us, O Chriſt, who it is that hath buffeted thee now; that gave thee the laſt blow? and to the ſame purpoſe the Ethiopic. The Perſic verſion adds, and deliver thyſelf: and the ſervants did ſtrike him with the palms of their hands. The Syriac verſion renders it, on his cheeks: they gave him ſlaps on the face. Theſe were the officers of the high-prieſt's, that uſed him in this indecent cent manner. This clauſe is omitted in the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 66. And as Peter was beneath in the palace, &c.] Not at the lower and further end of the room, but in the lower part of it; that part in which Jeſus and the Sanhedrim were, being upon an advanced ground, with ſteps aſcending to it: there cometh one of the maids of the high-prieſt; the ſame that kept the door, and let him in. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, a daughter of the high-prieſt.

Ver. 67. And when ſhe ſaw Peter warming himſelf, &c.] At the fire, which was in the midſt of the hall: ſhe looked upon him; very earneſtly, knowing him to be the ſame, ſhe had let in at the motion of one, that was known in the high-prieſt's family; and ſuſpecting him, by being a ſtranger, and by his looks: and ſaid, and thou alſo waſt with Jeſus of Nazareth; that is, one of his diſciples; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 69.

Ver. 68. But he denied, &c.] That he was with Jeſus, or a diſciple of his: I know not; Jeſus of Nazareth: neither underſtand I what thou ſayeſt; about him, and of being with him: the laſt phraſe, neither underſtand I, is omitted in the Syriac and Perſic verſions: and he went out into the porch; adjoining to the palace, to conſider what to do, being ſurprized and confounded at ſuch a challenge: and the cock crew; the firſt time, being about midnight; and yet he took no notice of it, nor remembered what Chriſt had but a few hours before ſaid to him; or if he did, he might hope he ſhould not meet with another attack, or he ſhould have more courage and ſtrength than to deny a ſecond time.

Ver. 69. And a maid ſaw him again, &c.] Either the ſame maid, ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, that maid; that ſelf-ſame maid, as before, or another, as in Matt. xxvi. 71. and ſo the Arabic verſion reads it here; but the Ethiopic as before, a daughter; that is, of the high-prieſt: and began to ſay to them that ſtood by; the fire, along with Peter, warming themſelves: this is one of them; this man is one of the diſciples and followers of Jeſus of Nazareth; he is of that ſect, he certainly belongs to them, and is come here only as a ſpie.

Ver. 70. And he denied it again, &c.] That he was one of the diſciples of Jeſus: and a little after; about an hour after, Luke xxii. 59. they that ſtood by, ſaid again to Peter, ſurely thou art one of them: one confidently affirmed that he was with Jeſus, and another challenged him with ſeeing him in the garden with him, Luke xxii. 59. John xviii. 26. and in general they were of opinion, that he muſt be one of that ſect, giving this as a reaſon, for thou art a Galilean: as they ſuppoſed Jeſus to be; and knowing that in Galilee he had chiefly preached, and wrought his miracles, and had there a large number of followers: and thy ſpeech agreeth thereto; he uſed words and phraſes peculiar to the Galileans, and pronounced as they did; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 73. This clauſe is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, and is wanting in Beza's moſt ancient copy; but is in the other copies, and in all the Eaſtern verſions.

Ver. 71. But he began to curſe and to ſwear, &c.] To wiſh the moſt dreadful things upon himſelf, and to ſwear by the living God; ſaying, I know not this man of whom ye ſpeak; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 74.

Ver. 72. And the ſecond time the cock crew, &c.] Immediately, as ſoon as he had ſo ſaid and ſwore, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, and as it is read in one of Beza's copies; which was about three of the clock in the morning, and is what is properly called the cock-crowing: and Peter called to mind; upon hearing the cock crow a ſecond time, the word that Jeſus ſaid unto him, before the cock crow twice, thou ſhalt deny me thrice: as he now had done twice, to the maid, or maids, and a third time to the ſervants that ſtood by the fire along with him: and when he thought thereon; on the words of Chriſt, and on his ſin in denying him, and on the aggravated circumſtances of it. The Arabic verſion renders it, he turned himſelf to weep: he turned away from the company, he threw himſelf out of it, and got out of doors as faſt as he could, and broke out into a violent fit of weeping. The Syriac, Perſic, and Vulgate Latin verſions, render it, he began to weep; this phraſe is omitted in the Ethiopic verſion: ſome chuſe to render it, he looked upon him; that is, on Chriſt: as Chriſt looked upon him; which produced true evangelical repentance in him, ſo Peter looked upon his dear Lord with concern, whom he had ſo ſhamefully denied; he looked upon him and mourned, he looked upon him with an eye of faith, and ſorrowed for his ſin after a godly ſort: but the true ſenſe of the word is, he covered himſelf; he caſt his garment over his head, he veiled himſelf as mourners did, who covered their heads, and their faces, and even their lips. So Maimonides[o]; "from "whence, ſays he, is uncovering the head, forbidden a mourner? For, lo! it is ſaid to Ezekiel, ch. xxiv. 17. cover not thy lips at all, for "the reſt of mourners are obliged to the covering "of the head; the linen cloth, or vail, with which "he covers his head, he covers with a part of it, "a little over his mouth; as it is ſaid, Lev. xiii. "45. He ſhall put a covering upon his upper lip: "and Onkelos paraphraſes it, יתעטף כאבלא, as a "mourner he ſhall cover himſelf." And ſo it is ſaid of Haman[p], "that he went to his houſe, and mourned "for his daughter, ומתעטף על רישיה כאבלא, "and put a covering on his head as a mourner; for "his daughter, and for his reproach." And this it ſeems, was the cuſtom of the Iſhmaelites: hence that ſaying[q], "all veiling (in mourning) which is "not as the veiling of the Iſhmaelites (who cover "all the face) is no veiling." And thus Peter, through ſhame, and as a token of ſorrow and mourning for his ſin, threw his garment over him: and he wept; as Matthew ſays, bitterly; being fully convinced of his ſin, and heartily ſorry for it; ſee the note on Matt. xxvi. 75.

As that he was a magician, and a blaſphemer, and gave out that he was the Son of God; and that he made himſelf a king, and even forbad the people to give tribute to Cæſar, and moved diſcord, ſedition, and rebellion throughout the land; but he anſwered nothing. This clauſe is wanting in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; but is in the Greek text of the Complutenſian edition, and in the Ethiopic verſion, and agrees with Matt. xxvii. 12. ſee the note there.

Ver. 4. And Pilate aſked him again, &c.] In the preſence of the chief-prieſts, who laid ſo many things to his charge; for the former queſtion was put, when Jeſus and he were alone in the judgment-hall, whither the Jews would not enter for fear of being defiled; ſee John xviii. 28, 33. ſaying, anſwereſt thou nothing? behold how many things they witneſs againſt thee! the charges were many, and very heinous, and which Pilate thought called for ſelf-defence; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 13.

Ver. 5. But Jeſus yet anſwered nothing, &c.] He ſtill continued ſilent, and made no defence for himſelf, which the governor was willing to give him an opportunity to make, and, as his friend, urged him to it: ſo that Pilate marvelled; what ſhould be the meaning of his ſilence, when he was ſo capable of defending himſelf, and was ſo innocent, as Pilate himſelf was ready to believe; and yet the things he was charged with were of the higheſt nature, and by perſons of the greateſt figure in the nation; ſo that his ſilence expoſed him to a great deal of danger, which Pilate thought might eaſily be avoided by anſwering for himſelf; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 14.

Ver. 6. Now at that feaſt, &c.] The feaſt of the paſſover, which was at that inſtant; ſee John xviii. 39. The Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, at every feaſt; as if the following cuſtom was uſed at every feaſt in the year, at the feaſts of Pentecoſt and Tabernacles, as well as at the paſſover; whereas it was only at the latter: he releaſed unto them the priſoner whomſoever they deſired; of this cuſtom ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 15.

Ver. 7. And there was one named Barabbas, &c.] A priſoner of that name at Jeruſalem; which lay bound with them that had made inſurrection with him: he had been at the head of a ſeditious mob, and he, and his accomplices were taken and put in priſon: who had committed murder in the inſurrection; which may be connected either with Barabbas, and read in the ſingular number, as it is in the Vulgate Latin verſion, he had committed; or with the ſeditious perſons he lay bound with, and be read in the plural number, they had committed murder, as it is in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions; and ſo in the ancient copies; and the Ethiopic renders it, he was bound with ſeditious perſons and murderers; though, no doubt, he was guilty of murder as well as they; and ſo Peter calls him a murderer, Acts iii. 14. About this time murders were very frequently committed: the Jews ſay [r], that "from the time that "murtherers increaſed, the ſlaying of the red heifer "ceaſed; (the reaſon the commentators [s] give, is, "becauſe they were known who were accuſtomed "to commit murder) and that was from the time "that Eleazar ben Dinai came, and Techinah ben "Periſhah he was called; and they called him "again the Son of a murderer;" ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 16.

Ver. 8. And the multitude crying aloud, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, and when the multitude, or people went up, to the place called the pavement, where the judgment-ſeat was; and ſo it is read in Beza's moſt ancient copy; but the former reading is to be preferr'd: began to deſire him to do as he had ever done to them; that is, releaſe a priſoner to them, as he had done at every paſſover, ſince he had been a governor over them.

Ver. 9. But Pilate anſwered them ſaying, &c.] Being ſatisfied of the innocence of Jeſus, and being willing to diſmiſs him: will ye that I releaſe unto you the king of the Jews? he who is called ſo; and which he either ſaid by way of deriſion both of Chriſt, and them; or elſe in order to prevail upon them to aſk his releaſe, it being ſcandalous and reproachful to put their king to death.

Ver. 10. For he knew that the chief-prieſts, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads in the ſingular, the chief of the prieſts, or the high-prieſt, Caiaphas, had delivered him for envy; at his popularity through his doctrine and miracles, and not from any principle of equity and juſtice, or from any regard to Cæſar; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 18.

Ver. 11. But the chief-prieſts moved the people, &c.] Greatly ſolicited and perſuaded them, both in perſon, and by their officers they employed, and diſperſed among them, to make uſe of arguments with them to prevail upon them: that he ſhould rather releaſe Barabbas unto them; than Jeſus of Nazareth; chuſing rather to have a murderer granted unto them, than the holy and juſt one. The Perſic verſion, as before, reads, the chief of the prieſts; but they were all concerned, and were the moſt active men in bringing about the death of Chriſt; tho' Caiaphas was behind none of them in envy, rage, and malice; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 20.

Ver. 12. And Pilate anſwered and ſaid again unto them, &c.] Being aſtoniſhed that they ſhould aſk the releaſe of ſuch an infamous perſon; and being very deſirous of ſaving Jeſus: what will ye then that I ſhall do unto him, whom ye call the king of the Jews? at leaſt many of you; would you have me put him to death? ſurely this can never be deſired; or would you have me inflict ſome ſlight puniſhment on him, as ſcourging him, and ſo diſmiſs him? ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 22.

Ver. 13. And they cried out again, crucify him.] For they had cried ſo once before; tho' Matthew and Mark relate it not, yet Luke does, ch. xxiii. 22.

Ver. 14. Then Pilate ſaid unto them, &c.] The third time, Luke xxiii. 22. why, what evil hath he done? worthy of death. They had charged him with many things, but proved nothing againſt him. Pilate could find no fault in him, and judged him an innocent perſon, and therefore was loth to condemn him: and they cried out the more exceedingly, with louder voices, and greater vehemency, the more they found he was inclined to ſave him: crucify him; nothing ſhort of death would ſatisfy them, and no other death but that of the croſs; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 22, 23.

Ver. 15. And ſo Pilate willing to content the people, &c.] To ſatisfy and make them eaſy, who were become very noiſy and tumultuous, and fearing the conſequences of their reſentment, ſhould he not comply, of which he had formerly had experience; therefore to humour them, and keep in their favour, after he had waſhed his hands, to teſtify his innocence in the matter, he releaſed Barabbas unto them; the ſeditious perſon, robber, and murderer, as they deſired: and delivered Jeſus when he had ſcourged him; or having ſcourged him; for this he had done before, hoping the Jews would have been ſatisfied with that, and not have inſiſted on any farther puniſhment. The Arabic verſion very wrongly renders the words, and delivered unto them Jeſus, that he might be ſcourged; as if this was afterwards to be done by the Jews, or Roman ſoldiers; whereas he had ſcourged him before, and now delivered him to be crucified, as they deſired; in which he acted contrary to law and juſtice, to the violation of his own conſcience, and merely to gratify the humour of the people; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 26.

Ver. 16. And the ſoldiers led him away into the hall, &c.] From the place called the pavement, where was the judge's bench, from which he paſſed ſentence on Chriſt, to a large room, called the prætorium, or judgment-hall; being the hall, or room, where the prætor, or Roman magiſtrate kept his court of judicature; and is the ſame place the Jews would not go into, leſt they ſhould be defiled, and become unmeet to eat the Chagigah that day; and into which Pilate had Jeſus more than once alone, John xviii. 28, 33. and xix. 9. but now he had a large company with him: and they call together the whole band; very likely the ſoldiers, into whoſe cuſtody Jeſus was put, and who led him away, were the four ſoldiers that attended his crucifixion, and parted his garments; but for greater diverſion they got together the whole band to which they belonged; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 27.

Ver. 17. And they clothed him with purple, &c.] Matthew calls it a ſcarlet robe; and the Perſic verſion here renders it a red garment: it was of a colour reſembling purple; it was pretty near it, and therefore ſo called; which is what kings were uſed to wear; and ſo in deriſion of him, as a king, clothed him with this mock purple robe; and which was very likely one of the ſoldiers old coats: and platted a crown of thorns, and put it about his head; for a crown, and alſo a reed in his hand, inſtead of a ſceptre, as Matthew relates; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 28, 29.

Ver. 18. And began to ſalute him, hail king of the Jews.] In a mock way, wiſhing him long life and proſperity, as if he was a king juſt come to his throne, and this was his coronation-day.

Ver. 19. And they ſmote him on the head with a reed, &c.] Or cane, a walking-ſtick which they had put into his hands for a ſceptre: this they took out again, and ſtruck him on the head with it, which drove the ſharp-pointed thorns into his temples: and did ſpit upon him; upon his face, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read: and bowing their knees, as to a ſovereign prince, worſhipped him; ſaying the above words, hail king of the Jews; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 29, 30.

Ver. 20. And when they had mocked him, &c.] To their ſatisfaction, and had had enough of this ſort of diverſion: they took off the purple from him; and ſo, in their way, unkinged him; and put his own clothes on him: both that he might be known to be the ſame perſon; and that the four ſoldiers, who had the charge of him, might have the perquiſites of his clothes at his execution: and led him out to crucify him: they led him out of the prætorium, or judgment-hall, and through the city, without the gates of it, to the uſual place of crucifixion; he bearing his own croſs, when firſt led out.

Ver. 21. And they compel one Simon a Cyrenian, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxvii. 32. who paſſed by; as they were leading Jeſus to be crucified: coming out of the country; from ſome country village hard by, according to the Syriac, and Vulgate Latin verſions; or out of the field, as the Perſic and Ethiopic: he might have been in the field, about ſome rural buſineſs; or, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, to fetch wood from thence, which was lawful to be done on a feaſt-day, with ſome proviſo's, according to the Jewiſh canon, which runs thus[t]; "they may bring wood out of the field, (i. e. on a feaſt-day, as this was) of that which is gathered together, and out of a place that is fenced about, and even of that which is ſcattered abroad: what is a fenced place? whatever is near to a city, the words of R. Judah. R. Joſe ſays, whatever they go into by a door, and even within the border of the ſabbath." And according to the commentators[u], it muſt be wood that is gathered together, and that lies not in an open field, but in a fenced place, and this near the city; at leaſt within two thouſand cubits, a ſabbath-day's journey. The father of Alexander and Rufus; who were men well known when Mark wrote his Goſpel, and very likely men of eminence among Chriſtians: mention is made of Alexander in Acts xix. 33. and of Rufus, in Rom. xvi. 13. which ſome have thought the ſame as here; but whether they are or no, is not certain: however, they obliged Simon to bear his croſs; the croſs of Chriſt, after him; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 32.

Ver. 22. And they bring him unto the place, Golgotha, &c.] A famous, or rather an infamous one, well known, and much noted for the many executions there: which is, being interpreted, the place of a ſkull; becauſe the ſkulls of men that had been executed and buried there, being dug up again, lay ſcattered about; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 33.

Ver. 23. And they gave him to drink wine mingled with myrrhe, &c.] Wine mingled with frankincenſe was what was uſually given by the Jews to perſons going to die[w]: "he that goes to be executed they mix for him, קורט של לבונה בכוס של יין, a grain of frankincenſe in a cup of wine, that his mind may be diſturbed, or not ſenſible; as it is ſaid, Prov. xxxi. 6. give ſtrong drink to him that is ready to periſh, and wine to the bitter in ſoul: and the tradition is, that the honourable women in Jeruſalem gave this freely, and brought it them; and if they did not, it was provided by the congregation," at the public expence; the deſign of it was to intoxicate, that they might not feel their pain and miſery: but neither the rich women in general, nor were the public ſo diſpoſed towards Chriſt, as to provide ſuch a potion for him: it is moſt likely therefore that this was prepared by his friends, as Mary Magdalene, Martha, and others, in order to chear and refreſh his ſpirits; and was different from what the ſoldiers gave him, which was vinegar mixed with gall, tho' the Perſic verſion ſo reads here: but he received it not; nor would he ſo much as taſte of it, as he did of the other, to ſhew that he needed no ſuch outward means to ſupport his ſpirits, nor deſired any allay of his ſorrows, and was not afraid to meet death in all its terrors; and beſides, he had ſaid he would drink no more of the fruit of the vine till he drank it new in his father's kingdom, Matt. xxvi. 29. ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 34.

Ver. 24. And when they had crucified him, &c.] Had faſtened him to the croſs, and reared it up, and he was hanging upon it: they parted his garments, caſting lots upon them, what every man ſhould take. This laſt clauſe, what every man ſhould take, is left out in the Arabic verſion. His garments they divided into four parts; and each ſoldier, as there were four of them, took a part; and upon his veſture, or ſeamleſs coat, becauſe they would not rend it, they caſt lots who ſhould have it, and ſo fulfilled a prophecy in Pſ. xxii. 18. ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 35.

Ver. 25. And it was the third hour, and they crucified him.] The time of the daily ſacrifice of the morning, at which the prieſts ought to have been; and the time when the Sanhedrim uſually began to ſit[x]; for "the grand Sanhedrim ſat from the daily "ſacrifice of the morning, to the daily ſacrifice of "the evening:" but this being an extraordinary caſe, and they in a hurry to put Jeſus to death, had been ſitting up all night; and early in the morning had procured the ſentence of death on him, which they were going to execute by the time they uſed to ſit: this was about nine o'clock in the morning, and takes in the time between that and twelve at noon. The Ethiopic verſion reads, and it was the ſixth hour, to make it agree with John xix. 14. and for the reconciling of theſe two places, ſee the note there.

Ver. 26. And the ſuperſcription of his accuſation, &c.] Or the cauſe of his death, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; the crime for which he ſuffered: was written; over his head, upon the croſs, to which it was faſtened; the ſum of which was, the king of the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 37.

Ver. 27. And with him they crucified two thieves, &c.] For his greater reproach; the one on his right hand, and the other on his left; as if he had been one of them, and a principal among them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 38.

Ver. 28. And the ſcripture was fulfilled, which ſaith, &c.] In Iſ. liii. 12. and he was numbered with the tranſgreſſors: he was no tranſgreſſor of the law of God himſelf, but was perfectly conformable to it in his holy nature, harmleſs converſation, and complete obedience: he knew no ſin, nor committed any in thought, word, or deed, nor could any be found in him by men or devils; and yet he was traduced as a ſinner, and charged with many foul things, none of which could be proved upon him: but inaſmuch as he ſtood in the room, and ſtead of ſinners, and had all the ſins of his people imputed to him, and laid upon him, with his own conſent, he was treated by the juſtice of God as if he had been a tranſgreſſor, and was reckoned as ſuch; of which his being placed between two thieves, was a ſymbol and repreſentation: hence he was ſtricken, and wounded, and died, for the ſins of thoſe in whoſe place he ſtood. The fifty-third chapter of Iſaiah, where this paſſage ſtands, is a manifeſt prophecy of the Meſſiah, as ſeveral of the Jewiſh writers themſelves, both ancient and modern, acknowledge; though ſome would apply it to ſome other perſons[y].

Ver. 29. And they that paſſed by, &c.] In the road, and went by the croſs. The Arabic verſion adds, before him, Chriſt, as he hung on the croſs: railed on him, wagging their heads; gave him opprobrious language, and uſed indecent geſtures; and ſaying, ah! thou that deſtroyeſt the temple; the Vulgate Latin verſion adds, of God: and buildeſt it in three days; thou poor vain miſerable creature, that boaſted of thy power, where art thou now? and what doſt thou think of thyſelf?

Ver. 30. Save thyſelf, and come down from the croſs.] Suggeſting, that if he was what he had pretended to be, and could do what he gave out he could, he might eaſily free himſelf from the croſs, and make his eſcape; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 39, 40.

Ver. 31. Likewiſe alſo the chief-prieſts mocking, &c.] Or laughed at one another, as the Syriac verſion renders it, having gained their point, and ſatiated their revenge on him: ſaid among themſelves with the Scribes; who were likewiſe his implacable enemies: he ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave; ſee the notes on Matt. xxvii. 41, 42.

Ver. 32. Let Chriſt the king of Iſrael, &c.] Who ſets up for the Meſſiah, and whoſe followers call him the king of Iſrael, whom the nation expected: and if he is ſo, let him deſcend now from the croſs, that we may ſee; ſee him come down, and be eye-witneſſes of his power: and believe; that he is the Meſſiah that was propheſied of, and has been waiting for: and they that were crucified with him reviled him; that is, the thieves, at leaſt one of them; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 44.

Ver. 33. And when the ſixth hour was come, &c.] Or twelve o'clock at noon, having hung upon the croſs from about the third hour, or nine in the morning: there was darkneſs over the whole land until the ninth hour; or three o'clock in the afternoon. The Ethiopic verſion renders the whole thus, and when it was noon, the ſun was darkened, and the whole world was darkened until the ninth hour; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 45.

Ver. 34. And at the ninth hour Jeſus cried with a loud voice, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxvii. 46. Saying, Eloi, Eloi, lama ſabachthani? In Matthew 'tis, Eli, Eli. Both Eli and Eloi are Hebrew words, and ſignify the ſame; and are both uſed in Pſ. xxii. 1, 2. from whence the whole is taken: which is, being interpreted, my God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 46.

Ver. 35. And ſome of them that ſtood by, &c.] The croſs: when they heard it; the loud voice of Jeſus, and the words he uttered: ſaid, behold he calleth Elias; whom they ignorantly, or wilfully took for Eloi; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 47.

Ver. 36. And one ran and filled a ſpunge full of vinegar, &c.] Chriſt at the ſame time ſaying, I thirſt; ſee John xix. 28. and put it on a reed; an hyſſop-ſtalk, John xix. 29. and gave him to drink; and ſo fulfilled a prophecy in Pſ. lxix. 21. ſaying, or they ſaid, as the Syriac verſion reads it; not he that fetched the ſpunge, but the others that were with him, and which agrees with Matt. xxvii. 49.

Ver. 37. And Jeſus cried with a loud voice, &c.] A ſecond time, and ſaid the words which are in Luke xxiii. 46. and in John xix. 30. and gave up the ghoſt. The Syriac verſion renders it, and finiſhed; his life, his days, his race, his miniſtry, and the work which was given him to do; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 50.

Ver. 38. And the vail of the temple was rent in twain, from the top to the bottom.] At which time alſo there was an earthquake, and the rocks were rent, and graves were opened, as Matthew relates, ch. xxvii. 51, 52. ſee the notes there.

Ver. 39. And when the centurion which ſtood over-againſt him, &c.] To watch him, that no body releaſed him, and that he did not come down from the croſs himſelf; ſaw that he ſo cried out, and gave up the ghoſt; that he cried with ſo loud, and ſtrong a voice, and the next moment expired: he ſaid truly this man was the Son of God; and ſo ſaid the reſt of the ſoldiers that were with him, as appears from Matt. xxvii. 54. ſee the note there.

Ver. 40. There were alſo women looking on afar off, &c.] At ſome diſtance from the croſs, obſerving what was ſaid and done; among whom was Mary Magdalene; who had received great favours from Chriſt: and Mary the mother of James the leſs; or little, ſo called to diſtinguiſh him from James the ſon of Zebedee, and becauſe he might be little of ſtature: nor was it unuſual with the Jews to diſtinguiſh perſons after this manner: ſo we read [z] of R. Jeſa, זעירא, the little, and of Samuel, הקטן, the little [a], which ſome have thought to be the apoſtle Paul, ſo called from the littleneſs of his ſtature: and of Joſes; or Joſeph, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read; and Salome; the mother of Zebedee's children, James and John; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 56. This was a common name among the Jews; Herod had a ſiſter and a daughter of this name; and the daughter of Herodias, who demanded the head of John the Baptiſt, was of this name; and it is the ſame with Shalom: we read [b] of one Imme Shalom, or mother Shalom, wife of R. Eliezer, and ſiſter to Rabban Gamaliel. Salome, with the Ethiopians [c], is ſaid to be Mary's midwife, and to accompany Chriſt, with Mary, and Joſeph, when they fled into Egypt.

Ver. 41. Who alſo when he was in Galilee followed him, &c.] Wherever he went in Galilee, and from thence to Jeruſalem: and miniſtred unto him; of their worldly ſubſtance, Luke viii. 3. and many other women which came up with him unto Jeruſalem; from the ſame parts; ſee Matt. xxvii. 55.

Ver. 42. And now when the even was come, &c.] Of the preparation, as the Syriac verſion reads; or the night of the ſixth day, as the Perſic verſion renders it, Friday night: becauſe it was the preparation; of the paſſover, and of the ſabbath, when they prepared their food, and got it ready for the enſuing ſabbath, on which it was not lawful to dreſs any: that is the day before the ſabbath; that is, Friday; on which day, 'tis clear, Chriſt ſuffered, died, and was buried.

Ver. 43. Joſeph of Arimathea, an honourable counſeller, &c.] A man of a good aſpect, well dreſſed, and that behaved well and honourably in his office, as a counſeller: he ſeems to have been a prieſt, and one of the bench of prieſts that ſat in the high-prieſt's chamber, which is called, לשכת בלווטי, the chamber of the counſellers [d]; with whom he adviſed there, in matters of moment: which alſo waited for the kingdom of God; for the coming and kingdom of the Meſſiah, for the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the world to come, the Jews were ſo much in expectation of. Came and went in boldly unto Pilate; not now aſhamed of Chriſt, or afraid openly to appear in his cauſe, and declare himſelf a lover of him, a believer in him, and a diſciple of his, tho' he formerly was: and craved the body of Jeſus; deſired leave to take it down from the croſs, and bury it; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 58.

Ver. 44. And Pilate marvelled if he were already dead, &c.] For death, by crucifixion, was a ſlow lingering death; perſons that were in their full ſtrength hung a great while before they expired; and the two thieves, which were crucified with Chriſt, were not dead when he was: and calling unto him the centurion; who was ſet to watch him: he aſked him, whether he had been any while dead; he enquired of him, whether he was dead, and how long he had been dead.

Ver. 45. And when he knew it of the centurion, &c.] Who might inform him of his giving up the ghoſt after he had cried with a loud voice, which ſo much affected him; and how he was found to be really dead when they came to break the legs of the malefactors; and how that one of the ſoldiers pierced his ſide with a ſpear, from whence flowed blood and water; ſo that there was no room to doubt of his being really dead; with which Pilate being ſatisfied, he gave the body to Joſeph; ordered it to be given to him; gave him leave to take it down from the croſs, and interr it.

Ver. 46. And he bought fine linen, &c.] That is, Joſeph, as is expreſſed in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions; which, when he had done, as is highly probable, in the city of Jeruſalem, he went to mount Calvary, and took him down; took the body of Chriſt down from the croſs; though, no doubt, with the aſſiſtance of others, or by others, and not he himſelf, at leaſt not alone: and wrapped him in the linen; wound him up in it, as was the manner of the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 59. and laid him in a ſepulchre, which was hewn out of a rock, and rolled a ſtone unto the door of the ſepulchre; ſee the note on Matt. xxvii. 60.

Ver. 47. And Mary Magdalene, and Mary the mother of Joſes, &c.] Or Joſeph, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read: beheld where he was laid: very likely they ſaw Joſeph, and his men, take him down from the croſs, and they followed him, and obſerved where he laid him; or, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, where they buried him; placing themſelves, as Matthew ſuggeſts, right over-againſt the ſepulchre; ſo that they were witneſſes of his death, and of his burial, as they afterwards were of his reſurrection from the dead.

CHAP. XVI.

Ver. 1. AND when the ſabbath was paſt, &c.] In the end of it, as Matthew ſays; not when it was the ſabbath, as the Arabic verſion reads; for it was not lawful to buy ſpices, and anoint with on the ſabbath-day; ſee the note on Matt. xxviii. 1. Mary Magdalene, and Mary, the mother of James, and Salome; who was the wife of Zebedee, and the mother of the other James and John: had bought ſweet ſpices; or bought, as the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read; for though the women might have bought ſome on the preparation day, the day before the ſabbath, the ſame evening that Chriſt was buried, Luke xxiii. 56. yet they might buy more for the ſame purpoſe, after the ſabbath was over: for this there was a particular market at Jeruſalem; for we are [d] told, that "there were there three markets, one by another; in the firſt of which were ſold, all kinds of precious things, ſilks, and embroidered work; in the ſecond, various kinds of fruits, and herbs; and in the third, all kinds of ſpices." That they might come and anoint him; with thoſe ſweet ſpices, as was the manner of the Jews: hence we read [e] of, הבשמים של מתים, the ſpices of the dead; which were uſed to expel an ungrateful ſavour: this they did, out of affection to Chriſt, but ſeemed to have no faith in his reſurrection, though he had told them of it, which they had forgot. The Vulgate Latin reads, that they might anoint Jeſus; the Ethiopic verſion, anoint his body; but the Arabic thus, anoint the ſepulchre; his body being anointed before, and wound up by Joſeph and Nicodemus; and therefore they came to ſtrow the ſepulchre with ſpices and ointments, and give it a ſweet perfume. Though it ſeems moſt likely, that they came to anoint his body; for this was one of the things which was cuſtomary in Iſrael to do to dead men, as Maimonides [f] obſerves, סכין אותו במיני בשמים, they anoint him with various ſorts of ſpices.

Ver. 2. And very early in the morning, the firſt day of the week, &c.] See the note on Matt. xxviii. 1. They came to the ſepulchre at the riſing of the ſun; of the ſun of righteouſneſs, as Mr. Mede obſerves; or rather, of the natural ſun: for tho' it was dark when they ſet out, and when it dawned towards the firſt day, yet by that time that they all got to the ſepulchre, the ſun was riſing: the Jews ſay [g], that "from the aſcending of the morning, or break of day, until the ſun riſes, is an hour and a half." And ſo much time may very well be allowed the women, from their ſetting out, to their coming to the ſepulchre. Moreover, they ſay [h], that "from the hind of the morning, to the time the eaſt is enlightened, a man may walk four miles; and from the time that the eaſt is enlightened, עד שתנץ החמה, until the ſun riſes, four miles." But women muſt not be thought to walk ſo faſt: let it be obſerved, that Chriſt, who is called the hind of the morning, Pſal. xxii. title, and the morning ſtar, Rev. xxii. 16. roſe at this time.

Ver. 3. And they ſaid among themſelves, &c.] Either before they ſet out, or as they were going along: who ſhall roll us away the ſtone from the door of the ſepulchre? Which they ſaw was placed there by Joſeph, or his orders: this was the only difficulty they had, that they were aware of; for they ſeem to know nothing of the ſealing of the ſtone, and of the watch that was ſet to guard the ſepulchre; things which were done on the ſabbath-day, on which they reſted: for had they, in all likelihood they would never have attempted to have gone to it; the guard of ſoldiers would have been a ſufficient diſcouragement: but all their concern was, how, and by whom, the ſtone ſhould be rolled away, that lay at the door of the ſepulchre; and perhaps their concern might be, not only on account of the largeneſs of the ſtone, as being too much for them to remove, but becauſe ſuch a ſtone defiled by touching it, according to the Jewiſh traditions [i].

Ver. 4. And when they looked, &c.] Towards the ſepulchre, as they came near it: they ſaw that the ſtone was rolled away; they perceived it lay at ſome diſtance from the door of the ſepulchre, which doubtleſs was very grateful, and matter of rejoicing to them: for it was very great; theſe words are to be read, in connexion with the preceding verſe; for they are not a reaſon, why when they looked towards the ſepulchre, they ſaw the ſtone rolled, becauſe it was a very large one, and ſo eaſily to be ſeen at a diſtance; but a reaſon why they were ſo thoughtful and concerned, who ſhould roll it away for them, it being ſo big, that they could not think that they were able to do it themſelves.

Ver. 5. And entring into the ſepulchre, &c.] For the ſepulchres of the Jews were made ſo large, that perſons might go into them: the rule for making them is this [k]; "he that ſells ground to his neighbour to make a burying-place, or that receives of his neighbour to make a burying-place, muſt make the inſide of the cave four cubits by ſix, and open in it eight graves; three here, and three there, and two over-againſt them; and the graves muſt be four cubits long, and ſeven high, and ſix broad. R. Simeon ſays, he muſt make the inſide of the cave ſix cubits by eight, and open within thirteen graves; four here, and four there, and three over-againſt them; and one on the right hand of the door, and one on the left; and he muſt make, חצר, a court, at the mouth of the cave ſix by ſix, according to the bier, and thoſe that bury; and he muſt open in the midſt of it two caves, one here and another there. R. Simeon ſays, four at the four ſides; R. Simeon ben Gamaliel ſays, all is according to the nature of the rock." Now it was in the court that the women entered, where the bier was to be put down by the bearers; and where they could look into the ſepulchre, and the ſeveral caves and graves in it, and what were in them. So Maimonides ſays [l], "they dig caves in the earth, and make a grave on the ſide of the cave, and bury in it." And there being a door into one of theſe caves, perſons might enter in, and ſee where the graves were, and the bodies lay. They ſaw a young man; an angel; as angels uſed to appear in the form of men: nor is this any contradiction to John's account, who ſays there were two angels, one at the head, and another at the feet; ſince Mark does not ſay there was no more than one; beſides, John relates what Mary Magdalene ſaw when alone, and Mark what all the women ſaw: ſitting on the right ſide; from whence we learn, on what ſide of the door of the ſepulchre Chriſt was laid, according to the above deſcription of one: clothed in a long white garment; ſee the note on Matt. xxviii. 3. which was as white as ſnow: and they were affrighted; at the ſight of him; not expecting ſuch a viſion, but to have ſeen the body of their Lord.

Ver. 6. And he ſaith unto them, be not affrighted, &c.] See the notes on Matt. xxviii. 5, 6. where the ſame things, and almoſt in the ſame words, are ſaid as here.

Ver. 7. But go your way, tell his diſciples and Peter, &c.] Peter is particularly mentioned, not as diſtinct from the apoſtles, or as if he was not one of them, having ſinned in the manner he had done; much leſs becauſe he was the chief of them; but to comfort him in his great ſorrow, on account of his fall; and to encourage him to meet Chriſt with the reſt of the diſciples, who might be both afraid and aſhamed, becauſe he had ſo baſely denied him: this is a kind intimation in favour of Peter; none of the other Evangeliſts obſerve it; but this Goſpel being publiſhed, as is thought by ſome, under the direction and examination of Peter himſelf, he was careful to relate every thing, that either aggravated his own crime, or illuſtrated the grace of God, and love of Chriſt towards him. The Perſic verſion puts Peter firſt, rendering it, ſay to Cephas and the reſt of the diſciples; all copies, and other verſions, put him laſt: that he goeth before you into Galilee, there ſhall ye ſee him; ſee the note on Matt. xxviii. 7. as he ſaid unto you, as in ch. xiv. 28.

Ver. 8. And they went out quickly, &c.] Out of the ſepulchre, into which they had been, to ſee where Chriſt lay, as invited by the angel, ver. 6. The word quickly, is not read in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: which when they heard; that is, when they heard the angel's orders and inſtructions, immediately they went out: and fled from the ſepulchre; as ſurprized and affrighted: for they trembled and were amazed; at what they ſaw and heard, and yet this dread and fear, were mixed with joy at the news of Chriſt's reſurrection, as Matthew relates, ch. xxviii. 8. Neither ſaid they any thing to any man; they met with by the way, till they came to the diſciples; to whom they told all, otherwiſe they would not have acted according to the angel's orders: for they were afraid; not only affrighted with what they had ſeen and heard, but they were afraid to tell any but the diſciples of theſe things, for fear of the Jews; leſt they ſhould be thought to have ſtolen the body of Chriſt, and ſo be taken up on that account, and puniſhed.

Ver. 9. Now when Jeſus was riſen early the firſt day of the week, &c.] Though the word Jeſus is not in the text, it is rightly ſupplied; for of the riſing of no other, can the words be underſtood; and ſo the Perſic verſion ſupplies Meſſiah, or Chriſt: that Jeſus roſe from the dead on the firſt day of the week, agrees with the accounts of all the Evangeliſts, and is here expreſsly affirmed; the phraſe, the firſt day of the week, is ſo indeed placed, as that it may be thought to be connected with the following words, as it is by ſome; fancying there would otherwiſe be a diſagreement with Matt. xxviii. 1. whereas there is none; ſee the note there: though it is true alſo, that he did appear on that day to Mary Magdalene, it being the ſame day he roſe from the dead. But the true reading and pointing are as here placed; and the phraſe belongs to, and points out the day of Chriſt's riſing from the dead; and which ambiguity is removed in the Syriac verſion, which renders it, now early on the firſt day of the week he roſe; and ſo the Perſic verſion, the Meſſiah, or Chriſt, therefore on the morning of the firſt day, roſe from the dead: and that he roſe early on that day, is clear from the women, who ſet out at the end of the ſabbath, when that was paſt and over; and got to the ſepulchre by the time the day dawned; and one of them, while it was dark, and all of them by break of day, at leaſt by ſun riſing, and he was then riſen: he appeared firſt to Mary Magdalene; in the habit of a gardener, for whom ſhe took him at firſt; and this was at the ſepulchre, where ſhe ſtaid after the diſciples were gone. That ſhe was the very firſt perſon, that Chriſt ſhewed himſelf to, after his reſurrection, may be concluded from hence, and from the account the Evangeliſt John has given, ch. xx. 14. nor is there any reaſon to think, that before this, he appeared to his mother, of which the Evangeliſts are entirely ſilent. This was a very great favour, and an high honour that was beſtowed upon her; and who had received large favours from him before: out of whom he had caſt ſeven devils; ſee Luke viii. 2. And if ſhe had been a very wicked perſon, as ſhe is commonly thought to be, and very likely ſhe had been, ſince ſatan had ſuch a power over her, as to lodge ſeven devils in her, it is an inſtance of abounding grace, that Chriſt ſhould heap up favours on ſuch an one; and ſhe ſhould be the firſt that he ſhould appear to, and converſe with after his reſurrection.

Ver. 10. And ſhe went and told them that had been with him, &c.] Not with her, as the Perſic verſion reads, but with him; that is, with Chriſt: ſhe went, as ſhe was bid by Chriſt, and told his diſciples, what ſhe had heard and ſeen; even thoſe who had been with him from the beginning, and had heard his doctrines, and ſeen his miracles, and had had communion with him, and truly believed in him, and were his conſtant followers, and real diſciples; not only Peter, James, and John, who were with him, particularly at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, and at his transfiguration on the mount, and when in his ſorrows, in the garden; but the reſt of the eleven, and not only them, but others that were with them; ſee Luke xxiv. 9. As they mourned and wept; being inconſolable for the death of their Lord, and the loſs of his preſence; and alſo for their carriage towards him, that one among them ſhould betray him; another deny him, and all forſake him: thus were they like doves of the valley, mourning for their abſent Lord, and for their own iniquities; and in this condition were they, when Mary brought them the joyful news of Chriſt's reſurrection from the dead.

Ver. 11. And they, when they had heard that he was alive, &c.] That is, the apoſtles, and thoſe that were with them; when they heard the report of Mary Magdalene, that Chriſt was raiſed from the dead, and was certainly alive; or of all the women, for the Syriac verſion reads, when they heard them ſaying that he was alive; not only Mary Magdalene, but Joanna, and Mary the mother of James, and other women; for theſe all related this to the apoſtles, and the reſt; ſee Luke xxiv. 9, 10. And had been ſeen of her; of Mary Magdalene; or of them, as the Syriac verſion reads, and as it is read in one of Beza's copies: they believed not; the words of Mary, and the other women, for they ſeemed as idle tales to them, Luke xxiv. 11. imagining they were deceived with the ſight of a ſpectre or apparition; and fearing the news were too good and great to be true; forgetting the words of their Lord, that he ſhould riſe again the third day, and which had been ſo often repeated to them; and all this thro' ſtupidity of mind, occaſioned by the trouble and conſternation they were in.

Ver. 12. After that, &c.] A little time, or ſome few hours after, on the ſelf-ſame day; ſee Luke xxiv. 13. he appeared in another form: it ſeems to have been the form, or habit of a gardener that he appeared in to Mary; ſince ſhe thought him to be one, and to be the gardener that belonged to the garden, in which the ſepulchre was: but now it was in another form, or habit, that he appeared; very likely in the habit of a Scribe, or doctor; ſince he took upon him to expound the ſcriptures to the perſons he appeared to; as alſo took bread, and bleſſed it, when at ſupper with them, Luke xxiv. 27, 30. According to the Jewiſh canons [m], "if "two perſons eat together, and one of them is "a Scribe, and the other an unlearned man, "סופר מברך, the Scribe bleſſes, and the unlearned "man is excuſed." This is not to be underſtood of any change in the ſhape of his body, or the features of his face; for as ſoon as their eyes were opened, which had been before held, they knew him perfectly well: whereas, if there had been ſuch an alteration made in him, that he could not have been known for the ſame, there would have been no need of holding their eyes, that they ſhould not know him, Luke xxiv. 16, 31. This appearance was unto two of them; one of them was Cleophas, or Alpheus, which is the ſame, Luke xxiv. 18. the other is by ſome [n] thought to be Simon Peter, from what is ſaid in Luke xxiv. 34. tho' others [o] think it was Nathanael, and others [p] Luke the Evangeliſt, who conceals his own name, when he mentions the other; and ſome [q], that his name was Ammaon, which perhaps may be thro' miſtake of the place, Emmaus, where they were going, for the name of one of them, and the appearance to them was, as they walked, and went into the country; to a country-village called Emmaus, about ſixty furlongs, or ſeven miles and a half from Jeruſalem; ſee Luke xxiv. 13.

Ver. 13. And they went and told it unto the reſidue, &c.] Upon their return to Jeruſalem, which was on the ſame night, they went to the eleven Apoſtles, and the other diſciples that were with them, and related the whole affair to them; how that Jeſus had joined them by the way, and diſcourſed much with them about himſelf, and expounded the ſcriptures on the road; and when they came to the end of their journey, ſat down at meat with them, when he was very plainly diſcerned, and known by them, and then diſappeared; ſee Luke xxiv. 33, 35. neither believed they them. Theſe two, as the Arabic verſion reads; tho' they were men, and fellow-diſciples; and this was a repeated teſtimony, and a ſecond ſett of witneſſes of Chriſt's reſurrection to them; all which aggravates their unbelief: upon ſight of them they ſaid, the Lord is riſen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon; the reaſon of which Dr. Lightfoot thinks was this, that Peter hearing that Chriſt was riſen, and went before them into Galilee, was eager to ſee him, and therefore took this journey along with Cleophas, which the reſt of the diſciples knew; and he returning ſo ſoon, they concluded he had ſeen him: but when he, and Cleophas, told the whole affair, they were as unbelieving as ever.

Ver. 14. Afterward he appeared unto the eleven, &c.] Apoſtles; for this was now the number of them, Judas being gone from them, and dead; and they were ſo called, tho' Thomas was not now with them, becauſe their whole company conſiſted of this number: this appearance of Chriſt to them was on the ſame firſt day of the week, at evening, John xx. 19. tho' it muſt be very late at night; for it was after the two above diſciples were returned from Emmaus, where Chriſt and they had ſupped together; ſee Luke xxiv. 29, 30, 33, 36. as they ſat at meat; or ſat together; being aſſembled together, and the doors ſhut faſt for fear of the Jews, John xx. 19. and ſo the Arabic renders it, while they were gathered together; and the Perſic verſion, who being gathered together were ſitting: nor does the word neceſſarily ſignify ſitting at meat; nor is it very likely that they ſhould be eating ſo late at night; tho' it is probable they had been eating, as ſeems from Luke xxiv. 41, 42, 43. and upbraided them with their unbelief, and hardneſs of heart: not but that their hearts were very contrite for their ſinful carriage to Chriſt; and very much humbled they were under the preſent diſpenſation: their hearts were much affected, and they were filled with ſorrow and trouble for the loſs of Chriſt; but in this point their unbelief increaſed by their fears, and ſo much prevailed, that all that were ſaid by one, and another, made no impreſſion on them: and a great aggravation of their incredulity, and a reaſon of Chriſt's upbraiding them in this manner were, becauſe they believed not them which had ſeen him after he was riſen; as Mary Magdalene, and the other women, and Cleophas, and the other diſciple that was with him, who were eye-witneſſes that he was riſen from the dead; and ſuch as might have been depended on.

Ver. 15. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Not at the ſame time, and place, as before; not on the firſt day of the week, on which he roſe from the dead, but forty days after, juſt upon his aſcenſion to heaven; ſee ver. 19. nor at Jeruſalem, but in Galilee, where he appointed to meet his diſciples, and did, when he gave them the following commiſſion; ſee Matt. xxviii. 16, 18, 19. go ye into all the world: not only into Judæa, and thro' all the cities of it, where they had been before confined; nor only into the Roman empire, which is ſometimes ſo called, becauſe great part of the world was under that government; but into every known and habitable part of the whole univerſe, to all the nations of the world under heaven: and it is to be obſerved, that this command is not enjoined on every Apoſtle ſeparately, as if each of them was to go into all the world, and travel over every part; but that one was to go one way, and another another way; every one had his line, or that part of the world marked out for him, whither he was to ſteer his courſe, and where he was to fulfil and finiſh his miniſtry: and beſides, this commiſſion not only included the Apoſtles, but reaches to all the miniſters of the Goſpel in ſucceeding ages, to the end of the world; and ſince this, one part of the world, which was not known, is now diſcovered; and the order includes that, as well as the then known parts of the world, and the Goſpel accordingly has been ſent into it. And preach the Goſpel to every creature; not to inanimate and irrational creatures, as ſtocks and ſtones, the beaſts of the field, &c. nor to all rational creatures, as angels, good or bad; the former need not the preaching of the Goſpel, and the latter are denied the bleſſing; but men, the offspring of fallen Adam, the objects of God's good-will: theſe are ſtiled the creatures, becauſe the chief of God's creation on earth; and are often in the Jewiſh writings ſo called; take an inſtance or two: "R. Chanina ben Douſa[r] uſed to "ſay, all in whom, הבריות, the creatures (i. e. "men) have delight, God has delight; and in "whomſoever the creatures (or men) have no de"light, God has no delight." One of the ſeven qualifications of a member of the Sanhedrim is, אהבת הבריות, love of the creatures[s], or love of men: ſo it is ſaid[t], that "the holy bleſſed God, "ſits in the heighth of the world, and gives a por"tion of food, לכל בריה, to every creature." that is, to every man: and particularly the Gentiles, as diſtinguiſhed from the Jews, are often intended by this phraſe: thus "ſays[u] R. Judah, "perhaps, הבריות, the creatures, (i. e. the Gen"tiles) knew the love with which the holy bleſſed "God loved Iſrael, and roared like lions to purſue "after them." It is elſewhere[w] ſaid, "all the "prayers, של בריות, of the creatures (the Hea"thens) are only concerning the earth; Lord, let "the earth bring forth! Lord, let the earth be "fruitful! All the prayers of the Iſraelites, are "only for the houſe of the Lord; Lord, let the "houſe of the ſanctuary be built, &c." And in this ſenſe is the phraſe uſed, in Rom. viii. 22, 23. Col. i. 23. 1 Pet. ii. 14. Now to theſe, Chriſt would have the Goſpel preached, as well as to the Jews; even to all, without any diſtinction of people, Jews and Gentiles, Barbarians, Scythians, bond and free, male and female, rich and poor, greater or leſſer ſinners, even to all mankind; than which, nothing was more provoking to the Jews; who would, if they could, have revoked and made null this commiſſion of Chriſt; ſee 1 Theſſ. ii. 16. It was the Goſpel he would have preached to them, the word of peace and reconciliation, by his atoning ſacrifice; the doctrine of free and full pardon by his blood; and of juſtification by his righteouſneſs; and of compleat ſalvation by him: even every doctrine relating to his perſon, as God and man; to every office of his, as prophet, prieſt, and king; to his incarnation, ſufferings, and death, his reſurrection, aſcenſion, ſeſſion at the right-hand of God, and interceſſion for his people, and ſecond coming to judgment; with every doctrine relating to the grace of God, of the Father in election, and the covenant of peace, of the Son in redemption, and of the Spirit in regeneration and ſanctification: all which he would have publiſhed and declared in the moſt free, plain, and open manner, with all boldneſs, faithfulneſs, and conſtancy. A compendium and ſummary of which, is given in the next words.

Ver. 16. He that believeth, &c.] Not notionally only, or that gives a bare aſſent to the truth of the Goſpel; but ſpiritually, who ſees Chriſt, his need of him, and the worth and excellency, ſuitableneſs and fulneſs of him; who comes to him as a poor periſhing ſinner, and ventures on him, and commits himſelf to him, and lives upon him; believing alone in him, and expecting life and ſalvation alone by him: and is baptized; faith muſt precede baptiſm, as theſe words of Chriſt, and ſcripture examples ſhew; and ſuch as have it, ought to make a profeſſion of it, and be baptized; and in which way it is that faith diſcovers itſelf, and works by love to Chriſt; namely, in obſerving his commands, and this among the reſt: ſhall be ſaved; ſuch receive the remiſſion of their ſins, a juſtifying righteouſneſs, the privilege of adoption, a right and meetneſs for heaven now, and ſhall be ſaved in Chriſt, with an everlaſting ſalvation: not that either faith or baptiſm, are the procuring cauſes of ſalvation: not faith, for Chriſt is the author of ſalvation; and faith is the grace that looks to him for it, receives the aſſurance of it now, and that will be the end of it hereafter: faith and eternal life are ſo connected together, that he that has the one, ſhall have the other; and it is deſcriptive of the perſon that ſhall enjoy it: and baptiſm, though it is ſaid to ſave by the reſurrection of Chriſt, as it is a means of leading faith to Chriſt's reſurrection for juſtification, yet has no cauſal influence upon ſalvation; it is not eſſential to it; the thief on the croſs, went to heaven without it, and Simon Magus to hell with it; but it is the duty of every one that believes, and he that truly believes, ought to be baptized, and prove the truth of his faith, by his obedience to Chriſt, and ſuch ſhall be ſaved: but he that believeth not ſhall be damned; ſuch are here chiefly deſigned, who are favoured with the Goſpel revelation; but either deny it, reject and deſpiſe it, or neglect it, and are diſobedient to it; whoſe guilt is the greater, and whoſe puniſhment and damnation will be the more intolerable; even more ſo, than that of Sodom and Gomorrha, Tyre and Sidon, or any of the Gentiles that periſh without the law, and the knowledge of the Goſpel; and alſo ſuch are meant, who are finally unbelievers, who live and die in a ſtate of impenitence and unbelief; otherwiſe, one that believes not to day, may believe to morrow, and be ſaved.

Ver. 17. And theſe ſigns ſhall follow them that believe, &c.] Not all of them, but ſome; and not always, only for a time; and which were neceſſary for the confirmation of the Goſpel, and the eſtabliſhment of Chriſtianity in the world; and not only believing hearers, but believing miniſters of the word, are chiefly deſigned; and this is ſaid, for the encouragement both of thoſe that preach the Goſpel, and of them that hear, believe and obey. The Perſic verſion, contrary to all others, reads, ye ſhall ſhew ſigns and wonders to them that believe not; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 22. In my name ſhall they caſt out devils; ſo the apoſtle Paul diſpoſſeſſed the damſel, that had a ſpirit of divination; commanding the ſpirit, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, to come out of her, and it did; and evil ſpirits alſo went out of others, through his means, by the power of Chriſt, Acts xvi. 18. and xix. 12. and this power continued for a conſiderable time among the ſaints: the phraſe in my name, is in the Arabic verſion, joined to the word believe, in the preceding clauſe; and is omitted in the Perſic verſion, but is rightly retained by all others in this place; for by the power and authority of Chriſt, and not their own, and by calling upon, and making uſe of his name, ſuch miraculous operations were wrought by the apoſtles: they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues; or languages, not ſuch as were new made, and had never been heard and known before; but foreign languages, ſuch as they had never learned, or were able to ſpeak, or underſtood before; and this not only did the apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt, but even common believers at other times, Acts ii. 4, 6, 11. and x. 45, 46. 1 Cor. xii. 10, 28, 30. and xiv. 13, 18, 26, 27.

Ver. 18. They ſhall take up ſerpents, &c.] The Arabic verſion adds, in their own hands; and in an ancient manuſcript of Beza's it is read, in the hands; ſo the apoſtle Paul had a viper, which faſtened and hung on his hand, which he ſhook off; without receiving any harm from it, Acts xxviii. 3, 4, 5, 6. And if they drink any deadly thing, it ſhall not hurt them; not that they were hereby warranted to drink poiſon, to ſhew what power they had; but ſhould they accidentally drink it, or rather ſhould they be forced to it by their enemies, in order to deſtroy them, they ſhould find no hurt by it: and Papias[z] reports of Barſabas, ſurnamed Juſtus, who was put up with Matthias for the apoſtleſhip, Acts i. 23. that he drank a poiſonous draught, and by the grace of the Lord, received no hurt: and the Jews themſelves report[y], that "a ſon of R. Joſhua ben Levi, ſwallowed ſomething hurtful; and one came and whiſpered to him in the name of Jeſus, the ſon of Pandira (ſo they call our Lord) and he did well." It follows, and they ſhall lay hands on the ſick, and they ſhall recover; as the apoſtle Paul did on the father of Publius, who was thereby healed of a fever, and a bloody flux, and alſo others, Acts xxviii. 8, 9. nay, ſome were healed by the ſhadow of Peter, Acts v. 15, 16. and others, by handkerchiefs and aprons taken from the body of Paul, Acts xix. 12. The Perſic verſion adds, without any authority, whatſoever ye aſk in my name, ſhall be given unto you.

Ver. 19. So then after the Lord, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions add, Jeſus; and the Ethiopic verſion reads, our Lord, the Lord Jeſus; and both Syriac and Perſic read, our Lord; which is common in theſe verſions, where the word Lord is uſed: had ſpoken unto them; the diſciples, the above words, which commiſſioned them where to go, what to do, and what to ſay; and what ſhould follow them, for the confirmation of their miſſion and doctrine: he was received up into heaven; in a cloud, angels attending him, and devils led captive by him, and with a welcome into his Father's preſence: and ſat on the right hand of God; the Ethiopic verſion adds, his own Father; and which is an evidence of his having done his work; and that to full ſatisfaction; and is an honour never conferred on angels, or any mere creature; and is a peculiar dignity conferred on the human nature of Chriſt, in union with his divine perſon; and here he will remain, till his ſecond coming.

Ver. 20. And they went forth, &c.] After this the apoſtles went forth, from Galilee to Jeruſalem; and on the day of Pentecoſt, they appeared publickly, and preached the Goſpel in divers languages; and after the death of Stephen, and the perſecution raiſed upon that, they went forth from Jeruſalem; ſee Iſa. ii. 3. And preached every where; not only in Judæa, and in the neighbouring countries, but all over the world, in proceſs of time: the Lord working with them; making their miniſtry uſeful, for the conviction and converſion of large multitudes, and for the forming and ſettling abundance of Goſpel churches, and for the comfort and edification of the ſaints; all which was done, by the power and grace of Chriſt, without whom they could do nothing; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 9. And confirming the word with ſigns following; the Arabic verſion adds them; or which they did, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; not by their own power, but, as the latter of theſe verſions adds, by the help of our Lord; ſee Heb. ii. 4. to all which, the Evangeliſt puts his Amen; ſo let it be, or ſo it ſhall be, and ſo it was.

The Goſpel according to St. LUKE.

THE writer of this Goſpel, Luke, has been, by ſome, thought, as Origen [a] relates, to be the ſame with Lucius, mentioned in Rom. xvi. 21. but he ſeems rather to be, and without doubt is, Luke the beloved phyſician, who was a companion of the Apoſtle Paul in great part of his travels in the Gentile world: he came with him to Jeruſalem, and from thence accompanied him to Rome, and continued with him when in priſon, and was with him to the laſt; ſee Acts xvi. 10, 11, &c. Col. iv. 14. 2 Tim. iv. 11. Philem. v. 24. Jerom [b], and others, ſay, he was a phyſician of Antioch in Syria; where it may be the Apoſtle Paul met with him, and might be the happy inſtrument of his converſion; ſo that he ſeems to be, by nation, a Syrian, as Jerom [c] calls him. Grotius thinks his name is Roman, and that it is the contraction of Lucilius. It is not an Hebrew name, but might be in common uſe in Syria; for though the Jews reckon, לוקום, Lukus, among foreign names, yet ſay [d] it was a very illuſtrious one, and well known to them, as it may well be thought to be if Syriac, the language being ſpoke by them: and many Jews lived in Syria, and particularly in Antioch. Some ſay that this Goſpel was written by the advice, and aſſiſtance, and under the direction of the Apoſtle Paul, as the Goſpel according to Mark was by that of Peter; though the following preface does not ſeem ſo well to accord with this. Euſebius ſays [e], that it was the ſenſe of the ancients, that whenever the Apoſtle Paul makes mention of his Goſpel, he intends this according to Luke. The time of the writing of it is not certain; ſome ſay it was written in the fifteenth year after the aſcenſion of our Lord; others in the twenty-ſecond; and others in the twenty-ſeventh. It is commonly thought to have been written after the Goſpels of Matthew and Mark, according to the order in which it ſtands; but this is rejected by ſome learned men, who rather think that Luke wrote firſt of all: and indeed, there are ſome things in his preface which look as if there had not, as yet, been any authentic account publiſhed, at leaſt which was come to the knowledge of this Evangeliſt. The place where he wrote it is alſo uncertain. Jerom ſays [f], he wrote it in the parts of Achaia, perhaps at Corinth: according to the titles prefixed to the Syriac and Perſic verſions, he wrote it in Alexandria: the former of theſe runs thus; "the Goſpel of "Luke, the Evangeliſt, which he ſpake and pub"liſhed in Greek in Alexandria the great." And the latter thus; "the Goſpel of Luke, which he "wrote in the Greek tongue in Alexandria of "Egypt." However, 'tis agreed on all hands, that it is genuine, and of divine inſpiration. Euſebius [g] relates, that it was affirmed by ſome, that this Goſpel, together with thoſe of Matthew and Mark, were brought to the Apoſtle John, who approved of them, and bore witneſs to the truth in them.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. FORASMUCH as many have taken in hand, &c.] From hence, to the end of ver. 4. is a preface of the Evangeliſt to his Goſpel, ſetting forth the reaſons of his writing it; and which he wrote and ſent to the excellent Theophilus, for the further confirmation of him in the faith of Chriſt. It ſeems that many had took in hand, or attempted to ſet forth in order a declaration of thoſe things which are moſt ſurely believed among us; that is, they undertook to write and publiſh a very particular and exact narrative of the birth, life, actions, doctrines, miracles, ſufferings, death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt; things which Luke, and other Chriſtians, had the fulleſt and ſtrongeſt evidence, and were confidently aſſured of, and moſt firmly believed, even with a full aſſurance of faith. By theſe many, he cannot mean the authentic hiſtorians of evangelical facts, as Matthew and Mark; for they two can't, with any propriety, be called many; and beſides, it is not ſo very clear and certain a point, that they had, as yet, wrote their Goſpels; nor would this Evangeliſt ſuggeſt any deficiency, weakneſs, and inaccuracy in them, as he ſeems to do: nor does he intend ſuch ſpurious writers as the authors of the Goſpels according to the Nazarenes, Hebrews, and Egyptians; of Nicodemus, Thomas, Matthias, and of the twelve Apoſtles; and ſtill leſs, the Goſpels of Cerinthus,

Cerinthus, Baſilides, and other hereticks; ſince theſe would not have paſſed without a cenſure from him, for the falſhood, fabulous, and trifling ſtuff in them, as well as for the wicked and heretical opinions propagated by them; and beſides, theſe pieces were not extant when this Goſpel was written: but he ſeems to deſign ſome honeſt and well-meaning Chriſtians, who undertook to write, and did write an account of the above things, which were firmly believed by all; and which they took from the Apoſtles, and firſt miniſters of the Goſpel, from their ſermons and diſcourſes, and from converſation with them; and which they committed to writing, partly to help their own memories, and partly for the benefit of others; in which, no doubt, they acted an upright part, tho' attended with weakneſs: wherefore, the Evangeliſt does not cenſure them as falſe, wicked, and heretical, nor approve of them as divine and perfect; for tho' they honeſtly meant, and deſigned well, yet there might be many things collected by them, which were impertinent, and not proper to be tranſmitted to poſterity; and what might be wrote with great inaccuracy and deficiency, and in a ſtile, the Holy Ghoſt, thought improper, things of this kind ſhould be delivered in: and therefore the Evangeliſt, moved and inſpired by the Spirit of God, ſet about the following work, and under the ſame influence compleated it. The phraſe, αναταξασθαι διηγησιν, to ſet forth in order a declaration, is, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, out of the Talmud[h], agreeable to the Jewiſh way of ſpeaking. "R. Chaſdai ſaid to one of the Rabbins, who was, "מסדר אגדתא, ſetting in order a declaration be- "fore him, &c. or relating in order a ſtory be- "fore him."

Ver. 2. Even as they delivered them unto us, &c.] By whom the Evangeliſt means, as appears from the after deſcription of them, the twelve Apoſtles, and ſeventy Diſciples; who handed down to others the accounts of the birth, life, and death of Chriſt; and according to which the above Chriſtians propoſed to write: which from the beginning were eye-witneſſes and miniſters of the word; either of the Goſpel, or rather of Chriſt himſelf, the eternal Word of God; for from the beginning of Chriſt's preaching the Goſpel, or as ſoon as he entered upon his publick miniſtry, he called his Apoſtles, as Simon, Andrew, James, John, &c. and afterwards ſeventy Diſciples; who were eye-witneſſes of him, of the truth of his incarnation, and of his miniſtry and miracles; ſaw, and converſed with him after his reſurrection from the dead, and beheld his aſcenſion to heaven; and were miniſters that were called, qualified, and ſent out by him, and waited on him, and ſerved him. This ſhows, as is by ſome rightly obſerved, that Luke was not one of the ſeventy diſciples, as ſome[i] have thought, and as the title of this Goſpel, to the Arabic verſion of it, expreſſes; for then he would have been an eye-witneſs himſelf: nor did he take his account from the Apoſtle Paul; for he was not a miniſter of the word from the beginning, but was as one born out of due time.

Ver. 3. It ſeemed good to me alſo, &c.] Being moved to it by the Holy Ghoſt; for he did not undertake this work of himſelf, merely by the motion of his own will, but was influenced, and directed to it by the Spirit of God, as well as by him aſſiſted in it: having had perfect underſtanding of all things; relating to the ſubject of this Goſpel, concerning the conception, birth, miniſtry, baptiſm, and death of John the Baptiſt; concerning the conception, birth, private and public life of Chriſt, together with his ſufferings, death, reſurrection, and aſcenſion. The Syriac and Perſic verſions refer the word all to perſons, to the eye-witneſſes and miniſters of the word; rendering the clauſe thus, who have been ſtudiouſly near to them all: and both ſenſes may be taken in, and the meaning be, that Luke had diligently ſought after, and had attained unto a perfect knowledge of all the affairs of Chriſt; having ſtudiouſly got into the company of, and intimately converſed with all, or as many as he could, who had ſeen Chriſt in the fleſh; and were, from the very firſt of his miniſtry, attendants on him, that he might have the moſt certain and exquiſite account of things, that could be come at: from the very firſt; and to the laſt; from the conception of John, the forerunner of the Meſſiah, which is higher than any other Evangeliſt goes, to the aſcenſion of Chriſt; though ſome chuſe to render the word here uſed, from above, as it may be, and ſometimes is; and may ſignify, that the Evangeliſt had his perfect knowledge of things by a revelation from above, by divine inſpiration; and this moved him to write, and which he mentions, that Theophilus, to whom he writes, and every other reader, may depend, with certainty, on what is ſaid in it. This clauſe is omitted in the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, but is in all copies, and by all means to be retained: this being the caſe, theſe reaſons prevailed upon him, as he ſays, to write unto thee, in order, moſt excellent Theophilus; which regards not ſo much the order of time, which he does not always ſtrictly obſerve, as the particulars of things, related in order, and with great exactneſs: who this Theophilus was, to whom he writes his Goſpel; cannot be ſaid; by his title, which is ſuch as was given to governors of provinces, as to Felix and Feſtus, Acts xxiii. 26. and xxvi. 25. he ſeems to be, or to have been, a civil magiſtrate in ſome high office; for though not many rich, and mighty, yet ſome have been, and are, called by grace. Theophylact[k] ſays, he was of the order of the ſenators, and perhaps a nobleman, or prince: however, this name was not a general name, for every lover of God, as the word ſignifies, as Salvian[l] thought; but the name of a particular man, who believed in Chriſt, and was an acquaintance of Luke's; tho' Epiphanius[m] makes a doubt of it which it ſhould be.

Ver. 4. That thou mighteſt know the certainty, &c.] The end the Evangeliſt had in writing this Goſpel, and ſending it to Theophilus, was, that he might be more ſtrongly aſſured of, and more firmly eſtabliſhed in the truths of the Goſpel. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions render it, that thou mighteſt know the truth; that is, the certain truth of things: the truth he did in ſome meaſure know before, but Luke's view was, that he might have a more certain knowledge of it; both truth, and the certainty of it may be intended: ſo the Hebrew word, אמונה, ſignifies both truth and firmneſs; and the word here uſed ſignifies ſuch a certain evidence of things, as may be ſafely depended on; even of things, wherein thou haſt been inſtructed; or catechized, ſignifying, that he had been hitherto taught, as a catechumen, the rudiments, and firſt principles of the Chriſtian religion, by word of mouth; and he had taken them in upon the evidence they came with, and the authority of thoſe that inſtructed him in them; and now he ſent him in writing this account, to increaſe his knowledge, ſtrengthen his faith, and to give him ſuch a ſure proof of things, as might preſerve him ſafe in the belief of them, from all doubting and defection. Having finiſhed his preface, he proceeds to the narrative itſelf, which begins as follows.

Ver. 5. There was in the days of Herod the king of Judæa, &c.] This was Herod, the ſon of Antipater, ſometimes called Herod the great, and is rightly here ſaid to be the king of Judæa; for, by deputation from the Roman emperor, he had the government of all Judæa, which upon his death was divided among his ſons. The phraſe, in the days of, is an eaſtern way of ſpeaking; ſee Gen. xiv. 1. Ruth i. 1. 1 Sam. xvii. 12. and intends the time of his reign; in which there was a certain prieſt named Zacharias: a name famous among the Jews, for an high-prieſt, who was ſlain by them in the court of the temple, 2 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21. and for one of the later prophets, Zech. i. 1. who were of this name. This man, the father of John the Baptiſt, was not an high-prieſt, as this character of him, and the work afterwards aſcribed to him, ſhow; tho' he has been thought to be ſo by ſome; and John himſelf is ſo called by the Jews[n]: he was of the courſe of Abia. The Ethiopic verſion reads, in the days of Abia: and it has been the opinion of ſome, that Zacharias and Abia were two prieſts, who performed their miniſtry in ſucceſſion, one after another; one miniſtred one time, and another at another time; but ſuch betray their ignorance both of ſcripture, and of Jewiſh affairs. In David's time, there was a diviſion of the ſons of Aaron into twenty-four orders, or courſes; and this of Abia was one, and the eighth of them; ſee 1 Chron. xxiv. 1, 4, 10. The account the Jews[o] give of this matter, and in which they are not agreed, is this: "ſays Rab Chama bar Guria, ſays Rab, Moſes ordered for the Iſraelites eight courſes, four from Eleazar, and four from Ithamar; Samuel came and made them ſixteen; David came and made them twenty-four.——'Tis a tradition that Moſes ordered for the Iſraelites, ſixteen courſes, eight from Eleazar, and eight from Ithamar; and when the children of Eleazar increaſed above the children of Ithamar, they divided them, and appointed them twenty-four." The account, as given by Maimonides[p], is as follows: "Moſes, our maſter, divided the prieſts into eight courſes, four from Eleazar, and four from Ithamar, and ſo they were until Samuel the prophet; and in the days of Samuel, he and David, the king, divided them into twenty-four courſes; and over every courſe one head was appointed, and they went up to Jeruſalem to the ſervice of the courſe every week; and from ſabbath to ſabbath they changed; one courſe went out, and another came in, till they finiſhed, and returned again." Now of theſe there were but four courſes returned from the Babyloniſh captivity, as appears from Ezra ii. 36—39. and with this the Jewiſh accounts agree[q]. "The Rabbins teach, that four courſes came up from the captivity, Jedaiah, Harim, Paſhur, and Immer; the prophets that were among them ſtood up, and divided them, and appointed four and twenty lots, and put them into a box: Jedaiah came and took his lot, and the lot of his companions, ſix; Harim came and took his lot, and the lot of his companions, ſix; and ſo Paſhur and Immer: and ſo the prophets that were among them taught, that if Jehoiarib, the firſt courſe, came up from captivity, he ſhould not drive away Jedaiah out of his place; but Jedaiah ſhould be the principal, and Jehoiarib an appendix to him." Now, though the courſe of Abia did not return from captivity, yet its order and name were retained as the reſt of the courſes, being divided between theſe four by whom they were ſupplied; and therefore Zacharias is not ſaid to be of the poſterity of Abia, but of his courſe. To theſe courſes there were added as many ſtations; and what they were, and their uſe, may be learnt from what follows[r]. "The former prophets ordered four and twenty courſes; and to every courſe there was a ſtation at Jeruſalem; conſiſting of prieſts, levites, and Iſraelites: and when the time came for the courſe to go up, the prieſts and levites went up to Jeruſalem, but the Iſraelites, which were in that courſe, gathered themſelves to their cities, and read in the hiſtory of the creation; and the men of the ſtation faſted four days in the week, from the ſecond day, to the fifth." The ſenſe of which, according to their commentators[s], is, that theſe ſtations were ſubſtituted in the room of, and repreſented all Iſrael; and their buſineſs was to give themſelves up to divine worſhip, prayer, and ſacrifices; and ſuch of them as were near Jeruſalem; when the time of their courſe came, aſſiſted at the ſacrifices; and ſuch as were afar off, betook themſelves to the ſynagogues in their cities, and there faſted, prayed, and read. And ſo another of their authors[t] ſays, "there were twenty and four courſes of the prieſts, and ſo twenty and four courſes of the levites; and every week the courſe of the prieſts and levites goes to Jeruſalem; and the twenty and four ſtationary men, half of them go thither, and half are left in their houſes, and pray over the offerings:" for they had their ſtationary cities, where theſe men dwelt[u]. Jericho was one: they ſay[w], "Jericho was able to produce a complete ſtation itſelf; but becauſe of dividing the glory to Jeruſalem, it furniſhed out but half an one:" hence you need not wonder to hear of a prieſt and levite on the road to Jericho from Jeruſalem, as in Luke x. 31, 32. for they ſay, in the ſame place, that twenty-four thouſand, a ſtation conſiſted of at Jeruſalem, and there was half a ſtation at Jericho: as for the heads of the courſes of the houſes of their fathers, "there were in a courſe five, ſix, ſeven, eight, nine of them; a courſe which had five (heads) in it, three offered three days, and two offered four days; a courſe in which were ſix, five offered five days, and one offered two days; a courſe in which were ſeven, every one offered on his day; a courſe in which were eight, ſix offered ſix days, and two offered one day; a courſe in which were nine, five offered five days, and four offered two days; and there were ſome that fixed themſelves for ever; and a courſe that was (or began) on a ſabbath-day, was always on a ſabbath; and that which was at the going out of the ſabbath, was always at the going out of the ſabbath; and there were ſome of them that offered at every courſe; and there were ſome that caſt lots at every courſe[x]." But to ſay no more of theſe courſes and ſtations, I conclude with what Maimonides [y] ſays of them: "it is "not poſſible, that a man's offering ſhould be "offered up, and he not ſtand by it; but the offerings of the congregation are the offerings of "all Iſrael; and it is not poſſible that all Iſrael "ſhould ſtand in the court at the time of ſacrifice: "wherefore the former prophets ordered, that they "ſhould chuſe out of Iſrael men that were fit, and "feared to ſin, that they may be the meſſengers "of all Iſrael to ſtand by the offerings, and theſe "are called the men of the ſtation; and they divided them into twenty and four ſtations, according to the number of the courſes of the "prieſts and levites; and at every ſtation one of "them was appointed over them all, and he is "called the head of the ſtation; and every week "the men of the ſtation of that week gather together; and ſuch of them as are in Jeruſalem, "or near to it, go into the temple, with the courſe "of the prieſts and levites of that week; and they "who are in that ſtation, that are at a diſtance, "when their ſtation comes, they gather together to "the ſynagogue, which is in their place." Then he goes on to give an account, as before, how often they faſt in that week, how many prayers they ſay, and what they read. And his wife was of the daughters of Aaron. It is a ſaying of R. Jochanan [z]; "he "that would be rich, let him join himſelf to the "the ſeed of Aaron; for ſo it is, that the law and "the prieſthood make rich.——R. Idi bar Abin "married a prieſteſs, and from him proceeded "that were made doctors, R. Sheſheth, the ſon of "R. Idi, and R. Joſhua, the ſon of R. Idi." This is not ſo much ſaid in commendation of Zacharias, that he took a wife of the ſame tribe, and of the prieſtly line: for it was lawful for the tribe of Levi to take a wife of any other, becauſe it did not make any alteration in the inheritances of tribes; and it is a rule with the Jews [a], that prieſts, levites, and Iſraelites might marry with one another; as Mary, who was of the tribe of Judah, was akin to Elizabeth: but to point the original of John, and ſhew of what extraction he was, his father and mother being both of the family of Aaron. And her name was Elizabeth; the ſame name with אלישבע, Eliſheba, the wife of Aaron, Exod. vi. 23. and whom the Septuagint interpreters there call, as here, Eliſabeth: and this being the name of Aaron's wife, it is very probable it might be a common name among the daughters of Aaron, in ſucceeding generations.

[x] Ib. fol. 68. 1.

Ver. 6. And they were both righteous before God, &c.] Not as the Phariſees, only righteous before men, but in the ſight of God, who ſees the heart, and whoſe judgment is according to truth; and therefore were not juſtified by the deeds of the law; for by them no man can be juſtified in the ſight of God; but were made righteous thro' the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which the ſaints were made righteous before the coming of Chriſt, as thoſe after it; ſee Acts xv. 11. Rev. xiii. 8. God beheld them in his Son, as clothed with that righteouſneſs he engaged to bring in, and as cleanſed from all ſin in that blood of his which was to be ſhed; and they appeared to him, and in the eye of his juſtice, and according to his law, righteous perſons: tho' this character may alſo regard the internal holineſs of their hearts, and the truth and ſincerity of grace in them; which God, who trieth the hearts and reins of the children of men, knew, took notice of, and bore teſtimony to; as likewiſe their holy, upright walk and converſation before men, and which was obſerved by God, and acceptable to him, tho' imperfect, as ariſing from a principle of grace, being performed in the faith and fear of him, and with a view to his glory, and for the ſake, and through the righteouſneſs of his Son. Walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord: this was not the matter of their righteouſneſs before God, but the evidence of it before men: by the commandments are meant, all thoſe that are of a moral nature, which regarded their duty to God and man, and which are comprehended in love to both; and by the ordinances of the Lord, are intended the injunctions and inſtitutions of the ceremonial law, which is called the law of commandments, contained in ordinances, which, tho' now aboliſhed, were then in force: and it was right and commendable in them to obſerve them, who by their walking in them, ſhewed they loved them, both one and the other; eſteemed them, concerning all things to be right; and had reſpect to them all, and obſerved them, and took pleaſure in walking in them, which, by the grace of God, they continued to do; for walking not only ſhews that theſe commands and ordinances were a way marked out for them, but in which they took pleaſure, and made progreſs: and were blameleſs; not that they were without ſin, as none are; and it appears from this chapter that Zacharias was not, ſee ver. 20. but they were ſo in the ſight of God; as they were juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, ſo they were without fault before the throne, and unreproveable before God; and as to their moral and religious character and conduct before men, they did not indulge themſelves in any known ſin, but lived in all good conſcience among men; nor were they remiſs and negligent in the diſcharge of duty; they were not guilty of any notorious breach of the law of God, or of any remarkable negligence in the buſineſs of religious obſervances: and though they might obſerve enough in them to charge themſelves with, and to humble themſelves before God and men; yet ſo ſtrict were they in their lives and converſations, that thoſe who were the moſt intimately acquainted with them, had nothing very material to blame them for.

Ver. 7. And they had no child, &c.] Son or daughter; and which was accounted a great infelicity; but this was not owing to the judgment of God upon them for any ſins they had been guilty of, as the above character of them ſhews; and it had been the caſe of ſome righteous pairs before them for a great while, as Abraham and Sarah, Manoah, and his wife, Elkanah and Hannah: becauſe that Elizabeth was barren; ſo that it was peculiarly her caſe, and not Zacharias's: and tho' God had promiſed the people of Iſrael that there ſhould be no male nor female barren among them, Deut. vii. 14. yet there were inſtances and exceptions to this general rule, as before mentioned, when it was the pleaſure of God to make himſelf known, and magnify his power in the extraordinary conception and birth of any perſon; and therefore, though barrenneſs was reckoned a reproach to a perſon, there was, in this caſe, a particular hand of God, to anſwer a ſpecial purpoſe: the ſigns of ſterility are, according to the Jews [b], when a woman had not breaſts as other women have, her voice groſs, ſo that it could not be diſcerned, whether it was a man's or a woman's, &c. and they both were now well ſtricken in years; which made the conception and birth of John, the more extraordinary, and even miraculous, and ſo the belief of it the more difficult; ſee Gen. xvii. 17. It may be literally rendered, they had proceeded, or had far advanced in their days: it is an Hebraiſm, and anſwers to, באים בימים, in Gen. xviii. 11. Joſh. xiii. 1. and xxiii. 1, 2. and 1 Kings i. 1. where the Septuagint render it by the ſame phraſe as here. The Mahometan writers Beidavi and Jallallo'din ſay [c], that Zacharias was ninety nine years of age, and his wife eighty nine.

Ver. 8. And it came to paſs, that while he executed the prieſts office, &c.] To which he was called and ordained, even to offer gifts and ſacrifices for men; whilſt he was in the way of his duty, when oftentimes God appears to, and in favour of his people; whilſt he was performing it, before God; in the temple, where was the ſymbol of the divine preſence, before the altar of the Lord; and as having the fear of God before his eyes; conſidering himſelf as in the ſight of God, and doing his work faithfully and ſincerely: in the order of his courſe; taking his turn in the order of the courſe of Abia, to which he belonged; ſee the note on ver. 5.

Ver. 9. According to the cuſtom of the prieſts office, &c.] In which, every man took his part in the execution of it by lot; and which was not an original ſettled law of God, but a cuſtom, which, in proceſs of time, through the number of the prieſts, took place, and prevailed: the occaſion of it was this; "at firſt, whoever would, might ſweep the "altar, or cleanſe it——it happened that two alike "ran, and came up to the aſcent of the altar, and "one thruſt down the other, and he fell, and his "leg was broke; and when the Sanhedrim ſaw that "they came into danger, they ordered that they "ſhould not cleanſe the altar, but by lot [d]." And ſo likewiſe all other ſorts of ſervice, were ſettled by lot: his lot was to burn incenſe, when he went into the temple of the Lord; where was the altar of incenſe, and which was burnt upon it morning and evening; ſee Exod. xxx. 1, 7, 8. and was typical of the continual interceſſion of Jeſus Chriſt; and this part of ſervice was aſſigned him by lot. The prieſts uſed to caſt lots, what part they ſhould take in the ſervice of the temple, in the order of the courſe, to which they belonged [e]. "There were four lots "there, and this was the firſt lot (i. e. to cleanſe "the altar); the ſecond lot was, who ſhould ſlay (the "ſacrifice,) who ſhould ſprinkle (the blood,) who "ſhould remove the aſhes from the innermoſt al- "tar, who ſhould cleanſe the candleſtick, who "ſhould bring the members (or parts of the ſacri- "fice) to the aſcent of the altar——the third lot "was, ye new ones, to the incenſe come, והפיסו, "and caſt lots; and the fourth, ye new ones, with "the old ones, who ſhall bring up the parts from "the aſcent of the altar, to the altar." And this was not only the caſe on the day of atonement, to which theſe rules belong; but every day in the daily ſervice and ſacrifice, when the ſame rules were obſerved, as appears from the rubrick of the daily ſacrifice [f]: "the preſident ſaid unto them "(the prieſts) come and caſt lots who ſhall ſlay, "who ſhall ſprinkle, who ſhall remove the aſhes "from the innermoſt altar, who ſhall remove the "aſhes from the candleſtick, who ſhall bring up "the parts to the aſcent of the altar, &c." Again [g], "he ſays to them, O ye new ones, to the incenſe "come, and caſt lots; and they caſt lots, and he is "worthy, whom he accounts worthy—and he that "is accounted worthy of the incenſe, takes a veſſel, "and the veſſel is like to a large golden buſhel, "that holds three kabs, and a bowl in the middle "of it, full and heaped up with incenſe, with a "cover, and a ſort of a linen cloth put over it." And it is afterwards ſaid [h], "he that is wor- "thy of the incenſe, takes the bowl out of the "veſſel, and gives it to his friend, or he that is "near to him; and if it is ſcattered from it, in "the midſt of it, he puts it into his fiſt; and they "teach him, ſaying, take care that thou doſt not "begin before thy face, that thou art not burnt: "when he begins, he ſpreads it, and goes out; "and he that burns incenſe, may not do it, un- "til the preſident ſays, burn incenſe." The account Maimonides gives [i] of this matter, is as follows; "all the ſervices that they do every day, "they do, בפיים, by lot; and how do they do "it? All the prieſts of the houſes of the fathers, "of the day, go into the paved chamber, after "the pillar of the morning has aſcended, and "cloath themſelves with the prieſtly garments; "and the preſident who is over the lots is with "them, and they ſtand in a circle; and the preſi- "dent takes a mitre from off the head of one of "them, and goes round with it, and the man "from whom he begins to number, and they caſt "lots, as has been explained———how do they "caſt lots? they ſtand in a circle, and agree upon "a number, eighty, a hundred, or a thouſand, "or whatſoever number they may agree upon; and "the preſident ſays to them, put out your fingers, "and they put out their fingers, one, or two; "and if one puts out three, they number him "three; and they don't put out the thumb in the "ſanctuary, becauſe of deceivers; for the thumb "is ſhort, and eaſy to be put out, and to bend; "and he that puts out the thumb, they don't "number for him; and the preſident begins to "number from the man that is known, whoſe "mitre he took off firſt, and he numbers by their "fingers, and returns in the round, until he has "perfected the number they agreed upon; and "the man that compleats the number with his "finger, he is he that goes out by the firſt lot to "ſervice: and why does he number the number "they agree upon, by their fingers that they put "out, and does not number them by the men "themſelves? becauſe it is forbidden to number "Iſrael, but by means of another thing; as it is "ſaid, 1 Sam. xv. 4. And numbered them in Te- "laim. There were four lots they caſt every day "in the morning; the firſt lot was, who ſhould "cleanſe the altar: they caſt lots, and he was "worthy that was accounted worthy to cleanſe it; "and he ſets the row in order, and brings up the "two pieces of wood to the altar, and he brings in "the cenſer full of fire, from the outer altar, to the "golden altar, to burn incenſe upon it: and the ſe- "cond lot, thirteen were worthy of it, according to "the order of their ſtanding; how? the preſiden "ſays to them, put out your fingers, and he num- "bers in the way that has been explained; and h "that goes out by the firſt lot, is he that ſlays th "daily ſacrifice of the morning; and the ſecon "that ſtands by his ſide, is he that receives th "blood of the daily ſacrifice, and ſprinkles it; an the third that is next to the ſecond, receives the aſhes from the innermoſt altar, which is the altar of incenſe; and the fourth, that is by his ſide, cleanſes the candleſtick, and trims the lamps; and the fifth brings up the head of the daily ſacrifice, and its leg to the aſcent of the altar; and the ſixth brings up the two ſhoulders; and the ſeventh brings up the extreme part of the back bone, and the other leg; and the eighth brings up the breaſt and the gullet; and the ninth brings up the two ſides; and the tenth brings up the inwards; and the eleventh brings up the fine flour, and the drink-offerings; and the twelfth brings up the things that were fried; and the thirteenth brings up the wine of the drink-offerings: the third lot, the preſident ſays to them, even to all the men of the houſe of the father of that day, whoever has never burnt incenſe, let him come and caſt lots; and they gather together to the preſident, and caſt lots; and he that goes out by the lot firſt, he is he that is worthy to burn incenſe; the fourth lot, they all gather together, and caſt lots to know who ſhall bring up the parts from the aſcent of the altar, to the altar; they caſt lots, and he is worthy who is accounted worthy: the daily evening ſacrifice, they don't caſt another lot for it; but every prieſt that is worthy of any ſervice of the ſervices of the morning, is worthy of the evening, except that of the incenſe; for they caſt another lot for that in the evening; and every one may come, who has never burnt incenſe of the men of that houſe of the fathers, and caſt lots for it; but if they have all of them burnt incenſe already, they all of them caſt lots, in the morning, at the third lot; and he that is worthy of it in the morning, burns incenſe in the evening." Hence it appears, that the burning of incenſe, as other parts of the prieſt's ſervice, was by lot; and that they were new prieſts, or ſuch who had never burnt incenſe, that caſt lots for it: for it is a tradition [k], that no man ever burnt incenſe twice; the reaſon aſſigned for it is, becauſe it makes a man rich; and therefore that every one might partake of the bleſſing in their turns, new ones were called unto it: whether Zacharias had ever burnt incenſe before, and whether he now did it in the morning or evening, is not certain.

Ver. 10. And the whole multitude of the people were praying without, &c.] In the court of the Iſraelites, whilſt Zacharias was in the holy place; though not in the holy of holies, where only the high-prieſt entered: it looks, as Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, as if this was on a ſabbath-day, ſince there was ſuch a multitude of people together; for on the week-day, there were only the prieſts and Levites of the courſe, and the ſtationary men, which repreſented the Iſraelites, and ſome of the more devout ſort of the people; but here, was the whole multitude of the people; or as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, all the people were in a full congregation praying: prayer was wont to be made at the time of incenſe; hence it is compared to it, Pſal. cxli. 2. And hence it is, that Chriſt is ſaid to offer up the prayers of all ſaints, with his much incenſe, Rev. viii. 3, 4. in the time of incenſe; whether it was morning or evening, the people were obliged to be at a diſtance, whilſt that was burning; the Jewiſh canons confirm this [l]: "in the time they burn the incenſe in the temple every day, פורשין כל העם, they ſeparate all the people, from the temple, and from between the porch and the altar; there is not a man there till he comes out that burns the incenſe."

Ver. 11. And there appeared unto him an angel of the Lord, &c.] Gabriel, as ſeems manifeſt from ver. 19, 26, 36. the ſame angel that had appeared to Daniel, about the time of the evening oblation, near five hundred years before, and gave him an account of the time of the Meſſiah's coming, Dan. ix. 21. The Jews ſometimes ſpeak of divine and wonderful appearances to their prieſts, at ſuch times, and in ſuch places: "it is a tradition that R. Iſhmael ben Eliſhah, ſhould ſay, one time I went in, להקטיר קטרת, to burn incenſe; and I ſaw Actariel (one of the names of God with them) the Lord, the Lord of hoſts, who was ſitting on a throne, high and lifted up [m]." And ſo they ſay of Simeon the juſt, that there was always an appearance when he went into the holy of holies; 'tis related thus [n]: "Simeon the juſt, miniſtred unto Iſrael in the high prieſthood, forty years; and in the laſt year, he ſaid to them, I ſhall die this year: they ſaid to him, from whence doſt thou know it? He replied to them, every year that I have entered into the holy of holies, there was, זקן אחד, one old man, clothed in white, and veiled in white, that went in with me, and came out with me; and this year he went in with me, but did not come out with me." And according to Joſephus [o], the high-prieſt Hyrcanus, received an oracle, or anſwer from God, as he was offering incenſe; ſo that the Jews ought not to diſcredit ſuch an appearance to Zacharias: ſtanding on the right ſide of the altar of incenſe; of which, ſee Exod. xxx. 1—10. and xxxv. 25—28. the ſituation of it, according to the Jews, was this [p]: "the table (of ſhew-bread) was in the north, two cubits and a half diſtant from the wall; and the candleſtick was in the ſouth, two cubits and a half diſtant from the wall; and the altar (of incenſe) was in the middle, and ſtood between them." And to this agrees the account of Maimonides [q], who ſays, "the candleſtick was on the ſouth, on the left hand, as you go in; and the table of ſhew-bread on the right hand, and both of them on the ſide of the holy of holies without; and the altar of incenſe was between them both without." So that it was on the north ſide that the angel ſtood.

Ver. 12. And when Zacharias ſaw him, &c.] The angel; he was troubled, and fear fell upon him; for ſuch appearances of angels, were not now ſo common as formerly; and when they were more uſual, generally had ſuch effects on the minds, even of good men; ſee Judges vi. 22. Dan. viii. 17.

Ver. 13. But the angel ſaid unto him, fear not Zacharias, &c.] He calls him by his name; for holy men are known to angels in perſon, and by name; to whom they are miniſtring ſpirits, and for whoſe good they are concerned; and bid him not be afraid, as the angel alſo ſaid to the women at Chriſt's ſepulchre, Matt. xxviii. 5. for he ſaw by his countenance and geſtures, that he was greatly ſurprized and terrified at the ſight of him: for thy prayer is heard; which he had many years ago put up for a ſon; for it cannot be thought that he had been now praying for one, being in ſuch an advanced age, and having for years paſt given up all hopes of one, and was even unbelieving, when he was told by the angel he ſhould have one: prayer is ſometimes immediately heard, and anſwered; and ſometimes an anſwer is deferred a long time, to try the faith and patience of the ſaints, and to diſcover the more the wiſdom, power, and goodneſs of God: or this may have regard to his preſent prayer, one branch of which, might concern the coming of the Meſſiah, which was now expecting, and therefore is told, that his prayer was heard; ſince the angel that appeared to him, brought him the news of the conception and birth, of his forerunner: and thy wife Eliſabeth ſhall bear a ſon; who had been always barren, and was called ſo, ver. 7, 36. And thou ſhalt call his name John; in Hebrew, Jochanan, and ſignifies gracious; a fit name for one that was filled with the gifts and graces of the Spirit; and was the harbinger of the Meſſiah, who is full of grace and truth; and the uſherer in of the Meſſiah's kingdom, which is a diſpenſation of grace.

Ver. 14. And thou ſhalt have joy and gladneſs, &c.] Not only becauſe of his having a ſon; but becauſe this his ſon would be, the prophet of the higheſt; would go before the Lord, and prepare his ways; give knowledge of ſalvation to many, and light to them that were in darkneſs, and guide their feet in the way of peace: all which, and more, he afterwards expreſſes in his ſong, whereby this part of the angel's prediction had its accompliſhment; and many ſhall rejoice at his birth; as the neighbours and couſins of his parents did; ſee ver. 58. and not only they, but all others, who afterwards had knowledge of him as a prophet, and as the forerunner of the Meſſiah.

Ver. 15. For he ſhall be great in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Of Jehovah, the Father; with whom, what is highly eſteemed among men, is oftentimes an abomination; and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, before whom he was to go, and who pronounced him a prophet, and more than a prophet, and even greater than any born of women, Matt. xi. 9, 11. and of the Lord, the Spirit, with whom he was filled from his mother's womb: he was great, not in birth and blood, in worldly riches and grandeur, but in gifts and grace, in his work, office, and uſefulneſs, and in the eſteem of God, and even of men too: and ſhall drink neither wine nor ſtrong drink; which were forbidden the Nazarites, Numb. vi. 3. where the Jews, by wine, underſtand new wine; and by ſtrong drink, old wine: ſo all the three Targums, of Onkelos, Jonathan ben Uzziel, and the Jeruſalem, paraphraſe the words there, from wine new and old, he ſhall ſeparate himſelf; and they allow ſtrong drink to a Nazarite, that has no wine in it: their canon [r] runs thus, "three things "are forbidden a Nazarite, defilement, and ſhaving, and whatever proceeds from the vine, whe"ther fruit, or the refuſe of fruit; but ſtrong "drink made of dates, or dried figs, and ſuch "like, is free for a Nazarite; and the ſtrong drink "which is forbidden him in the law, is ſtrong "drink made of mixture of wine." But the Hebrew word, שכר, and which is here retained by the Evangeliſt, ſignifies [s] any ſort of liquor, which is inebriating, whether it is made of fruits, or honey, or what not. The Jews had no ſuch ſtrong drink as ours, which we call beer, or ale; but they ſpeak of the ſtrong drink of the Medes, which they ſay was an inebriating liquor, made of barley [t]: and he ſhall be filled with the Holy Ghoſt, even from his mother's womb; or whilſt in his mother's womb, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, render it: like Jeremy, he was ſanctified, ſet apart, and ordained to be the prophet of the higheſt, before he came out of his mother's womb; and was then under ſuch an influence of the Spirit of God, as to leap in it for joy, at the ſalutation of the mother of Chriſt to his, ver. 41, 44. and very early appeared to have the extraordinary gifts and graces of the Holy Ghoſt, qualifying him for his work.

Ver. 16. And many of the children of Iſrael, &c.] To whom only, or at leaſt chiefly, he was ſent, and came preaching, and adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm; and great multitudes of them flocked unto him, attended on his miniſtry, believed in his doctrine, and ſubmitted to his baptiſm, but not all; for ſome ſlighted his preaching, and rejected his baptiſm: however, ſome there were, and many too, that were converted under his miniſtry, confeſſed their ſins, and were baptized by him; which verified this prediction: ſhall he turn to the Lord their God; not Jehovah, the Father; for though he was the Lord God of the Jews in general, and of thoſe that were turned by John's miniſtry in a ſpecial manner; yet John cannot be ſaid to go before him, as he is in the next verſe; but the Meſſiah is here meant, who is the Lord Jehovah, and is often ſo called in the Old Teſtament; particularly in a prophecy afterwards reſpected, Iſa. xl. 3. a name peculiar to God alone: and who alſo is called God, as he is frequently with additional epithets; as the mighty God, God over all, the great God, the true God, and eternal life; and our, your, and their God, the God of his covenant people, whether Jews or Gentiles; ſee Iſa. xxv. 9. and xxxv. 4. Converſion, which is meant by turning to God, is not man's work, but God's, and is effected by his mighty power, which is only equal to it: but John was to be, and was, an inſtrument of the converſion of many among the Jews, by preaching the doctrine of repentance towards God, and faith in the Meſſiah, that was juſt ready to come: he was the means in the hand of God, of turning many from ſin, of bringing them to a true ſenſe of it, and to an hearty and ingenuous confeſſion and acknowledgment of it; and from truſting to, and depending upon, their birth-privileges, legal duties, and ſelf-righteouſneſs; and from their groſs notions of a temporal Meſſiah; and of leading them to believe in Chriſt as a ſpiritual Saviour, as the Lamb of God, that ſhould take away the ſin of the world.

Ver. 17. And he ſhall go before him, &c.] The Lord his God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe forerunner he was; the meſſenger of him, that according to the prophecies in Iſa. xl. 3. Mal. iii. 1. was to go before him, and prepare his ways; as he did, by his wonderful conception and birth, which made way for the more eaſy belief of the conception and birth of the Meſſiah, by a virgin; and by his preaching the doctrine of repentance, and adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm; which were done to awaken the people's expectation of the Meſſiah, and that he might be made manifeſt in Iſrael, and by pointing him out to them in his preaching: in the ſpirit and power of Elias; or Elijah, the Syriac an Perſic verſions add, the prophet: John the Baptiſ and Elijah, were men much of the ſame ſpirit an diſpoſition, and of like power, life, and zeal i religion; and therefore the one, goes by the nam of the other: they both much converſed in th wilderneſ wilderneſs; agreed in the auſterity of their lives; their habit and dreſs were much alike; they were both reſtorers of religion, when very low, and much decayed; were famous for their faithfulneſs in reproving the vices of kings, and for their warm zeal for true religion, and for the perſecution they endured for the ſake of it: to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children; in Mal. iv. 6. which is the prophecy referred to, 'tis added, and the heart of the children to their fathers; which ſome underſtand, of his turning the degenerate offspring of the Jews, to the ſentiments of their forefathers, and cauſing them to agree with them in their notions of the Meſſiah: others, of the turning of the Jews to Chriſt, and his apoſtles; and others, of his being a means, through his miniſtry and baptiſm, of reconciling Jews and Gentiles together, which is the great buſineſs of the Goſpel diſpenſation, uſhered in by John; and who preached that all men ſhould believe in Chriſt, and baptized publicans and Roman ſoldiers, as well as Jews; and which ſenſe pretty much agrees with the interpretation the Jews put upon the prophecy, as referring to Elijah the Tiſhbite, whom they expect in perſon, before the coming of the Meſſiah: ſay[u] they, "Elijah comes to defile and to cleanſe (i. e. to pronounce what things are clean or unclean) and to remove afar off, and to bring near (i. e. to determine what families are legitimate or illegitimate.) R. Simeon ſays, to compoſe differences; and the wiſe men ſay, neither to remove, nor to bring near, but, לעשות שלום, to make peace in the world; as it is ſaid, behold, I ſend unto you Elijah the prophet, &c. and he ſhall turn the heart of the fathers, &c." But the true meaning is, that John the Baptiſt, who is meant by Elias, ſhould be an inſtrument of turning fathers with their children, and children with their fathers, to the Lord; that he ſhould be a means of converting both fathers and children, one as well as another; and to gather perſons of every age, and ſtation; for the particle על, which we render to, is the ſame as עם, with, as Kimchi on the text obſerves: and the diſobedient to the wiſdom of the juſt. By the diſobedient are meant, either Jews or Gentiles; ſome underſtand it of the Gentiles, who were children of diſobedience, before the light of the Goſpel came among them: but rather the former are meant, who were a diſobedient, rebellious, and gainſaying people; who were gone off from the wiſdom, knowledge, and religion, of the juſt, or righteous ones, their forefathers; who propheſied of Chriſt, rejoiced to ſee his day, longed for him, and believed in him: now John was to be an inſtrument of turning ſome of the unbelieving Jews, to the true knowledge of ſalvation by Chriſt; which their righteous progenitors waited for, had a right knowledge of, and an intereſt in; and of leading them either into the Goſpel of Chriſt, that wiſdom of God in a myſtery; the manifold wiſdom of God, in which he has abounded in all wiſdom and prudence; and which the righteous men among the Jews, ſearched diligently into, attained ſome knowledge of, and which even the holy angels deſire to look into; ſo the patriarchs were called juſt, or righteous, as righteous Abel, juſt Noah, &c. and ſo the Jewiſh fathers: hence in the Targum on Jer. xii. 5. and xxxi. 16, 21. mention is made of thy fathers, צדיקיא, the juſt, who were of old: or to Chriſt himſelf, who is the wiſdom of God, and in whom are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, to know him, and believe in him; who in the ſame Targum on Jer. xxiii. 5. is called, משיח דצדיקיא, the Meſſiah of the juſt. To make ready a people prepared for the Lord. The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, a perfect people; and the Perſic verſion, all the people: not all the people of the Jews, but God's elect among them; who from all eternity were prepared, as a people in a covenant relation, as the portion of Chriſt, and as his ſpouſe and bride, and as ſuch, given to him; they were in electing grace, veſſels of mercy, afore prepared for glory; and heaven, as a kingdom, was prepared for them from the foundation of the world: they were provided with all ſpiritual bleſſings, which were prepared for them, and beſtowed on them in heavenly places, in Chriſt, before the foundation of the world; even all their grace, and all their glory; yea, even their good works are ſuch, which God has fore-ordained, or fore-prepared that they ſhould walk in. Now, the work of John the Baptiſt, was to make ready this people, by pointing out to them, in a miniſterial way, wherein their readineſs lay, to meet the Lord, and be for ever with him in heaven; not in a civil, moral, or legal righteouſneſs; or in outward humiliation for, and abſtinence from ſin; nor in a ſubmiſſion to Goſpel ordinances, and in a mere profeſſion of religion, and in an obſervance of a round of duties; but in juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and in regeneration and ſanctification, by his Spirit and grace; the one giving a right to, the other a meetneſs for the heavenly inheritance: and John, and ſo any other Goſpel miniſter, may be ſaid to make ready a people, in this ſenſe; when they are the inſtruments of the regeneration and converſion of ſinners, and of leading them to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, for their juſtification before God, and acceptance with him.

Ver. 18. And Zacharias ſaid unto the angel, whereby ſhall I know this? &c.] Notwithſtanding ſuch an appearance of an angel to him, which in thoſe times was not ſo uſual, and this in the holy place; and the things themſelves which were told him, and theſe as the return of prayer; yet he diſtruſted, and wanted a ſign, whereby he might know the truth of them; as the Jews were generally deſirous of, and as the father of them was; who expreſſed himſelf in much ſuch language, on a certain occaſion, as this his ſon did; ſee Gen. xv. 8. For I am an old man; at leaſt ſixty years of age; for with the Jews, ſixty years were reckoned, לזקנה, for old age[w]; and a man of theſe years, was accounted an old man: and the Jewiſh Rabbins obſerve[x], that the word for old age in Job xxx. 2. is by Gematry, ſixty; that is, the letters of the word, numerically make ſo much. The Mahometan writers, as before obſerved on ver. 7. make him to be ninety nine years of age: he was not diſcharged from ſervice; the Levites were at fifty, but not the prieſts; blemiſhes, as the Jewiſh writers ſay[y], made them unfit for ſervice, but years did not: and even the law concerning the Levites, they ſay[z], only reſpected the time they carried the ſanctuary from place to place, and not future generations; and that they are diſqualified neither by blemiſhes, nor by years, only by voice, for ſinging of the ſong; but then they might be among the porters; ſo that they were not on that account laid aſide from all ſervice: and my wife well ſtricken in years. The Mahometan writers, as before, ſay, ſhe was was eighty-nine; a like objection Abraham made, tho' he afterwards got over it, and was ſtrong in faith, giving glory to God, believing in his power and faithfulneſs; ſee Gen. xvii. 17.

Ver. 19. And the angel anſwering, ſaid unto him, I am Gabriel. &c.] The name of an angel well known to Zacharias from Daniel's prophecies, Dan. viii. 16. and ix. 21. and is the firſt time we read of the name of an angel: the Jews ſay [a], the names of angels came out of Babylon, by the means of the Iſraelites; and it was there that Daniel became acacquainted with this name of Gabriel, and alſo of Michael. Frequent mention is made of Gabriel in the Jewiſh writings [b]: were there a particular angel appointed over conception, as the Jews ſay [c] there is, one would be ready to think it ſhould be Gabriel, ſince he was ſent to declare the conception and birth both of John the Baptiſt, and of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: the name of that angel the Jews indeed ſay [d] is Lilah; but yet the Cabbaliſtic doctors [e] affirm, that that angel is under Gabriel. In what language this angel ſpoke to Zacharias, and afterwards to Mary, may be a needleſs enquiry; but ſince the Syriac language was generally ſpoken, and underſtood by the Jews at this time, 'tis highly reaſonable that he ſpoke to them in that. The Jews have a notion, that none of the miniſtring angels underſtand the Syriac language, excepting Gabriel; and he, they ſay, underſtood, ſeventy languages [f]. Now the angel, by making mention of his name, puts Zacharias in mind of the prophecy of Daniel concerning the coming of the Meſſiah, which he had from him; and whereas his name ſignified, a man of God, or the power, or ſtrength of God, or God is my ſtrength, he ſuggeſts unto him, that he ought not to have diſtruſted his words, ſince with God all things are poſſible: he adds, that ſtand in the preſence of God; beholding his face, hearkening to his voice, and miniſtring to him, and ſo had this affair immediately from him; and therefore he had no reaſon to doubt of the accompliſhment of it. Gabriel, according to the Jews, is one of the four angels that ſurround the throne of God: their names are Michael, Uriel, Raphael, and Gabriel [g]. “ Michael they place at his right “ hand, and Uriel at his left hand, and Gabriel, “ מלפניו, before him, (in his preſence, as he here ſays “ of himſelf) over-againſt the kingdom of Judah, “ and Moſes and Aaron, who were in the eaſt (of “ the camp of Iſrael); and why is his name called “ Gabriel? of Judah it is written, 1 Chron. v. 2. “ for Judah, גבר, prevailed above his brethren; “ and of Moſes it is written, Lev. i. 1. and God “ called unto Moſes; and it is written, Iſ. ix. 6. and “ ſhall call his name wonderful, counſellor, אל גבור, “ the mighty God, lo! Gabriel.” And am ſent to ſpeak unto thee, and to ſhew unto thee theſe glad tidings: wherefore, on account of his name, his office, and his miſſion, eſpecially the ſubject of it being welcome news, good tidings, what he ſaid ought to have obtained credit with him. Gabriel was one of the miniſtring ſpirits ſent to miniſter to them that were heirs of ſalvation; his meſſages were meſſages of mercy, grace and love; he was not a miniſter of the wrath and vengeance of God, but of his favour. Agreeably to this the Jews ſay of him, that his name Gabriel is, by Gematry, or numerically, the ſame with רחם, merciful [h]: he is called, in the Talmud [i], רוח פסקונית, the deciſive ſpirit, and is ſaid to have three names, Piſkon, Itmon, and Sigron. He is called Piſkon, becauſe he decides, or determines judgment againſt them that are above; and Itmon, becauſe he ſtops up the ſins of the Iſraelites; and Sigron, becauſe when he ſhuts (the gates of judgment) there is none can open again. Hence alſo they ſay, that he is the angel that is appointed over water which quenches fire. The Targumiſt on Job xxv. 2. paraphraſes the words thus: “ Michael on the right hand, who is over “ fire; and Gabriel on the left hand, who is over “ water; and the holy creatures mingle fire and “ water, and by his dominion and fear, make peace “ in his heaven of heavens.”

Ver. 20. And behold, thou ſhalt be dumb, &c.] Or ſilent; and not able to ſpeak, if he would. Silence is ſometimes voluntary; but this was what he could not help: until the day that theſe things ſhall be performed; which he had ſaid concerning the conception and birth of a ſon, and the impoſition of a name on him; for this dumbneſs remained upon Zacharias, not only until his wife had conceived, and the child was born, but until the eighth day after, when he was circumciſed, and his name was given him the angel directed to: becauſe thou believeſt not my words: he was ſtruck both deaf and dumb, as appears from his friends making ſigns to him, ver. 62. which they had no need to have done, could he have heard: he was ſtruck with deafneſs, becauſe he hearkened not to the angel's words; and with dumbneſs, becauſe from the unbelief of his heart he objected to them. We learn from hence, what an evil unbelief is, and how much reſented by God, and how much it becomes us to take heed, that it prevails not in us; and eſpecially ſince it eaſily beſets us: which ſhall be fulfilled in their ſeaſon; firſt the conception, then the birth; after that the calling him by his name, and in proceſs of time, the doing of his work and office; ſo that the unbelief of Zacharias did not make the faith of God of none effect; for though ſometimes the people of God are very unbelieving, yet he abides faithful to his word and promiſes. Mahomet, in his Alkoran [k], very wrongly makes the angel to ſay theſe words to Zacharias; “ thy ſign “ ſhall be, that thou ſhalt ſpeak unto no man for “ three days, otherwiſe than by geſture.” And elſewhere [l] 'tis ſaid, three nights.

Ver. 21. And the people waited for Zacharias, &c.] That were without, in the court of the Iſraelites, praying there, while he was offering incenſe: theſe were waiting for his coming out, in order to be bleſſed by him, according to Numb. vi. 23, 24, 25, 26. and be diſmiſſed: and marvelled that he tarried ſo long in the temple; beyond the uſual time of burning incenſe; which might be occaſioned either by a longer diſcourſe of the angel with him than what is here related; or being ſtruck with amazement at the ſight and hearing of the angel, he might continue long muſing on this unexpected appearance and relation; or he might ſpend ſome time not only in meditation upon it, but in mental prayer, confeſſion, and thankſgiving. The high-prieſt, when he went in to burn incenſe on the day of atonement, “ made a ſhort prayer in the out- “ ward houſe, (in the temple) and he did not con- “ tinue long in his prayer, שלא להבעית, that he “ might “ might not affright the Iſraelites[m]”, thinking that he was dead; for many high-prieſts that were unfit for, or made alteration in the ſervice, died in the holy of holies[n]. “It is reported[o] of one “high-prieſt, that he continued long in his prayer, “and his brethren, the prieſts, thought to have “gone in after him; and they began to go in, “and he came out; they ſay unto him, why didſt “thou continue long in thy prayer? he replied to “them, is it hard in your eyes that I ſhould pray “for you, and for the houſe of the ſanctuary, that “it might not be deſtroyed? they anſwered him, “be not uſed to do ſo; for we have learned, that “a man ſhould not continue long in prayer, that “he may not affright Iſrael.” This high-prieſt, they elſewhere ſay[p], was Simeon the juſt.

Ver. 22. And when he came out, he could not ſpeak unto them, &c.] Or deliver the benediction they were waiting for: and they perceived that he had ſeen a viſion in the temple; which he made them to underſtand, by the geſtures he uſed: for he beckned unto them; by nodding his head, or by ſome motions of his hands, the Ethiopic verſion adds, with his hand; or of his lips; for the ſigns of a dumb man are diſtinguiſhed into רמיזה and קפיצה[q]; the one is a ſign which is expreſſed by the head and hands; and the other is a ſign expreſſed by the lips: hence that rule[r], “a dumb man beckens, “and is beckened to; and Ben Bethira ſays, he “moves his lips, and lips are moved to him:” and remained ſpeechleſs; to the time the angel fixed.

Ver. 23. And it came to paſs, that as ſoon as the days of his miniſtration, &c.] In the order of the courſe, which might be three, four, five, or ſix days, according to the number of the heads of the houſe of their fathers in the courſe; ſee the note on ver. 5. were accompliſhed: for tho' he was deaf and dumb, he was not hereby diſqualified for ſervice. Deafneſs and dumbneſs excuſed perſons from various duties[s], but did not diſqualify prieſts: a levite, if he had loſt his voice, was diſqualified, but not a prieſt[t]; the reaſon was this, becauſe it was one part of the work of the levites to ſing, and therefore could not perform it without a voice; but ſuch was the work of the prieſts, that though deaf and dumb, they could diſcharge it; as cleanſing the altar, trimming the lamps, carrying the parts to the altar, laying them upon it, and burning them, or offering any ſacrifice, burning incenſe, &c. which was the buſineſs of Zacharias; which when he had fulfilled, he departed to his own houſe; which was not at Jeruſalem, but in the hill-country, in a city of Judah there; ſee ver. 39, 40.

Ver. 24. And after thoſe days, &c.] The days of his miniſtration in the temple, quickly after his return home; the Ethiopic verſion reads, after two days: his wife Elizabeth conceived; according to the angel's prediction, and notwithſtanding her barrenneſs, and the unbelief of her huſband; and hid herſelf five months. The Arabic and Perſic verſions render it, hid her bigneſs; but there could be no occaſion to take any methods to hide this, ſince, if ſhe ſaid nothing of it herſelf, and there could be no ſuſpicion of it in one of her years, it could not be much diſcerned in her by ſuch a time; but ſhe hid herſelf, or lived retired, that ſhe might be fully ſatisfied that ſhe was with child, before ſhe ſaid any thing about it; and that ſhe might not diſcover any pride or vanity on account of it; and to avoid all diſcourſe with others about it, which might be rumoured abroad; and chiefly to ſhun all ceremonial uncleanneſs, which one, that was bred a Nazarite, was obliged to; ſee Judg. xiii. 14. and moſt of all, that ſhe might be retired, and ſpend her time in meditation upon the goodneſs of God, and in returning thanks to him for the favour ſhe had received; ſaying, as in the following verſe.

Ver. 25. Thus hath the Lord dealt with me, &c.] In a very gracious and bountiful manner; in giving her ſtrength to conceive a ſon in her old age, and ſuch an one that was to be great, and ſo uſeful in his day; of which her huſband had doubtleſs informed her by writing, tho' he could not ſpeak: in the days wherein he looked on me; with a favourable eye, with a look of love and mercy: he took away my reproach from among men; as barrenneſs was accounted, eſpecially among the Iſraelites, the ſeed of Abraham; to whom was promiſed a numerous iſſue, as the ſtars in the ſky, and as the ſand on the ſea-ſhore, and particularly the Meſſiah; ſee Gen. xxx. 23. Iſ. iv. 1.

Ver. 26. And in the ſixth month, &c.] After Elizabeth's conception; for ſo long was John the Baptiſt conceived before Chriſt, and ſo long he was born before him; and it ſeems as if there was the ſame diſtance between the public miniſtry of the one, and the other: John was before Chriſt, as man, being his forerunner; but Chriſt was preferred unto him as mediator, and exiſted before him, as the eternal Son of God: the angel Gabriel was ſent from God; the ſame angel, that near five hundred years before gave Daniel an exact account of the time of the Meſſiah's coming, and ſix months ago acquainted Zacharias with the conception, birth, character, and office of his forerunner: unto a city of Galilee, named Nazareth; the whole country of Galilee was mean and contemptible with the Jews: they obſerve, tho' thro' miſtake, that no prophet aroſe out of it, John vii. 52. and Nazareth particularly was exceeding deſpicable in their eye: hence thoſe words of Nathanael, can any good thing come out of Nazareth? John i. 46. ſee the note on Matt. i. 23. and yet hither an angel was ſent by God; and here dwelt the mother of our Lord.

Ver. 27. To a virgin, &c.] A pure virgin, that never knew man; ſee ver. 34. and yet eſpouſed to a man whoſe name was Joſeph; but they were not come together, nor had he taken her for his wife, and home to his houſe, nor had they cohabited: of the houſe of David; which, according to the grammatical conſtruction of the words, may be connected either with the virgin, or with Joſeph, to whom ſhe was eſpouſed; and is true of both; for they both were of the houſe and lineage of David: and this ſhews what a low condition David's family was in, that the perſons that were the neareſt allied to it were a carpenter, and a poor virgin; and both reſiding in ſo deſpicable a place as Nazareth in Galilee: and the virgin's name was Mary; a name frequent among the Jews, and the ſame with Miriam; of which name was the ſiſter of Moſes and Aaron.

Ver. 28. And the angel came in unto her, &c.] Into her houſe, and into the room where ſhe was: and ſaid, hail; all health, happineſs, and proſperity attend thee; ſee Matt. xxviii. 9. thou art highly favoured; or graciouſly accepted, or haſt obtained grace; not referring to electing, redeeming, juſtifying, pardoning, adopting, and ſanctifying grace, which ſhe had in common with other ſaints; but to that ſpecial and particular favour, in being choſe and ſingled out from all other women, to be the mother of the Meſſiah: the Lord is with thee; ſo the angel to Gideon, Judg. vi. 12. or be with thee, an uſual form of ſalutation among the Jews; ſee Ruth ii. 4. thou art bleſſed among women; and will be pronounced ſo by other women, as ſhe was by Elizabeth, ver. 42. and by another woman, Luke xi. 27.

Ver. 29. And when ſhe ſaw him, &c.] The Perſic verſion renders it, when Mary ſaw the angel; which expreſſes the true ſenſe of the words. The Vulgate Latin reads, when ſhe heard; i. e. the ſalutation: ſhe was troubled at his ſaying; at his ſpeaking to her; ſhe was ſurprized at the ſight of him, and more at what he ſaid to her; and caſt in her mind, or thought, and reaſoned within herſelf, what manner of ſalutation this ſhould be; for it was not uſual with the Jews for a man to uſe any ſalutation to a woman; with them it was not lawful to be done at all in any ſhape or form; not by a meſſenger, nor even by her own huſband[u]; ſo that Mary might well be thrown into a concern what ſhould be the meaning of this; and eſpecially, that ſhe ſhould be addreſſed in ſuch language, and ſaluted as a peculiar favourite of God, and bleſſed among women.

Ver. 30. And the angel ſaid unto her, &c.] Obſerving the conſternation and confuſion ſhe was in; fear not Mary: he calls her by her name, ſignifying that ſhe was well known to him, as the ſaints are to the miniſtring angels, who are often ſent unto them, encamp about them, and do them many good offices; and bids her not be afraid, he had no ill deſign upon her, nor brought any ill news to her: for thou haſt found favour, or grace with God; and what that particular grace and favour was, is expreſſed in the following verſes.

Ver. 31. And behold, thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb, &c.] Though a pure virgin, which never knew a man; and therefore, a behold, is prefixed to it, as being what was extraordinary and wonderful; as it is alſo, in the prophecy of it, in Iſ. vii. 14. to which the angel manifeſtly refers, and is, by Matthew, cited, as accompliſhed hereby; ſee the note on Matt. i. 22, 23. and bring forth a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus; which ſignifies a ſaviour; and a ſaviour Chriſt is of God's appointing, providing and ſending; and a very ſuitable one, being a ſpiritual ſaviour, and a compleat one, both able and willing to ſave to the uttermoſt all that believe in him; nor is there any other, nor ſalvation in any other: he is the ſaviour of his people, whom the father has given him, even of all the elect, whether of Jews or Gentiles; and of them from all their ſins, and from all their enemies; and whom he ſaves with a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation.

Ver. 32. He ſhall be great, &c.] In his perſon, as God-man; this child born, and ſon given, being the angel of the great counſel, the mighty God, and everlaſting Father; ſee Iſ. ix. 6. which is here referr'd to; and in his offices, in his prophetic office, being that great and famous prophet Moſes ſpoke of, mighty in word and deed, in his doctrine and miracles; in his prieſtly office, being a great high-prieſt, both in the oblation of himſelf, and in his prevalent interceſſion; and in his kingly office, being the king of kings, and lord of lords; and in the whole of his office, as mediator, being a great ſaviour, the author of a great ſalvation for great ſinners; in which is greatly diſplayed the glory of all the divine perfections: great alſo in his works, the miracles that he wrought, as proofs of his deity and Meſſiahſhip, the work of redemption, the reſurrection of himſelf from the dead, and of all men at the laſt day; and in the glory he is now poſſeſſed of in human nature, at the Father's right hand, where he is highly exalted above all principality and power: and ſhall be called the Son of the higheſt; that is, of God, one of whoſe names is, עליון, the moſt high; ſee Gen. xiv. 18, 19, 20. not by creation, as angels and men, nor by adoption, as ſaints, nor by office, as magiſtrates, are called the children of the moſt high, Pſ. lxxxii. 6. but by nature, being the eternal Son of God; of the ſame nature with him, and equal to him: for he was not now to begin to be the Son of God, he was ſo before, even from all eternity; but the ſenſe is, that he ſhould now be known, owned, and acknowledged to be the Son of God, being as ſuch manifeſted in human nature, and ſhould be proved to be ſo by the works he wrought, and declared to be the Son of God with power by his reſurrection from the dead: and the Lord God ſhall give unto him the throne of his father David. Chriſt, as God, is the Son of God, as man, the Son of David; a name often given to the Meſſiah, and by which he was well known among the Jews; and as Chriſt deſcended from him, as man, in a literal ſenſe, he had a right to the throne of his father David; and the Jews themſelves ſay, that he was, קרוב למלכות, nearly allied to the kingdom[w]: but here it intends not his throne, in a literal, but in a figurative ſenſe; for as David was a type of the Meſſiah in his kingly office, hence the Meſſiah is called David their king, Hoſ. iii. 5. ſo his throne was typical of the Meſſiah's throne and kingdom; which is not of this world, but is in his church, and is ſet up in the hearts of his people, where he reigns by his Spirit and grace; and this is a throne and kingdom given by the Lord God. The kingdom of nature and providence he has by right of nature, as the Son of the higheſt; the kingdom of grace, or the mediatorial kingdom, the kingdom of prieſts, or royal prieſthood, is a delegated one; his father has ſet him as king over his holy hill of Zion; and he is accountable for his government to him, and will one day deliver it up complete and perfect.

Ver. 33. And he ſhall reign over the houſe of Jacob, &c.] Not over the Jews, the poſterity of Jacob, in a literal ſenſe; but over the whole Iſrael of God, conſiſting of Jews and Gentiles. For as his father David reigned over the Idumeans, Syrians, and others, as well as over the houſe of Judah and Iſrael, ſo this his ſon ſhall reign over both Jews and Gentiles; his kingdom ſhall be from one end of the earth to the other, even over all the elect of God; who in ſucceſſive generations call themſelves by the name of Jacob, and ſurname themſelves by the name of Iſrael, of whatſoever nation they be; and this reign of his ſhall be for ever, and of his kingdom there ſhall be no end; referring to Iſ. ix. 7. ſee alſo Dan. ii. 44. and vii. 14. he ſhall reign in the hearts of his people here unto the end of the world; and with his ſaints a thouſand years in the new heavens and new earth; and with them to all eternity, in the ultimate glory.

Ver. 34. Then ſaid Mary to the angel, how ſhall this be, &c.] This ſhe ſaid not as doubting the truth of what was ſaid; for ſhe required no ſign, as Zacharias did; nor is ſhe charged with, and blamed for unbelief, as he was; yea, it is expreſsly ſaid, ver. 45. that ſhe believed: nor was this a curious queſtion, as whether ſhe ſhould have this ſon by a man in a married ſtate, or in her preſent virgin-ſtate; for ſhe clearly underſtood the angel to mean the latter; and therefore her words expreſs her admiration at it, and alſo her deſire to be informed of the manner how it ſhould be: as to the matter of fact, ſhe did not diſpute it, but wanted to be reſolved by what means it would be brought about: ſhe knew, by prophecy, that the Meſſiah was to be born of a virgin, and ſhe perceived, by the angel's declaration, that ſhe was that virgin, but could not imagine in what way this amazing thing ſhould be effected; and therefore propoſes this queſtion for the following reaſon, ſeeing I know not a man? A huſband, as the Arabic verſion renders it; not Joſeph, nor any other man; for tho' ſhe was eſpouſed to Joſeph, yet he had not taken her to wife; nor were they, as yet, come together; and before they did, ſhe was found with child of the Holy Ghoſt, Matt. i. 18. ſhe was a pure virgin, untouched by man. The words are an Euphemiſm, or a modeſt way of expreſſing carnal copulation; ſee Gen. iv. 1.

Ver. 35. And the angel anſwered and ſaid unto her, &c.] The angel gave her an account of the manner in which, what he had ſaid, ſhould be effected, as well as obſerved ſome things for the ſtrengthning of her faith. The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee. The words, upon thee, are left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; but are retained in others, and in all copies: the formation of Chriſt's human nature, though common to all the three perſons, yet is particularly, and moſt properly aſcribed to the Spirit; not to the firſt perſon, the Father, leſt it ſhould be thought that he is only the Father of him, as man; nor to the ſecond perſon, the Son, ſince it is to him that the human nature is perſonally united; but to the third perſon, the Spirit, who is the ſanctifier; and who ſeparated, and ſanctified it, the firſt moment of its conception, and preſerved it from the taint of original ſin. His coming upon the virgin muſt be underſtood in conſiſtence with his omnipreſence, and immenſity; and cannot deſign any local motion, but an effectual operation in forming the human nature of her fleſh and ſubſtance; and not in the ordinary manner in which he is concerned in the formation of all men, Job xxxiii. 4. but in an extraordinary way, not to be conceived of, and explained. The phraſe moſt plainly anſwers to, בא על, in frequent uſe with the Jews [x], as expreſſive of coition. And the power of the higheſt ſhall over-ſhadow thee. By the power of the higheſt is not meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is ſometimes called the power of God; but rather the Holy Ghoſt, as before, who is ſtiled the finger of God, and power from on high, Luke xi. 20. and xxiv. 49. unleſs it ſhould be thought that the perfection of divine power common to all the three perſons is intended; and ſo points out the means by which the wondrous thing ſhould be performed, even by the power of God; and which ſhould not only be employed in forming the human nature of Chriſt, but in protecting the virgin from any ſuſpicion and charge of ſin, and defending her innocence and virtue, by moving upon Joſeph to take her to wife. In the word, overſhadow, ſome think there is an alluſion to the Spirit of God moving upon the face of the waters, in Gen. i. 2. when, מרחפת, he brooded upon them, as the word may be rendered; and which is the ſenſe of it, according to the Jewiſh writers [y]; as a hen, or any other bird, broods on its eggs to exclude its young: and others have thought the alluſion may be to חופת חתנים [z], the nuptial covering; which was a veil, or canopy, like a tent, ſupported on four ſtaves, under which the bridegroom and bride were betrothed; or, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, 'tis a modeſt phraſe alluding to the conjugal embraces, ſignified by a man's ſpreading the ſkirt of his garment over the woman, which Ruth deſired of Boaz, Ruth iii. 9. though the Jewiſh writers ſay [a], that phraſe is, לשון נישואין, expreſſive of the act of marriage, or taking to wife. The phraſe of being מטללין ברוח נבואה, over-ſhadowed, or covered with the ſpirit of prophecy, as the virgin alſo was, is uſed by the Targumiſt, on 1 Chron. ii. 55. therefore alſo that holy thing which ſhall be born of thee ſhall be called the Son of God. The human nature of Chriſt is here called a thing; for it was not a perſon; it never ſubſiſted of itſelf, but was taken at once into union with the perſon of the Son of God, otherwiſe there would be two perſons in Chriſt, whereas he is God, and man, in one perſon; and it is ſaid to be holy, being free from that original pollution and ſin, in which all that deſcend from Adam, by ordinary generation, are conceived, and brought forth; and is, moreover, ſaid to be born of a virgin, of thee, or, out of thee. Chriſt's fleſh was formed out of the virgin's; he took fleſh of her; his body did not deſcend from heaven, or paſs thro' her, as water thro' a pipe, as ſome hereticks of old ſaid: nor did his human nature, either as to ſoul or body, pre-exiſt his incarnation; but in the fulneſs of time he was made of a woman, and took a true body of her, and a reaſonable ſoul, into union with his divine perſon; and therefore ſhould be called the Son of God: not that he was now to become the Son of God; he was ſo before his incarnation, and even from all eternity; but he was now to be manifeſted as ſuch in human nature: nor does the angel predict, that he ſhould, for this reaſon, be called the Son of God; for he never was, on this account, ſo called, either by himſelf, or others: nor is the particle, therefore, cauſal, but conſequential: the angel is not giving a reaſon why Chriſt ſhould be the Son of God, but why he ſhould be owned, and acknowledged as ſuch by his people; who would infer, and conclude from his wonderful conception and birth, that he is the Emmanuel, God with us, the child that was to be born, and the Son given, whoſe name ſhould be wonderful, counſellor, the mighty God, &c. Iſ. vii. 14. and ix. 6. Moreover, the word, alſo, is not to be over-looked; and the ſenſe is, that ſeeing that human nature, which ſhould be born of the virgin, would be united to the Son of God, it likewiſe ſhould bear the ſame name, being in perſonal union with him, who was ſo from all eternity.

Ver. 36. And behold thy couſin Elizabeth, &c.] For tho' Elizabeth was of the daughters of Aaron, or of the tribe of Levi by her father's ſide, yet might be of the tribe of Judah by her mother's ſide, and ſo akin to Mary. The Perſic verſion calls her aunt by the mother's ſide: intermarriages between the two tribes of Levi and Judah were frequent; nor were they at all contrary to the intention of that law, that forbid the tribes to intermarry, which was to preſerve the inheritance in each tribe, ſince the tribe of Levi had none at all. Tho' ſhe might be called her couſin in a more general ſenſe; it being uſual with the Jews to call all of their own nation their kinſmen and kinſwomen, according to the fleſh: but the former ſenſe ſeems more agreeable; and ſo Mary is directed to her own family, and to her own relations, and known friends, for a ſign, by which her faith might be confirmed, in what the angel had ſaid unto her; for if ſhe found the one to be true, ſhe might conclude the other was alſo; which is as follows: ſhe hath alſo conceived a ſon in her old age: tho' Mary aſked no ſign, yet one is given her, whereby ſhe might know the truth of what was ſpoken: for if it ſhould appear that Elizabeth had received ſtrength to conceive, as was declared by the angel; and that a ſon too, which he could not have known without a divine revelation; and that in her old age, which was extraordinary and ſuper-natural, ſhe might aſſure herſelf, that the meſſage brought to her was from God; and that ſhe likewiſe, tho' a virgin, might conceive, and bear a ſon: the angel adds, as a further teſtimony of the truth of things; and this is the ſixth month with her who was called barren. Elizabeth was generally known to be barren, and was, by way of reproach, uſually called ſo, but was now ſix months gone with child; ſo that it was a plain caſe, and out of queſtion; the ſigns of her pregnancy were very apparent.

[a] Targum, Jarchi, & Aben Ezra in loc.

Ver. 37. For with God nothing ſhall be impoſſible.] That is conſiſtent with his nature and perfections, with his counſels, purpoſes, and promiſes: every thing that he has ſaid, purpoſed, or promiſed, he is able to do, and will; every word that he has ſpoken, every thing predicted by his prophets, or declared by his angels, and particularly this of a virgin's conceiving and bearing a ſon: ſo that the angel not only anſwers her queſtion, how this ſhould be, but confirms her faith in it; partly by the inſtance of her couſin Elizabeth, and partly by obſerving the infinite omnipotence of God.

Ver. 38. And Mary ſaid, behold, the handmaid of the Lord, &c.] In which words ſhe expreſſes her obedience of faith; ſhe owns herſelf to be the handmaid of the Lord, and deſires to obey him, and be ſubmiſſive to him as ſuch; and tacitly acknowledges her meanneſs, and great unworthineſs: be it unto me, according to thy word; ſhe aſſented to what the angel ſaid ſhould be unto her; ſhe earneſtly deſired it might be, and firmly believed it would be; ſhe ſet her Amen to the angel's meſſage: and the angel departed from her; to the heavenly regions, from whence he came; to his great Lord and maſter, that ſent him; having diſpatched the buſineſs he came about, and which he was accountable to him for.

Ver. 39. And Mary aroſe in thoſe days, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion renders it, in that day; directly, immediately, as ſoon as the angel was gone from her; partly to know the truth of things, and to make uſe of the ſign which had been given her, for the further confirmation of her faith, which was very right and proper for her to do; and partly to converſe with Elizabeth about the great things which God had done for each of them, and to praiſe his name together: and went into the hill country with haſte; the ſame which is called the country of the hills, and the hills, and the mountains, in Joſh. x. 40. and xi. 2, 16. and xvi. 1. and xviii. 13. and 2 Chron. xxvi. 10. where the Septuagint uſe the ſame word as here: the land of Judæa was divided into three parts, ההר, the mountain, or hill country, the champaign country, and the valley [b]: from Bethoron to Emmaus is הר, the hill country; from Emmaus to Lud, or Lydda is the champaign country; and from Lydda to the ſea the valley [c]. This place is frequently called, in the Jewiſh writings [d], the king's mountain, or the royal mountain, and is ſaid to be very full of cities: ten thouſand cities, they ſay [e], were in the king's mountains and a thouſand of them belonged to R. Eleazer ben Harſum: yea, they ſay [f], that king Jannai had ſixty myriads of cities in the mountain of the king. The Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it, went to the mountain, to this mountain, and which is called the mountain, or, as we read it, the hill-country of Judah, Joſh. xxi. 11. on which Hebron was ſituated; and ſeems to be the city next mentioned: into a city of Juda; for that was given to the children of Aaron, and ſo may reaſonably be thought to be the city where Zacharias dwelt, and not Jeruſalem, which was in the tribe of Benjamin. Hebron was a city peculiar to the prieſts; whereas Jeruſalem was not; and it was in the hill-country of Judæa; it was remarkable for the goodneſs of its ſtones. 'Tis ſaid [g], "you have no ſtones in all "the land of Iſrael harder than at Hebron; hence "they buried the dead there."

Ver. 40. And entered into the houſe of Zacharias, &c.] Which was in the above city, and might be well known to her: and ſaluted Elizabeth; not Zacharias; either becauſe he was not at home; or becauſe he was deaf and dumb, and could neither hear her ſalutation, nor return it; or becauſe it was not uſual for women to ſalute men, nor men to ſalute women; ſee the note on ver. 29. yet one woman might ſalute another; and eſpecially Mary ſaluted Elizabeth, becauſe ſhe came to pay the viſit to her, and it was with her ſhe was principally concerned.

Ver. 41. And it came to paſs that when Elizabeth heard the ſalutation of Mary, &c.] Which might be before ſhe ſaw her, and at ſome little diſtance from her: the babe leaped in her womb; which motion was not natural, but ſupernatural; being made at hearing the voice of Mary, who had now conceived the Meſſiah, whoſe forerunner this babe, John the Baptiſt, was to be; and who, by this motion, gave the firſt notice of his conception, which his mother Elizabeth took from hence; as he afterwards pointed him out by his finger, and by his baptiſm made him manifeſt to Iſrael: and Elizabeth was filled with the Holy Ghoſt; not with the ordinary graces of the Spirit; for theſe ſhe had been filled with before, but with extraordinary gifts, with a ſpirit of prophecy; by which ſhe knew that the Meſſiah was conceived, and that Mary was the mother of her Lord; that many things had been told her; that ſhe had believed them; and there would be a performance of them; and perhaps it was at this time that John the Baptiſt was filled with the Holy Ghoſt alſo; ſee ver. 15.

Ver. 42. And ſhe ſpake out with a loud voice, &c.] So as that all in the houſe might hear; ſhe ſpake with great vehemency of ſoul, and ſtrength of affection, being under a very powerful impreſſion of the Spirit of God: and ſaid, bleſſed art thou among women; the ſame words that the angel had ſaid to her before, ver. 28. and bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb: this is a reaſon why ſhe is called bleſſed, becauſe her child was bleſſed; being in union with a divine perſon, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever; and who has all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, and is that ſeed, in which all nations of the earth were to be bleſſed; and ſo is both bleſſed in himſelf, and the ſource of all bleſſedneſs to others. The Jews ſay [b], that the ſix meaſures of barley, Boaz gave to Ruth, ch. iii. 15. ſignified, that ſix righteous men ſhould ſpring from her, and among them the Meſſiah; who ſhould be bleſſed with ſix bleſſings, and they are theſe; the ſpirit of wiſdom and underſtanding, of counſel and of might, the ſpirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord; ſee Iſa. xi. 2.

Ver. 43. And whence is this to me, &c.] How comes it to paſs, that ſuch notice is taken of me, ſuch an honour is done me; that beſides being favoured with a child, who ſhall be great, that the mother of my Lord ſhould come to me? Eliſabeth was far from envying the ſuperior honour conferred on her kinſwoman, who was both meaner and younger than ſhe; that ſhe eſteems it a wonderful favour, that ſhe ſhould be indulged with a viſit from her, who had already conceived the Meſſiah; and in due time would be the mother of him, as man; who in his divine nature, is Lord of all angels, and men, and every creature; and in an eſpecial manner was her Lord, and the Lord of all the ſaints; by his Father's gift from eternity, by his own purchaſe in time, and by the power of his grace on each of their ſouls. Thus the virgin is ſaid to be the mother of our Lord, and ſo may be called the mother of God; becauſe ſhe was parent of that child, which was in union with him, who is truly Lord and God: juſt in ſuch ſenſe as the Lord of life and glory is ſaid to be crucified, and God is ſaid to purchaſe the church with his own blood, 1 Cor. ii. 8. Acts xx. 28.

Ver. 44. For lo, as ſoon as the voice of thy ſalutation ſounded in mine ears, &c.] This ſhe mentions, as the ſignal by which ſhe knew that ſhe was the mother of her Lord; namely, from that unuſual and extraordinary motion of the child, ſhe felt within her: the babe leaped in my womb for joy; that the mother of her Lord, and his, was come thither: the Jews ought not to object to this, who affirm, that the Embryo's, or infants in their mother's womb, ſung the ſong at the Red-ſea, and praiſed God [i].

Ver. 45. And bleſſed is ſhe that believed, &c.] Meaning Mary, a woman, a very young woman, and who had had things very incredible to nature and reaſon, told her; and yet ſhe believed, without objecting thereto, or requiring a ſign; tacitly referring to the unbelief of Zacharias, who was a man, a man in years, a prieſt by office; and yet had been very incredulous, in a thing that was much more poſſible; becauſe there had been inſtances of it before, in Sarah, Hannah, and Manoah's wife; than what was related to the virgin, of which there had been none; and which to reaſon, and with men, was impoſſible: and happy indeed is every one, that has true faith in any degree; for faith is the faith of God's elect, and is both a fruit and evidence of electing grace, which is the ſource of all bleſſings; it is the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit, and can never be loſt: many are the bleſſings, ſuch as believe, are in the poſſeſſion of, and openly entitled to; as the juſtification of their perſons, the remiſſion of their ſins, their adoption into the houſhold of God, liberty at the throne of grace, and a right to the eternal inheritance; they enjoy much ſolid peace, joy, and comfort in their own ſouls; bring much glory to God, and ſhall be ſaved in the Lord, with an everlaſting ſalvation: for there ſhall be a performance of thoſe things, which were told her from the Lord: theſe words may be conſidered, either as the ſubject matter of her faith, and be rendered in connexion with the former, thus, bleſſed is ſhe that believed, that there ſhall be a performance, &c. being fully perſuaded, that what the angel had told her, concerning the conception and birth of a ſon, concerning his name, and the greatneſs of his perſon, and the nature, extent, and duration of his kingdom, ſhould be certainly and punctually fulfilled; or as a reaſon of her happineſs, becauſe there ſhould be a ſure accompliſhment of them. Whatever God has ſpoken to any of his people, whether it be with reſpect to things temporal, ſpiritual, or eternal, ſhall be performed; as may be ſtrongly concluded from the veracity of God, who cannot lie; and from his power, who is able to do all things; and from his faithfulneſs, which he will never ſuffer to fail; and from inſtances, and matters of fact; from the experience of the ſaints in all ages, who know, and are conſcious to themſelves, that not one of the good things the Lord God has ſpoken to them, has ever failed, but that all have come to paſs; ſee Joſh. xxiii. 14.

Ver. 46. And Mary ſaid, my ſoul doth magnify the Lord.] Either Jehovah, the Father, or the Son; who, as he was David's Lord, according to his divine nature, though his ſon after the fleſh, was in the ſame ſenſe, Mary's Lord, as well as her ſon: and by magnifying him is meant, not making him great, for he cannot be made greater than he is; but aſcribing greatneſs to him, even all the perfections of the deity, and praiſing him on account of them; and alſo declaring and ſpeaking well of his many and mighty works of power, goodneſs, grace, and mercy, and giving him the glory of them: this Mary did, not in lip and word only, but with her whole heart and ſoul, and with all the powers and faculties of it; being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and under a more than ordinary influence of his, as her couſin Eliſabeth was: and it is to be obſerved, that ſhe all along ſpeaks in the prophetic ſtile, of things, as if they were done, which were doing, or would ſhortly be done.

Ver. 47. And my ſpirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.] Which alſo may be underſtood, either of God the Father, who was her Saviour, both as the God of nature and providence; ſo the Perſic verſion renders it, in God that gives me life; and who had ſupported, maintained, and preſerved her life; and as the God of grace, who has contrived the ſcheme of ſalvation, fixed upon, and appointed Chriſt to be the Saviour; and who ſaves by him, and therefore is ſometimes ſaid to be our Saviour, Tit. iii. 4, 6. Or of Chriſt, the Son of God, who being truly and properly God, was fit to be a Saviour; and is a very ſuitable, able, and willing one; and which is the great encouragement to ſenſible ſinners, to look unto him, and be ſaved; and lays a ſolid foundation for rejoicing in him; ſince what he did as man, had hereby an infinite virtue and efficacy put into it, as was put into his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs; whereby the purpoſes deſigned, were anſwered by them; and ſince he muſt be able to keep their immortal ſouls, which they commit unto him, and muſt have an intereſt with his Father, as their advocate, and a fulneſs to ſupply all their wants: the conſideration of Chriſt, by Mary, as God her Saviour, as having an intereſt in him, as a Saviour, and this her Saviour, God, gave her greater joy, than being the mother of him as man; and this her joy was not carnal, nor merely external, but inward and ſpiritual: it was a joy in her own ſpirit, and was excited there by the holy Spirit of God.

[b] Targum & R. Sol. Jarchi in loc. Tzeror Hammor, fol. 75. 3.

[i] Targum in Pſal. lxviii. 27. Zohar in Exod. fol. 23. 3. T. Hieroſ. Sota, fol. 20. 3.

Ver. 48. For he hath regarded the low eſtate of his handmaiden, &c.] Meaning, either her outward temporal eſtate, which was very low and mean: David's family was now very much reduced, it had its ſeat not at Jeruſalem, but at Nazareth, in Galilee: Mary of that houſe, was a poor virgin, and Joſeph of the ſame, to whom ſhe was betrothed, was a poor carpenter; and yet God paſſed by the rich and noble families of the Jewiſh people, and pitched upon this poor virgin, to be the mother of the Meſſiah: or her eſtate, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, which, as that of every ſon and daughter of Adam, was very low by the fall; for ſin has run all mankind into debt, and they have nothing to pay: it has ſtripped them of original righteouſneſs, and cloathed them with rags; it has filled them with diſeaſes, from the crown of the head, to the ſole of the feet; it has expoſed them to a priſon, into which being caſt, they muſt lie, till they have paid the uttermoſt farthing; and has left them hopeleſs and helpleſs, poor and miſerable, and blind and naked: but God has remembered his elect, in this their low eſtate, and has provided a Saviour for them, and ſent him to deliver them out of it; becauſe his mercy endures for ever; and of this Mary was ſenſible, and therefore rejoiced in God her Saviour: for behold, from henceforth all generations; not Jews only, but Gentiles alſo, ſhall call me bleſſed; both on account of her ſon ſhe had now conceived, and was bearing; becauſe ſhe was the mother of our Lord, who had reaſon ſo to conclude, from the nature of the thing, and from the words of the angel, and of Eliſabeth, ver. 28, 42. and much more than Leah had, who ſaid ſomething like this, at the birth of her ſecond ſon, Gen. xxx. 13. and alſo on account of her intereſt in Chriſt, as God her Saviour; in whom ſhe was bleſſed, with all ſpiritual bleſſings; ſo that ſhe was truly bleſſed, and might well be called ſo.

Ver. 49. For he that is mighty hath done to me great things, &c.] With reſpect to the incarnation of Chriſt, a new, a great, and unheard of thing; in cauſing her, though a virgin, to conceive; and alſo to bear ſuch a ſon, who ſhould be called Jeſus, a Saviour, Immanuel, God with us; and who was no other than the mighty God, the everlaſting Father, and prince of peace: wherefore ſhe deſcribes God the author of it, by a proper periphraſis of him, he that is mighty; ſince this was a work of almighty power, and very juſtly adds, and holy is his name: ſeeing this was brought about without any impurity, through the overſhadowing influence of the Holy Ghoſt; whereby the human nature was preſerved from the infection of ſin, was ſanctified, and fit to be united to the Son of God, and to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of his people. This may alſo have regard to the great things, God had done for her in a ſpiritual ſenſe; in the choice of her to eternal life, in the redemption of her by the Meſſiah, and in her regeneration and ſanctification; wherein God had diſplayed his ſovereign grace and goodneſs, and his almighty power, in a way conſiſtent with his juſtice and holineſs.

Ver. 50. And his mercy is on them that fear him, &c.] Not with ſlaviſh fear of hell and damnation, but with reverence and godly fear; with a filial fear, with a reverential love of God, and affection for him; with that fear which ſprings from the goodneſs of God, which has that for its object, and is encouraged by it: and though this fear is not the cauſe and reaſon of the mercy of God, yet is deſcriptive of the perſons towards whom it is exerciſed in various ways, and to whom it is openly ſhewn; they hereby appearing to be the veſſels of mercy, afore-prepared to glory; and in whoſe redemption, mercy and truth have met together, and who, according to the abundant mercy of God the Father, have been begotten again; whoſe unrighteouſneſſes he has been merciful to, and whoſe ſins he'll remember no more: and it may have a particular regard to the incarnation of Chriſt, which in this chapter is ſaid to be in remembrance of mercy; to be the mercy promiſed, and to come through the tender mercy of our God, ver. 54, 72, 78. And which was a mercy Mary conſidered, not as peculiar to herſelf, but as extended to all that fear the Lord; not in that age only, but from generation to generation; to the end of the world, to God's elect in all times and places, who ſhould all be partakers of it, and ſharers in it.

Ver. 51. He hath ſhewed ſtrength with his arm, &c.] Of almighty power, in the buſineſs of the incarnation, and in working out ſalvation for his people; which is done by his own arm, he being mighty to ſave, and travelling in the greatneſs of his ſtrength; ſee Iſa. lxiii. 1, 5. He hath ſcattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts; whom he always reſiſts, and both in providence and grace, takes ſuch methods, as tend to humble and confound them: here particularly, it may regard the proud and haughty Jews; who imagined nothing leſs, than that the Meſſiah would be born of one of the rich and noble families in Judea; that he would appear as a temporal prince, and ſet up a temporal kingdom in great ſtate and ſplendor, and make them a free and flouriſhing people: when inſtead of this, he was to be born of a poor virgin, of whom they diſdainfully ſay, is not his mother called Mary? who was of Nazareth in Galilee, of which 'tis ſaid, ſhall Chriſt come out of Galilee? or any good thing out of Nazareth? A virgin betrothed to a carpenter, and her ſon of that buſineſs alſo, with which both were flouted; and becauſe of this meanneſs, the Meſſiah was rejected by them; and thus were they ſcattered and confounded in their imaginations.

Ver. 52. He hath put down the mighty from their ſeats, &c.] As mighty kings and emperors from their thrones, as he often does, in the courſe of his providence; ſetting up one, and putting down another: or the mighty angels, from their ſeats of bliſs and happineſs in heaven; who rebelling againſt God, oppoſing the incarnation of Chriſt, taking it ill, that the human nature ſhould be advanced above theirs, were caſt down to hell; and are reſerved in chains of darkneſs, to the judgment of the great day: or this may have reſpect to the putting down the monarchies and kingdoms of this world, by the kingdom of the Meſſiah to be ſet up; which, though at firſt was mean and deſpicable, like a ſtone cut out of a mountain, will increaſe, ſpread, and break in pieces, and deſtroy all other kingdoms: and exalted them of low degree; as David to the throne of Iſrael, from the ſheepfold, and following the ews great with young; and now his houſe and family, which were ſunk very low, by raiſing of his ſeed, of a poor virgin in his family, unto Iſrael, a Saviour Jeſus; in whoſe days the poor had the Goſpel preached, and received it; theſe were choſen and called: the great things of the Goſpel were revealed to babes, and hid from the wiſe and prudent; and beggars were raiſed from the dunghill, to ſit among princes, and to inherit the throne of glory: a method, which God in his infinite wiſdom and grace, has been pleaſed to take, more or leſs, in all ages of time; for not many mighty and noble, are called by grace; but uſually the fooliſh, the weak, and the baſe things of the world.

Ver. 53. He hath filled the hungry with good things, &c.] Such as earneſtly deſired and longed after the coming of the Meſſiah, as good old Simeon, and Anna the propheteſs; and thoſe that looked for redemption in Iſrael, to whom ſhe ſpake: and all ſuch perſons as heartily deſire ſalvation by Chriſt, and breathe after the forgiveneſs of their ſins through his blood, and thirſt after his righteouſneſs, and long for communion with him, and a greater knowledge of him, and more conformity to him, and pant after his word and ordinances; theſe are filled, ſooner or later, with a ſenſe of their intereſt in Chriſt, and his ſalvation; with a view of the full and free forgiveneſs of their ſins, and with his righteouſneſs they hunger after; and with every good thing they ſtand in need of, with joy and peace, with food and gladneſs, even to ſatisfaction; ſo that they can ſay with Jacob, they have enough, yea, all things; ſeeing Chriſt is theirs, and all things with him: and the rich he hath ſent empty away: not the rich in this world's goods, though ſuch who truſt in their wealth, and boaſt of their riches, or do not make a proper uſe of them, God in his providence, ſometimes ſtrips them of all, and turns them into the world naked and empty; much leſs the rich in grace, who are often the poor of the world; and who, though they ſeem to have nothing, yet poſſeſs all things, and are full: but ſuch who are rich in their opinion, and in their own works; and truſt in their righteouſneſs, and deſpiſe others; theſe, as they come full of themſelves to the throne of grace, as the Phariſee, are ſent empty away; without any token of the love and favour of God, or any bleſſing from him: and as they come to ordinances in their own ſtrength, and truſt in the performance of them, they go away empty, as they came; theſe are dry breaſts unto them, whilſt they are full breaſts of conſolation to the poor in ſpirit, and to all meek and humble ſouls: and what is ſtill worſt of all, notwithſtanding all their good works they boaſt of, and truſt in, they'll be ſent away at the laſt judgment from the preſence of Chriſt, as not known by him, and as workers of iniquity.

Ver. 54. He hath holpen his ſervant Iſrael, &c.] Meaning, not the natural poſterity of Jacob, or Iſrael in general, but the elect of God among them; for all were not Iſrael, who were of Iſrael; and not them only, but alſo all the choſen ones among the Gentiles; who, with the former, make up the whole Iſrael of God, in a ſpiritual and myſtical ſenſe: theſe are the Iſrael, God has choſen, redeemed, and calls by his grace, and are here ſtiled his ſervant, as Iſrael is frequently called, Iſa. xli. 8. and xliv. 21. The word ſignifies a child, as well as a ſervant; and may deſign, either the weak and helpleſs condition God's elect are in by nature, which calls for, and requires divine help and aſſiſtance; or the relation they ſtand in to him, being his adopted children, and which is the reaſon of his helping them: and which ſignifies to take them by the hand, and lift them up, and ſupport and uphold them; and ſuppoſes them to have been fallen down, and unable to raiſe themſelves up; but God having laid help for them on one that is mighty, ſent him to take upon him their nature; and by obeying, ſuffering, and dying for them, to help them out of their ſtate of ſin and miſery; and to uphold them with the right hand of his righteouſneſs, and bring them ſafe to glory; and all this, in remembrance of his mercy; which he had in his heart towards them, and had promiſed in his covenant to them: the mercy of God, is the ſpring and ſource of redemption; mercy provided a Redeemer, and a ranſom; and it is owing to it, that the Redeemer came; and he, in his love and pity, performed the work: and therefore ſalvation is to be aſcribed, not to works of righteouſneſs done by men, but to the abundant mercy of God our Saviour.

Ver. 55. As he ſpake to our fathers, &c.] To David, of whoſe family Mary was; and to Jacob, or Iſrael, of whoſe ſtock ſhe was; and to Iſaac, in whom the ſeed was to be called; and particularly, to Abraham and to his ſeed for ever: not his natural, but his ſpiritual ſeed; both among Jews and Gentiles, to the end of the world; to theſe God promiſed this mercy of a Saviour and Redeemer, and to theſe he performs it, and will to all generations.

Ver. 56. And Mary abode with her about three months, &c.] That is, ſhe continued with Eliſabeth, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs, about the ſpace of three months; in which time, ſhe had full ſatisfaction of the truth of the ſign, the angel had given her; namely, of Eliſabeth's conception and pregnancy, for by this time ſhe was ready to lie in; and ſhe muſt now be fully aſſured, that ſhe was with child herſelf: this ſpace of three months, is a term of time fixed by the Jewiſh doctors, to know whether a woman is with child or not, as in caſe of divorce or death: the rule runs thus[k]; “every woman that is divorced, or becomes a “widow, lo, ſhe may not marry, nor be betrothed, “until ſhe waits, תשעים יום, ninety days (i. e. “three months) excluſive of the day in which ſhe is “divorced, or her huſband dies, and of the day in “which ſhe is betrothed; that ſo it may be known, “whether ſhe is with child or not, in order to “diſtinguiſh between the ſeed of the former, and “the ſeed of the ſecond huſband.” And ſo in the caſe of marrying the wife of a brother, that died without iſſue[l], and of new married couples miſtaking their ſpouſes[m]: and returned to her own houſe; at Nazareth, in Galilee; and now it was, that Joſeph, to whom ſhe was betrothed, perceived ſhe was with child; and ſuſpecting evil, had a mind to put her away privately; but was informed by an angel of God in a dream, of the whole matter; and was adviſed and encouraged to take her to wife, which he accordingly did; ſee Matt. i. 18, 19, 20.

Ver. 57. Now Eliſabeth's full time came, &c.] The nine months, which is the full time of a woman's going with child, were now compleat; for in the ſixth month of Eliſabeth's pregnancy, or when ſhe had been gone ſix months with child, the angel acquainted Mary with it, and ſhe had ſtaid about three months with her; but now had left her, to ſhun the company which would be at the delivery of her; though ſome think, ſhe ſtaid till that time was over, which is not ſo probable; and ſo her reckoning being out, and the time come, that ſhe ſhould be delivered; and ſhe brought forth a ſon, according to the angel's prediction both to Zacharias and Mary, ver. 13, 36.

Ver. 58. And her neighbours, and her couſins, &c.] That lived in Hebron, and the parts adjacent, whether of the houſe of Aaron, or of the tribe of Judah; to both which ſhe was related, and who dwelt near her, the prieſts in the city of Hebron, and the children of Judah in the places about it: heard how the Lord had ſhewed great mercy upon her; or had magnified his mercy with her; ſee Gen. xix. 19. in removing her barrenneſs, and ſo taking away her reproach from among men; in giving her ſtrength to conceive, and bring forth a ſon, that was to be ſo great, as the prophet of the higheſt; and more than a prophet, and greater than any born of women: and they rejoiced with her; as the angel had foretold they ſhould, ver. 14. The Perſic verſion reads, with him, Zacharias; having rendered the other clauſe thus, tho' wrongly, hearing that God had poured out his mercy on the houſe of Zacharias; ſee Rom. xii. 15.

Ver. 59. And it came to paſs that on the eighth day, &c.] The preciſe time fixed in the original inſtitution of the ordinance of circumciſion, Gen. xvii. 12. tho' this was not always attended to, but circumciſion was ſometimes deferred to another time; yet keeping the exact time was judged moſt commendable and praiſe-worthy; ſee the note on Phil. iii. 5. they came to circumciſe the child; that is, the neighbours and couſins of Elizabeth, who were at the time of her delivery; eight days after they came again to be at the circumciſion of the child: who was the operator is not known; nor was there any particular perſon appointed for this ſervice; but any one might do it, whether eccleſiaſtic or laic, men or women, father or mother, or any other friend: for the rule is[n], "all are fit to circumciſe; "even an uncircumciſed perſon, and a woman, and "a minor, may circumciſe in a place where there is "no man; but a Gentile may not circumciſe at "all." The circumciſion of John ſeems to be performed in Zacharias's houſe, and by one of thoſe that came; for Zacharias, being dumb, could not ſay the bleſſing which the circumciſer was obliged to ſay: nor indeed could he ſay that, which as the father of the child, belonged to him; concerning which, take the following account[o]: "the circumciſer bleſſes before he circumciſes, ſaying, "bleſſed is that hath ſanctified us by his precepts, "and hath commanded us concerning circumciſion: if he circumciſes the ſon of his friend, or "if he circumciſes his own ſon, he bleſſes him with this bleſſing; and hath commanded us to circumciſe a ſon: and the father of the ſon bleſſes with "another bleſſing; bleſſed art thou, O Lord our "God, the king of the world, who hath ſanctified us by his precepts, and hath commanded us "to enter him into the covenant of Abraham our "father.——If his father is not there, they do "not ſay this other bleſſing.——And if there "are any ſtanding there, they ſay, as he hath "brought him into the covenant, ſo bring him to "the law, and to matrimony, and to good works; "and after that the father of the child, or the "circumciſer, or one of thoſe that ſtand by, bleſs, "ſaying, bleſſed art thou, O Lord our God, the "king of the world, who ſanctified the beloved "(Iſaac) from the womb, &c." How many of Elizabeth's neighbours and relations were preſent at this ceremony, is not related; but the Jews require ten perſons as witneſſes of it; for they ſay[p], that "teſtimonies worthy of belief, in Iſrael, are ten, "the witneſſes of the covenant of circumciſion are "ten, the witneſſes of a dead perſon ten," &c. and at this time alſo it was uſual to give the child a name, which was not by divine appointment, but was a cuſtom that prevailed among them; which took its riſe from Abraham, having his name changed at the time when circumciſion was enjoined him, Gen. xvii. 5, 10. and from the naming and circumciſion of Iſaac, mentioned together, Gen. xxi. 3, 4. and they called him Zacharias, after the name of his father; as the neighbours of Naomi gave a name to the ſon of Boaz and Ruth, calling him Obed, Ruth iv. 17. This they took upon them to do, becauſe that Zacharias was deaf and dumb; but why they ſhould call him by his name, cannot well be accounted for, it not being uſual to call the father, and the ſon, by the ſame name; unleſs they were deſirous of continuing the ſame name in the family, which had been famous in Iſrael for a prophet, and a prieſt: to call children by Gentile names was not lawful. In the Targum on Amos vi. 1. 'tis ſaid, "wo to them that name their children after the "names of the Gentiles."

Ver. 60. And his mother anſwered and ſaid, &c.] That is, Elizabeth: not ſo, but he ſhall be called John; knowing that this was the name wherewith the angel ſaid he ſhould be called; either by divine revelation, ſhe being filled with the Holy Ghoſt, ver. 41. or by information of her huſband, who, doubtleſs, in writing, gave her an account of all that the angel had ſaid unto him.

Ver. 61. And they ſaid unto her, &c.] Her neighbours and relations, there is none of thy kindred that is called by this name: from whence it appears, that it was uſual to give names to children after their anceſtors, relations, and friends. The Perſic verſion renders it, in thine Iſrael there is not any one of this name: but this could not be true; for the name of Jochanan, or John, was a name very common among the Iſraelites, tho' not in Elizabeth's family, or her huſband's.

Ver. 62. And they made ſigns to his father, &c.] Who was deaf, as well as dumb; otherwiſe there would have been no occaſion to have ſigns made to him: and ſo the word uſed, in ver. 20. ſignifies both deaf and dumb. Theſe ſigns were made by hands or head; for ſuch uſed to be made to a dumb man. According to the canon[q], a dumb man nods, and ונרמן, and is nodded, or beckened to: and which beckening one of the commentators[r] ſays, is a ſign which is expreſſed either by the hands or head. Such a method as theſe took with Zacharias, about the name of his ſon, is directed to in caſe of a father's deafneſs, in relation to knowing who is his firſt-born[s]: "a father that is dumb, they ſearch "or examine him in the way they ſearch for divorces; if he makes ſigns, or writes, that this "is his firſt-born, lo! this takes the double portion." How he would have him called; by what name, Zacharias or John; and they were right in applying to him, to whom it moſt properly belonged, to give a name to his child.

Ver. 63. And he aſked for a writing-table, &c.] That is, he made ſigns for one, for as yet he could not ſpeak. The Perſic verſion renders it ink, and the Ethiopic, a book, and the Vulgate Latin, a notebook. The word ſignifies a little table, ſuch as they uſed to write not only upon, but in; and was ſometimes of braſs[t], ſometimes of wood, and ſometimes of wax [v], on which they wrote with a ſtyle or pen; and wrote, ſaying, his name is John: not that he muſt be, or ſhall be, ſo called; but this is his name, and no other; being what the angel had given him before his conception, and Zacharias now confirms: and they marvelled all; they were aſtoniſhed, not ſo much at the new name brought into the family, as at the agreement between Elizabeth and Zacharias in this point, when the latter was both deaf and dumb; they knowing nothing, as yet, of the angel's meſſage to him.

Ver. 64. And his mouth was opened immediately, &c.] As ſoon as ever the child was named, and ſo all things accompliſhed which the angel had foretold; and his tongue looſed; the impediments of ſpeech were removed, and the uſe of his tongue and lips was reſtored unto him: and he ſpake and praiſed God; for the ſafe delivery of his wife; for the birth of his ſon, the fore-runner of Chriſt; for the conception of the Meſſiah; for God's gracious regards to his church and people, in theſe inſtances; and for the reſtoration of ſpeech and hearing to himſelf, of which he had been ſometime deprived for his unbelief.

Ver. 65. And fear came on all that dwelt round about them, &c.] That is, the fear of God, an awful reverence of the divine majeſty; they perceived the hand of God was in theſe things, and that theſe were effects of divine power; and which made very ſerious impreſſions upon their minds, and they thought, and ſpoke of them with great ſolemnity; ſee Acts ii. 43. and v. 11. and all theſe ſayings were noiſed abroad throughout all the hill-country of Judæa: the ſeveral things relating to the appearance of the angel to Zacharias in the temple; his meſſage to him; the ſtriking him deaf and dumb; the conception of Elizabeth, who had been barren; the birth of her ſon; the unuſual name given him; and the more unuſual manner in which it was given; and the opening of Zacharias's mouth, and the looſening of his tongue upon this, were reported, and commonly talked of by all people in that part of Judæa, where the parents of John dwelt.

Ver. 66. And all they that heard them, &c.] The above things, laid them up in their hearts; treaſured them up in their memories, and often thought of them in their minds, what ſhould be the meaning, and what would be the iſſue of them: ſaying, what manner of child ſhall this be? what will he be, or come to? and what is it that he ſhall do? ſurely he muſt be deſigned in providence to be put into ſome high ſtation, and for ſome eminent work and ſervice; ſince ſo many, and ſuch great things, have gone before, and attended his birth: and the hand of the Lord was with him; which may intend the ſpecial care, and peculiar providence of God in preſerving his life, giving him health, cauſing him to grow ſtrong and robuſt, and in ſtature of body, and in endowments of mind; and alſo the communications of grace unto him, and the gracious preſence of God with him, ſo ſoon as he was capable of enjoying them; as likewiſe a ſpirit of prophecy, which is ſometimes ſignified by the hand of the Lord; and the extraordinary gifts of the Spirit, which, in proceſs of time, appeared in him, qualifying him for his high office and work: the hand of the Lord, with the Jews, is the Holy Ghoſt: thus they interpret 1 Chron. xxviii. 19. all in writing, this is the Maſora; from the hand of the Lord, זו רוח הקודש, this is the Holy Ghoſt [w].

Ver. 67. And his father Zacharias was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] With a ſpirit of prophecy, as his wife Elizabeth had been before, ver. 41. and propheſied, ſaying; the following things, relating to the Meſſiah, his incarnation and redemption by him; to the accompliſhing of the covenant, oath, promiſe and mercy of God to his people; and to his ſon, the fore-runner of Chriſt; and to his work and office, in the various parts and branches of it, which he ſhould perform. Whence it appears, that the following ſong is of divine inſpiration; and that Zacharias ſpake it as he was moved by the Holy Ghoſt, as the prophets of old did.

Ver. 68. Bleſſed be the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] This was a form of bleſſing of long ſtanding, Pſ. lxxii. 18. and very likely was in uſe, more or leſs, ever ſince Iſrael was diſtinguiſhed from other nations, became a body politick, and were ſettled in the land of Canaan, in the enjoyment of peculiar privileges, both civil and religious; ſee other forms before it in Gen. ix. 26. and xxiv. 27. and Exod. xviii. 10. And now, this was very near being antiquated, and out of date; for upon the birth of Chriſt, the Son of God manifeſt in the fleſh, the New Teſtament-form of bleſſing runs, as in 2 Cor. i. 3. Eph. i. 3. 1 Pet. i. 3. The reaſon of its being now made uſe of might be, becauſe the Meſſiah, the principal ſubject of this ſong, was peculiarly promiſed unto Iſrael, was raiſed up for them, and ſent unto them. To bleſs God, is not to invoke a bleſſing on him; for there is none greater than he to aſk one of; nor does he ſtand in need of any, being the Creator, who is bleſſed for ever in himſelf, and is the fountain of bleſſedneſs to his creatures: and therefore, alſo, cannot ſignify to confer a bleſſing on him, but to praiſe and glorify him, on account of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands; and to give thanks unto him for all mercies, ſpiritual and temporal; and eſpecially for Jeſus Chriſt, his miſſion, incarnation, and ſalvation by him, which are the things the God of Iſrael is bleſſed for in this ſong: for he hath viſited, and redeemed his people; as he did Iſrael of old, Exod. iii. 16, 17. when the Lord looked upon them, and delivered them out of the bondage of Egypt, and which was a type and reſemblance of redemption by Chriſt; and to which reference here ſeems to be had. The people here ſaid to be viſited, and redeemed, deſign all the elect of God, not only among the Jews but Gentiles alſo; all thoſe whom God has choſen to be his people, and has in his covenant taken and declared to be ſuch; whom he has given to Chriſt, as his people and portion; for whoſe ſins he was ſtricken, and made reconciliation, and whom he ſaves from their ſins. The act of viſiting them, as previous to redemption, may include God's look of love upon them from everlaſting; his choice of them in Chriſt unto ſalvation; the appointment and proviſion of a Saviour for them; the covenant of grace made with them in Chriſt, the foundation and ſecurity of their ſalvation; and particularly the miſſion of Chriſt in human nature, in conſequence of the council, covenant, and promiſe of God: or it deſigns his incarnation, for he was now actually conceived in the womb of the virgin; ſo that God had viſited, and looked upon his people, and remembered his love and mercy, his covenant and promiſe to them: and the redemption of them, which was now ſaid to be made, or done, becauſe Chriſt was now ſent to do it, and becauſe it was as ſure, as if it was done, which intends the ſpiritual and eternal redemption of them by the price of his blood, from the ſlavery of ſin, the bondage of the law, and curſe of it, and the captivity of ſatan, and a deliverance out of the hands of every enemy; a redemption which reaches both to ſoul and body, and ſecures from all condemnation and wrath to come; and includes every bleſſing in it, as juſtification, forgiveneſs of ſins, adoption, ſanctification, and eternal life; and is a plenteous, full, complete, and everlaſting one.

[v] Alex. ab Alex. Genial. Dier. l. 2. c. 30.

[w] T. Hieroſ. Megilla, fol. 70. 1.

Ver. 69. And hath raiſed up an horn of ſalvation for us, &c.] Meaning the Meſſiah, whom God had now raiſed up: in the houſe of his ſervant David; in David's family, he being now conceived by a virgin of his houſe; and who, in a little time, would be born in Bethlehem, the city of David. He is called an horn of ſalvation, becauſe he is a powerful Saviour. Horn denotes power; it being that to a beaſt, as the arm is to a man, by which it defends itſelf, and puſhes down its enemies; and ſalvation is the work Chriſt came to effect, and for which he was raiſed up, and ſent: and a Saviour he is, and a mighty one, as appears from his doing and ſuffering what he has; as bearing all the ſins of his people, and making reconciliation for them; obeying all the precepts of the law, and undergoing the penalty of it; being made a curſe, and becoming obedient to death, even the death of the croſs: as alſo, from his delivering them from ſin, ſatan, and the law, which no other could have done; and from his grappling with, conquering, ſpoiling, and deſtroying all his, and our enemies. Moreover, the word horn ſignifies regal power, honour, and dignity; ſee Dan. vii. 24. and ſo may not only denote the work of Chriſt as a Saviour, but his office alſo as a king, who in the diſcharge of that is likewiſe a Saviour; for he not only rules, and governs, but protects, defends, and preſerves his people, by his power; ſee 1 Sam. ii. 10. Pſ. cxxxii. 17.

Ver. 70. As he ſpake by the mouth of his holy prophets, &c.] Which ſhows not only the veracity and faithfulneſs of God in his promiſes, but the early intimations that were given by him concerning the Meſſiah: for it follows, which have been ſince the world began; or from the beginning of the world; ever ſince the firſt hint of the Meſſiah, as the ſeed of the woman, that ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, was given, he was more or leſs ſpoken of. Adam, the firſt prophet, ſeems to have reſpect to him, when he calls his wife Eve, which ſignifies life; and becauſe ſhe ſhould be the mother of all living. Enoch, the ſeventh from Adam, propheſied of him, of his ſecond coming, which ſuppoſes his firſt; and Lamech may be thought to have ſome regard to him, when he named his ſon Noah, and ſaid what he did concerning him: Chriſt was ſpoken of to Abraham, as his ſeed, in whom all nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and God ſpake of him by the patriarch Jacob, under the name of Shiloh, as who ſhould ſpring from the tribe of Judah, before the ſceptre and law-giver were departed from it. Moſes foretold that there ſhould ariſe a prophet from the midſt of his brethren like unto him, to whom the Iſraelites were to hearken. David, the prophet, often ſpeaks of him, particularly of his death, his reſurrection from the dead, his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſeſſion at God's right hand; and the evangelical prophet Iſaiah predicts his birth of a virgin, and teſtified before hand of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow. Micah points out the very place of his birth; and Zachary deſcribes the manner of his entrance into Jeruſalem, as riding on an aſs: to ſay nothing of what Jeremy, Ezekiel, Daniel, and others, have propheſied of him. 'Tis a common ſaying of the Jews [x], that "all the prophets, all of them "propheſied not, אלא לימות המשיח, but of the "days of the Meſſiah." The men, by whom God ſpoke of the Meſſiah, of the miſſion of him, and of raiſing up this horn of ſalvation, for his people, were prophets; men endued with a ſpirit of prophecy; holy men, who were ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, and ſpake, as they were moved by him; and theſe all ſpake as if it were with one mouth; they all agree in their accounts concerning Chriſt, tho' they lived in different periods of time, from the beginning of the world.

Ver. 71. That we ſhould be ſaved from our enemies, &c.] This, and the two following verſes, either contain and expreſs the ſum, and ſubſtance of what God ſpake by the prophets; or point out the end or ends of his raiſing up an horn of ſalvation, or a Saviour for his people; namely, that they ſhould be ſaved by him from their enemies: from ſin, which wars againſt the ſoul, and threatens the deſtruction of it; from ſatan, the avowed and implacable adverſary of mankind; from the world, the ſeed of the ſerpent, which has always bore an enmity to the ſeed of the woman; from the law, the killing letter; and from death, the laſt enemy that is to be deſtroyed; and from the hand of all that hate us: which is only an illuſtration of the former ſentence, or a repetition of it in other words; and deſigns the ſame as before.

Ver. 72. To perform the mercy promiſed to our fathers, &c.] By mercy is meant ſalvation by Chriſt, which ſprings from the mercy of God; the promiſe of which was an inſtance of mercy to the Jewiſh fathers under the Old Teſtament, and alſo the performance of it; for they were ſaved by the grace of our Lord Jeſus, even as we: his blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins that were paſt, and for the redemption of tranſgreſſions under the firſt Teſtament: and to remember his holy covenant; which was made between him and his Son from all eternity; and was, at various times, diſpenſed and manifeſted to the patriarchs, and eminent ſaints, as Adam, Noah, Abraham, &c. This is called an holy one; not only becauſe it was made by, and between holy perſons, and provided for the holineſs of the people of God, both here, and hereafter; but becauſe in the article of redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt, which is here more particularly regarded, care was taken to ſecure the glory of God's holineſs and juſtice, as well as to diſplay his grace and mercy. Now raiſing up, and ſending Jeſus a Saviour, ſhowed, that God was mindful of this covenant, and therefore ſent redemption to his people.

Ver. 73. The oath which he ſwore to our father Abraham.] When he ſwore by himſelf, becauſe he could ſwear by no greater, that in bleſſing he would bleſs him; that his ſeed ſhould poſſeſs the gates of his enemies, and in it all the nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed: all which have been fulfilled in Jeſus the Meſſiah; ſee Gen. xxii. 16, 17, 18. Heb. vi. 13, 14.

Ver. 74. That he would grant unto us, &c.] What is ſaid in this and the following verſe, is the ſubſtance of the promiſed mercy, covenant, and oath: that we being delivered out of the hands of our enemies, as before, in ver. 71. might ſerve him without fear. One principal end of deliverance from ſpiritual enemies by Chriſt, is the ſervice of God; and nothing lays a greater obligation on men to ſerve the Lord, and glorify him, than redemption by Chriſt; nor is there any thing that makes men more zealous of good works: ſpiritual and evangelical ſervice, in diſtinction from the legal ſervice, and worſhip of God, is here meant; ſince it is ſaid to be without fear, which the threatenings and curſes of the law filled men with; but being delivered from it, they become free from that ſpirit of bondage unto fear, it genders to; as being delivered alſo from ſin and ſatan, they are without fear of hell and damnation; and from the world, they are without fear of men; and from death, they are without fear of that, through which many under the legal diſpenſation, were all their life-time ſubject to bondage. It is a ſaying of the Jews[y], that "greater is he that ſerves from love, than he that "ſerves from fear." But ſuch ſort of ſervice is not of a man's ſelf, or performed by his own power and ſtrength, but is a grant from God, and owing to the influence of his Spirit and grace.

Ver. 75. In holineſs and righteouſneſs, &c.] Not in mere outward rites and legal ceremonies; but, as the ſaints ſerve, from principles of righteouſneſs and true holineſs; in which the new man is created, and of which the kingdom of God, or ſpiritual and internal religion conſiſts; ſo in acts of piety and devotion towards God, and juſtice among men, which is the ſubſtance of the perfect and acceptable will of God: before him; it is one thing to ſerve the Lord with an outward appearance of holineſs and righteouſneſs before men, and another thing to be righteous before God, and to walk in all his commandments and ordinances, as in his ſight: all the days of our life; which denotes the conſtancy and continuance of this ſervice; 'tis not for a day or two, or only on feſtivals and ſabbath-days, ſuch as were under the Jewiſh diſpenſation, but every day we live. In the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in two copies of Beza's, and two of Stephens's, and in the Alexandrian copy, it is only read, all our days; but the Arabic verſion reads, as the generality of copies, and as we render it.

Ver. 76. And thou child ſhalt be called the prophet of the higheſt, &c.] Here Zacharias turns himſelf to his ſon John, though an infant, and incapable of knowing what was ſaid to him; and for the ſake of thoſe that were preſent, deſcribes his office and work; and ſays, that he ſhould be called, that is, that he ſhould be, and be accounted a prophet: for he was not only a preacher of Chriſt and his Goſpel, but he alſo foretold the coming of the Meſſiah; and the vengeance that ſhould fall on the Jewiſh nation, for their unfruitfulneſs, impenitence, and unbelief: and the prophet of the higheſt; that is, of God; as the Perſic verſion renders it, of the moſt high God; and by whom is meant, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe prophet, harbinger, and forerunner John was; and ſo is a proof of Chriſt being the ſupreme, or moſt high God: for thou ſhalt go before the face of the Lord, to prepare his ways; as the angel had ſuggeſted in ver. 17. and as was propheſied of him in Iſa. xl. 3. Mal. iii. 1. ſee the note on Matt. iii. 3.

Ver. 77. To give knowledge of ſalvation, &c.] This is ſtill ſaid of John, and belongs to his work and office; though the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, that he may give; as if it was ſpoken of the Lord, before whoſe face John was to go, and whoſe ways he was to prepare: by ſalvation is meant, not a temporal ſalvation, or a deliverance from the Roman yoke, the Jews were expecting, for John gave no intimation of any ſuch ſalvation; but of a ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, and of Chriſt himſelf, the author of it; who is often called ſalvation, becauſe he was appointed to this buſineſs, was fitted for it, and has effected it; and there is ſalvation in him, and in no other: the knowledge of this is, not merely notional and ſpeculative, but experimental, approbative, fiducial, appropriating, ſure, and certain; and is more excellent, than any other kind of knowledge whatever: and this is a gift; it is not what is attained unto, and acquired by application, diligence, and induſtry, as other ſort of knowledge; but is a gift of God, though in the uſe of means, and through the miniſtry of the word: and ſo John is ſaid to give it miniſterially, he being an inſtrument in the hand of God, whereby ſouls came to the knowledge of ſalvation by Chriſt, and believed in him: it was communicated by God through his miniſtry, unto his people: meaning not the people of John the Baptiſt, the Jews, though it was true of God's elect among them; but the people of Chriſt, and that not all mankind, who are his by creation; but a ſpecial people, whom the Father has given him, and he has purchaſed by his blood; whom he conquers by his grace, and makes a willing people, in the day of his power: to theſe, and only theſe, is the knowledge of ſalvation by Chriſt given; for none elſe are appointed to it, and for no other is it wrought out. It follows, by the remiſſion of their ſins; the ſenſe of which is, either that ſalvation is by the forgiveneſs of ſin, and lies in it, that being a principal part of it; ſee Eph. i. 7. Sins are debts, forgiving them is a remitting theſe debts, a looſing them, or the obligation to payment, which is done freely and fully, for Chriſt's ſake, and through his blood; and herein lies the bleſſedneſs and ſalvation of men; ſee Rom. iv. 6, 7. Or elſe that the knowledge of ſalvation was conveyed through the miniſtry of John, not by preaching the works of the law, but the doctrine of remiſſion of ſins, by Chriſt; ſee Mark i. 4. John i. 29. and which is the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel, as it was ordered to be preached by Chriſt, and was preached by his apoſtles. The Alexandrian copy reads, our ſins.

Ver. 78. Through the tender mercy of our God, &c.] Or bowels of mercy, to which the forgiveneſs of ſin is owing; the ſource and ſpring of pardon, is the free-grace and abundant mercy of God; it takes its riſe from thence, though it is channelled in the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and which no way derogates from, but rather heightens the riches of God's grace and mercy: for it was mercy, that moved God to enter into a covenant with his Son, in which forgiveneſs of ſin is promiſed; and it was mercy to ſet forth his Son, in his eternal purpoſes and decrees; and to ſend him forth in the fulneſs of time, to ſhed his blood for the remiſſion of ſins; it was the mercy of God to us, that provided a lamb for a burnt-offering, and then accepted of the ſacrifice and ſatisfaction of his Son, in our room and ſtead, and forgave all our ſins, for his ſake; and whatever the pardon of our ſins coſt God and Chriſt, it is all free-grace and mercy to us: it is owing not to the abſolute mercy of God, or to the mercy of God as an abſolute God, but to the mercy of our God; our God in Chriſt, our covenant God and Father, whoſe bowels earned towards us, and whoſe pity is that of a tender parent: whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us; the word ανατολη, here uſed, and is tranſlated the day-ſpring, is the ſame which the Septuagint uſe, in Jer. xxiii. 5. Zech. iii. 8. and vi. 12. where the Meſſiah is ſpoken of, under the name of the branch: and undoubtedly the Meſſiah Jeſus, is intended here, who is the man, that branch, that has grown up out of his place; not from below, but from above; and who is the phoſphorus, or bringer of light, that bright and morning ſtar, that ſun of righteouſneſs, who has light in himſelf, and communicates light to others; even light natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; and with his rays and beams of light, life, and love, refreſhes, exhilarates, and warms, the hearts of his people: and by the viſit he has made in our horizon, is meant his aſſumption of human nature; which, like a friendly viſit, proceeded from pure love to the children of God; and was a drawing near unto them, for it was a taking on him their nature, in which he repreſented their perſons; and was done through much difficulty and great condeſcenſion, ſince he was in the form of God, and thought it no robbery to be equal with him; and his ſtay on earth in this nature, was but for a little while; ſo that on all accounts, it may be truly called a viſit: and which, as the remiſſion of ſin is wholly owing to the tender mercy of our God, who put him upon it, called him to it, ſent him forth made of a woman, and in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, to obtain eternal redemption, in which mercy and truth met together: the end and deſign of this viſit, are ſignified in the next verſe; for the following words belong to the day ſpring from on high, and not to John the prophet of the higheſt.

Ver. 79. To give light to them that ſit in darkneſs, &c.] God's elect among the Jews, who were not only in a ſtate of unregeneracy, which is a ſtate of darkneſs, ignorance, and unbelief; but in the darkneſs of the legal diſpenſation, and at this time under more than ordinary darkneſs and ignorance; having loſt the knowledge of the righteouſneſs of God, and of the ſpirituality of his law, the true ſenſe of the ſcriptures, and right notions of the Meſſiah; being led by blind guides, the Scribes and Phariſees: and, were as it were alſo, in the ſhadow of death; in a ſtate ſeemingly irrecoverable, when Chriſt, the great light aroſe, and ſhone upon them; and communicated ſpiritual light, life, and heat unto them; ſee Iſa. ix. 2. compared with Matt. iv. 13—16. though Chriſt is alſo a light, to lighten his choſen ones among the Gentiles, Luke ii. 32. but the Jews ſeem chiefly to be intended here: to guide our feet into the way of peace; which we knew not: not that he came to teach us how to make our peace with God, but to make peace for us, by the blood of his croſs; and ſo by his Spirit and word, lead us into the true way of enjoying ſpiritual peace here, and eternal peace hereafter.

Ver. 80. And the child grew, and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, &c.] That is, John, the ſon of Zacharias and Eliſabeth, grew in ſtature of body, and increaſed in wiſdom and knowledge, and fortitude in his ſoul: and was in the deſerts; or deſert, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read; not in the wilderneſs of Judæa, where he came preaching, but either of Ziph or Maon, which were near to Hebron; ſee 1 Sam. xxiii. 14, 24, 25. Joſh. xv. 54, 55. he was not brought up in the ſchools of the prophets, nor in the academies of the Jews, or at the feet of any of their Rabbins and doctors; that it might appear he was not taught and ſent of men, but of God: nor did he dwell in any of the cities, or larger towns, but in deſerts; partly that he might be fitted for that gravity and auſterity of life, he was to appear in; and that it might be clear he had no knowledge of, nor correſpondence with Jeſus, whoſe fore-runner he was, and of whom he was to bear teſtimony, till ſuch time he did it; and in this ſolitude he remained, till the day of his ſhewing unto Iſrael; either till the time came that he was to appear before, and be examined by the Sanhedrim, that judged of perſons fitneſs and qualifications for the prieſthood, in order to be admitted to it; which ſhould have been when he was thirty years of age, but that he was deſigned for other ſervice; or rather therefore till he appeared in his prophetic office, and ſhewed himſelf to the people of Iſrael; to whom he came preaching the doctrine of repentance and remiſſion of ſins, adminiſtring the ordinance of baptiſm, giving notice of the near approach of the Meſſiah, and pointing him out unto the people.

CHAP. II.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs in thoſe days, &c.] When John the Baptiſt was born, and Chriſt was conceived, and his mother pregnant with him, and the time of his birth drew on. The Ethiopic verſion reads, in that day; as if it was the ſame day in which John was circumciſed, and Zacharias delivered the above ſong of praiſe: that there went out a decree from Cæſar Auguſtus; ſecond Emperor of Rome; the name Cæſar was common to all the Emperors, as Pharaoh to the Egyptians, and afterwards Ptolemy. His name Auguſtus, was not his original ſurname, but Thurinus; and was given him, after he became Cæſar, to expreſs his grandeur, majeſty, and reverence; and that by the advice of Munatius Plancus, when others would have had him called Romulus, as if he was the founder of the city of Rome[a]: by him a decree was made and publiſhed, that all the world ſhould be taxed; or regiſtered, or enrolled; for this was not levying a tax, or impoſing tribute upon them, but a taking an account of the names of perſons, and of their eſtates; and which might be, in order to lay a tax upon them, as afterwards was: for the payment of a tax, there was no need of the appearance of women and children; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, that the names of the whole habitable world might be deſcribed, or written down; ſuch an enrollment had been determined on by Auguſtus, when at Tarracon in Spain, twenty ſeven years before; but he was diverted from it by ſome diſturbances in the empire, ſo that it was deferred to this time, in which there was a remarkable interpoſition of divine providence; for had this enrollment been made then, in all likelihood it had not been done now, and Joſeph and Mary would not have had occaſion to have come to Bethlehem: but ſo it muſt be; and thus were things ordered by an infinite, and all-wiſe providence to effect it: nor did this enrollment reach to all the parts of the known world, but only to the Roman empire; which, becauſe it was ſo very large as it was, and in the boaſting language of the Romans was ſo called, as Ptolomy Evergetes[b] calls his kingdom, κοσμος, the world. Though ſome think only the land of Judæa is meant, which is called the earth, in Luke xxi. 26. and all the world, in Acts xi. 28. but the other ſenſe ſeems more agreeable; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, that all the people of his empire might be enrolled; and and the Perſic verſion, that they ſhould enroll all the ſubjects of his kingdom; and is juſtified by the uſe of the phraſe for the Roman empire, in ſeveral paſſages of ſcripture, Rom. i. 8. and x. 18. Rev. iii. 10. and xiii. 3. Now at the time of this enrollment, and under this auguſt emperor, and when the whole world was in a profound peace, was the Meſſiah born, the king of kings, and the only potentate; the Shiloh, the peaceable and proſperous, the prince of peace, and Lord of life and glory; and that, in order to redeem men from that worſe ſubjection and bondage they were in to ſin, ſatan, the law, and death, than they were to the Roman Emperor. The Jews ſay [b], the ſon of David ſhall not come, until the kingdom (of Edom, or Rome, as ſome copies read, in others it is eraſed) ſhall be extended over all Iſrael, nine months, according to Mic. v. 3. The Gloſs on it is, that is, all the world, in which the Iſraelites are ſcattered.

Ver. 2. And this taxing was firſt made, &c.] Or this was the firſt enrollment, or taxing in the Jewiſh nation; for there was another afterwards, when Judas the Galilean aroſe, and drew many after him, Acts v. 38. When Cyrenius was governour of Syria; or of Cyrenius governour of Syria; that is, it was the firſt that he was concerned in; who not now, but afterwards, was governour of Syria; and becauſe he had been ſo before Luke wrote this hiſtory, and this being a title of honour, and what might diſtinguiſh him from others of that name, it is given him; for as Tertullian ſays [c], Sentius Saturninus was now governour of Syria, when Cyrenius was ſent into Judea, to make this regiſter, or taxing; and which is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from that, which was made during his being governour of Syria, when Archelaus was baniſhed from Judea, ten or eleven years after Herod's death; which Joſephus [d] gives an account of, and Luke refers to, in Acts v. 38. Moreover, the words will bear to be rendered thus, and this tax, or enrollment, was made before Cyrenius was governour of Syria; πρωτη, being uſed for προτερα, as in John i. 15, 30. This Cyrenius, is the ſame whom the Romans call Quirinius, and Quirinus: a governour of Syria had great power in Judea, to which it was annexed, when Cyrenius was governour there. It is reported of R. Gamaliel, that he went to take a licence, מהגמון בסוריא, from a governour of Syria [e]; i. e. to intercalate the year: and Syria was in many things like to the land of Judea, particularly as to tithes, and the keeping of the ſeventh year [f].

Ver. 3. And all went to be taxed, &c.] Throughout Judea, Galilee, and Syria; men, women, and children: every one into his own city; where he was born, and had any eſtate, and to which he belonged.

Ver. 4. And Joſeph alſo went up from Galilee, &c.] Where he now lived, and worked at the trade of a carpenter; having for ſome reaſons, and by one providence or another, removed hither from his native place: out of the city of Nazareth; which was in Galilee, where he and Mary lived; and where he had eſpouſed her, and ſhe had conceived of the Holy Ghoſt: into Judea; which lay higher than Galilee, and therefore he is ſaid to go up to it: unto the city of David; not what was built by him, but where he was born and lived; ſee 1 Sam. xvii. 12. which is called Bethlehem; the place, where according to Mic. v. 2. the Meſſiah was to be born, and was born; and which ſignifies the houſe of bread; a very fit place for Chriſt, the bread which came down from heaven, and gives life to the world, to appear firſt in. This place was, as a Jewiſh chronologer ſays [g], a parſa and half, or ſix miles from Jeruſalem; though another of their writers, an hiſtorian and traveller ſays [h], it was two parſa's, or eight miles; but Juſtin Martyr [i] ſays, it was but thirty-five furlongs diſtant from it, which is not five miles: hither Joſeph came from Galilee, becauſe he was of the houſe and lineage of David; he was of his family, and lineally deſcended from him, though he was ſo poor and mean; and this is the reaſon of his coming to Bethlehem, David's city.

Ver. 5. To be taxed with Mary his eſpouſed wife, &c.] Whom alſo he had married, though he had not known her in a carnal way: ſhe came along with him to be taxed and enrolled alſo, becauſe ſhe was of the ſame family of David, and belonged to the ſame city: being great with child; very near her time, and yet, though in ſuch circumſtances, was obliged by this edict, to come to Bethlehem; and the providence in it was, that ſhe might lie-in there, and ſo the prophecy in Mic. v. 2. have its accompliſhment: this was an inſtance, and an example, of obedience to civil magiſtrates.

Ver. 6. And ſo it was, that while they were there, &c.] At Bethlehem, waiting to be called and enrolled in their turn: the days were accompliſhed that ſhe ſhould be delivered; her reckoning was up, the nine months of her going with child were ended, and her full time to bring forth was come.

Ver. 7. And ſhe brought forth her firſt-born ſon, &c.] At Bethlehem, as was predicted; and the Jews themſelves own, that the Meſſiah is already born, and born at Bethlehem. They have a tradition, that an Arabian ſhould ſay to a Jew [k], "Lo! the king Meſſiah is born; he ſaid to him, what is his name? Menachem: he aſked him, what is his father's name? he replied to him, Hezekiah: he ſaid unto him, from whence is he? he anſwered, from the palace of the king of Bethlehem." Which is elſewhere [l] reported, with ſome little variation; the Arabian ſaid to the Jew, "the redeemer of the Jews is born; he ſaid unto him, what's his name? he replied, Menachem is his name: and what's his father's name? he anſwered, Hezekiah: he ſaid unto him, and where do they dwell? he replied, in Birath Arba, in Bethlehem." And the Jewiſh chronologer affirms [m], that "Jeſus the Nazarene, was born at Bethlehem Judah, a parſa and a half from Jeruſalem." And even the author of the blaſphemous book of the life of Chriſt owns [n], that "Bethlehem Judah, was the place of his nativity." Jeſus is called Mary's firſt-born, becauſe ſhe had none before him; though ſhe might not have any after him; for the firſt that opened the matrix, was called the firſt-born, though none followed after, and was holy to the Lord, Exod. xiii. 2. Chriſt, as to his human nature, was Mary's firſt-born; and as to his divine nature, God's firſt-born: and wrapped him in ſwaddling clothes; which ſhews, that he was in all things made like unto us, ſin only excepted. This is one of the firſt things done to a new-born infant, after that it is waſhed, and its navel cut; ſee Ezek. xvi. 4. and which Mary did herſelf, having neither midwife nor nurſe with her; from whence it has been concluded, that the birth of Jeſus was eaſy, and that ſhe brought him forth without pain, and not in that ſorrow women uſually do: and laid him in a manger. The Perſic verſion ſerves for a comment; ſhe put him into the middle of the manger, in the place in which they gave food to beaſts; becauſe in the place whither they came, they had no cradle: this ſhows the meanneſs of our Lord's birth, and into what a low eſtate he came; and that now, as afterwards, though Lord of all, yet had not where to lay his head in a proper place; and expreſſes his amazing grace, in that he was rich, yet for our ſakes became poor: and the reaſon of his being here laid was, becauſe there was no room for them in the inn. It ſeems that Joſeph had no houſe of his own to go into, nor any relation and friend to receive him; and it may be, both his own father and Mary's father, were dead, and therefore were obliged to put up at an inn; and in this there was no room for them, becauſe of the multitude that were come thither to be enrolled: and this ſhows their poverty and meanneſs, and the little account that was made of them; for had they been rich, and made any conſiderable figure, they would have been regarded, and room made for them; eſpecially ſince Mary was in the circumſtances ſhe was; and it was brutiſh in them to turn them into a ſtable, when ſuch was her caſe.

[n] Toldos Jeſu, p. 7.

Ver. 8. And there were in the ſame country ſhepherds, &c.] For Bethlehem was a place of paſture: near to Ephrata, the ſame with Bethlehem, were the fields of the wood, Pſal. cxxxii. 6. and the tower of Edar, or the tower of the flock, Gen. xxxv. 21. Mic. iv. 8. and here David kept his father's ſheep, 1 Sam. xvii. 15. ſo that we need not wonder to hear of ſhepherds here, abiding in the field, watching over their flock by night: from whence it appears, that Chriſt was born in the night; and the [o] Jews ſay, that the future redemption ſhall be in the night; and Jerom ſays [p], it is a tradition of the Jews, that Chriſt will come in the middle of the night, as was the paſſover in Egypt: it is not likely that he was born, as is commonly received, at the latter end of December, in the depth of winter; ſince at this time, ſhepherds were out in the fields, where they lodged all night, watching their flocks: they were diligent men, that looked well to their flocks, and watched them by night, as well as by day, to preſerve them from beaſts of prey; they were, as it is in the Greek text, keeping the watches of the night over their flock. The night was divided into four watches, the even, midnight, cock-crowing, and morning; and theſe kept them, as the Arabic verſion adds, alternately: ſome kept the flock one watch, and ſome another, while the reſt ſlept in the tent, or tower, that was built in the fields for that purpoſe. There were two ſorts of cattle with the Jews; there was one ſort which they called, מדבריות, the cattle of the wilderneſs, that lay in the fields; and another ſort which they called, בייתות, the cattle of the houſe, that were brought up at home: concerning both which, they have this rule [q]; "they don't water nor ſlay the cattle "of the wilderneſs, but they water and ſlay the "cattle of the houſe: theſe are the cattle of the "houſe, that lie in the city; the cattle of the wilderneſs, are they that lie in the paſtures." On which, one of their commentators [r] obſerves, theſe "lie in the paſtures, which are in the villages, all "the days of cold and heat, and don't go into the "cities, until the rains deſcend." The firſt rain is in the month Marcheſvan, which anſwers to the latter part of our October, and the former part of November; and of this ſort, ſeem to be the flocks thoſe ſhepherds were keeping by night, the time not being yet come, of their being brought into the city: from whence it appears, that Chriſt muſt be born before the middle of October, ſince the firſt rain was not yet come: concerning this, the Gemara [s] is more large; "the Rabbins teach, that "theſe are they of the wilderneſs, or fields, and "theſe are they of the houſe; they of the field, "are they that go out on the paſſover, and feed "in the paſtures, and come in at the firſt rain; "and theſe are they of the houſe, all that go out "and feed without the border, and come and lie "within the border (fixed for a ſabbath-day's journey): Rabbi ſays, thoſe, and thoſe are of the "houſe; but theſe are they that are of the field, "all they that go out and feed in the paſtures, and "don't come in to remain, neither in the days of "the ſun, nor in the days of the rains." To the ſhepherds, the firſt notice of Chriſt's birth was given; not to the princes and chief-prieſts, and learned men at Jeruſalem, but to weak, mean, and illiterate men; whom God is pleaſed to chuſe and call, and reveal his ſecrets to; when he hides them from the wiſe and prudent, to their confuſion, and the glory of his grace: and this was a preſage of what the kingdom of Chriſt would be, and by, and to whom, the Goſpel would be preached.

Ver. 9. And lo, the angel of the Lord, &c.] It may be Gabriel, who had brought the tidings of the conception of the Meſſiah to the virgin, and now the birth of him to the ſhepherds: came upon them; on a ſudden, unexpectedly, at once, and ſtood by them, as ſome verſions read; or rather, ſtood over them, over their heads, juſt above them; ſo that he was eaſily and perfectly ſeen by them: and the glory of the Lord ſhone round about them; or a very glorious and extraordinary light, ſhone with ſurprizing luſtre and brightneſs, all around them; by which light, they could diſcern the illuſtrious form of the angel that was over them: and they were ſore afraid; at the ſight of ſuch a perſonage, and at ſuch unuſual light and glory about them: they were not uſed to ſuch appearances, and were awed with the majeſty of God, of which theſe were ſymbols, and were conſcious to themſelves of their own ſinfulneſs and frailty.

Ver. 10. And the angel ſaid unto them, fear not, &c.] For he was not a meſſenger of bad, but of good tidings: for behold, I bring you good tidings; tidings, that were both wonderful and amazing, and therefore a behold, is prefixed to them, as well as to excite to attention; and which were good news, and glad tidings, for ſuch the birth of Chriſt of a virgin is; in which the good-will, and amazing love of God to man, are diſplayed, and the promiſes and prophecies relating to him fulfilled; and the work of man's ſalvation, his peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, &c. about to be accompliſhed, and ſo matter of great joy: not carnal, but ſpiritual; not feigned, but real; not temporary, but laſting; even ſuch as cannot be taken away, nor intermeddled with; and not ſmall, but great, even joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: which ſhall be to all people; not to every individual of mankind; not to Herod and his courtiers, who were troubled at it; nor to the greater part of the Jewiſh nation, who when he came to them, received him not, but rejected him as the Meſſiah; particularly not to the chief-prieſts,

Scribes and Phariſees, who, when they ſaw him, ſaid, this is the heir, let's kill him, and ſeize on the inheritance; but to all that were waiting for him, and were looking for redemption in Iſrael; to all ſenſible ſinners who rejoice at his birth, and in his ſalvation; ſee Iſ. ix. 3, 6. to all the choſen people of God, whether Jews or Gentiles, whom God has taken to be his covenant-people, and has given to his Son, as ſuch, to redeem and ſave; to theſe the incarnation of Chriſt, with all the benefits reſulting from it, is the cauſe of great joy, when they are made a willing people in the day of Chriſt's power.

Ver. 11. For unto you is born this day, &c.] Day is here put for a natural day, conſiſting both of night and day; for it was night when Chriſt was born, and the angels brought the tidings of it to the ſhepherds. The particular day, and it may be, month and year, in which Chriſt was born, cannot be certainly known; but this we may be ſure of, it was in the fulneſs of time, and at the exact ſeaſon fixed upon between God and Chriſt in the council and covenant of peace; and that he was born, not unto, or for the good of angels; for the good angels ſtand in no need of his incarnation, ſufferings, and death, having never fell; and as for the evil angels, a Saviour was never deſigned and provided for them; nor did Chriſt take on him their nature, nor ſuffer in their ſtead: wherefore, the angel does not ſay, unto us, but unto you, unto you men; for he means not merely, and only the ſhepherds, or the Jews only, but the Gentiles alſo; all the children, all the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, all elect men; for their ſakes, and on their account, and for their good, he aſſumed human nature; ſee Iſ. ix. 6. Heb. ii. 14, 16. in the city of David; that is, Bethlehem, as in ver. 4. where the Meſſiah was to be born, as being, according to the fleſh, of the ſeed of David, his Son and offspring; as he is, according to his divine nature, his Lord and root. The characters of this new-born child follow, and which prove the tidings of his birth to be good, and matter of joy: a Saviour; whom God had provided and appointed from all eternity; and had been long promiſed, and much expected as ſuch in time, even from the beginning of the world; and is a great one, being God as well as man, and ſo able to work out a great ſalvation for great ſinners, which he has done; and he is as willing to ſave as he is able; and is a complete Saviour, and an only, and an everlaſting one: hence, his name is called Jeſus, becauſe he ſaves from ſin, from ſatan, from the law, from the world, from death, and hell, and wrath, to come, and from every enemy. Which is Chriſt the Lord; the Meſſiah ſpoken of by the prophets; the anointed of the Lord, with the Holy Ghoſt, without meaſure, to be a prophet, prieſt, and king in his church; and who is the true Jehovah, the Lord our righteouſneſs, the Lord of all creatures, the Lord of angels, good and bad, the Lord of all men, as Creator, the prince of the kings of the earth, the lord of lords, and king of kings; and who is particularly the Lord of ſaints by his father's gift, his own purchaſe, the eſpouſal of them to himſelf, and by the power of his grace upon them: and the birth of ſuch a perſon muſt needs be joyful, and is to be accounted good news, and glad tidings.

Ver. 12. And this ſhall be a ſign unto you, &c.] When they ſhould come to Bethlehem, and to the inn where Joſeph and Mary were: ye ſhall find the babe wrapped in ſwadling clothes, lying in a manger; for tho' there might be many other children in the inn, yet none elſe in ſwadling clothes, at leaſt lying in a manger: this ſign would diſtinguiſh the new-born Saviour from all others; had not the angel given them this direction, they would never have thought to have looked for, and found him in ſuch a place: and moreover, it might have been a ſtumbling to them, and an objection with them againſt his being Chriſt, the Lord, had they not been told before-hand where he was; but by this means this objection was prevented, and this ſtumbling-block was removed out of the way, and they were prepared to ſee him, embrace, and believe in him, in this mean condition.

Ver. 13. And ſuddenly there was with the angel, &c.] That brought the tidings of Chriſt's birth to the ſhepherds: a multitude of the heavenly hoſt; who being cauſed to fly ſwiftly, were at once with him, by his ſide, and about him; and which was a further confirmation of the truth of his meſſage to them: theſe were angels who are called an hoſt, or army, the militia of heaven, the miniſters of God, that wait upon him, and do his pleaſure; and are ſent forth to miniſter to his people, and encamp about them, preſerve, and defend them; ſee Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. Theſe are ſtiled an heavenly hoſt, becauſe they dwell in heaven; and to diſtinguiſh them from hoſts and armies on earth; and ſaid to be a multitude, for the angels are innumerable; there are thouſands, ten thouſands, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand of them: it may be rendered the multitude, and may intend the whole company of angels, who were all of them together to ſing the praiſes of God, and glorify him at the birth of the incarnate Saviour, as well as to adore him; ſince it is ſaid, when he bringeth in the firſt-begotten into the world, he ſaith, and let all the angels of God worſhip him, Heb. i. 6. and theſe were praiſing God; on account of the birth of Chriſt, and the redemption that was to be obtained by him, for elect men; which ſhows their friendly diſpoſition to them, and how much they rejoice at their ſpiritual and eternal welfare; ſee Luke xv. 10. And thus, as at the laying of the foundation of the earth, theſe morning ſtars ſang together, and all theſe ſons of God ſhouted for joy, Job xxxviii. 7. they did the ſame when the foundation of man's ſalvation was laid in the incarnation of the Son of God; and ſaying, as follows.

Ver. 14. Glory to God in the higheſt, &c.] Which, with the following words, are not to be conſidered as a wiſh, that ſo it might be, but as an affirmation, that ſo it was; for the glory of God is great in the ſalvation, peace, and reconciliation of his people by Jeſus Chriſt, even the glory of all his perfections; of his wiſdom and prudence in forming ſuch a ſcheme; of his love, grace and mercy, the glory of which is his main view, and is hereby anſwered; and of his holineſs, which is hereby honoured; and of his juſtice, which is fully ſatisfied; and of his power in the accompliſhment of it; and of his truth and faithfulneſs in fulfilling his covenant and oath, and all the promiſes and prophecies relating to it. Great glory from hence ariſes to God, who is in the higheſt heavens, and is given him by angels and ſaints that dwell there, and that in the higheſt ſtrains; and by ſaints on earth too in their meaſure, and as they are able: the ground and foundation of which is what follows: and on earth peace: by which is meant, not external peace, tho' at this time there was peace on earth all the world over; nor internal peace, as diſtinguiſhed from that eternal peace which the ſaints enjoy in heaven; nor even peace made by Chriſt; for this, as yet, was not done on earth, but was to be made by the blood of his croſs: rather Chriſt himſelf is here intended, who is called the man, the peace, Mic. v. 5. and our peace, Eph. ii. 14. and was now on earth, being juſt born, in order to make peace with God, and reconciliation for the ſins of the people: and he is ſo called, becauſe he is the author of peace between Jew and Gentile, which were at enmity with each other; by abrogating the ceremonial law, the cauſe of that enmity; by ſending the Goſpel to them, and converting ſome of each; and by granting the like privileges to them both; ſee Eph. ii. 14—20. and becauſe he is the author of peace between God and elect ſinners, who, thro' the fall, are at enmity againſt God, and enemies in their minds by wicked works unto him; nor can they make their peace with God; they know not the way of it; nor are they diſpoſed to it; nor can they approach to God to treat with him about terms of peace; nor can they do thoſe things that will make their peace with God, as ſatisfying his juſtice, and fulfilling his law: Chriſt only is their peace-maker; he only is fit for it, being God and man in one perſon, and ſo a day's man that can lay his hands on both, and has a concern in each, in things pertaining to God, and to make reconciliation for the ſins of the people: he only is able to do it, and he has done it by the blood of his croſs; and a very excellent peace it is he has made: it is made upon the moſt honourable terms, to the ſatisfaction of juſtice, and the magnifying of the law of God; and is therefore a laſting one, and attended with many bleſſings, ſuch as freedom of acceſs to God, and a right to all the privileges of his houſe; and the news of it are glad tidings of good things: and thoſe angels that firſt brought the tidings of it, may be truly called, as ſome of the angels are by the Jews [i], מלאכי שלום, angels of peace. Moreover, Chriſt may be ſaid to be peace, becauſe he is the donor of all true ſolid peace and real proſperity, both external, which his people have in the world, and with each other; and internal, which they have in their own breaſts, thro' believing in him, and attending on his ordinances; and eternal, which they ſhall have for ever with him in the world to come. And now Chriſt being the peace on earth, is owing to good-will towards men; that is, to the free favour, good-will, and pleaſure of God towards choſen men in Chriſt Jeſus: that Chriſt was on earth as the peace-maker, or giver, was owing to God's good-will; not to angels, for good angels needed him not as ſuch; and the angels that ſinned were not ſpared, nor was a Saviour provided for them; but to men, and not to all men; for tho' all men ſhare in the providential goodneſs of God, yet not in his ſpecial good-will, free grace, and favour: but to elect men, to whom a child was born, and a ſon given, even the prince of peace: it was from God's good-will to theſe perſons, whom he loved with an everlaſting love in Chriſt, laid up goodneſs for them in him, bleſſed them with all ſpiritual bleſſings in him, and made a covenant with him for them; that he provided and appointed his Son to be the ſaviour and peace-maker; that he ſent him into this world to be the propitiation for ſin; and that he ſpared him not, but delivered him up into the hands of men, juſtice, and death, in order to make peace for them. The Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſome copies, as the Alexandrian, and Beza's moſt ancient one, read, peace on earth to men of good-will; and which muſt be underſtood, not of men that have a good-will of themſelves, for there are no ſuch men: no man has a will to that which is good, till God works in him both to will, and to do of his good pleaſure; wherefore peace, reconciliation, and ſalvation, are not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that ſheweth mercy: but of ſuch who are the objects of God's good-will, and pleaſure, whom he loves, becauſe he will love, and has mercy and compaſſion on them, and is gracious to them, becauſe he will be ſo; and therefore chuſes, redeems, and regenerates them of his own will, and becauſe it ſeems good in his ſight. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, good hope to men; as there is a foundation laid in Chriſt the peace, of a good hope of reconciliation, righteouſneſs, pardon, life, and ſalvation for ſinful men. The Arabic verſion renders it, chearfulneſs in men; as there is a great deal of reaſon for it, on account of the birth of the ſaviour and peace-maker, the ſalvation that comes by him to men, and the glory brought thereby to God.

Ver. 15. And it came to paſs as the angels, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads in the ſingular number, the angel: were gone away from them into heaven, from whence they came, and which was the place of their abode and reſidence; and therefore they are called the angels of heaven, where they always behold the face of God, hearken to the voice of his commandment, and go and come at his orders; and theſe having finiſhed their embaſſy, delivered their meſſage to the ſhepherds, and done all the work they came about, departed from them: and, as the Ethiopic verſion adds, and aſcended up into heaven; and as ſoon as they were gone, immediately, the ſhepherds ſaid one to another, let us now go even to Bethlehem, the place where the angel ſaid the Saviour was born, and ſee this thing which is come to paſs, which the Lord hath made known to us: from whence it appears, that it was not from diffidence of the matter, as queſtioning the truth of what the angel ſaid, that they moved one another to go to Bethlehem; for they firmly believed the thing was come to paſs, which the angel had told them of, and that what he ſaid was from the Lord; nor did they act any criminal part, or indulge a vain curioſity, in going to Bethlehem to ſee what was done; for it ſeems to be the will of God that they ſhould go, and for which they had a direction from the angel, and a ſign given them by which they might know the new-born Saviour from any other infant, ver. 12. and which would alſo be a further confirmation of their faith, and by which they would be qualified not only as ear, but as eye-witneſſes of the truth of this fact, to report it with greater certainty.

Ver. 16. And they came with haſte, &c.] In the night, leaving their flocks, to ſee their incarnate Lord, as Zaccheus haſtened down from the tree to receive the Saviour. The wonderfulneſs of the viſion, the importance of the thing related, the eagerneſs of their ſpirits to ſee the thing that was told them, put them on making quick diſpatch, and haſtening to the city with all ſpeed: and found Mary and Joſeph; as they had been directed by the angel, in the city of Bethlehem, in an inn there, and in a ſtable in the inn: and the babe lying in a manger; where Mary had put it as ſoon as born, and had wrapped it in ſwadling clothes; becauſe there was no room in the inn, and as the angel had told them they ſhould find it, ver. 12.

[i] Zohar in Exod. fol. 8, 1. & 98. 4.

Ver. 17. And when they had ſeen it, &c.] Or him, as the Arabic verſion reads, the child Jeſus, or them, Joſeph, Mary, and the child; or this whole affair, as had been related to them: they made known abroad; not only in the inn, and among all the people there, but throughout the city of Bethlehem, the ſaying which was told them concerning this child: both what the angel had told them concerning his birth, and what he was, and where he lay; and what Mary had told them concerning the notice ſhe had from an angel of the conception of him, and the manner of it, and of what he ſhould be; and likewiſe what Joſeph had told them, how an angel had appeared to him, and had acquainted him, after the conception of him, that it was of the Holy Ghoſt; and was bid to call his name Jeſus; as Mary alſo was, becauſe he was to be the Saviour of his people from their ſins: for, no doubt, but they had a converſation with Joſeph and Mary about him; and as they could not fail of relating to them, what they had ſeen and heard that night in the fields, it is reaſonable to ſuppoſe, that Joſeph and Mary would give them ſome account of the above things; which all make up the ſaying, or report, they ſpread abroad: the Perſic verſion reads, what they had heard of the angel; but there is no reaſon to confine it to that.

Ver. 18. And all they that heard it, &c.] What the ſhepherds related of what they had heard from the angel, and from Joſeph and Mary, and what they had ſeen themſelves; wondered at thoſe things that were told them by the ſhepherds: for tho' they expected the Meſſiah, and that he would be born at Bethlehem, yet they did not imagine that he would be born of ſuch mean parents, and appear in ſuch mean circumſtances, and in ſo contemptible a place; and that ſhepherds, and not the princes of Iſrael, ſhould have the firſt notice of it; and yet the account which theſe ſhepherds, who were plain-hearted men, and could never be thought to invent ſuch a ſtory, and ſpread it, and impoſe on men, without any intereſt in it, was very ſurprizing; ſo that they knew not what to ſay to it, neither to deny, nor believe it: accordingly, the Perſic verſion renders the whole thus, and whoever heard, wondring, ſtuck at it; heſitated about it, and yet aſtoniſhed at the particulars of it; juſt as Chriſt's hearers were in Luke iv. 22. who wondred at his miniſtry, and the manner of it, and yet objected the meanneſs of his parentage and education.

Ver. 19. But Mary kept all theſe things, &c.] Which the ſhepherds had related to her: and pondered them in her heart; or compared them in her mind, with what had been ſaid to herſelf by the angel, and alſo by her huſband, as well as what was ſaid by Elizabeth at the time ſhe made her a viſit; but ſhe ſaid nothing of them to others, leſt ſhe ſhould be thought an enthuſiaſt, or a vain boaſter; and therefore left things, till time ſhould make a diſcovery of them in a proper way, and in the beſt ſeaſon.

Ver. 20. And the ſhepherds returned, &c.] From Bethlehem, to the fields, and to their flock there: glorifying and praiſing God for all the things that they had heard; from Joſeph and Mary: and ſeen; as the babe lying in the manger; as it was told unto them; by the angel: they glorified God on account of the birth of the Meſſiah; and praiſed him, wondring at his grace, and the high honour put upon them, that they ſhould be acquainted with it; and that there was ſuch an exact agreement between the things they had ſeen, and the angel's account of them.

Ver. 21. And when eight days were accompliſhed for the circumciſing of the child, &c.] According to the original inſtitution of circumciſion, Gen. xvii. 12. and which was ſtrictly obſerved by religious perſons, as by the parents of our Lord here, and by thoſe of John the Baptiſt, ch. i. 59. Hence the Apoſtle Paul reckons this among his privileges, that he could have boaſted of as well as other Jews, Phil. iii. 5. ſee the note there. But it may be aſked, why was Chriſt circumciſed, ſince he had no impurity of nature, which circumciſion ſuppoſed; nor needed any circumciſion of the heart, which that was a ſymbol of? To which it may be replied, though he needed it not himſelf, it was the duty of his parents to do it, ſince all the male ſeed of Abraham were obliged to it, and that law, or ordinance was now in force; and beſides, it was neceſſary that he might appear in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh, who was to bear, and atone for the ſins of his people; as alſo, that it might be manifeſt that he aſſumed true and real fleſh, and was a partaker of the ſame fleſh and blood with us; and that he was a Son of Abraham, and of his ſeed, as it was promiſed he ſhould; and that he was made under the law, and came to fulfil it, and was obliged to it, as every one that is circumciſed is; as well as to ſhew a regard to all divine, poſitive inſtitutions that are in being, and to ſet an example, that we ſhould tread in his ſteps; and likewiſe to cut off all excuſe from the Jews, that they might not have this to ſay, that he was an uncircumciſed perſon, and ſo not a Son of Abraham, nor the Meſſiah. His name was called Jeſus, which was ſo named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb, Luke i. 31. It appears from hence, and from the inſtance of John the Baptiſt, ch. i. 57. that at circumciſion it was uſual to give names to children; ſee the note there. The Jews obſerve [u], that "ſix perſons were called by their names before they were born; and theſe are Iſaac, Iſhmael, Moſes, Solomon, Joſiah, and the king Meſſiah:" the latter they prove from Pſ. lxxii. 17. which they render, before the ſun his name was Yinnon, or the Son, that is, the Son of God.

Ver. 22. And when the days of her purification, &c.] Of the virgin Mary, the mother of our Lord; tho' moſt copies read, of their purification: and ſo read the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, including both Mary and Jeſus: and now, though Mary was not polluted by the conception, bearing, and bringing forth of Jeſus, that holy thing born of her; yet inaſmuch as ſhe was in the account of the law unclean; and tho' Jeſus had no impurity in his nature, yet ſeeing he was made ſin for his people, both came under this law of purification, which was for the ſake of the ſon or daughter, as well as for the mother; though our reading, and which is, according to the Complutenſian edition, beſt agrees with the Hebrew phraſe, ימי טהרה, the days of her purifying, or purification, in Lev. xii. 4, 6. according to the law of Moſes, in Lev. xii. were accompliſhed; which for a ſon were forty days: the ſeven firſt days of her lying-in ſhe was unclean; and then ſhe continued three and thirty days in the blood of her purifying, which made forty; ſee Lev. xii. 2, 4. but tho' the time of her purifying was upon the fortieth day, yet it was not till the day following that ſhe came to the temple with her offering: for ſo runs the Jewiſh canon [w]; "a lying-in " woman does not bring her offering on the fortieth " day for a male, nor on the eightieth day for a " female, but after her ſun is ſet; and ſhe brings " her offering on the morrow, which is the forty-" firſt for a male, and the eighty-firſt for a female: " and this is the day of which it is ſaid, Lev. xii. 6. " and when the days of her purifying are fulfilled for " a ſon, or for a daughter, ſhe ſhall bring, &c." And this was the time when they, Joſeph and Mary, brought him, the child Jeſus, to Jeruſalem, and to the temple there, to preſent him to the Lord, to the prieſt his repreſentative; and which was done in the eaſtern gate, called the gate of Nicanor: for here [x], " they made women, ſuſpected of adul-" tery, to drink, and purified lying-in women, and " cleanſed the lepers." And here Mary appeared with her firſt-born ſon, the true Meſſiah; and this was the firſt time of his coming into his temple, as was foretold, Mal. iii. 1.

Ver. 23. As it is written in the law of the Lord, &c] In Exod. xiii. 2. Numb. iii. 13. every male that openeth the womb, ſhall be called holy to the Lord; that is, devoted and conſecrated to him, and ſo to be redeemed. The reaſon of this law was this, when God ſmote all the firſt-born of Egypt, he ſaved the firſt-born of Iſrael; and therefore claimed a right to them, and obliged their parents, excepting the Levites, to redeem them at the price of five ſhekels, which were about twelve ſhillings and ſix-pence of our money, and which was given to the Levites; ſee Exod. xiii. 12,13,14,15. Numb. iii. 12, 13, 46, 47. and xviii. 15, 16. And this law our Lord came under as Mary's firſt-born, and as one holy to the Lord; and ſuch a ſum of money was now paid for his redemption, who was the great Redeemer of his people; he being made under the law, and in all things ſubject to it, that he might redeem them from the bondage, curſe, and condemnation of it. Now as the tribe of Levi was excepted from this law, it is a clear caſe, that Mary, tho' allied to Elizabeth, was not of the tribe of Levi, otherwiſe her firſt-born would not have been ſubject to it [y]. "An Iſraelite that comes from " a prieſteſs, or from a ſhe Levite, is free, (i. e. " from the redemption of the firſt-born;) for the " thing does not depend on the father, but on the " mother, as it is ſaid, that openeth the womb in " Iſrael."

Ver. 24. And to offer a ſacrifice, &c.] That is, when the time of purification came, the parents of our Lord brought him from Bethlehem to Jeruſalem, to preſent him in the temple to the Lord as his, and to redeem him; and not only ſo, but to offer the ſacrifice required of child-bed women: according to that which is ſaid in the law of the Lord, Lev. xii. 8. a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons: if the perſon was able, ſhe was to bring a lamb of the firſt year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle dove, for a ſin-offering; but in caſe of poverty, then the above ſufficed, and one of them was for a burnt-offering, and the other for a ſin-offering; which ſhows not only that the virgin offered for herſelf a ſin-offering, being ceremonially unclean, but alſo her mean eſtate and poverty, in that ſhe offered the offering of the poorer ſort; ſee Lev. xii. 6, 8.

Ver. 25. And behold there was a man in Jeruſalem, &c.] Not in Nazareth, or Bethlehem, but in Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation; one that lived there, was an inhabitant of that city, and a perſon of fame and note. So Joſeph ben Jochanan, is called [z], איש ירושלם, a man of Jeruſalem, an inhabitant of that place: whoſe name was Simeon; not Simeon, הצדיק, the juſt, the laſt of the men of the great ſynagogue, of whom the Jews often make mention [a]; tho' this Simeon bears the ſame character, yet could not be he; becauſe he was not only an high-prieſt, which, if this man had been, would doubtleſs have been mentioned; but alſo lived ſome years before this time. Many have thought, that this was Rabban Simeon, the ſon of Hillell, who was preſident of the Sanhedrim forty years; and in which office this his ſon ſucceeded him; and which Simeon was the father of Gamaliel, the maſter of the Apoſtle Paul, of whom the Jewiſh chronologer thus writes [b]: " Rabban Simeon, the " ſon of Hillell the old, received from his father, " and was appointed preſident after his father; but " the time of the beginning of his preſidentſhip I " do not find in any authors:" and a little after, " Rabban Simeon, the ſon of Hillell, is the firſt that " is called by the name of Rabban." There are ſome things which ſeem to agree with, and favour this thought; for certain it is, that Chriſt was born in his time, whilſt he was living: ſo the above writer ſays [c], after he had obſerved, that " Jeſus " of Nazareth was born at Bethlehem-Judah, a " parſa and a half from Jeruſalem, in the year " 3761 of the creation, and in the 42d year of " Cæſar Auguſtus; that, according to this compu-" tation, his birth was in the days of Rabban Si- " meon, the ſon of Hillell." And it is worthy of notice alſo, what another genealogical writer of theirs ſays [d], that " Rabban Simeon, the ſon of old " Hillell, the prince, or preſident of Iſrael, as his " father was, as it is in Sabbat, c. 1. is not men- " tioned in the Miſna." Which looks as if he was not a favourer of the traditions of the elders, nor in great eſteem with the Jews, that they aſcribe none of them to him; yea, it may be obſerved, that he is entirely left out in the account of the ſucceſſion of the fathers of tradition, in the tract called Pirke Abot; which is ſomewhat extraordinary, when he was the ſon of one, and the father of another of ſo much note among them. One would be tempted to think, that ſuch a neglect of him, ſhould ſpring from ill will to him, on account of his profeſſing Jeſus of Nazareth to be the Meſſiah. But there are other things which don't ſo well accord, as that this Simeon lived ſome years after the birth of Chriſt; whereas our Simeon ſeems to be in the decline of life, and juſt ready to depart: as alſo, that he was prince of Iſrael, or preſident of the Sanhedrim, after this; which it is not likely he ſhould, after ſuch a confeſſion of Jeſus being the Meſſiah: likewiſe, ſeeing that his ſon Gamaliel was brought up a Phariſee: to which laſt Dr. Lightfoot replies, that holy fathers have ſometimes wicked children; and that it was thirty years from Simeon's acknowledging Chriſt, to Gamaliel's education of Paul, or little leſs; and ſo much time might wear out the notice of his father's action, if he had taken any notice of it, eſpecially his father dying ſhortly after he had made ſo glorious a confeſſion; but his laſt obſervation is an objection to him. Upon the whole, it muſt be left uncertain and undetermined who he was: and the ſame man was juſt and devout; he was a holy, good man in his life and converſation; he was one that feared God, and avoided evil; he was righteous before men, and devout towards towards God, and exerciſed a conſcience void of offence to both: waiting for the conſolation of Iſrael; that is, the Meſſiah; for this was one of his names with the Jews, who ſometimes ſtile him, מנחם, the comforter: for ſo they report [e], that "there "are ſome that ſay his name is Menachen the com"forter; as it is ſaid, becauſe the comforter that "ſhould relieve my ſoul is far from me, Lam. i. 16." And again [f], it is obſerved, that "the name of the "Meſſiah is Menachem, the comforter; and Mena"chem, by Gematry, or numerically, is the ſame with "Tzemach, the branch, Zech. iii. 8." And ſo they often call him by the name of the conſolation: אראה בנחמה, which Dr. Lightfoot renders, ſo let me ſee the conſolation, but ſhould be rendered, may I never ſee the conſolation, was a common form of ſwearing among them; and uſed much by R. Simeon ben Shetach, who lived before the times of Chriſt, of which there are ſeveral inſtances [g]: "ſays R. "Juda ben Tabai, אראה בנחמה, may I never ſee "the conſolation, if I have not ſlain a falſe witneſs. "——Says R. Simeon ben Shetach, to him, may I "never ſee the conſolation, if thou haſt not ſhed in"nocent blood." The Gloſs [h] on it is, "it is a "light word, (the form) of an oath, in ſhort lan"guage; as if it was ſaid, may I never ſee the "conſolations of Zion, if he has not done this." Again [i], "ſays R. Simeon ben Shetach, אראה בנחמה, "may I never ſee the conſolation, if I did not ſee "one run after his companion, into a deſolate "place, &c." Now they might eaſily collect this name of the Meſſiah, from ſeveral paſſages of ſcripture, which ſpeak of God's comforting his people, at the time of redemption by the Meſſiah; and particularly, from its being part of his work and office, to comfort them that mourn, for which he was anointed by the Spirit of the Lord, Iſa. lxi. 1, 2, 3. And when he is called here, the conſolation of Iſrael, it is not to be underſtood of the whole Jewiſh nation; for he was ſo far from being a comfort to them, as ſuch, that through their corruption and wickedneſs, he came not to ſend peace, but a ſword; and to ſet at variance, the neareſt relations and friends among themſelves; and through their unbelief and rejection of him, wrath came upon them to the uttermoſt: but of the true and ſpiritual Iſrael of God, whom he has choſen, redeemed, and calls, whether of Jews or Gentiles; his own ſpecial and peculiar people, the heirs of promiſe; and who are often mourners in Zion, and being frequently diſconſolate on account of ſin, the temptations of ſatan, and the hidings of God's face, ſtand in need of conſolation from him: and in him, there is what is always matter and ground of conſolation; as in his perſon, he being the mighty God, and ſo able to ſave to the uttermoſt; in his blood, which ſpeaks peace and pardon, and cleanſes from all ſin; in his righteouſneſs, which is pure and perfect, and juſtifies from all iniquity; in his ſacrifice, which expiates all the tranſgreſſions of his people; in his fulneſs, which is ſufficient to ſupply all their wants; and in his power, by which he is able to keep them from falling, and to preſent them faultleſs before God. And he does often comfort them by his Spirit, by his word, and ordinances, by the promiſes of his Goſpel, by the diſcoveries of pardoning grace, through his blood, and by his gracious preſence: nor are his conſolations ſmall, but large and abundant, ſtrong, ſolid, and everlaſting. Now for the Meſſiah under this character, Simeon was waiting, hoping in a little time to ſee him; ſince he knew, both by the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, particularly by Daniel's weeks, and by divine revelation, that the time was juſt at hand for his coming: and the Holy Ghoſt was upon him; not in a common and ordinary way, as he is upon all that are called by grace, as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification; and as he was upon many others, who at this time were waiting and looking for the Meſſiah, as well as he; but in an extraordinary way, as a ſpirit of prophecy: for though prophecy had ceaſed among the Jews, from the times of Malachi, yet upon the conception and birth of Chriſt, it now returned; as to Zacharias, Elizabeth, and the virgin Mary, and here to Simeon, as is clear from what follows.

Ver. 26. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] Not in a dream, as the wiſe men were warned, nor by an angel, as Joſeph, nor by a voice from heaven, which the Jews call Bath Kol, but by the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, enlightning his underſtanding, and impreſſing on his mind: that he ſhould not ſee death; an Hebraiſm, ſee it in Pſal. lxxxix. 48. the ſame with the phraſe, to taſte death, elſewhere uſed; and the ſenſe is, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, that he ſhould not die; or as the Perſic verſion, that his death ſhould not be; as yet: he ſhould live ſome time longer; nor ſhould that meſſenger be ſent to remove him, though a man in years, out of time into eternity, before he had ſeen the Lords Chriſt; with his bodily eyes: for he had ſeen him with an eye of faith already, and in the promiſe, as Abraham had; and in the types and ſacrifices of the law, as the reſt of believers under the Old Teſtament. The Meſſiah is called the Lords Chriſt, referring to Pſal. ii. 2. becauſe he was anointed by Jehovah, the Father, and with Jehovah, the Spirit; with the Holy Ghoſt, the oil of gladneſs, to be prophet, prieſt, and king, in the Lord's houſe. So the Meſſiah is by the Targumiſt called, the Meſſiah of Jehovah, or Jehovah's Meſſiah; that is as here, the Lord's Chriſt: thus in the Targum on Iſa. iv. 2. 'tis ſaid, "in that "time, משיחא דיי, Jehovah's Meſſiah, ſhall be for "joy and for glory." And on Iſa. xxviii. 5. the paraphraſe is, "at that time, משיחא דיי, the "Meſſiah of the Lord of hoſts, ſhall be for a crown "of joy, and for a diadem of praiſe to the reſt of "his people." Compare theſe paraphraſes with what is ſaid of Chriſt, in ver. 32. The glory of thy people Iſrael; Simeon's language, exactly agrees with the Targumiſt. The Perſic verſion adds, and with this hope he paſſed his time, or age, and became very old and decrepit.

Ver. 27. And he came by the ſpirit into the temple, &c.] By the ſame Spirit of God, that revealed the above to him. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, the Spirit brought him into the temple; but Simeon was not brought thither, as this verſion ſeems to ſuggeſt, in ſuch manner as Ezekiel was brought by the Spirit to Jeruſalem, Ezek. viii. 3. or as Chriſt was brought by ſatan to the holy city, and ſet upon the pinacle of the temple; but the Spirit of God, who knows and ſearches all things, even the deep things of God, and could teſtify beforehand the ſufferings of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow, knew the exact time when Jeſus would be brought into the temple; and ſuggeſted to Simeon, and moved upon him, and influenced and directed him, to go thither at that very time. Perſic verſion renders the whole verſe thus, when he heard that they brought Chriſt into the temple, that they might fulfil the law, Simeon went in; which verſion ſpoils the glory of the text, making Simeon's coming into the temple, to be upon a report heard, and not the motion of the Holy Ghoſt. And when the parents brought in the child Jeſus; when Joſeph and Mary brought Chriſt into the temple. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, his parents. Mary was his real parent, Joſeph is called ſo, as he is his father, in ver. 48. becauſe he was ſuppoſed, and generally thought to be ſo, Luke iii. 23. To do for him after the cuſtom of the law; as was uſed to be done in ſuch a caſe, according to the appointment of the law: or as the Syriac verſion renders it, as is commanded in the law; namely, to preſent him to the Lord, and to pay the redemption money for him.

Ver. 28. Then took he him up in his arms, &c.] That ſame Spirit that had revealed unto him that he ſhould not die, till he ſaw the Meſſiah with his bodily eyes; and who by a ſecret impulſe had moved him to go to the temple juſt at this time, made known unto him, that that child which Joſeph and Mary then brought into the temple, to preſent to the Lord, was the Meſſiah; wherefore, in a rapture of joy, he took him out of their arms into his own, embracing him with all affection and reſpect imaginable: though ſome think he was a prieſt, and it being his office to preſent the firſt-born to the Lord, he took him in his arms, and did it; but the former account ſeems more agreeable: and bleſſed God; praiſed him, and gave glory to him, for his great goodneſs, in ſending the promiſed Meſſiah, and long wiſhed for Saviour; for his grace and favour, in indulging him with a ſight of him; and for his truth and faithfulneſs, in making good his promiſe to him: and ſaid; as follows,

Ver. 29. Lord, now letteſt thou thy ſervant, &c.] He acknowledges him as his Lord, and to have a deſpotic power over him, with reſpect to life and death; and himſelf as his ſervant, which he was, both by creation and grace: and though it expreſſes humiliation, and a ſenſe of diſtance and unworthineſs, yet to be a ſervant of the moſt high God, is a very high and honourable character: what he requeſts of the Lord is, that he might depart in peace; ſignifying his hearty deſire to die, and with what chearfulneſs he ſhould meet death, having obtained all that he could wiſh for and deſire, in ſeeing and embracing the Saviour: he expreſſes his death, by a departure out of the world, as in John xiii. 1. Phil. i. 21. agreeable to the way of ſpeaking of it among the Jews, ſee the notes there; and by a word, which ſignifies a looſing of bonds; death being a diſſolving the bond of union, between ſoul and body, and a deliverance, as from priſon and bondage; the body being as it were, a priſon to the ſoul, in the preſent ſtate of things: and he alſo intimates, that whereas, though he had the ſtrongeſt aſſurances of the Meſſiah's coming, and of his coming before his death, by the revelation of the Holy Ghoſt, and ſo moſt firmly believed it, without fluctuation, and heſitation of mind; yet as hope deferred, makes the heart ſick, he was anxious and reſtleſs in his deſire, till it was accompliſhed; but now being come, he could take his leave of the world, and his diſmiſſion into eternity, with the greateſt calmneſs and tranquillity of mind, having nothing to diſturb him, nor more to deſire: he adds, according to thy word; for he ſeems to have underſtood by the revelation made to him, that as he ſhould not die before he ſaw the Meſſiah, ſo when he had ſeen him, that he ſhould immediately, or in a very ſhort time after, be removed by death; and which he greatly deſired, and in which he ſinned not, becauſe his requeſt was according to the word of God: whereas often, deſires of death are not only without the word of God, and due reſignation to his will, and any regard to his glory, but to be rid of ſome trouble, or gratify ſome luſt, as pride, revenge, &c.

Ver. 30. For mine eyes have ſeen thy ſalvation, &c.] The Meſſiah, who is often ſo called; ſee Gen. xlix. 18. Iſa. xlix. 6. and lii. 10. He goes by the name of ſalvation, becauſe the ſalvation of God's elect is put into his hands, and he has undertook it; and becauſe he is the author of it, he has fulfilled his engagements, and has accompliſhed what he promiſed to do; and becauſe ſalvation is in him, it is to be had in him; and in him, the true Iſrael of God are ſaved, with an everlaſting ſalvation: and he is called God's ſalvation, becauſe he is a Saviour of his chuſing, calling, and conſtituting; whom he promiſed under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation, and in the fulneſs of time ſent; and who now appeared in human nature, and whom good old Simeon now ſaw, with his bodily eyes; a ſight, which many kings and prophets had deſired, but were not favoured with; and alſo with the eyes of his underſtanding, with the ſpiritual eye of faith, as his Saviour and Redeemer; for without this, the former would not have been ſufficient, to have given ſuch peace and tranquillity of mind, in a departure out of this world: for many ſaw him in the days of his fleſh, who never ſaw his glory, as the Son of God, and Saviour of ſinners; but ſuch a ſight thoſe have, who have their underſtandings enlightened, and Chriſt, as God's ſalvation, ſet before them: they ſee him in the glory of his perſon, the fulneſs of his grace, the ſuitableneſs and excellency of his righteouſneſs, the efficacy of his blood, and the perfection of his ſacrifice; and as an able, willing, compleat, and only Saviour: and ſuch a ſight of him, puts them out of conceit with themſelves, and their own works of righteouſneſs, as ſaviours; makes the creature, and all it has and does, look mean and empty; fills the ſoul with love to Chriſt, and a high eſteem of him, and with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory; it transforms a ſoul, and makes it like to Chriſt; gives it inexpreſſible pleaſure and ſatisfaction; and makes it deſirous, as it did this good man, to depart and be with Chriſt, which is far better, than to live, in this (in ſome ſenſe) ſtate of abſence from him.

Ver. 31. Which thou haſt prepared, &c.] In his eternal purpoſes and decrees, having choſen and fore-ordained Chriſt, and appointed him to be his ſalvation, to the ends of the earth; in his counſel and covenant of grace, wherein it was agreed, determined, and concluded on, that he ſhould be the Saviour of his people; and in the promiſes and prophecies of the Old Teſtament, and in all the types, ſhadows, and ſacrifices, of that diſpenſation; in which he was exhibited, and held forth as the Saviour to the ſaints and believers of thoſe times; and now had ſent him in human nature, to work out that ſalvation, he had choſen and called him to, and he had undertook: before the face of all people; meaning not the congregation of Iſrael, that looked for redemption in Jeruſalem, and who were now together with Simeon and Anna, when the child Jeſus was preſented in the temple; nor the body of the Jewiſh nation only, to whom he was made manifeſt, had they not wilfully ſhut their eyes, by John's miniſtry and baptiſm; and more ſo, by the miracles, wonders, and ſigns, which God did by Chriſt, in the midſt of them; but both Jews and Gentiles: for as he was provided and ſent as a Saviour, and a great one, he was to be lifted up on the croſs, as the ſerpent was lifted up by Moſes, in the wilderneſs, to draw all his elect to him, of every nation; and to be ſet up as an enſign to the people, in the public miniſtry of the word; to be the object of faith and hope, to look unto, for life and ſalvation.

Ver. 32. A light to lighten the Gentiles, &c.] Or for the revelation of the Gentiles; to reveal the love, grace, and mercy of God, an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and the way of life and ſalvation to them. Reference ſeems to be had to Iſa. xlii. 6. and xlix. 6. Light, is one of the names of the Meſſiah in the Old Teſtament, as in Pſal. xliii. 3. Dan. ii. 22. which paſſages are by the Jews [k] themſelves, interpreted of Chriſt; and is a name often uſed of him, in the New Teſtament: it is true of him as God, he is light itſelf, and in him is no darkneſs at all; and as the creator of mankind, he is that light which lightens every man, with the light of nature and reaſon; and as the Meſſiah, he is come a light into the world: the light of the Goſpel, in the clear ſhine of it, is from him; the light of grace in his people, who were in darkneſs itſelf, he is the author and donor of; as he is alſo of the light of glory and happineſs, in the world to come: and particularly, the Gentiles enjoy this benefit of light by him; who were, and as this ſuppoſes they were, in darkneſs, as they had been ſome hundreds of years before the Meſſiah's coming: they were in the dark about the being and perfections of God, about the unity of God, and the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, and about God in Chriſt; about his worſhip, the rule and nature of it; and the manner of atonement, and reconciliation for ſin; the perſon, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice of Chriſt; the Spirit of God, and his operations on the ſouls of men; the ſcriptures of truth, and both law and Goſpel; the reſurrection of the dead, and a future ſtate: now, though Chriſt, in his perſonal miniſtry, was ſent only to the Jews, yet after his reſurrection, he gave his diſciples a commiſſion to go into all the world, to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles, in order to turn them from darkneſs to light; and hereby, multitudes were called out of darkneſs, into marvellous light: and this Simeon had knowledge of, and a few more beſides him; otherwiſe, the generality of the Jewiſh nation were of opinion, that when the Meſſiah came, the nations of the world would receive no benefit by him, no light, nor comfort, nor peace, or proſperity; but all the reverſe would befal them, as darkneſs, calamity, and miſery: and ſo they expreſs themſelves in a certain place [l]; "the Iſraelites look, or "wait for redemption; for the day of the Lord "ſhall be light to them; but the nations, why do "they wait for him? for he ſhall be to them darkneſs, and not light." But the contrary, Simeon, under divine inſpiration, declares, and bleſſed be God it has proved true: he adds, and the glory of thy people Iſrael; which is true of Iſrael in a literal ſenſe, inaſmuch as the Meſſiah was born of the Jews, and among them; and was firſt ſent and came to them, and lived and dwelled with them; taught in their ſtreets, and wrought his miracles in the midſt of them; though this was an aggravation of their ingratitude and unbelief, in rejecting him: the Goſpel was firſt preached to them, even after the commiſſion was enlarged to carry it among the Gentiles; and many of them were converted, and the firſt Goſpel church was planted among them; and an additional glory was made to them, by the calling of the Gentiles, and joining them to them, through the miniſtry of the apoſtles, who were all Jews; who went forth from Zion, and carried the word of the Lord from Jeruſalem, to the ſeveral parts of the world: and this alſo is more eſpecially true, of the myſtical, or ſpiritual Iſrael of God, whoſe glory Chriſt is; being made of God unto them, wiſdom, righteouſneſs, ſanctification, and redemption; they having ſuch an head, huſband, ſaviour, and redeemer, as he; and they being clothed with his righteouſneſs, and waſhed in his blood, ſanctified by his grace, and made meet for eternal glory; to which they have a right and claim, through the grace of God, and merits of Chriſt; and therefore glory not in themſelves, but in Chriſt, who is their all in all.

Ver. 33. And Joſeph and his mother, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads, and his father and mother. The Ethiopic verſion retains both his name and his relation, and reads, and Joſeph his father, and his mother; but all the ancient copies read, only Joſeph, without the addition, his father; and ſo the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions: they marvelled at thoſe things which were ſpoken of him; the child Jeſus: not that thoſe things which Simeon ſaid, were new and ſtrange to them; for they not only knew that the ſame things were predicted of the Meſſiah, but they had heard and known, and believed the ſame concerning this child; but they wondered, that a ſtranger to them and the child, coming into the temple at this inſtant, ſhould have ſuch a revelation made to him, and be able to ſay the things he did. Moreover, there is no need to confine this paſſage to what were ſaid by Simeon, but it may reach to, and include every thing, that as yet had been ſpoken concerning Jeſus; either before, or ſince his birth; as by the angel to them both, to the one before his conception, to the other after; and by Zacharias and Elizabeth, and by the angel to the ſhepherds, who had reported the ſame to Joſeph and Mary, and now by Simeon; and they were aſtoniſhed, at the exact agreement there was between them.

Ver. 34. And Simeon bleſſed them, &c.] Pronounced them bleſſed perſons, on account of their relation to Chriſt, as man; and more eſpecially, becauſe of their intereſt in him, as the Saviour and Redeemer of them; and wiſhed them all happineſs and proſperity inward and outward, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, confining it to Joſeph and Mary: and Simeon bleſſed them both; though this bleſſing of his may take in alſo the young child Jeſus; whom he might pronounce bleſſed, as Elizabeth before had done, ch. i. 42. ſince he was the promiſed ſeed, in whom all nations of the earth ſhould be bleſſed; and to whom, and to whoſe undertakings, intereſt, and kingdom, he might wiſh all proſperous ſucceſs. The Perſic verſion reads, old Simeon: and ſaid unto Mary his mother: he directed his diſcourſe to her, becauſe ſhe was the only real parent of this child he had in his arms, and had ſaid ſo much of, and was about to ſay more; and becauſe part of what follows, perſonally concerned her: behold, this child is ſet for the fall and riſing again of many in Iſrael. The word child, is not in the original text; where 'tis only, this is ſet, &c. Simeon ſeeming to be, as it were, at a loſs, what name to call this great and illuſtrious perſon by, and therefore 'tis left to be ſupplied. The Perſic verſion ſupplies it thus, behold, this holy one is ſet, &c. The ſenſe is, that this child, who is the ſtone of Iſrael, is ſet, or put, or lies, both as a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence, for many of the Jews to ſtumble at, and fall and periſh; and as a precious corner and foundation ſtone, for the erection and elevation of others of them, to the higheſt honour and dignity, that ſhall believe on him: for theſe words are not to be underſtood of the ſame, but of different perſons among the Jews; though it may be true, that ſome, who firſt ſtumbled at him, might be raiſed up again, and brought to believe in him; and that many, who for his ſake, and the Goſpel, fell under great diſgrace and reproach, and into great afflictions and perſecutions, were raiſed up to the enjoyment of great comfort and honour: but they are not the ſame perſons that Chriſt is ſet for the fall of, that he is ſet for the riſing of; nor the ſame he is ſet for the riſing of, he is ſet for the fall of; the one deſigns the elect of God among the Jews, who became true believers in Chriſt; and the other, the reprobate, who died in impenitence and unbelief: the words, ſo far as they concern Chriſt, being ſet for the fall of many of the Jews, have a manifeſt reference to Iſa. viii. 14, 15. where the Meſſiah is ſpoken of as a ſtone, and as a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence; at which, many of the Jews ſhould ſtumble, and fall, and be broken. And ſo the text is applied in the Talmud[m], where it is ſaid, that "the ſon of David will not come, until both houſes of the fathers, fail out of Iſrael; and they are theſe, the head of the captivity in Babylon, and the prince in the land of Iſrael; as it is ſaid, Iſa. viii. 14. And he ſhall be for a ſanctuary, but for a ſtone of ſtumbling, and rock of offence, to both the houſes of Iſrael." Accordingly the Jews did ſtumble at his birth, parentage, and education; at the meanneſs of his perſon, and the obſcurity of his kingdom; at the company he kept, and the audience that attended him; at his doctrine and miracles, and at his ſufferings and death: they fell, through their unbelief and rejection of him, as the Meſſiah; and not only from their outward privileges, civil, and religious; the Goſpel was taken away from them, the national covenant between God and them, was broken, and they ceaſed to be his people, their temple and city were deſtroyed, and wrath came upon their nation to the uttermoſt; but they alſo fell into everlaſting perdition, dying in their ſins, through their diſbelief of Jeſus as the Meſſiah: this indeed was not the caſe of all of them; there was a ſeed, a remnant, according to the election of grace; but it was the caſe of many, and of the far greater part: but then this ſame ſtone that was laid in Zion, was alſo ſet for the riſing again of many of them; meaning not for their reſurrection in a literal ſenſe, though this is a truth: for as all God's elect, whether Jews or Gentiles, roſe in him repreſentatively, when he roſe from the dead; ſo many of them roſe perſonally after his reſurrection, and all of them at the laſt day, will riſe again, in conſequence of their union to him; and indeed, all the wicked will be raiſed again, by virtue of his power: but not this, but their reſurrection in a ſpiritual ſenſe, is here meant; and it ſuppoſes the perſons raiſed, to have been in a low eſtate, as all God's elect by nature are: they are in a hopeleſs and helpleſs condition in themſelves; they are in a ſtate of thraldom and bondage, to ſin, ſatan, and the law; they are filled with diſeaſes, nauſeous, mortal, and incurable; they are cloathed in rags, and are beggars on the dunghill; they are deep in debt, and have nothing to pay; and are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins. Chriſt is now provided and appointed, for the raiſing them up out of their low eſtate, and he does do it; he is the reſurrection and the life unto them; he raiſes from the death of ſin, to a life of grace and holineſs from him, to a life of faith on him, and communion with him here, and to eternal life hereafter: he pays all their debts, clothes them with his righteouſneſs, heals all their diſeaſes, redeems them from the ſlavery of ſin, the captivity of ſatan, and the bondage and curſe of the law; brings them into a hopeful and comfortable condition; raiſes them to the poſſeſſion of a large eſtate, an eternal inheritance; and gives them both a right unto it, and meetneſs for it; ſets them among princes, makes them kings, places them on a throne of glory, yea, on his own throne, and ſets a crown of righteouſneſs, life, and glory, on their heads; and will cauſe them to reign with him, firſt on earth, for a thouſand years, and then in heaven to all eternity: and this was to be the caſe of many in Iſrael, though not of all; for all did not obey the Goſpel, ſome did, three thouſand under one ſermon; and more will in the latter day, when all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved. This privilege of riſing again, in this ſenſe, by Chriſt, though it is here ſpoken of with reſpect to many of the Jews, yet not to the excluſion of the Gentiles; for this honour have all the ſaints, be they of what nation they will. Now when Chriſt is ſaid to be ſet for theſe different things, the meaning is; that he was fore-appointed, pre-ordained, and ſet forth in God's counſel, purpoſes, and decrees, as a ſtone at which ſome ſhould ſtumble, through their own wickedneſs and unbelief, and fall and periſh, and be eternally loſt; and as a foundation ſtone for others, to build their faith and hope upon, which ſhould be given them, and ſo riſe up to everlaſting life; and that he was ſet forth in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, as in that here referred to, for the ſame ends; and that he was now exhibited in human nature with the ſame views, and ſhould be held forth in the everlaſting Goſpel, for the like purpoſes; and which eventually is the ſavour of life unto life to ſome, and the ſavour of death unto death to others: to all this, a behold is prefixed, as expreſſing what is wonderful and ſurprizing, and not to be accounted for, but to be reſolved into the ſecret and ſovereign will of God: 'tis added, that he is alſo ſet for a ſign which ſhall be ſpoken againſt; referring to Iſa. viii. 18. Chriſt is the ſign of God's everlaſting love to his people, the great proof, evidence, and demonſtration of it; and in this reſpect, is ſpoken againſt by many: and he is ſet up in the Goſpel, as an enſign of the people to look at, and gather to, for comfort, peace, righteouſneſs, ſalvation, and eternal life; but is by many contradicted, oppoſed, and treated with contempt and abhorrence; ſo that he appears rather to be ſet as a mark and butt to ſhoot at: he was ſpoken againſt by the Scribes and Phariſees, and the greater part of the people of the Jews, and contradicted, as the Meſſiah, becauſe of his mean appearance among them; his proper deity was denied, his divine ſonſhip was gainſayed; he was contemned in all his offices, kingly, prieſtly, and prophetic; his works of mercy, both to the bodies and ſouls of men, his miracles, and the whole ſeries of his life and actions, were traduced as ſinful and criminal:

this was the contradiction of ſinners againſt himſelf, which he endured, Heb. xii. 3. and for which he was ſet and appointed; and ſtill the contradiction continues, and will, as long as the Goſpel is preached.

Ver. 35. Yea, a ſword ſhall pierce thro' thy own ſoul alſo, &c.] Meaning either the ſword, or ſpear of ſcandal, as the Arabic verſion renders it; ſo the calumny, and reproach of the tongues of men, is compared to a ſharp ſword, Pſ. lvii. 4. and ſuch the virgin might meet with on account of her conception in an unmarried ſtate, which might greatly wound her ſoul; or elſe the ſorrows ſhe met with, on account of her ſon: as he was a man of ſorrows, ſo was ſhe a woman of ſorrows, from his cradle to his croſs; and his ſorrows like ſo many darts, or javelins, rebounded from him to her, and pierced her ſoul through; as when Herod ſought his life, Matt. ii. 13, 14. when ſhe had loſt him for a whole day, Luke ii. 48. and when he was frequently expoſed to danger among the ſpiteful and malicious Jews; but never more than when ſhe ſtood at his croſs, and ſaw him in his agonies, extended on the tree, bleeding, gaſping, and dying, John xix. 25. Some think this refers to martyrdom, which ſhe was to ſuffer by the ſword, of which the ſcripture is ſilent. Epiphanius, an ancient writer, ſeems to hint at it[n]. That the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed; that is, all this offence was to be taken at Chriſt, and he to be ſpoken againſt; and all theſe afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions, he and his were to endure for this end; that the ſecret thoughts of men might be diſcovered, and they be known to be what they were, whether hypocrites, or good men, foes, or friends of Chriſt: ſo on the one hand, what were the Scribes and Phariſees, who talked of a Meſſiah, and pretended to righteouſneſs and holineſs, and yet when the Meſſiah came, rejected him; and ſo all ſuch who followed Chriſt with worldly views, and expected a temporal kingdom, but left him when they found it otherwiſe, and Judas, one of his diſciples; and, on the other hand, who were ſincere and hearty, as the reſt of his diſciples, Joſeph of Arimathea, and others, who abode by him, notwithſtanding the croſs; and the ſame uſe have all perſecutions, errors, and hereſies, the oppoſition and contradiction of men in every ſhape now, and the ſame end is anſwered; wicked men, and hypocrites, are known to be what they are; and good men are made manifeſt; and what each think of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, is diſcovered hereby; ſee 1 Cor. xi. 19.

Ver. 36. And there was one Anna, &c.] The name is the ſame with Hannah: ſo Hannah, the mother of Samuel, is by the Septuagint called Anna, in 1 Sam. i. 2, 5, 8, 9, 15, 19, 22, 25. and it ſignifies grace, or gracious; and as was her name, ſo was ſhe, a gracious woman; one that had the grace of God herſelf, and was a publiſher of the glad tidings of grace and redemption by Chriſt, to others; and ſhe was a propheteſs: for tho' prophecy had ceaſed among the Jews for ſome hundreds of years, it now revived upon the coming of the Meſſiah; and tho' inſtances of women-prophets were rare, yet ſome there were, both before, and after the coming of Chriſt; as Miriam, the ſiſter of Moſes and Aaron, Deborah, the wife of Lapidoth, and Huldah, the wife of Shallum; and this Anna, at the time of Chriſt's birth, and afterwards four daughters of Philip the Evangeliſt, who were virgins. This woman was the daughter of Phanuel; 'tis the ſame name with Penuel; and which, by the Septuagint, in 1 Chron. iv. 4. and viii. 25. is called Phanuel, as here. This man might be a perſon of ſome note, or he may be mentioned for the ſake of his name, which ſignifies the face of God, and is the name Jacob gave to a certain place where he had ſeen God face to face, Gen. xxxii. 30, 31. And now Phanuel's daughter both ſaw and gave the light of the knowledge of God, in the face of Jeſus Chriſt, and now beheld his face in the fleſh, who is God over all, bleſſed for ever. Of the tribe of Aſer; the ſame with Aſher; for ſo Aſher is called, as here, by the Septuagint, in Gen. xxx. 13. and xlix. 20. and elſewhere: and tho' this tribe was carried captive with the reſt of the ten tribes; yet there were ſome of the ten tribes that returned along with Judah and Benjamin, and were diſperſed among them. This tribe had its ſeat in Galilee; ſo that tho' the Jews denied that any prophet came from thence, yet it ſeems a propheteſs did. She was of a great age: the phraſe is the ſame with that in ch. i. 7. there rendered, ſtricken in years; ſee the note there. Her age will appear to be great, if it be obſerved, that ſhe was ſeven years a married woman, and fourſcore and four years a widow, which make ninety-one; and if ſhe was married at twelve years and a half, at which time the Jews[o] reckoned females marriageable, ſhe muſt be an hundred and three years old; and perhaps her age might be eight or ten years more: and had lived with her huſband ſeven years from her virginity: this is mentioned to obſerve her chaſtity, that ſhe was in her virginity, or a chaſte virgin, when ſhe became a wife; ſuch an one as the high-prieſt was obliged to have, Lev. xxi. 13. and that the tokens of her virginity, were brought, which the Jewiſh laws obliged to, Deut. xxii. 15, 17, 20. and that ſhe lived honeſtly, and honourably, with her huſband, during the term of her marriage-ſtate.

Ver. 37. And ſhe was a widow of about fourſcore and four years, &c.] Which is not the date of her whole age, as ſome have thought, but of her widowhood-ſtate, as diſtinct from her marriage-ſtate, and the time of her virginity. And this ſenſe all the verſions favour. Which departed not from the temple: that is, ſhe was conſtant in her devotion there, at the time of divine ſervice, whether by night or day; not that ſhe was in it, for ſhe had been out of it now; otherwiſe it could not, with propriety, be ſaid of her, that ſhe coming in that inſtant, as in the next verſe; but that ſhe always was there when there was any worſhip performed, in which women might be concerned, and which is pointed out in the next clauſe: but ſerved God with faſtings and prayers, night and day: ſhe attended to the uſual faſts of twice a week, and to ſuch as were enjoined the whole congregation, and to the ſeveral ſet times of prayer, and to every act of devotion, private or public, by night or day. In Exod. xxxviii. 8. we read of women that aſſembled at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: both the Targums of Onkelos and Ben Uzziel, render it, who came to pray; and the Septuagint verſion, that faſted: Anna did both.

Ver. 38. And ſhe coming in that inſtant, &c.] That the parents of Chriſt brought him into the temple; juſt as Simeon was embracing him in his arms, and bleſſing God for him, and ſaying the things concerning him he had done; and who alſo came at that juncture, as he did, under the impulſe, and by the direction of the Spirit of God; gave thanks likewiſe unto the Lord: praiſed him, as he had done, that he had ſent the promiſed, and long looked-for Meſſiah and Saviour; and that ſhe had lived to ſee his bleſſed face, and this happy day; and that ſhe ſhould be directed to come in at this inſtant, and be favoured with this ſingular mercy of ſeeing the new-born Saviour, and his honoured parents: and ſpake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Jeruſalem; this ſhe either did at this time; they in Jeruſalem that looked, and diligently waited for, and earneſtly deſired the Meſſiah, and ſpiritual redemption and ſalvation by him, being now aſſembled together in the temple; or afterwards, as ſhe had opportunity of converſing with them, when ſhe acquainted them with what ſhe had heard and ſeen. By the redemption they were looking for, is meant, the Redeemer; as by ſalvation, the Saviour, in ver. 30. Some verſions, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic read, the redemption of Jeruſalem; not literally, but ſpiritually underſtood, even the redemption of the church of Chriſt, which is often ſo called: and others, as the Perſic verſion, the redemption of Iſrael; that is, of ſpiritual Iſrael: ſome read in Iſrael; ſo one copy of Stephens's.

Ver. 39. And when they had performed all things, &c.] Relating to the purification of Mary, and the preſentation and redemption of her firſt-born, and the ſacrifices and ceremonies belonging thereunto: according to the law of the Lord; which that directed to, and enjoined: they returned into Galilee; not that they came from thence to Jeruſalem, but from Bethlehem, where Mary lay in, and her time for purification was now juſt expired: nor did they go now directly to Galilee; or, if they did, they ſoon came back again to Bethlehem, ſince here the wiſe men found them two years after; when, by a divine warning, they went into Egypt, where they remained till Herod's death, and after came into the land of Iſrael, into the parts of Galilee, and dwelt at Nazareth; for which reaſon it is here called their own city; to their own city Nazareth: Bethlehem was their native city, the place of their birth, at leaſt of their family; and Nazareth was the city of their habitation.

Ver. 40. And the child grew, &c.] In body, in ſtrength, and in ſtature; which ſhows that it was a true body Chriſt aſſumed, and like ours, which did not come to its maturity at once, but by degrees: and waxed ſtrong in ſpirit, or in his ſoul; for as he had a true body, he had alſo a reaſonable ſoul; the faculties of which were far from being weak, they were exceeding ſtrong, and appeared ſtronger and ſtronger every day; his underſtanding was clear, his judgment ſolid, and his memory ſtrong and retentive, his will, and the deſires of it, were to that which is good, and his affections cleaved unto it. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, was ſtrengthened in, or by the Holy Spirit; with the grace and gifts of it; but the former ſenſe is beſt. Filled with wiſdom; and knowledge as man; for this is to be underſtood, not of his eſſential wiſdom, as God, nor of thoſe treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, which were hid in him as mediator, to be diſpenſed to his church; but of his created and natural wiſdom, as man; in which he increaſed gradually, as his body grew, and the faculties of his ſoul opened under the influences of his Deity, and the power of his Spirit: and the grace of God was upon him; which deſigns not the fulneſs of grace that was in him, as mediator, for the ſupply of his people; but either that internal grace which was beſtowed on his human nature, even the various graces of the Spirit of God, and which flowed from the grace of union of the two natures in him; or rather the love and favour of God, which in various inſtances was in a very ſingular manner manifeſted to him.

Ver. 41. Now his parents went to Jeruſalem every year, &c.] Joſeph was obliged to go three times a year, as were all the males in Iſrael, at the feaſts of the paſſover, pentecoſt, and tabernacles, Deut. xvi. 16. The firſt of theſe is expreſſed here, at the feaſt of the paſſover; but the women were not obliged to go up: for ſo it is ſaid by the Jews[p], פסחן של נשים רשות, the paſſover of women is arbitrary, or in their own power; they might go up to the feaſt, or not, as they pleaſed. 'Tis indeed ſaid of Hillell, who was now alive, that he obliged the women to the firſt, but not to a ſecond paſſover: to which the Karaites object; the account they give, is as follows[q]; "truly the women were " obliged, by the ſchool of Hillell, to the offering " of the paſſover; but if they were hindered from " the firſt paſſover, the ſecond was in their power; " that is, the thing depended upon their will and " pleaſure, whether they would offer or no, which " may be juſtly wondred at; for why ſhould they " be obliged to the firſt, and not the ſecond? for " behold, as to the obligation of the paſſover, " there is no difference between the firſt paſſover, " and the ſecond. The ſum of the matter is, our " wiſe men, on whom be peace, have determined, " and ſay, that there is no obligation but to males, " who are arrived to maturity." So that this was a voluntary thing in Mary; which diſcovers her piety and religion, and her great regard to the ordinances and appointments of God.

Ver. 42. And when he was twelve years old, &c.] Not that he was now, בר מצוה, a ſon of the commandment[r], to uſe the Jewiſh phraſe; or now came under the yoke of the law; or was obliged to the duties of adult church memberſhip, as is aſſerted by ſome; nor particularly to go to Jeruſalem to make his appearance at the feaſt of the paſſover, or any other feaſt: for, according to the maxims of the Jews, perſons were not obliged to the duties of the law, or ſubject to the penalties of it in caſe of non-performance, until they were, a female, at the age of twelve years, and one day, and a male, at the age of thirteen years, and one day; but then they uſed to train up their children, and inure them to religious exerciſes before: as for inſtance, tho' they were not obliged to faſt on the day of atonement, until they were at the age before-mentioned; yet they uſed them to it two or three years before, as they were able to endure it: a ſon of nine, or ten years old they train him up by hours; they make him faſt ſo many hours; and one of eleven, or twelve years old, they make him faſt a whole day: but then this was not law, but cuſtom; and which they obſerved, that they might be uſed to the commandments[s], and be expert in them, and ready to perform them, when required. 'Tis ſaid[t], that "there was a good cuſtom in Jeruſalem to " make their little ſons and daughters faſt on a " faſt-day; the ſon of a year, till the very day he " is twelve years old, when he faſts the whole " day; and after that they carry him, and bring " him before every ancient man, that he may " bleſs him, and confirm him, and pray over him, " that he may be worthy in the law, and in good " works; and every one that is greater than he in " the

“ the city, he ſtands up from his place, and goes before him, and bows to him, to pray for him: and this is to learn him, that they are beautiful, and their works beautiful and acceptable to God; and they did not uſe to leave their little children behind them, but brought them to the ſynagues, כדי לזרים במצות, that they might be ready in the commandments.” That they might be inured to them, and expert in them, when they were under obligation to them; for they were not properly under the law, until they were arrived to the age above-mentioned; nor were they reckoned adult church-members till then, nor then neither, unleſs worthy perſons: for ſo it is ſaid[u], “ he that is worthy, at thirteen years of age, is called בן לכי, a ſon of the congregation of Iſrael;” that is, a member of the church. When therefore Joſeph and Mary took Jeſus along with them, at this age, when they went up to Jeruſalem after the cuſtom of the feaſt of the paſſover, it ſhows their religious regard to him; and may be an inſtruction to parents, to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, after their example.

Ver. 43. And when they had fulfilled the days, &c.] The ſeven days of the feaſt of unleavened bread, for ſo many days that feaſt was obſerved; and tho' it was not abſolutely neceſſary, and obligatory upon them to ſtay all that time at Jeruſalem, yet Mary and Joſeph ſeem ſo to have done, as did the more religious and devout perſons: as they returned; at the time when they were going from Jeruſalem home again: the child Jeſus tarried behind in Jeruſalem; being deſirous of hearing the diſcourſes of the doctors about the ſenſe of the ſcriptures, the meaning of the laws, and the traditions of the elders, and of converſing with them: and Joſeph, and his mother, knew not of it; of his intention to tarry longer, nor of his deſign in ſo doing: he did not aſk leave of them, ſince his ſtay was about an affair of his heavenly father's; and therefore this action of Chriſt is not to be drawn into an example, or precedent for children, to act without conſulting, or aſking leave of their parents. They had no notion at all of his ſtaying behind them, nor any ſuſpicion of it; nor did they miſs him for a conſiderable time; which might be owing to the large numbers that went in company together, ſo that they could not tell but that he was in the croud, tho' they did not ſee him; or to the men and women travelling in ſeparate companies, as is thought; ſo that Joſeph might think he was with Mary, and Mary might conclude he was with Joſeph, till they came to the end of their firſt day's journey, when they came together, and then miſſed him.

Ver. 44. But they ſuppoſing him to have been in the company, &c.] That travelled together into the ſame parts, having been, as they, at Jeruſalem to keep the feaſt: went a day's journey; either before they miſſed him; or if they miſſed him ſooner, yet they went on enquiring for him in the company, until they were come a day's journey before they thought, or, at leaſt, determined on going back to Jeruſalem. The bounds of a day's journey from Jeruſalem are ſaid to be[w] Elath on the ſouth, and Akrabba on the north; elſewhere[x] it is, Elath on the north, and Akrabba on the ſouth, Lud, or Lydda, on the weſt, and Jordan on the eaſt; wherefore, as Galilee lay north of Jeruſalem, the bound of this day's journey muſt be, according to the Miſna, Akrabba, and, according to the Talmud, Elath. Nazareth was three day's journey from Jeruſalem[y]: according to the Jewiſh writers[z], a day's journey was ten parſa's, or large miles, which were forty leſſer miles; and which, they ſay, is a middling man's walk on a middling day, as in the months of Tiſri, or Niſan, when days and nights were alike: and it was in the latter of thoſe months, on the twenty-ſecond day of it, that Joſeph and Mary ſet out on their journey; ſee Exod. xii. 18. but it can't be thought that women and children ſhould be able to travel ſo many miles a day, and therefore this day's journey, very likely, was ſhorter: and they ſought him among their kinsfolks and acquaintance; when they came to the end of their day's journey, where they took up their lodging for that night: and as the company was large, they doubtleſs lay at different houſes; wherefore they enquired in every houſe, where their relations and acquaintance lay, after their child Jeſus, where they might moſt reaſonably expect he would be: and ſo, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, when ſouls have loſt ſight of Chriſt, of whom ſhould they enquire concerning him? and where ſhould they expect to hear of him, but among their ſpiritual kindred and friends, and who alſo are related to Chriſt? ſee Cant. v. 9.

Ver. 45. And when they found him not, &c.] In the company that came from Jeruſalem with them, nor among any of their relations and friends, with whom they ſuppoſed he was: they turned back again to Jeruſalem; that is, the next morning, for it can hardly be thought they would ſet out that night, after they had travelled all day, without taking ſome repoſe: ſeeking him; at Jeruſalem, in the ſtreets and broad places of it; a figure of the church and ordinances, where ſouls look for, and enquire after their beloved, when they have loſt him, Cant. iii. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 46. And it came to paſs, that after three days, &c.] From their firſt ſetting out from Jeruſalem, when Jeſus tarried behind; or on the third day, which may be reckoned thus; the firſt day was ſpent in journeying, and the ſecond in coming back the ſame journey, and the third day they ſought all Jeruſalem for him, when they found him in the temple; his father's houſe, the houſe of God, a figure of a Goſpel-church, where the word and ordinances are duly adminiſtred, and where Chriſt is to be found. What part of the temple Chriſt was in is not eaſy to ſay; it was not in the holy of holies, for none but the high-prieſt went into that, and that only on the day of atonement; nor in the court of the prieſts, for he was not among them, but the doctors; nor in the court of the Iſraelites, where the common people worſhipped; it may be beſt judged of, by obſerving where their ſeveral conſiſtories, or courts of judicature were[a]; the grand Sanhedrim ſat in the ſanctuary, in the room Gazith; the leſſer Sanhedrim, which conſiſted of twenty-three perſons, and the bench of three; the one ſat in the gate of the court (of the Iſraelites); and the other in the gate of the mountain of the houſe (or court of the Gentiles): it ſeems moſt likely, that he was in the room Gazith, where the grand Sanhedrim ſat; for here was the largeſt number of doctors; and it was the more amazing to his parents to find him here; unleſs it ſhould be rather thought, that he was in the ſynagogue in the temple, for ſuch an one there [b] was there; where, after ſervice was over, he might be admitted to a converſation with the learned doctors that belonged to it: it follows, ſitting in the midſt of the doctors: the principal doctors in being at this time, were Hillell and Shammai, the one the preſident, and the other vice-preſident of the council; and Rabban Simeon, the ſon of Hillell, who ſucceeded him in his office; and R. Judah, and R. Joſhua, the ſons of Bethira; Jonathan ben Uzziel, the author of the Chaldee paraphraſe; and R. Jochanan ben Zaccai. The Sanhedrim ſat in a ſemi-circular form, like the half of a round corn-floor; ſo that they could ſee one another, and the prince, and the father of the court, could ſee them all; and before them ſat three rows of the diſciples of the wiſe men, or ſcholars; and in each row there were three and twenty men: the firſt row was next to the Sanhedrim, and the ſecond row below that, and the third row below that; and in every row they ſat according to their ſuperiority in wiſdom [c]: on a ſeat, in one of theſe rows, I think, Chriſt ſat among the ſcholars; and this may be called ſitting among the doctors, becauſe theſe ſeats were juſt before them, and were in a ſemi-circular form; at leaſt he might be here at firſt; when upon the queſtions he put, and the anſwers he made, he was taken particular notice of by the doctors, who might call him up, and place him between them; for this, in ſome caſes, was done to ſcholars. Thus, 'tis ſaid [d], "if one of the diſciples, or ſcholars, ſay, I have ſomething to ſay in favour of him, (one that is on his trial) they bring him up, and cauſe him to ſit in the midſt of them; and he does not go down from thence all the whole day." Both hearing them; their debates and deciſions about points in the law of Moſes; and aſking them queſtions; upon thoſe points. Had this been a Midraſh, or ſchool, there would be no difficulty of producing inſtances of putting queſtions to the doctors there; but there was no ſuch place in the temple, or ſynagogue, where teachers were interrogated by their hearers; for which reaſon I think the paſſages, produced by Dr. Lightfoot, are not ſo pertinent, ſince they refer to ſuch a place: it is very likely, ſince there were ſuch a number of ſcholars admitted to ſit before the Sanhedrim to hear their controverſies and determinations, and were allowed, in ſome caſes, to ſpeak; ſo they might be ſuffered to put queſtions, in order to gain knowledge.

[a] Miſn. Sanhedrin, c. 10. §. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Sanhedrin, 1. §. 3.

Ver. 47. And all that heard him were aſtoniſhed, &c.] All in the Sanhedrim, both the doctors, and their diſciples, were amazed, at his underſtanding; in the knowledge of the law, and of the ſcriptures: and his anſwers; which he returned to the queſtions the doctors put to him, which were made with ſo much wiſdom and judgment, that it was ſurprizing in one of his years.

Ver. 48. And when they ſaw him they were amazed, &c.] That is, when Joſeph and Mary ſaw him amidſt the doctors, they were aſtoniſhed that he was admitted among them, and had in ſuch eſteem by them: and his mother ſaid unto him; ſhe being his own, and only parent, and not Joſeph; and therefore he ſaid nothing, but left it to her; who upon ſight of him, at leaſt as ſoon as ſhe had a proper opportunity, after he had left the doctors, began to chide, or rather to expoſtulate with him after this manner: ſon, why haſt thou thus dealt with us? which was ſaid with great tenderneſs of affection, and in much mildneſs; and may be a pattern to parents, who ſhould not provoke their children to anger, but deal gently and tenderly with them: behold, thy father and I have ſought thee ſorrowing; with great grief, anxiety, and ſolicitude, fearing leſt ſome evil had befallen him. Mary calls Joſeph his father, tho' ſhe knew he was not, in a proper ſenſe; but becauſe he was ſuppoſed to be ſo, and was his father by the law of marriage; and eſpecially, ſhe might call him ſo becauſe of his paternal care of him in his education, and bringing him up: for it is a maxim with the Jews [e], that "not he that begets, but he that brings up, is the father."

Ver. 49. And he ſaid unto them, how is it that ye ſought me? &c.] That is, with ſo much uneaſineſs and diſtreſs of mind, not truſting in the power and providence of God, to take care of him; and in other places, beſides the temple, where they had been enquiring for him: wiſt ye not that I muſt be about my father's buſineſs? or in my father's houſe, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; where, as ſoon as you miſſed me, you might, at once, have concluded I was, and not have put yourſelves to ſo much trouble and pains in ſeeking for me. Chriſt ſeems to tax them with ignorance, or, at leaſt, forgetfulneſs of his having a father in heaven, whoſe buſineſs he came to do on earth; and which they ſhould have thought in their own minds he was now about, and ſo have made themſelves eaſy. The buſineſs that Chriſt came about was to preach the Goſpel, and which he afterwards performed with great clearneſs and fulneſs, with much power, majeſty, and authority, with great conſtancy and diligence, with much concern for the ſouls of men, and with great awfulneſs; and in which he took great delight, tho' he went thro' many dangers and riſques of life; as alſo to work miracles in proof of his Deity and Meſſiahſhip, and for the good of the bodies of men, and in which he was very aſſiduous, going about every where doing good this way: but the main, and principal part of his buſineſs was, to work out ſalvation for his people, by fulfilling the law, making reconciliation and atonement for their ſins, and obtaining eternal redemption: this was a buſineſs, which neither angels nor men could do; was very toilſome and laborious, and yet he delighted in it; nor did he deſiſt from it until it was accompliſhed: and this is called his father's buſineſs, becauſe he contrived and aſſigned it to him; he called him to it, and ſent him to perform it; he enjoined it him as man and mediator, and the glory of his perfections was concerned in it, and ſecured by it: and it was a buſineſs that Chriſt muſt be about, be concerned in, and perform, becauſe he engaged to do it from all eternity; and becauſe it was the will of his father which muſt be done, and was neceſſary in order to ſhew himſelf dutiful and obedient; and becauſe it was foretold in prophecy again and again, and promiſed that it ſhould be done; and becauſe it could not be done by another. Now our Lord's converſing with the doctors, and which was a branch of his prophetic office, and was, no doubt, with a view to the good of the ſouls of men, and nothing leſs than miraculous, was a ſhew, a prelude of, and a ſort of an entrance upon the buſineſs he came about.

Ver. 50. And they underſtood not the ſaying, &c.] What he meant by his father's houſe, or his father's buſineſs, and the neceſſity of his being there, and abou about that: which he ſpake unto them; at that time, and as above related.

Ver. 51. And he went down with them, &c.] From the temple, and from Jeruſalem, which were on high ground: and came to Nazareth; where he, and his parents, had lived ever ſince their return from Egypt: and was ſubject unto them; for tho' he thought fit to let them know, or, at leaſt, put them in mind, that he had a father in heaven, whoſe buſineſs he came about, and muſt do, and therefore did not judge it neceſſary to aſk their leave to ſtay at Jeruſalem on that account; yet, as man, and willing to ſet an example of filial ſubjection to parents, he went along with them, and ſhewed all dutiful reſpect unto them, yielding a ready and chearful obedience to their commands, living with them, and working under them, and for them; and ſo he continued till he was about thirty years of age: but his mother kept all theſe ſayings, or things; for this relates not only to the words of Chriſt, but to the whole hiſtory of his ſtaying behind them at Jeruſalem, of his ſitting among the doctors, hearing them, and aſking them queſtions, to the aſtoniſhment of all. Theſe things ſhe treaſured up, and preſerved, in her heart; that is, in her memory; ſo the word is uſed in Jewiſh writings. It is reported of R. Meir [f], that "he went to intercalate the year in Aſia, and there was no Megilla (the book of Eſther) there, and he wrote it, מלבו, out of his heart, (i. e. out of his memory) and read it."

Ver. 52. And Jeſus increaſed in wiſdom, &c.] As man; for neither his divine wiſdom, nor the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge in him, as mediator, could admit of any increaſe; but as he grew in body, the faculties of his ſoul opened, and received gradually large meaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, in things natural and ſpiritual, thro' the in-dwelling of his divine nature in him, and the Holy Spirit that was, without meaſure, on him: and ſtature; the word ſignifies age alſo; and ſo the Vulgate Latin has rendered it: but that is not the meaning of it here, ſince it would have been entirely unneceſſary to have obſerved, that he increaſed in age, which muſt be unavoidable: but the ſenſe is, that as he increaſed in the wiſdom and knowledge of his human ſoul, ſo he likewiſe increaſed in the ſtature of his body; and in favour with God and man: he appeared by the grace that was in him, and the gifts beſtowed on him, to be high in the love and favour of God; and had a large ſhare in the eſteem and affections of all good men, who had the honour and happineſs of knowing him, and of being acquainted with him.

CHAP. III.

Ver. 1. NOW in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Cæſar, &c.] Emperor of Rome, and the third of the Cæſars; Julius was the firſt, and Auguſtus the ſecond, in whoſe time Chriſt was born, and this Tiberius the third; he was the ſon of Livia, the wife of Auguſtus, but not by him; but was adopted by him, into the Empire: his name was Claudius Tiberius Nero, and for his intemperance was called, Caldius Biberius Mero; the whole of his reign was upwards of twenty-two years, for he died in the twenty-third year of his reign [g]; and in the fifteenth of it, John began to preach, Chriſt was baptized, and began to preach alſo; ſo that this year may be truly called, the acceptable year of the Lord. Pontius Pilate being governour of Judea; under the Emperor Tiberius, in whoſe reign the Jewiſh chronologer [h] places him, and the hiſtorian [i] alſo, and make mention of him as ſent by him to Jeruſalem: he was not the firſt governour of Judea for the Romans; there were before him Coponius, Marcus Ambivius, Annius Rufus, and Valerius Gratus: and Herod being Tetrarch of Galilee; this was Herod Antipas, the ſon of Herod the great, and brother of Archelaus; the above chronologer [k] calls him alſo a Tetrarch, and places him under Tiberius Cæſar: he is ſometimes called a king, and ſo he is by the Ethiopic verſion here called, king of Galilee; and in the Arabic verſion, prince over the fourth part of Galilee; beſides Galilee, he had alſo Peræa, or the country beyond Jordan, as Joſephus [l] ſays, and which ſeems here to be included in Galilee; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 1. And his brother Philip Tetrarch of Iturea, and of the region of Trachonitis: Pliny [m] makes mention of the nation of the Itureans, as belonging to Cœle Syria; perhaps Iturea is the ſame with Batanea, or Auranitis, or both; ſince theſe with Trachon, the ſame with Trachonitis here, are alloted to Philip by Joſephus [n]: it ſeems to take its name from Jetur, one of the ſons of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 15. Trachonitis is mentioned by Pliny [o], as near to Decapolis, and as a region and tetrarchy, as here: Ptolemy [p] ſpeaks of the Trachonite Arabians, on the eaſt of Batanea, or Baſhan: the region of Trachona, or Trachonitis, with the Targumiſts [q], anſwers to the country of Argob. This Philip, who as before by Joſephus, ſo by Egeſippus [r], is ſaid, in agreement with Luke, to be Tetrarch of Trachonitis, was brother to Herod Antipas, by the father's, but not by the mother's ſide. Philip was born of Cleopatra, of Jeruſalem, and Herod of Malthace, a Samaritan [s]: he died in the twentieth year of Tiberius [t], five years after this: and Lyſanias the Tetrarch of Abilene: mention is made of Abila by Pliny [u], as in Cœle Syria, from whence this tetrarchy might have its name; and by Ptolemy [w], it is called Abila of Lyſanius, from this, or ſome other governour of it, of that name; and the phraſe, from Abilene to Jeruſalem, is to be met with in the Talmud [x], which doubtleſs deſigns this ſame place: who this Lyſanias was, is not certain; he was not the ſon of Herod the great, as Euſebius ſuggeſts [y], nor that Lyſanias, the ſon of Ptolemy Minnaeus, whom Joſephus [z] ſpeaks of, though very probably he might be a deſcendant of his: however, when Tiberius Cæſar reigned at Rome, and Pontius Pilate governed in Judea, and Herod Antipas in Galilee, and Philip his brother, in Iturea and Trachonitis, and Lyſanias in Abilene, John the Baptiſt began to preach and baptize; to fix the æra of whoſe miniſtry and baptiſm, all this is ſaid.

Ver. 2. Annas and Caiaphas being the high-prieſts, &c.] Some difficulty here ariſes, how theſe two could be both high-prieſts; when according to the law of God, and the uſages of the Jewiſh nation, there was to be, and was but one high-prieſt at a time: many things are obſerved by writers, to ſolve this difficulty: ſome go this way; that though according to the divine inſtitution, and the practice of former times, there was but one high-prieſt at a time; yet now, through the corruption of the preſent age, there were two high-prieſts; or at leaſt, which officiated alternately in the ſame year: but of ſuch a corruption, no inſtance can be given, even in thoſe corrupt times; and as Maimonides ſays [a], there can be but one high-prieſt, בכל העולם, in all the world; and beſides, is contrary to their canons, which were then in being, and ſtill remain; one [b] of which runs thus, אין ממנין שני כהנים גדולים כאחת, they don't appoint two high-prieſts at once. Others ſuppoſe, that theſe two annually performed the office of high-prieſts by turns; that Caiaphas was high-prieſt one year, and Annas another: 'tis true indeed, that through the corruption of thoſe times, this office became venal; hence 'tis ſaid in the Talmud [c], "becauſe they gave money for the prieſthood, they changed it every twelve months." And which is more largely expreſſed by one of their commentators [d]; "becauſe the high-prieſts, who were under the ſecond temple, after Simeon the juſt, gave money to miniſter in the high-prieſt's office, and becauſe they were wicked, they did not fill up their years, therefore they changed every year." But though it is certain, that there were frequent, and ſometimes annual changes in the prieſtood, hence 'tis ſaid of Caiaphas, John xi. 49. and xviii. 13. that he was high-prieſt the ſame year, yet it does not appear that he and Annas, took it yearly by turns; for Caiaphas continued in that office ſome years, even till after the death of Chriſt: and beſides, had this been the caſe, as one of them could be but high-prieſt for the year being, both in one year as here, could not with propriety be ſaid to be high-prieſts. Others take another method, and ſuppoſe Caiaphas to be properly the high-prieſt, as he certainly was; and Annas ſo called, becauſe he had been one formerly, the ſame with Ananus, the ſon of Seth; who was put into the prieſthood by Quirinius, in the room of Joazar, and was depoſed by Valerius Gratus, and Iſhmael ben Phabi, was put into his room: but though there may be inſtances of perſons being called high-prieſts, who had been in that office, after they were removed from it, yet no reaſon can be given, why Annas ſhould be peculiarly called ſo, when there were in all probability ſeveral alive, who had been in that office as well as he; as Joazar his predeceſſor, and Iſhmael ben Phabi, who ſucceeded Joazar, and after him Eleazar, the ſon of Annas, and then Simeon ben Cambith; nor why he ſhould be put in the annals of the high-prieſts, in a year in which he was not one. It ſeems moſt likely therefore, that he was the Sagan of the prieſts, of which office mention is frequently made, in the Jewiſh writings [e]; yea, we often read of Chanina, or Chananiah, or Ananias, perhaps the ſame with this Annas, who is called, סגן כהנים, the Sagan of the prieſts [f]. This officer was not a deputy high-prieſt, or one that was ſubſtituted to officiate occaſionally, in the room of the high-prieſt, when any thing hindered him, or rendered him unfit for his office; as on the day of atonement, if the high-prieſt contracted any pollution, they ſubſtituted another to miniſter [g]; which was not the Sagan, but another prieſt; and even ſuch an one was called an high-prieſt, as appears from the following ſtory [h]. "It happened to Simeon ben Cambith (a predeceſſor of Caiaphas) that he went out to ſpeak with the king, on the evening of the day of atonement, and the ſpittle was ſcattered from his mouth, upon his garments, and he was unclean; and his brother Judah went in, and miniſtered in his ſtead in the high prieſthood; and their mother ſaw her two ſons, כהנים גדולים ביום אחד, high-prieſts in one day." But the Sagan was not an officer pro tempore, or ſo much under the high-prieſt, and one in his ſtead, as a ruler and governour over other prieſts. Maimonides ſays of him thus [i]; "they appoint one prieſt, who is to the high-prieſt as a ſecond to the king, and he is called Sagan; and he is called a ruler; and he ſtands at the right hand of the high-prieſt continually; and this is an honour to him, and all the prieſts are under the hand of the Sagan." The account given of him in the Talmud [k], is this; "in five things the Sagan miniſters; the Sagan ſays to him, my lord, high-prieſt, lift up thy right hand (i. e. when he took the lots out of the veſſel for the goats, on the day of atonement [l], which ſhould be ſlain;) the Sagan is on his right hand, and the father of the Sanhedrim on his left (i. e. when he went to the eaſt of the court and the north of the altar [m], where were the two goats, and the veſſel in which were the lots;) the Sagan waved with the vails, or linen clothes; the Sagan held him by his right hand, and cauſed him to aſcend (by the ſteps to the altar;) and no man was appointed an high-prieſt, before he was a Sagan." Now theſe might be as Seraiah and Zephaniah, the one chief prieſt, and the other ſecond prieſt, Jer. lii. 24. where the Targum and Jarchi interpret the text, the Sagan of the prieſts. And this being an office of ſuch dignity and authority, ſuppoſing Annas in it, though he was not the high-prieſt, yet being the head of all the other prieſts, he might be called one, and be joined with Caiaphas, and ſet before him; not only becauſe he had been an high-prieſt, but becauſe he was his father-in-law: the word of God came to John the ſon of Zachariah; a prieſt of the order of Abia; and of Elizabeth, a daughter of Aaron, and couſin of Mary, the mother of Jeſus; as it had come formerly to the prophets, and particularly to Jeremy, who was ſanctified from the womb, as the Baptiſt was: he was bleſſed with a prophetic ſpirit, and with the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Ghoſt, and with a wonderful revelation of the Meſſiah, and of the Goſpel diſpenſation; and was abundantly qualified for the work he was called to, and ſent to perform: and this befel him in the wilderneſs; that is, of Judea; where he had been brought up and lived, and from whence and where he came, preaching: he had lived a ſolitary life, and had not learnt his doctrine from men, but had his miſſion, miniſtry, and baptiſm, from heaven.

near Salim; for he did not take a tour round about all the country that encompaſſed Jordan, but being at it, or in places adjacent to it, all the country round about came to him; ſee Matt. iii. 5. Preaching the baptiſm of repentance for the remiſſion of ſins: this was the work and office of John, as ſignified by Elias, in Mal. iv. 5, 6. the Jews ſay [n], “the Iſraelites will “not repent, till Elias comes; as it is ſaid, Mal. “iv. 5, 6. in the land of Iſrael repentance delights.” John came into this land, preaching this doctrine; ſee the note on Mark i. 4.

Ver. 4. As it is written in the book of the words of Eſaias the prophet, &c.] Ch. xl. 3. ſaying, the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths ſtraight; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 3.

Ver. 5. Every valley ſhall be filled, &c.] Luke cites more out of the ſame prophecy, as relating to the times of John the Baptiſt, and the Meſſiah, than the other Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark do: in the prophet it is, every valley ſhall be exalted; which is done, by filling it up: the metaphor is perſiſted in, of preparing and clearing the way, for the coming of the Meſſiah, done by the miniſtry of John; under which, ſuch ſouls as were lowly and humble, and depreſſed with the ſenſe of ſin, ſhould be raiſed and directed to believe in Chriſt, and be filled with divine conſolation from him. Theſe words are owned by the Jews [o], to belong to the world to come; that is, the times of the Meſſiah; though they underſtand them, of making way for the return of the Iſraelites from captivity, by the Meſſiah: juſt as they ſuppoſe ſuch things were done by the miraculous cloud, for the children of Iſrael, as they paſſed through the wilderneſs; of which they ſay [p], “that it went before them, “ſmote the ſerpents and ſcorpions, and fiery ſerpents, and the rock; and if there was any low “place, it raiſed it up; or high place, it made “it low, and cauſed them to be plain; as it is “ſaid, Iſa. xl. 3. And every valley ſhall be exalted, “&c.” But what they ſay of this cloud literally, as preparing the way for the Iſraelites, is in a ſpiritual ſenſe true, of the miniſtry of John; whereby many of the children of Iſrael, had the way prepared for them, for the reception of the Meſſiah; when as every humble ſoul had its expectation raiſed, and its faith encouraged, and its heart filled with ſpiritual joy; ſo ſuch as were proud and haughty, were humbled: and every mountain and hill ſhall be brought low; all ſuch as are elated with their own abilities, and boaſt of their righteouſneſs, truſt in themſelves, and look with diſdain and contempt on others, their loftineſs ſhall be bowed down, and their haughtineſs made low; and the Meſſiah alone, in his perſon, grace, and righteouſneſs, be exalted: and the crooked ſhall be made ſtraight; ſuch as are of a crooked ſpirit, and walk in crooked ways, with the workers of iniquity, ſhall have new ſpirits given them, and be directed to right ways, and be led in the paths of righteouſneſs and truth: and the rough ways ſhall be made ſmooth; and men of rough tempers, comparable to lions and bears, ſhall become quiet and peaceable, ſmooth and eaſy; and moreover, whatever difficulties were in the minds of men concerning the Meſſiah, the end of his coming, and the nature of his kingdom; and whatever impediments were in the way of embracing him when come, ſhould now be removed at leaſt from many perſons. R. David Kimchi, a very noted Jewiſh commentator [q], acknowledges that the whole of this paſſage is to be underſtood, דרך משל, by way of parable, in a myſtical and figurative ſenſe.

Ver. 6. And all fleſh ſhall ſee the ſalvation of God.] By the ſalvation of God is meant, the Meſſiah, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Saviour of God's appointing and ſending; and who is the author of that ſalvation which God reſolved on, contrived, and approved of; and is his ordinance for ſalvation, unto the ends of the earth, for all his elect; ſee ch. ii. 30. whom a great number among the Jews ſhould, and did ſee, with their bodily eyes; and whom not only God's elect among them, but alſo all of them among the Gentiles, ſhould behold with an eye of faith, for themſelves, as their Saviour and Redeemer. It is matter of queſtion, what paſſage is here referred to; whether Iſa. xl. 5. or Iſa. lii. 10. the latter comes neareſt to the words, and the former ſtands cloſely connected with the expreſſions before cited; though it is uſual with the New Teſtament writers, to join together paſſages, which ſtand in different places of the ſame prophet, and even which are in different books; ſee Rom. ix. 33. compared with Iſa. viii. 14. and xxviii. 16. and Matt. xxi. 5. compared with Iſa. lxii. 11. and Zech. ix. 9. and that agreeable to the method uſed by Jewiſh writers [r].

Ver. 7. Then ſaid he to the multitude, &c.] That is, John, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; and the multitude to whom he ſpake the following words, were many of the Phariſees and Sadducees, as appears from Matt. iii. 7. That came forth to be baptized of him; who came out of their houſes, towns, and cities, round about, to the place where John was; and hearing and ſeeing what he was about, deſired to be admitted to his baptiſm: not that they were baptized of him, as the Arabic verſion renders it; but they came with a view of being baptized, were it thought fit and proper they ſhould: but John refuſed them, ſaying to them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come? ſee the note on Matt. iii. 7.

Ver. 8. Bring forth therefore fruits worthy of repentance, &c.] Or meet for it, ſuch as will ſhew it to be true and genuine: and begin not to ſay within yourſelves: in one of Beza's copies, and in another of Stephens's, it was read, think not, as in Matt. iii. 9. the ſenſe is the ſame. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions, leave out the phraſe, within yourſelves: what they are forbid to ſay follows, we have Abraham to our father, for I ſay unto you, God is able of theſe ſtones, to raiſe up children unto Abraham; which need not be thought ſtrange, when the creation of Adam out of the earth, and the production of ſuch a numerous offspring, as the Iſraelites were, from Abraham and Sarah, when paſt all hope of children, and are ſignified by the rock and pit in Iſa. li. 1, 2. are conſidered; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 9.

Ver. 9. And now alſo the ax is laid unto the root of the trees, &c.] Not only to Jeſſe's family, which was as a root in a dry ground, and to Jeruſalem, the metropolis of the nation; but to the root of the vain boaſting of every Jew; their deſcent from Abraham, the covenant made with him, their eccleſiaſtical ſtate and civil polity, all which would quickly be at an end: the Romans were now among them, the ax in God's hand; by means of whom, utter ruin and deſtruction would be brought upon their nation, city, and temple: every tree therefore which bringeth not forth good fruit, is hewn down and caſt into the fire; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 10.

Ver. 10. And the people aſked him, &c.] Not the ſame as in ver. 7. the Sadducees and Phariſees, for they ſeemed not to be at all affected with, and wrought upon, by the miniſtry of John; but rather were diſpleaſed with him, and turned their backs on him, and rejected him and his baptiſm; but the common people, that ſtood by; who hearing John ſpeak of wrath to come, and of repentance, and fruits worthy of it, were filled with concern about theſe things, and enquire, ſaying, what ſhall we do? either to eſcape the wrath and vengeance coming on the nation, and alſo eternal ruin and deſtruction; and Beza ſays, that in two of his copies, and one of them his moſt ancient one, 'tis added, to be ſaved, and ſo in two of Stephens's; which confirms the above ſenſe, and makes their enquiry to be the ſame with the jailor's, Acts xvi. 30. Or elſe their meaning is, what are the things we are to do, or the fruits we are to bring forth, the duties we are to perform, in order to teſtify the truth and genuineneſs of our repentance? which latter ſeems moſt agreeable.

Ver. 11. He anſwereth and ſaith unto them, &c.] By telling them what they ſhould do; and he does not put them upon ceremonial obſervances, nor ſevere exerciſes of religion, nor even the duties of the firſt table of the law, and others of the ſecond, though neceſſary to be done; but upon acts of beneficence and kindneſs, to fellow-creatures in diſtreſs; and are what may be called love of our neighbour, and which involvates the love of God, and ſo the whole law; for the one cannot be rightly exerciſed without the other: he that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none; not both of them, but one of them: a man is not obliged to go naked himſelf, in order to clothe another; and ſo the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, let him give one to him that has not; that has not a garment to wear. This is not to be underſtood ſtrictly and literally, that a man is obliged to give one of his coats, if he has more than one, to a perſon in want of cloathing; it will be ſufficient to anſwer the intent of this exhortation, if he ſupplies his want another way, by furniſhing him with money to buy one: the meaning is, that perſons according to their abilities, and of what they can ſpare, ſhould communicate to thoſe that are in diſtreſs: much leſs is it to be concluded from hence, that it is not lawful for a man to have more coats than one: and he that hath meat, or meats, let him do likewiſe; that is, he that has a ſufficiency of food, and more than enough for himſelf and family, let him give it freely and chearfully to the poor and needy, for with ſuch ſacrifices God is well pleaſed: and when ſuch acts of kindneſs are done in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God, they are the fruits of grace, and ſuch as are meet for repentance, and ſhew it to be genuine. John inſtances in theſe two articles, food and raiment, as containing the neceſſaries of human life, and including every thing, by which one may be ſerviceable to another.

Ver. 12. Then came alſo publicans to be baptized, &c.] Being convinced under John's miniſtry of the evils of their paſt life, and deſirous of being admitted to baptiſm, to which they underſtood repentance, and fruits meet for the ſame, were prerequiſite: theſe came nearer to John, and ſaid unto him, maſter, what ſhall we do? we have been very wicked perſons, what ſhall we do to eſcape divine vengeance? or what are the particular duties we are to perform? or the fruits meet for repentance, we are to bring forth; that ſo we may be admitted to the ordinance of baptiſm, which requires, as previous to it, a true and hearty repentance? of theſe men, ſee the note on Matt. vi. 46. and ix. 9, 10, 11.

Ver. 13. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] Not by adviſing them to quit their employments, as if it was a thing unlawful to impoſe, pay, and collect taxes, but by directing them to perform their office aright: exact no more than that which is appointed you; by the government: there were two ſorts of publicans; there were ſome that exacted more than what they were ordered, and ſettled the tax at their own pleaſure, and collected what they would themſelves; and theſe were very odious to the people, and were reckoned with the worſt of ſinners, as thieves and robbers; but there were others, who behaved according to the orders of the government, and theſe were ſubmitted to, as appears from the Jewiſh canons: "ſays [s] Samuel, the judgment of a "kingdom, is judgment (i. e. the orders of a go"vernment ought to be regarded;) R. Chanina "bar Cahana ſays, that Samuel ſays it of a pub"lican, שאין לו קציבה, who has nothing appointed "for him: the houſe of R. Jannai ſay, of a pub"lican that ſtands of himſelf." The Gloſs is, "the judgment of a kingdom is judgment; this is he "that receives from a king, a tax (to gather) in a "thing, קצוב, that is fixed, ſo and ſo for the "year, and he is no robber: who has nothing ap"pointed for him, but takes according to his whole "will and pleaſure." Maimonides expreſſes this in plainer language [t], "in what things is it ſaid that "a publican is as thieves? when a Gentile publican, "or a Gentile that ſtands of himſelf, or a publican "that ſtands for the king, and hath nothing fixed "for him, but he takes what he pleaſes, and leaves "what he pleaſes: but a publican with whom the "king agrees, and orders that he ſhould take a "third or a fourth, or, דבר קצוב, any thing that "is appointed; and he conſtitutes an Iſraelitiſh pub"lican to collect that part for the king, and it is "known that the man is faithful, and does not "add any thing to what the king has decreed; he "is not in the claſs of robbers, for the judgment "of a king is judgment.——And ſo a king that "lays a tax upon citizens, or upon every man and "man, a thing fixed; or decrees, that whoever "tranſgreſſes this thing, they ſhall take all his "goods into the king's houſe; or that whatever "ſhall be found in the field in the time of the barn "(i. e. when it ſhould be there) ſhould pay tribute "for it, whether he is the owner of the field or "not: and ſo with reſpect to any thing elſe of this "kind, it is not a robbery; and an Iſraelite that "collects them for the king, is not in the number "of robbers; for lo! he is right, and he does "not add nor alter, nor take any thing to him"ſelf."——Now ſuch publicans as theſe, were received and ſubmitted to, but others were rejected; ſo Moſes Kotſenſis ſays [u], that "publicans that take, "יותר מדבר הקצוב להן, more than what is ap"pointed for them, are rejected." From all which we may learn, what publicans theſe were, that came to John's baptiſm, and put the above queſtion to him; that they were Jewiſh publicans, and not Gentiles; and therefore John ſays nothing to them, but what concerned their employment; which he doubtleſs would have done, if they had been ignorant Gentiles: and alſo we ſee the reaſon of his expreſſing himſelf in this manner, ſince publicans were very apt to go beyond their orders, and require more than was fixed for them to collect; and likewiſe that John, in this advice, ſpoke the ſenſe of the Jews themſelves; who did not refuſe to pay tribute, excepting ſome few; provided no more was exacted, than the government appointed; and as temptations to ſuch evils were very great, and it lay in the power of theſe men to impoſe on the people, and extort from them, to abſtain from ſuch practices, was an argument of the fear of God, of the truth of grace, and of the ſincerity of repentance.

Ver. 14. And the ſoldiers likewiſe demanded of him, &c.] Or aſked him: why our tranſlators have rendered it, demanded of him, I know not, unleſs they thought that ſuch language beſt ſuited perſons of a military character. Some think theſe were Gentile ſoldiers, ſince it does not look ſo likely that the Romans would employ Jews as ſoldiers in their own country; tho' it is more probable that they were Jews, in the pay of the Romans, who belonged to Herod, tetrarch of Galilee, or to Philip of Iturea, whoſe dominions lay near the place where John was; ſince it is certain, that there were many of the Jews that betook themſelves to a military life; and ſeeing John inſtructed them in no part of natural or revealed religion, but what was ſuitable to their character and employment: for upon theſe men ſaying, what ſhall we do? to avoid the threatened ruin, and to prove the truth of our repentance, that ſo we may be admitted to the holy ordinance of baptiſm? John replied, do violence to no man; or ſhake him, or put him into bodily fear, by threatening, hectoring, and bullying him, and drawing the ſword upon him, which is uſual, upon the leaſt offence, for ſuch perſons to do: neither accuſe any falſly, or play the ſycophant; who, in order to flatter ſome, bring malicious accuſations againſt others; and which was a vice that too much prevailed among the Jewiſh ſoldiery; who either to curry favour with the Roman officers and governours, would wrongfully accuſe their fellow ſoldiers, or countrymen, to them; or in order to extort ſums of money from them, that they might live in a more luxurious manner than their common pay would admit of: wherefore, it follows, and be content with your wages; allowed by the government, and don't ſeek to increaſe them by any unlawful methods, as by mutiny and ſedition, by rebelling againſt your officers, or by ill uſage of the people. The Jewiſh Rabbins have adopted this word, אפסניא, into their language in the Miſnic and Talmudic writings[w]; and their Gloſs explains it by the money, for the ſoldiers, and the hire of ſoldiers, as here; and it includes every thing which by the Romans were given to their ſoldiers for pay, and which was food as well as money.

Ver. 15. And as the people were in expectation, &c.] Of the coming of the Meſſiah; Daniel's ſeventy weeks being now accompliſhed, the ſceptre being departed from Judah, and the Romans having the government in their hands, from whom they hoped for a deliverance by Chriſt: and all men muſed in their hearts of John, whether he were the Chriſt, or no; about which they had many reaſonings and debates; ſome doubting of it, others ready to believe it, from his extraordinary birth, the ſingular holineſs of his life, the power and efficacy of his doctrine, the new ordinance he adminiſtred, the reſtoration of religion by him, the freedom he took in reproving the vices of men, and the apt anſwers he gave to the queſtions now put to him. And that the Meſſiah was born, though he was not, as yet, made manifeſt, they might conclude, not only from the fulfilment of ſeveral propheſies, but from the ſong of Zacharias, the declaration of Simeon and Anna in the temple, and of the wiſe men that came from the eaſt; and John appearing in ſuch an uſual manner, they were ready to hope that he was the perſon; tho' they did not conſider that he was of the tribe of Levi, and not of Judah; from which latter the Meſſiah was to ſpring; but this might be unattended to by them, and ſatan might have an hand in it to hide the true Meſſiah from them.

Ver. 16. John anſwered, ſaying unto them all, &c.] For ſome of them might not only ſo think in their hearts, but expreſs with their mouths the apprehenſion they had of him; and might put the queſtion to him, as the prieſts and Levites from Jeruſalem afterwards did; or he might know the ſecret thoughts of their hearts by divine revelation; or be apprized by his diſciples of the private ſentiments of the people concerning him: and therefore, to put them out of doubt, and that he might not have an honour conferred on him, which did not belong to him, he addreſſed himſelf, in a very public manner, to the whole multitude, in the hearing of them all; tho' the word all is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions, but rightly retained in others, being in all copies, and having a conſiderable emphaſis on it: and ſaid the following words, I indeed baptize you with water. Matthew adds, unto repentance; upon the profeſſion of repentance: but one mightier than I cometh; that is, after me, as Matthew records it; the latchet of whoſe ſhoes I am not worthy to unlooſe; neither to bear his ſhoes after him, as Matthew ſays, nor to untie his ſhoe-ſtring, or unbuckle his ſhoe, both which were menial actions with the Jews: he ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; as he did ſome of their nation, his own diſciples, on the day of pentecoſt; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 11.

Ver. 17. Whoſe fan is in his hand, &c.] See the note on Matt. iii. 12.

Ver. 18. And many other things, &c.] Relating to the perſon and office of the Meſſiah, to the nature of his kingdom, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and to faith in him; for he pointed him out to the people, and exhorted them to believe in him, and expreſſed much joy and pleaſure on the hearing of his ſucceſs and increaſe; and theſe, with others beſide, in his exhortation, or whilſt he was exhorting, or comforting, preached he unto the people; publiſhing the Goſpel, the good news, and glad tidings of the Meſſiah's being come, and of life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him.

Ver. 19. But Herod the tetrarch being reproved by him, &c.] By John, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions add: for Herodias his brother Philip's wife; for taking her to wife, whilſt his brother Philip was living. The account, which the Jewiſh chronologer[x] gives, of this Herod, and of this fact of his, and John's reproving him for it, and the conſequence of it, perfectly agrees with this of the Evangeliſt. "Herod Antipater, and there are ſome "that call him, טיסרקי, the Tetrarch, was a ſon "of Herod the firſt, and brother of Archelaus; and "he was the third king of the family of Herod; "and he was very wicked, and a deſtroying man: "many of the wiſe men of Iſrael he ſlew with the “ ſword; and he took the wife of his brother Philip, whilſt he was alive, to himſelf for wife; and “ John, the high-prieſt, becauſe הוכיחו, be reproved “ him for this, he ſlew him with the ſword, with “ many of the wiſe men of Iſrael.” And John reproved him not only for this ſin, but others: and for all the evils which Herod had done; his revellings, debaucheries, murders, &c. all which John, in great faithfulneſs, and with much freedom, told him of, and rebuked him for; for Herod had had a particular reſpect for him, and often had him with him, and heard him gladly, when John had an opportunity of ſpeaking perſonally to him.

Ver. 20. Added yet this above all, &c.] This ſin to all other ſins, and which was of a more flagitious nature, and attended with more aggravating circumſtances, eſpecially in the iſſue of it: that he ſhut up John in priſon; in the caſtle of Macherus, by the inſtigation of Herodias; ſee Matt. xiv. 3.

Ver. 21. Now when all the people were baptized, &c.] That came from ſeveral parts to John for this purpoſe, even as many as he judged to be proper ſubjects of that ordinance, as many of the common people, publicans, ſoldiers, &c. it came to paſs that Jeſus alſo being baptized; of John in Jordan, he coming from Galilee thither on that account: and praying; after he was baptized, for the coming down of the Spirit upon him, as man, to anoint, and qualify him for his office he was now about to enter on publickly; and for ſucceſs in it, and for a teſtimony from heaven, that he was the Son of God, and true Meſſiah: the heaven was opened; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 16.

Ver. 22. And the Holy Ghoſt deſcended in a bodily ſhape, &c.] In a corporeal form, in a viſible manner, and was ſeen with bodily eyes, at leaſt by John the adminiſtrator; to whom this was a ſignal of his being the Meſſiah, and a freſh confirmation of it: like a dove upon him; either in the form of a dove, or this corporeal form, whatever it was, deſcended and hovered on him as a dove does: and a voice came from heaven; at the ſame time the Holy Ghoſt came down upon him; which ſaid, thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleaſed: and was the voice of the father; and the whole of this was an anſwer of Chriſt's prayer; ſee the note on Matt. iii. 16, 17. and Mark i. 11.

Ver. 23. And Jeſus himſelf began to be about thirty years of age, &c.] Or Jeſus, when he was baptized, and began his public miniſtry, was about thirty years of age; an age at which the prieſts, under the law, who were typical of Chriſt, entered on their work, Numb. iv. 23. 1 Chron. xxiii. 3. The word, began, is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions; and is often indeed redundant, as in ver. 8. and frequently in Mark's Goſpel. The Arabic verſion renders it, Jeſus began to enter into the thirtieth year, which carries the ſenſe the ſame with our tranſlation: being, as was ſuppoſed, the ſon of Joſeph; who had eſpouſed Mary before ſhe was with child of the Holy Ghoſt, and afterwards took her to wife, and brought up her ſon; ſo that it was not known but that he was the ſon of Joſeph. Whether or no the Jewiſh notion of the Meſſiah, the ſon of Joſeph[y], may not take its riſe from hence, may be conſidered: however, Joſeph might very rightly be called, as he was ſuppoſed to be, the father of Jeſus, by a rule which obtains with the Jews[z], “ that he that brings “ up, and not he that begets, is called the father, or parent; of which they give various inſtances[a] in Joſeph, in Michal, and in Pharaoh's daughter. Which was the ſon of Eli; meaning, not that Joſeph was the ſon of Eli; for he was the ſon of Jacob, according to Matt. i. 16. but Jeſus was the ſon of Eli; and which muſt be underſtood, and carried thro' the whole genealogy, as thus; Jeſus the ſon of Matthat, Jeſus the ſon of Levi, Jeſus the ſon of Melchi, &c. till you come to Jeſus the ſon of Adam, and Jeſus the ſon of God: tho' it is true indeed that Joſeph was the ſon of Eli, having married his daughter; for Mary was the daughter of Eli: and ſo the Jews ſpeak of one Mary, the daughter of Eli, by whom they ſeem to deſign the mother of our Lord: for they tell[b] us of one, “ that ſaw, מרים בת עלי, Mary the daughter of “ Eli, in the ſhades, hanging by the fibres of her “ breaſts; and there are that ſay, the gate, or, as “ elſewhere[c], the bar of the gate of hell is fixed “ to her ear.” By the horrible malice, in the words, you may know who is meant: however, this we gain by it, that by their own confeſſion, Mary is the daughter of Eli; which accords with this genealogy of the Evangeliſt, who traces it from Mary, under her huſband Joſeph; tho' ſhe is not mentioned, becauſe of a rule with the Jews[d], that “ the family of the mother is not called a family.”

Ver. 24. Which was the ſon of Matthat, which was the ſon of Levi, &c.] Theſe two Grotius ſays are omitted in the ancient exemplars; and he thinks they ought to be left out; and for which he mentions the authorities of Irenæus, Africanus, Euſebius, Nazianzen, Jerom, and Auguſtin: but not only the Vulgate Latin, but all the Oriental verſions, retain them: which was the ſon of Melchi; and who, he thinks, was the immediate father of Eli: which was the ſon of Janna: frequent mention is made, in the Jewiſh writings[e], of ינאי מלכא, king Jannai, who is ſaid to be the ſame with king Jochanan, or John, the ſon of Simeon, the ſon of Mattathiah, that was called Hyrcanus; and his ſon Alexander, that reigned after him, was alſo called Jannai[f]; but whether either of theſe is the ſame with this Janna, is not certain: but this may be obſerved, that they were both before the times of Herod, and the birth of Jeſus, ſome years. And Jannai is called, in the chronicle of Jedidiah of Alexandria, or Philo the Jew[g], Hyrcanus the ſecond, who reigned ſixteen years: which was the ſon of Joſeph. This Joſeph, according to the ſame chronicle, is called Joſeph the ſecond, and ſurnamed Arſis, and was greatly honoured by Ptolemy, and governed ſixty years; and accordingly we ſhall meet with another Joſeph anon.

Ver. 25. Which was the ſon of Mattathias, &c.] Surnamed Siloah, by the ſame Philo, who governed ten years: which was the ſon of Amos; whoſe ſurname, according to the ſame author, was Sirag; or, as ſome, Syrach, or Shyrach, who governed fourteen years: which was the ſon of Naum; who was called Meſalut, or Maſlot, who governed ſeven years: which was the ſon of Eſli; or Eli, ſurnamed Haggai, who governed eight years; which was the ſon of Nagge: with Philo he is called Nagid Artaſat, or Artaxat, and ſaid to govern ten years.

Ver. 26. Which was the ſon of Maath, &c.] Surnamed Aſer, who governed nine years: which was the ſon of Mattathias; called Eli Matathias, who who governed twelve years: which was the ſon of Semei; and named Abner Semei, who governed eleven years: which was the ſon of Joſeph; called Joſeph the firſt, who governed ſeven years: which was the ſon of Juda; who, according to the ſame writer, muſt be Judas, ſurnamed Hyrcanus the firſt, who governed fourteen years.

Ver. 27. Which was the ſon of Joanna, &c.] Johannes, or John, the ſon of Rheſa Meſullam, who governed fifty-three years: which was the ſon of Rheſa; called, by the above writer, Rheſa Meſullam; ſee 1 Chron. iii. 19. and ſaid, by him, to govern ſixty-ſix years: which was the ſon of Zorobabel; who governed fifty-eight years: which was the ſon of Salathiel; the ſame with Shealthiel; ſee the note on Matt. i. 12. which was the ſon of Neri; the ſame with Jechonias, according to the Alexandrian chronicle; ſee the note on Matt. i. 12.

Ver. 28, 29, 30, 31. Which was the ſon of Melchi, &c.] This, with the following, Addi, Coſam, Elmodam, Er, Joſe, Eliezer, Jorim, Matthat, Levi, Simeon, Juda, Joſeph, Jonan, Eliakim, Melea, Menan, and Mattatha, all lived before the captivity, and were of the houſe of David, in the line of Nathan; for it follows, which was the ſon of Nathan; of which perſons no mention is made in the Old Teſtament, nor even of Mattatha, the ſon of Nathan: his ſons that are mentioned are Azariah, Zabud, and Abiſhar, 1 Kings iv. 5, 6. which laſt is thought to be the ſame with Mattatha: that Nathan was the ſon of David, as the order of things here directs, which was the ſon of David, is clear from 1 Sam. v. 14. 1 Chron. iii. 5. and xiv. 4.

Ver. 32, 33, 34. Which was the ſon of Jeſſe, &c.] The order of the perſons from Jeſſe to Abraham, as Obed, Booz, Salmon, Naaſſon, Aminadab, Aram, or Ram, Eſrom, (for Joram, which the Arabic verſion here inſerts, is to be rejected) Phares, Judah, Jacob, Iſaac, Abraham, perfectly agrees with the genealogy of Matthew, and the accounts of the Old Teſtament: which was the ſon of Thara; the ſame with Terah, Gen. xi. 26, 27. called by the Septuagint, Tharra: which was the ſon of Nachor; the ſame with Nahor, Gen. xi. 24, 25. called there, by the Septuagint, as here.

Ver. 35. Which was the ſon of Saruch, &c.] The Septuagint call him Serouch, the ſame with Serug, Gen. xi. 22, 23. which was the ſon of Ragau; ſo the Septuagint, the ſame with Reu, Gen. xi. 20, 21. which was the ſon of Phaleg; the ſame with Peleg, Gen. xi. 18, 19. the Septuagint reads as here: which was the ſon of Heber, or Eber, Gen. xi. 16, 17. which was the ſon of Sala, or Salah, Gen. xi. 14, 15. the Septuagint there call him Sala.

Ver. 36. Which was the ſon of Cainan, &c.] This Cainan is not mentioned by Moſes in Gen. xi. 12. nor has he ever appeared in any Hebrew copy of the Old Teſtament, nor in the Samaritan verſion, nor in the Targums; nor is he mentioned by Joſephus, nor in 1 Chron. i. 24. where the genealogy is repeated; nor is it in Beza's moſt ancient Greek copy of Luke: it indeed ſtands in the preſent copies of the Septuagint, but was not originally there; and therefore could not be taken by Luke from thence, but ſeems to be owing to ſome early negligent tranſcriber of Luke's Goſpel, and ſince put into the Septuagint to give it authority: I ſay early, becauſe it is in many Greek copies, and in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, even in the Syriac, the oldeſt of them; but ought not to ſtand neither in the text, nor in any verſion: for certain it is, there never was ſuch a Cainan, the ſon of Arphaxad, for Salah was his ſon; and with him the next words ſhould be connected, which was the ſon of Arphaxad; ſee Gen. xi. 12, 13. which was the ſon of Sem, or Shem, Gen. xi. 10, 11. which was the ſon of Noe, or Noah, Gen. v. 32. which was the ſon of Lamech, Gen. v. 28, 29.

Ver. 37. Which was the ſon of Mathuſala, &c.] The ſame with Methuſelah; and ſo he is called by the Septuagint in Gen. v. 25, 26, 27. which was the ſon of Enoch, Gen. v. 21, 22. which was the ſon of Jared, Gen. v. 18, 19. which was the ſon of Maleleel; the ſame with Mahalaleel; who is alſo ſo called by the ſeventy interpreters, in Gen. v. 15, 16. as here; which was the ſon of Cainan, Gen. v. 12, 13.

Ver. 38. Which was the ſon of Enos, &c.] Gen. v. 9, 10. which was the ſon of Seth, Gen. v. 6, 7. which was the ſon of Adam, Gen. v. 3, 4. which was the ſon of God; not begotten, as all the reſt were, by their immediate parents, but created by God, in a ſupernatural manner, out of the duſt of the earth, and quickened with the breath of God: ſo Adam is, by the Jews [h], called, בן אלהים, the ſon of God: tho' this may be underſtood of Jeſus, the ſon of Joſeph, of Heli, &c. and ſo on to this clauſe, the ſon of God; being ſo as a divine perſon, to whom the human nature was united, and on that account ſo called; ſee Luke i. 35. Thus, as Matthew gives us the regal line of Chriſt, ſhewing him to be heir to the throne of his father David, Luke gives the natural line of Chriſt; and as Matthew traces his genealogy down from Abraham, in a deſcending line, to Joſeph, the huſband of Mary, the mother of Jeſus, Luke traces it upwards, in an aſcending line, from Mary by Joſeph, even up to Adam; to whom the Meſſiah was firſt promiſed, and who was a type of the ſecond Adam, from whom he deſcended, tho' not by ordinary generation; nay, even to God himſelf: Chriſt, according to his divine nature, was the only-begotten of the Father; and as to his human nature, had a body prepared by him, and in the fulneſs of time was God manifeſt in the fleſh.

CHAP. IV.

Ver. 1. AND Jeſus being full of the Holy Ghoſt, &c.] The Spirit of God having deſcended on him at his baptiſm, and afreſh anointed, and filled his human nature with his gifts, whereby, as man, he was abundantly furniſhed for the great work of the public miniſtry, he was juſt about to enter upon; yet muſt firſt go thro' a ſeries of temptations, and which, thro' the fulneſs of the Holy Spirit in him, he was ſufficiently fortified againſt. Returned from Jordan; where he came, and had been with John, and was baptized by him; which, when over, he went back from the ſame ſide of Jordan, to which he came: and was led by the Spirit; the ſame Spirit, or Holy Ghoſt he was full of; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 1. into the wilderneſs; of Judea, which lay near Jordan, and where John had been preaching and baptizing, namely, in the habitable part of it: but this was that part which was uninhabited by men, and was infeſted with wild beaſts, and where Chriſt could neither have the comfort and benefit of human ſociety, nor any thing for the ſuſtenance of life, and where he was expoſed to the utmoſt danger; and ſo in circumſtances very opportune and favourable for ſatan to ply him with his temptations, for which purpoſe he was led thither.

[h] Sepher Coſri, orat. 2. Sig. 14. fol. 68. 1.

Ver. 2. Being forty days tempted of the devil, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read the phraſe, forty days, in connection with the latter part of the preceding verſe; according to which the ſenſe is, that Jeſus was led by the Spirit forty days in the wilderneſs, before he was tempted by ſatan, and in order to it: but our reading is confirmed by Mark, ch. i. 13. who affirms, as here, that he was ſo long tempted by ſatan; as he might be inviſibly, and, by internal ſuggeſtions, before he appeared viſibly, and attacked him openly, with the following temptations. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and forty nights: and ſuch were theſe days in which Chriſt was in the wilderneſs, and faſted, and was tempted there: they were ſuch as included nights, as well as days; ſee Matt. iv. 2. and in thoſe days he did eat nothing: not any ſort of food whatever; he taſted of no kind of eatables or drinkables, during the whole ſpace of forty days; nor in the nights neither, in which the Jews allowed perſons to eat in times of faſting; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 2. And this entire abſtinence, as it ſhews the power of Chriſt in the ſupporting of his human nature, without food, for ſuch a time, and the diſadvantages under which he, as man, combated with ſatan; ſo, that this faſt was never deſigned as an example to his followers, and to be imitated by them: and when they were ended; the forty days, and forty nights: he afterward hungred; which he did not before; and which ſhews the truth of his human nature; and is mentioned to obſerve the occaſion of the following temptation, and the advantage on the tempter's ſide.

Ver. 3. And the devil ſaid unto him, &c.] Who now viſibly appeared, and ſpoke unto him with an articulate voice: if thou be the Son of God; as has been juſt now declared by a voice from heaven; or ſeeing thou art in ſuch a relation to God, and ſo equal to him, and poſſeſſed of all divine perfections, and among the reſt, of almighty power; wherefore, ſince thou art hungry, and in a wilderneſs, where no food is to be had, command this ſtone that it be made bread; ſay but the word, and this ſtone, which he held out to him, or pointed at, as lying before them, or any one of the ſtones, which were in ſight, for Matthew ſpeaks of them in the plural number, will immediately be converted into bread, if he was what he was ſaid to be: this he ſuggeſts might eaſily be effected by him, and he had no need to continue hungry.

Ver. 4. And Jeſus anſwered him, ſaying, it is written, &c.] In Deut. viii. 3. that man ſhall not live by bread alone, but by every word of God; ſuggeſting hereby, that when it is the will of God, human nature may be maintained by the influence of divine power, without the uſe of ordinary means; and that bread itſelf, without a divine bleſſing, would not ſupport life; and ſo not this ſtone, or ſtones, if turned into it: wherefore, it became him, as man, to depend upon God, ſubmit to his will, and wait the iſſue of providence, who had brought him thither, and not take any ſuch ſteps to remove his hunger; and eſpecially at his ſolicitations, who had no other end, but to have him, if he could, at his beck and will. By every word of God, is not meant all ſcripture, and every part of it, which is given by inſpiration of God, and may be ſaid to proceed out of his mouth; neither the law, and the precepts of it, as the Jews interpret it, by obedience to which the Iſraelites lived in the land of Canaan; nor the Goſpel, and the truths of it, which are the wholeſome words of Chriſt, and the words of faith and good doctrine, with which believers are nouriſhed, and are that to the ſoul, as bread, or any other wholeſome food, is to the body; for of ſpiritual living, and the means of that, the text is not to be underſtood; but either of the word of God's power, by which he upholds and ſuſtains all things in being, which he has created; and with which he could, if he would, ſupport the bodies of men without the uſe of any ſort of food; as the bodies of Moſes and Elijah, and now the body of Chriſt, were for many days; and as the bodies of the ſaints will be after the reſurrection, to all eternity: or elſe the bleſſing of God, which he commands on bread, and other food, and the virtue and ſtrength which he puts into them, and conveys by them are meant, without which not any ſort of food is nouriſhing; or rather every thing which God declares and orders to be eat, even every creature of his which is good, and not to be refuſed, but received, with thankſgiving, being ſanctified by the word of God, and prayer, as well as bread; ſo manna, which is mentioned in the text in Deuteronomy; and likewiſe any other food, as pulſe and water, he is pleaſed to direct to. Some little difference there is between Matthew and Luke, in citing this paſſage; in the latter it is, by every word of God; and in the former it is nearer the Hebrew text in Deut. viii. 3. by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; and ſo ſome copies read here, as do alſo the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions: but neither of them have the words exactly as in the original text, where it is added, doth man live; which doubtleſs, were not produced by our Lord, as being unneceſſary, and therefore not mentioned by any of the Evangeliſts.

Ver. 5. And the devil taking him up into an high mountain, &c.] Some where near Jeruſalem, but what mountain is not certain. The Evangeliſt Luke makes this to be the ſecond temptation, which, with Matthew, is the third and laſt; and whoſe order ſeems to be more proper and natural than this, and to be the true and genuine one, which Luke neglects, tho' he does not contradict it: he relates matters of fact, without attending to the ſtrict order of them; whereas Matthew ſtrictly regards it, obſerving, that after the firſt temptation, then the devil taketh him, &c. and that being finiſhed, ſays, again the devil taketh him, &c. and upon thoſe words, get thee hence, with what follows, remarks, that then the devil leaveth him: all which ſhow, that his order is the moſt accurate, and to be followed. But to go on with the account; the devil having taken him from the pinnacle of the temple, and carried him to ſome high mountain, as Lebanon, or Piſgah, or ſome other near Jeruſalem, ſhewed unto him all the kingdoms of the world; not of the Roman empire only, tho' that conſiſted of many kingdoms, and is called the whole world, Luke ii. 1. where the ſame word is uſed, as here; but of the whole univerſe, every kingdom that was under the heavens; which he repreſented to Chriſt, not in a map, ſince the glory of them could not be deſcribed in that way: for he ſhewed him all the glory of them, as Matthew adds; and for this a mountain was no more a proper place, than any other; nor was it any real object he preſented to his bodily ſight, or any real proſpect he gave him of the kingdoms of the world, which are not to be ſeen from any one place, no not one of them, not even from the higheſt mountain in the world, and ſtill leſs to be ſeen together at once in a moment: but this was a mere phantaſm, a deception of the ſight, with which he endeavoured to impoſe on Chriſt, but could not; nor did Chriſt, who is the maker of the world, and the governour among the nations, need any repreſentation of the kingdoms of the world from him; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 8. and this he did in a moment of time; in the twinkling of an eye, not by ſucceſſion, and in proceſs of time, as one kingdom after another, but all at once, and in an inſtant: what a moment of time is, ſee the note, as before.

Ver. 6. And the devil ſaid unto him, all this power will I give thee, &c.] That is, all the kingdoms of the world, and all the government and juriſdiction over them: and the glory of them; the riches, honours, and grandeur belonging to them: for that is delivered unto me: ſo far he ſpoke modeſtly, in that he owned an original, ſuperior governour of them, by whom he pretended they were transferred to him; but lyed, in that he ſuggeſted they were put into his hands by him, who had the ſupreme power over them; and that he acted by his conſtitution and appointment, as a deputy under him; when what power he had, as the God of the world, was by uſurpation, and not by deſignation of God; and at moſt only by permiſſion: and leaſt of all was it true what follows; and to whomſoever I will I give it; or theſe, as the Vulgate Latin reads; that is, theſe kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them; when ſo to do is the peculiar and ſole prerogative of God: nor can ſatan diſpoſe of the goods of a ſingle man, nor of a herd of ſwine, nor enter into them without leave from God.

Ver. 7. If thou therefore wilt worſhip me, &c.] Or before me; that is, fall down before him, and give him divine worſhip and homage. A wide difference there is between a good angel and a fallen angel; a good angel will not ſuffer himſelf to be worſhipped by men, but directs to the worſhip of God only, Rev. xix. 10. and xxii. 9. but a fallen angel not only ſeeks to be worſhipped by men, but by the Son of God himſelf, even by him whom all the holy angels worſhip, Heb. i. 6. This was what ſatan at firſt aſpired after, and by which he fell: he affected deity, and ſought to have divine worſhip given him; and in this ſin he ſtill perſiſted, and grew worſe and worſe, more daring and inſolent, deſiring worſhip of him who is God over all, bleſſed for ever. All ſhall be thine: he promiſes to give him a title to all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them, on condition of homage done him, by which he ſhould hold the tenure of them under him; theſe being delivered up ſolely to him, by the author of them; and he having them in his power, to diſpoſe of them at pleaſure. O horrid impudence, arrogance, and inſolence!

Ver. 8. Jeſus anſwered and ſaid unto him, &c.] The following words, with indignation at him, and deteſtation of his propoſals: get thee behind me, ſatan; which are omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in three ancient copies of Beza's, and in his moſt ancient one; but ſtand in other copies, and in the Arabic verſion. For it is written, thou ſhalt worſhip the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve. This paſſage ſtands in Deut. vi. 13. where the words are, thou ſhalt fear the Lord thy God, and ſerve him, and thou ſhalt ſwear by his name: the laſt clauſe is not cited by Chriſt at all, ſwearing being only a ſpecies, or part of religious worſhip; and the other two clauſes are ſomewhat different from the original text, as here cited, and may be accounted for: inſtead of fear the Lord, it is worſhip the Lord; and the one well explains the other; the fear of God being often, in ſcripture, put for the whole worſhip of God, both internal, and external: and in the next clauſe, the word only is added by Chriſt, as expreſſing the true ſenſe of it, and agreeable to other places of ſcripture, particularly 1 Sam. vii. 3. ſee the note on Matt. iv. 10.

Ver. 9. And he brought him to Jeruſalem, &c.] The holy city, as Matthew calls it, from the wilderneſs thither; where he found him, and firſt attacked him, and perhaps he brought him thro' the air: and ſet him on a pinnacle of the temple; which was in Jeruſalem; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 5. And ſaid unto him, if thou be the Son of God, caſt thyſelf down from hence; from the pinnacle of the temple, on which he was ſet; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 6.

Ver. 10, 11. For it is written, &c.] In Pſal. xci. 11, 12. He ſhall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee; and in their hands they ſhall bear thee up, leſt at any time thou daſh thy foot againſt a ſtone. It is an obſervation made long ago by Jerom, on Pſal. xci. 11, 12. that ſatan, in citing this text, has left out the middle clauſe, to keep thee in all thy ways, which he knew was againſt him, and has only taken that which made for him; and on Matt. iv. 6. he obſerves, that this prophecy is not concerning Chriſt, but any holy man; therefore the devil wrongly interpreted ſcripture; and that had he certainly known, that this is written concerning the Saviour, he ought to have cited what follows, thou ſhalt tread upon the lion and adder, the young lion and the dragon ſhalt thou trample under feet: and in theſe obſervations, he has been followed by many interpreters; but Surenhuſius[1] is not ſatisfied with them, eſpecially with what reſpects the manner of citation, leaving out ſome words, and not mentioning others that follow; ſince ſuch a way of citing, perfectly agrees with the method of the Jewiſh doctors; who reckon one word of a paſſage being cited, all that follows, if it makes to the purpoſe, all one as if it was cited, and to be ſo accounted; and ſince, if ſuch a method is blame worthy, Chriſt, the Evangeliſts, and Apoſtles, muſt be blamed alſo, ſeeing they frequently uſe the ſame, which can never be allowed of: beſides, ſuppoſing the clauſe omitted was added, he aſks of what advantage it would be? ſince the two verſes being connected together as they are, the ſenſe with reſpect to God's providence and preſervation, is clear enough and compleat: and I muſt confeſs, though I have purſued the above obſervation in the note on Matt. iv. 6. yet by comparing the Evangeliſts together, it is not a clear caſe to me, what ſatan did leave out, or whether any thing at all; but it ſeems rather, that the words are put, as the Evangeliſts themſelves thought fit to tranſcribe them, in which they are not exactly alike; more is left out by one, than by another; Matthew leaves out the whole clauſe, to keep thee in all thy ways; but Luke only omits theſe words, in all thy ways: but I am ſtill of opinion, that the paſſage is applicable to Chriſt, as to any holy good man, yet it appears that ſatan failed not, neither in the manner of citing it, nor in the application of it to Chriſt; but by wreſting it to a wicked purpoſe, to countenance an action unwarrantable and criminal, being a tempting God; when the text only regards the preſervation of good men in the way of duty, truſting in the Lord; and which is confirmed by the anſwer of Chriſt, who takes no notice of any faulty citation of the paſſage, or miſapplication of it, as to his perſon; only ſuggeſts, by oppoſing another ſcripture to him, that what he had produced, was to a wrong and wicked purpoſe; and to take it in his ſenſe, would be to tempt God; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 6.

[1] Biblos Katallages, p. 210, 211.

Ver. 12. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, it is ſaid, &c.] In Deut. vi. 16. Thou ſhalt not tempt the Lord thy God: in the text in Deuteronomy the words are, ye ſhall not tempt the Lord your God. The ſecond perſon plural, is here changed into the ſecond perſon ſingular, to accommodate the words to ſatan; whom Chriſt ſingly addreſſes, and makes anſwer to, and who was under this ſame general law as other rational creatures: and Jehovah may be called the Lord his God, as he is his creator and governour; by whom he is upheld in his being, and to whom he is ſubject, whether he will or no; though not his covenant God: and even if our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is intended by the Lord God, as ſome think; he is God over all; over all principalities and powers, good and bad, by whom all are created, and in whom all conſiſt; and whoſe power and authority over ſatan and his angels, have abundantly appeared, in diſpoſſeſſing devils out of men, ſending them where he pleaſed, and in ſpoiling the powers of darkneſs, and in deſtroying him that had the power of death, the devil; and great inſolence and wickedneſs it muſt be in a creature, to tempt the Lord his God, in any way, or form whatever; ſee the note on Matt. iv. 7.

Ver. 13. And when the devil had ended all the temptation, &c.] Or all his temptations, as the Syriac verſion reads; not only the laſt mentioned, but all the reſt, whether inward or outward, in a viſible or in an inviſible manner; whether during his forty days faſt, or after he was an hungred, when he had tried every way, and all ſorts of temptations with him; and when he had done this, in, or with all his power, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; when he had done his utmoſt, and his beſt; and as the Perſic verſion adds, and profited nothing; could not ſucceed, or get any advantage over him: he departed from him for a ſeaſon; till another opportunity ſhould offer, or till that time ſhould come, when would be the hour and power of darkneſs; and by means of one of his diſciples, he ſhould bruiſe his heel, and bring him to an accurſed death; ſee John xiv. 30. Luke xxii. 53.

Ver. 14. And Jeſus returned in the power of the ſpirit, &c.] Of which he was full, and by which he was led into the wilderneſs, and had combated with ſatan, and had got the victory over him; and by virtue of which, he entered on his publick miniſtry, wrought miracles, and taught with authority. A like way of ſpeaking is uſed by the Targumiſt, on Mic. iii. 8. I am filled, בתקוף רוח נבואה, with the power of the ſpirit of prophecy, from before the Lord. Moreover, this phraſe is uſed, to ſhew that his return into Galilee, where he had been brought up, and from whence he came to John at Jordan, did not ariſe from a natural love to his country, and a fond deſire of being there again; but was owing to the powerful impulſe of the Holy Spirit, which was in him, and moved him to return thither; where he was to begin his miniſtry, and work his miracles, and ſo fulfil a prophecy of him, in Iſa. ix. 1, 2. ſee Matt. iv. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. And there went out a fame of him through all the region round about; throughout all Galilee and Syria, Decapolis and Judea; ſee Matt. iv. 23, 24, 25. the report of his doctrines and miracles, was ſpread far and near; and on account of them, he became the ſubject of the common talk of people every where, who highly applauded and commended him for them.

Ver. 15. And he taught in their ſynagogues, &c.] In the publick places of worſhip uſed by the Galileans, where they met on ſabbath-days and week-days, to read and pray, and hear the ſcriptures expounded; and Chriſt engaging here as a publick teacher, was the reaſon of his fame being ſpread around the country: being glorified of all; that heard him: they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine; they wondered at his gracious words; they praiſed him as a preacher; and glorified him, and God for him, becauſe of the mighty works which were done by him.

Ver. 16. And he came to Nazareth, &c.] After ſome length of time, when he had gone through all Galilee, and had acquired great credit and reputation by his miniſtry and miracles; he came to the place, where he had been brought up: where he was conceived, though not born; and where he had his education, and wrought at a trade, and was well known to the inhabitants; and therefore it was proper that he ſhould firſt exerciſe his miniſtry, and obtain a character in other places, which would prepare him a reception among his townſmen, who otherwiſe, in all likelihood, would have treated him at once with neglect and contempt: and as his cuſtom was, he went into the ſynagogue on the ſabbath-day. This was either his cuſtom from his youth, when he dwelt at Nazareth, while a private perſon, and before he was engaged in publick ſervice, whither he had uſed to repair as an inhabitant of the city, and a member of the congregation, to attend ſynagogue-worſhip, as he now did; or it refers to his cuſtom, ſince he became a publick preacher, who at Capernaum, or any other city of Galilee, where there was a ſynagogue, uſed to frequent it, whether on ſabbath-days, or any other, and ſo he did here: and ſtood up for to read: by riſing and ſtanding up, and perhaps by ſome other geſture he ſignified his inclination to read a portion of ſcripture, if liberty was given, and a book delivered him, for, as yet, he had no book to read in; nor might any read in publick, unleſs he had an order from the congregation, or the chief of it; for ſo runs the Jewiſh canon[k]: "a reader may not "read until the chief of the congregation bids him "read; yea, even a miniſter of the congregation, "or a ruler of the ſynagogue, may not read of "himſelf, until the congregation, or the chief "among them, bids him read." This cuſtom of reading the ſcriptures publickly, was an appointment of Moſes, according to the account of the Jews; who ſay[l], "Moſes our maſter, ordered the "Iſraelites to read in the law publickly, on the "ſabbath, and on the ſecond and fifth days of the "week, in the morning; ſo that they might not "be three days without hearing the law: and Ezra "ordered, that they ſhould read ſo at the evening "ſacrifice, every ſabbath, on account of thoſe that "ſit in the corners of ſtreets; and alſo he ordered, "that three men ſhould read on the ſecond and "fifth days of the week, and that they ſhould not "read leſs than twenty verſes." It was alſo the cuſtom to ſtand at reading the law and the prophets: with regard to the book of Eſther, the rule is[m] this; "he that reads the Megilla, or book of "Eſther, ſtands or ſits." That is, as their commentators [n] explain it, if he will he may ſtand, and if he will he may ſit, he may do as he pleaſes; but ſo he might not in reading the law: hence it is aſked [o], "why is it not ſo in the law? R. Abbu re-"plies, becauſe the ſcripture ſays, Deut. v. 3. "Stand thou here by me." Wherefore they ſay [p], the law muſt be read ſtanding, and it is even forbidden to lean on any thing. Chriſt conformed to theſe rules; he went into the ſynagogue to read on the ſabbath-day, and ſtood up when he read, and waited for order, and a book to be given him to read: it may be aſked, how he came to be admitted to read publickly in the ſynagogue, when he was not of the tribe of Levi, nor was he brought up in the ſchools and academies of the Jews, and was known to be a mechanic? It may be obſerved, that common Iſraelites, as well as prieſts and Levites, were allowed to read the ſcriptures publickly; every ſabbath-day, ſeven perſons read, a prieſt, a Levite, and five Iſraelites: the order was this; the prieſt read firſt, and after him the Levite, and after him an Iſraelite: and it is ſaid to be a known cuſtom to this day, that even an unlearned prieſt read before the greateſt wiſe man in Iſrael; and he that was greater than his companion in wiſdom, read firſt [q]. Now Chriſt, on account of the great fame he was in for his wiſdom and mighty works, was admitted to this publick ſervice, though he was no Levite, and known by the inhabitants of this place, to have been brought up to a trade.

[m] Miſn. Megilla, c. 4. 1.

Ver. 17. And there was delivered unto him, &c.] By the Chazan, or miniſter, to whom he gave it again, ver. 20. for the Chazan of the ſynagogue, was, שמש, the miniſter [r]; one part of whoſe buſineſs was, to deliver the book of the law to, and take it from him that read: when an high-prieſt read, the method taken was this [s]; "the Chazan, "or miniſter of the ſynagogue, took the book of "the law, and gave it to the ruler of the ſyna-"gogue, and the ruler of the ſynagogue gave it to "the Sagan, and the Sagan gave it to the high-"prieſt, and the high-prieſt ſtood and received, "and read ſtanding." The ſame method was obſerved, when a king read in the book of the law [t]; but when a common prieſt, or an inferior perſon read, ſo much ceremony was not uſed, as to hand the book from one to another: the manner in their ſynagogues and ſchools, was this [u]; "the Chazan "brought out the book of the law, and the prieſt "read, and after him a Levite; then the Chazan "of the ſynagogue, brought the book of the law "down to the head of the captivity, and all the "people ſtood; and he took the book of the law "into his hands, and ſtood and read in it; and the "heads of the ſchools ſtood with him, and the "head of the univerſity of Sora interpreted it; "and returned the book of the law to the Chazan, "and he returned it to the cheſt." That part of the ſacred volume which was delivered unto Jeſus at this time, was the book of the prophet Eſaias; it is very likely, that the leſſon out of the prophets for that day, was to be read out of the prophecy of Iſaiah; and it ſeems probable, that it was the ſingle book of Iſaiah, or that prophecy rolled up by itſelf, in one volume, that was delivered to Chriſt; as the law was divided into five parts, each fifth part was ſometimes in a book, or volume by itſelf: hence a fifth part of the law, is by the Jews interpreted [w], ספר, a book of the law, in which there is but one fifth part; ſo might the prophets be in ſeparate and diſtinct books, and it looks as if they ſometimes were, by the following account [x]: "a man may join together the law, the prophets, "and the holy writings, as one, the words of "R. Meir. R. Juda ſays, the law by itſelf, the "prophets by themſelves, and the holy writings "by themſelves; and the wiſe men ſay, each by "themſelves (i. e. each book by itſelf;) and ſays "R. Judah, it happened to Baithus ben Zunin, "that he had eight prophets joined together as "one; and there are that ſay, that he had not, "but, אחד אחד בפני עצמו, every one by itſelf." And when he had opened the book; or unrolled it, for books formerly were written in rolls of paper and parchment; and in this form, is the book of the law with the Jews, in their ſynagogues, to this day: "all books they ſay [y], are rolled from the "beginning to the end of them, but the book of "the law is rolled to the middle of it, and a pil-"lar, or column, is made for it here and there; "ſays R. Eliezer with R. Zadok, ſo the writers of "books in Jeruſalem made their books: the Rab-"bins teach, that they do not make the book of "the law its length, more than its circumference, "nor its circumference more than its length." Such a roll, or volume, of the prophet Iſaiah, Chriſt unrolled, till he came to the place he intended to read: it is a rule with the Jews [z], that "they "do not unroll the book of the law in the con-"gregation, becauſe of the glory of the congre-"gation." It may therefore be aſked, whether Chriſt did not break this rule, ſince he unrolled the book that was given him, publickly in the ſynagogue? To which it may be replied, that it was lawful to unroll the book of the prophets, which was what Chriſt did, but not the law; for ſo runs another of their rules [a], "they ſkip in "the prophets, but not in the law, becauſe, "שגוללין נביא ברבים, that they unroll a pro-"phet publickly, but they do not unroll the law "publickly." Chriſt having thus unrolled the volume of the prophet Iſaiah, which was put into his hands by the Chazan, or miniſter, he found the place where it was written; as is expreſſed in the following verſe, and which is to be ſeen in Iſa. lxi. 1. and which was either the leſſon of the day, or what Chriſt particularly ſought for, and looked out; or was providentially directed to, as what was pertinent to himſelf, and proper to read and inſiſt on at this time; for it was not by chance that he hit on this place, and read it, but it was according to purpoſe, and with deſign. Before the reading of the prophets, a bleſſing uſed to be ſaid, which was in this form [b]; "bleſſed art thou, O Lord our "God, the king of the world, who hath choſen "the good prophets, and art well pleaſed with "their words, which are ſaid in truth; bleſſed art "thou, O Lord, who haſt choſen the law, Moſes "his ſervant, and Iſrael his people, and the pro-"phets of truth and righteouſneſs." Whether this was delivered by Chriſt, is not certain; however, he read the following paſſage.

Ver. 18. The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, &c.] By whom is meant, the third perſon in the Trinity; ſo called, to diſtinguiſh him from all other ſpirits; and who was given to Chriſt as man, without meaſure, whereby he was qualified for his great work: and intends the Spirit of Jehovah, with all his gifts and graces, who was, and abode on Chriſt, as a ſpirit of wiſdom and of underſtanding, of counſel and of might, of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord; he was upon him, and in him, the firſt moment of his conception, which was by his power; and he viſibly deſcended on him at his baptiſm; and the phraſe denotes the permanency and continuance of him with him: becauſe he hath anointed me; or that he might anoint me: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, by whom he hath anointed me; for it was with the Holy Ghoſt he was anointed, as to be king and prieſt, ſo likewiſe to be a prophet: hence he has the name Meſſiah, which ſignifies anointed: and this unction he had, in order to preach the Goſpel to the poor: in Iſaiah it is, to the meek; which deſign the ſame perſons, and mean ſuch as are poor in ſpirit, and are ſenſible of their ſpiritual poverty; have low and humble thoughts of themſelves, and of their own righteouſneſs; and ſeek to Chriſt for durable riches and true righteouſneſs, and frankly acknowledge that all they have and are, is owing to the grace of God: and generally ſpeaking, theſe are the poor of this world, and poor in their intellectuals, who have but a ſmall degree of natural wiſdom and knowledge: to theſe the Goſpel, or glad tidings of the love, grace, and mercy of God in Chriſt, of peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation by Chriſt, were preached by him; and that in ſo clear a manner, and with ſuch power and authority, as never was before, or ſince; and for this purpoſe was he anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows: he hath ſent me to heal the broken-hearted; whoſe hearts are broken, and made contrite by the word of God, under the influence of the Spirit of God, and with a ſenſe of ſin; and are wounded with it, and are humbled for it; and are in great pain and diſtreſs, and even inconſolable, and ready to faint and die; for a wounded ſpirit who can bear? now Chriſt was ſent to heal ſuch perſons by his own ſtripes, by binding up their wounds, by the application of his blood to them, which is a ſovereign balm for every wound; by the diſcoveries of pardoning grace to their ſouls, and by opening and applying the comfortable promiſes of the Goſpel, by his Spirit, to them: to preach deliverance to the captives; who are captives to ſin, ſatan, and the law; from which, there is only deliverance by him; who ſaves his people from their ſins, redeems them from the law, and leads captivity captive; and which liberty and deliverance are preached and publiſhed in the Goſpel, and by Chriſt the author of them: and recovering of ſight to the blind; which in the prophet is, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound; and which the Septuagint render, as here in Luke, and the Chaldee paraphraſe in part agrees with it, interpreting it thus, to the priſoners, אתגלו לנהור, be ye revealed to the light: now becauſe perſons in priſon are in darkneſs, and ſee no light, therefore they are repreſented as blind; and both are the caſe of ſinners, they are in the priſon of ſin and of the law, and are blind, ignorant, and inſenſible of their ſtate; until Chriſt both opens the priſon, and ſets them free, and opens their eyes, and gives them ſpiritual ſight; when he ſays to the priſoners go forth, to them that are in darkneſs ſhew yourſelves, Iſa. xlix. 9. To ſet at liberty them that are bruiſed: theſe words are not in Iſa. lxi. 1. but in the Septuagint verſion of Iſa. lviii. 6. from whence they ſeem to be taken, or elſe from Iſa. xlii. 7. it being allowable for a reader in the prophets, to ſkip from place to place, which our Lord here did, in order to explain this paſſage more fully.

Ver. 19. To preach the acceptable year of the Lord.] The time which he willed and fixed for the redemption of his people, and in which he ſhewed his good-will and pleaſure unto ſinful men, in the gift of his Son to them, and for them; and which, as the Arabic and Syriac verſions render it, was a time acceptable to the Lord: the ſufferings of Chriſt were according to his will; his ſacrifice was of a ſweet-ſmelling ſavour to him; his righteouſneſs he was well pleaſed with; and the ſatisfaction and atonement for ſin he made was a plenary and complete one: all Chriſt did, and ſuffered, were grateful to God, becauſe hereby his perfections were glorified, his purpoſes, counſel, and covenant were accompliſhed, and his people ſaved. The Perſic verſion renders it, to preach the law acceptable to God, neither agreeable to the original text, nor its ſenſe; for Chriſt was ſent to preach the Goſpel, and not the law. In the Vulgate Latin, and Arabic verſions is added, and the day of vengeance, out of the prophecy in Iſ. lxi. 2. but is not in any of the copies, or other verſions. Our Lord did not read thro' all the three verſes in the prophet, as it might be thought he would, and which was agreeable to the Jewiſh canon[c]: "he that reads in the law may "not read leſs than three verſes, and he may not "read to an interpreter more than one verſe, and in "a prophet three; and if thoſe three are three "ſections, they read every one; they ſkip in a "prophet, but they do not ſkip in the law." This laſt our Lord did, tho' he did not ſtrictly attend to the former. Indeed, their rule, as elſewhere[d] given, obliged to read one and twenty verſes; but this was not always obſerved: for "if on a ſabbath-"day there was an interpreter, or a preacher, they "read in a prophet three verſes, or five, or ſe-"ven, and were not ſolicitous about twenty and "one[e]."

Ver. 20. And he cloſed the book, &c.] Or rolled it up; and ſo the high-prieſt did, after he read in the book of the law, on the day of atonement, all that was neceſſary to be read, גולל ספר תורה, he rolled the book of the law, and put it in his boſom[f]: and he gave it again to the miniſter; the Chazan[g], who was the miniſter, or ſervant of the congregation, who had the affairs of it upon him, to let in, and bring out, and to order all things; and particularly to take care of the book of the law, and the cheſt, or ark in which it was. If the ſame rule was obſerved in giving and taking the book of any prophet, as the book of the law; then Chriſt gave it to the miniſter, and he received it with his right hand: for ſo it is ſaid[h], "he that gives the "book of the law to his friend, may not give it "but with the right hand; and he that receives it "may not receive it but with the right hand; for "ſo was the giving of it on mount Sinai, according "to Deut. xxxiii. 2." And ſat down; as was the manner of the Jews, when they taught, or preached; ſee the note on Matt. v. 1. and the eyes of all them that were in the ſynagogue were faſtened on him: they looked very wiſhly at him, and were very attentive to what he ſhould ſay, upon ſuch a paſſage of ſcripture, which they knew referred to the Meſſiah; and the rather, as they had known him formerly, merly, and had heard that he was ſaid to be the Meſſiah.

Ver. 21. And he began to ſay unto them, &c.] To preach from thoſe words; the explanation of which he gave, tho' not here recorded, and applied them to himſelf, to whom they belonged, ſaying: this day is this ſcripture fulfilled in your ears; which is as if he ſhould ſay, I am the perſon here ſpoken of; and at this preſent time the Spirit of God is upon me; I am anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, and now preach glad tidings to you, and all the good things here mentioned, and for the ſeveral ends propoſed; and this ſcripture has its full accompliſhment which has been read unto you, and you have heard this day. So the Syriac verſion renders it, דבאדניכון, which is in your ears; that is, which you have now heard. The Jews themſelves acknowledge, that theſe words are ſpoken of the Meſſiah. One of their writers [i] ſays, "theſe "are the words of the prophet with reſpect to the "Meſſiah; for the Meſſiah ſhall ſay ſo, becauſe "the Lord hath anointed me, &c." And ſo ſaid the true Meſſiah Jeſus. Another of them expreſſes himſelf thus [k]: "theſe are the words of the pro-"phet with reſpect to the Meſſiah; for the Meſ-"ſiah ſhall ſay thus, becauſe the Lord hath anointed "me, &c. or they are the words of the prophet "concerning himſelf." And elſewhere 'tis ſaid by them [l], "the holy, bleſſed God will ſend his Meſ-"ſiah to us, and he ſhall be worthy of this, (i. e. "the character of a meek perſon) as it is ſaid, "Iſ. lxi. 1. he hath ſent me to preach glad tidings to "the meek."

Ver. 22. And all bare him witneſs, &c.] That he was right in applying the words to the Meſſiah; but not that he himſelf was the Meſſiah, and that he was right in applying them to himſelf; for they did not believe in him, as appears from what follows: and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth; not ſo much at the matter, the ſum, and ſubſtance of them, as expreſſive of the love, grace, and favour of God ſhewn in the miſſion and unction of the Meſſiah, and in that liberty, deliverance, and ſalvation he was ſent to effect and proclaim; as at the graceful manner in which he delivered himſelf, and the aptneſs of his words, the propriety of his diction, and the majeſty, power, and authority, with which his expreſſions were clothed; and they were more amazed at all this, ſince they knew his parentage and education, and in what manner he had been brought up among them; and therefore it was aſtoniſhing to them, where he had his learning, knowledge, and wiſdom: and they ſaid, is not this Joſeph's ſon? the carpenter, and who was brought up, by him, to his trade, and never learned letters; from whom had he this doctrine? of whom has he learned this way of addreſs, and to ſpeak with ſo much eloquence and propriety, ſince his education was ſo mean, and he has never been at the feet of any of the doctors, or has been brought up in any of the academies and ſchools of learning?

Ver. 23. And he ſaid unto them, ye will ſurely ſay unto me this proverb, &c.] Or parable; for any pithy ſentence, or proverbial expreſſion, was, by the Jews, called a parable: phyſician heal thyſelf; and which was a proverb in uſe with the Jews; and which is ſometimes expreſſed thus, זיל אסי נפשך, go heal thyſelf [m]; and ſometimes in this form, אסיא אסי חגרתך, phyſician, heal thy lameneſs [n]: the meaning of which is, that a man ought to look at home, and take care of himſelf, and of thoſe that belonged to him; and Chriſt was aware that his townſmen would object this to him, that if he was the perſon he was ſaid to be, and could do the miracles and cures which were aſcribed to him, he ought to do ſomething of this kind, at home, among them, who were his townſmen, neighbours, relations, and acquaintance; that is, heal their ſick, lame, blind, leprous, deaf, and dumb: and that this is the ſenſe of it, is manifeſt from what follows, whatſoever we have heard done in Capernaum: a place where Chriſt often was, and where he cured the centurion's ſervant of the palſy, and Peter's wife's mother of a fever, and another man ſick of a palſy, and the woman of her bloody iſſue, and a man that had a withered hand, and where he raiſed Jairus's daughter from the dead: do alſo here in thy country; or city, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions render it: hence it appears, that this was not the firſt of our Lord's miniſtry; he had preached elſewhere, and wrought miracles before he came to Nazareth, and of which his townſmen had heard; and therefore were deſirous that he would do the like among them, if he was able, for they ſeem to be very incredulous, and to queſtion the reports of him, and his ability to perform ſuch things; however, if he could, they thought they had as good a right to his favours and benefits, as any, this being his native place.

Ver. 24. And he ſaid, verily I ſay unto you, &c.] Another proverb in uſe among them, the meaning of which was well known to them, and was very appoſite to the preſent caſe: no prophet is accepted in his own country; ſee the note on Matt. xiii. 57.

Ver. 25. But I tell you of a truth, &c.] Or in truth; it anſwers to באמת, a phraſe often uſed by the Jewiſh writers [o]; and which they ſay [p], whereever, and of whatſoever it is ſpoken, it ſignifies a tradition of Moſes from mount Sinai, and ſo that which is moſt true, ſure, and firm, and to be depended on; and ſuch is what our Lord hereafter delivers; yea, the word, הימנותא, truth, or of a truth, and which is the ſame as in truth, is uſed by the Jews [q], as לשון שבועה, the form of an oath: ſo that theſe words of Chriſt are a ſtrong aſſeveration, and amount to a ſolemn oath with reſpect to what follows: many widows were in Iſrael in the days of Elias; or Elijah the prophet; that is, there were many that were not only widows, but poor widows, and in very famiſhing circumſtances in the land of Iſrael, when Elijah was the prophet of the Lord to that people: and when the heaven was ſhut up three years and ſix months; ſo that no rain deſcended all that time: the ſame is obſerved by James, ch. v. 17. and though the ſpace of time, in which there was no rain, is not ſo clear from the hiſtory of it in the book of Kings; yet, as this is fixed by Chriſt, and his Apoſtle, and there is nothing in the hiſtory that contradicts it, it is to be received without ſcruple: when great famine was throughout all the land of Iſrael; and which ſo long a drought muſt needs bring.

Ver. 26. But unto none of them was Elias ſent, &c.] That is, to none of the poor widows in the land of Iſrael was the prophet ſent, to ſupply them with food, and relieve them in their famiſhing circumſtances, cumſtances, as might moſt reaſonably have been expected: ſave unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon; which in 1 Kings xvii. 10. is called Zarephath; and by the Septuagint there, Sarepta of Sidon, as here. Pliny[r] ſpeaks of it by the ſame name, and reckons it to Sidon: unto a woman that was a widow: ſhe is ſaid, by the Jews[s], to be the mother of Jonah the prophet. Our Lord meant to obſerve, by this inſtance, as by the following, that God beſtows his favours on perſons in a ſovereign way, and ſometimes upon the moſt unlikely; as in a time of famine, he overlooked the poor widows in Iſrael, his peculiar people, and ſent his prophet to a Gentile woman in one of the cities of Sidon; and therefore they ſhould ceaſe to wonder if he wrought his miracles in other places, and not in his own country; ſince this was agreeable to the divine procedure in other caſes, eſpecially ſince they were a cavilling and unbelieving people. The Jews ſay[t], that in all that generation there was not found any one that was worthy, as this woman.

Ver. 27. And many lepers were in Iſrael, &c.] The leproſy was a diſeaſe very common among the Jews; hence thoſe laws concerning it in Lev. xiii. and xiv. and it ſeems, by this account, that it was very prevalent, in the time of Eliſeus the prophet; that is, the prophet Eliſha; who, by the Septuagint, in 1 Kings xix. 16. and, in other places, is called Eliſaie: and none of them was cleanſed; from their leproſy, by any direction of the prophet, ſaving Naaman the Syrian; or but Naaman, who was not an Iſraelite, but a Syrian: he was cleanſed and cured of his leproſy, being ordered by Eliſha to dip himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, which he did, and was healed, 2 Kings v. 14.

Ver. 28. And all they in the ſynagogue, &c.] The ruler and miniſter, and the whole multitude of the common people that were met together there for worſhip; and who before were amazed at his eloquence, and the gracefulneſs of his delivery; and could not but approve of his miniſtry, tho' they could not account for it, how he ſhould come by his qualifications for it: when they heard thoſe things; theſe two inſtances of Elijah and Eliſha, the one ſupplying the wants of a Sidonian woman, and the other healing a Syrian leper, when no notice were taken by them of poor widows and lepers in Iſrael: were filled with wrath; for by theſe inſtances they perceived, that they were compared to the Iſraelites in the times of wicked Ahab and Jezebel; and that no miracles were to be wrought among them, or benefits conferr'd on them, tho' they were his townſmen; yea, that the Gentiles were preferr'd unto them: and indeed, the calling of the Gentiles was here plainly intimated, which was always ungrateful and provoking to the Jews; and it was ſuggeſted, that the favours of God, and grace of the Meſſiah, are diſpenſed in a ſovereign and diſcriminating way, than which nothing is more offenſive to carnal minds.

Ver. 29. And roſe up, &c.] In great wrath, and in a noiſy and tumultuous manner, before the ſervice was well over, and without being regularly diſmiſſed: and thruſt him out of the city; firſt out of the ſynagogue, and then out of their city, as unworthy to be in it, tho' an inhabitant of it; and as if he had done ſomething deſerving of death, and therefore to be puniſhed as a malefactor without the city: and led him unto the brow of the hill; the edge of it, where it run out, and hung over the precipice: whereon their city was built; ſo that it was a city upon an hill, and very viſible, to which Chriſt may allude in Matt. v. 14. That they might caſt him down headlong; and break him to pieces: in this manner ten thouſand Edomites were deſtroyed by the Jews, in the times of Amaziah, 2 Chron. xxv. 12. though this was not an uſual way with the Jews of putting perſons to death, as with ſome other nations[u]: their four capital puniſhments were ſtoning, ſtrangling, burning, and killing with the ſword[w]: nor did the inhabitants of Nazareth proceed in any judicial manner with Chriſt, but hurried him away, in order to deſtroy him, without any formal proceſs, in the manner the zealots did: though to put any man to death, or to inflict any puniſhment on a perſon on the ſabbath-day, as this was, was contrary to their own canon, which runs thus[x]; "they don't inflict puniſhment "on the ſabbath-day, even though it is the puniſhment of an affirmative precept; they don't beat "one that is guilty, nor put to death, as it is ſaid, "Exod. xxxv. 3. ye ſhall kindle no fire thoroughout "your habitations upon the ſabbath-day: this is a "caution to the Sanhedrim, that they do not burn "on the ſabbath-day he that is condemned to burning; and this is the law with reſpect to any one "that is liable to the other puniſhments." But theſe men, without any regard to the place where they were, and the worſhip they were concerned in, and the day of the ſabbath which then was, riſe up in great wrath and fury, and without any ſhew of juſtice, and in the moſt brutiſh and barbarous manner attempt to take away the life of Chriſt.

Ver. 30. But he paſſing through the midſt of them, &c.] Either in ſo ſtrong and powerful a manner, and with ſo much ſwiftneſs, that being once out of their hands, they could not lay hold on him again; or elſe he put on another form, or made himſelf inviſible to them; or he held their eyes that they could not ſee him, or know him, as in Luke xxiv. 16. however it was, he made uſe of, and ſhewed his divine power; and which he did, becauſe his time to die was not yet come, nor was he to die ſuch a death: and this alſo ſhows, that when he did die, he laid down his life freely and voluntarily, ſince he could then have exerted his power, and delivered himſelf out of the hands of his enemies, as now: and went his way; from Nazareth elſewhere; nor do we read of his returning there any more.

Ver. 31. And came down to Capernaum, &c.] Which was, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, ſixteen miles or more from Nazareth; and Chriſt may be ſaid to come down to it, becauſe of the ſituation of Nazareth, which was upon an hill: a city of Galilee; of lower Galilee, near the ſea of Galilee: and taught them on the ſabbath-days; that is, he went into the ſynagogue at Capernaum, on the ſabbath-days, whenever he was there, and taught the inhabitants, explained ſome paſſage or other in the Old Teſtament, as he had done at Nazareth, and inſtructed them in the doctrines of the Goſpel.

Ver. 32. And they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine, &c.] At the matter of it, as well as the manner in which it was delivered, it being ſo different from the Scribes and Phariſees, they had been uſed to: for his word was with power; he ſpake with great fervency, majeſty, and authority, and not with coldneſs and indifference, and dependance on the ſenſe and authority of others, as their teachers did; and beſides, ſuch power went along with the word, that it reached their hearts; and as the Perſic verſion ſion renders it, he penetrated them with it; and he alſo confirmed it by powerful operations, by miraculous works, ſuch as caſting out devils, and healing diſeaſes, of which an account follows.

Ver. 33. And in the ſynagogue there was a man, &c.] That is, in the ſynagogue, at Capernaum, as Chriſt was there teaching, on one of the ſabbath-days before-mentioned; there was a certain man, which had a ſpirit of an unclean devil: who was poſſeſſed with the devil, who is by nature and practice unclean; and was filled with the ſpirit of the devil, with a ſpirit of divination, and was acted by him, to impoſe upon the people; he influenced his mind as an enthuſiaſt, as well as poſſeſſed his body: and this was on the ſabbath-day; whereas the Jews ſay [y], that "ſatan and the evil dæmon, flee on the ſabbath-day to the mountains of darkneſs, and don't appear all the ſabbath-day, becauſe that day is holy, and they are unclean; but in the evening of the ſabbath, they prepare themſelves, and meet the children of men, and hurt them." And cried out with a loud voice; ſee the note on Mark i. 23.

Ver. 34. Saying, let us alone, &c.] Not that there were more ſpirits in him than one, as the whole account ſhows; but he includes the reſt of the devils in that country; ſee the note on Mark i. 24.

Ver. 35. And Jeſus rebuked him, &c.] Not the man, but the unclean ſpirit; or that dæmon, as the Perſic verſion reads it: ſaying, hold thy peace, or be thou muzzled, as the word ſignifies, and come out of him; ſee the note on Matt. i. 25. and when the devil had thrown him in the midſt; in the midſt of them, as the Arabic verſion adds; that is, in the midſt of the people that were in the ſynagogue; or, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, in the midſt of the ſynagogue, where he threw him into convulſive fits, and left him: he came out of him, and hurt him not; tho' he ſadly convulſed him, and put him to great pain, yet he did not wound him in any part of his body, or take away the uſe of any of his limbs; and much leſs hurt his ſoul, ſo as to deſtroy it; all which was deſired and intended by him, but was hindered by Chriſt; ſee the note on Mark i. 26.

Ver. 36. And they were all amazed, &c.] The people in the ſynagogue; they were aſtoniſhed at his doctrine before, and now at his miracles: and ſpake among themſelves; as they were in the ſynagogue, what a word is this? meaning, either what ſort of doctrine is this which is attended with ſuch power and miracles; or what a word of command is this, hold thy peace, and come out of him? and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, what is this mandatory, or commanding word? to which agrees the Syriac verſion, rendering it with the following clauſe thus; what is this word, that with authority and power it commands the unclean ſpirits, and they come out? ſee the note on Mark i. 27.

Ver. 37. And the fame of him went out, &c.] From hence, on account of his diſpoſſeſſing this unclean ſpirit, which ſeems to be the firſt inſtance of this kind: into every place of the country round about; into every city, town, and village in Galilee, and even into all places round about Galilee; ſee Mark i. 28.

Ver. 38. And he aroſe out of the ſynagogue, &c.] That is, when he had diſpoſſeſſed the unclean ſpirit, he roſe up, and went out of the ſynagogue: and entered into Simon's houſe; the houſe of Simon Peter, and which was alſo Andrew's; and in Beza's ancient copy, and in one of Stephens's, it is added, and of Andrew; who, tho' they were both natives of Bethſaida, yet, it ſeems, had an houſe at Capernaum, whither Chriſt went of his own accord, or by an invitation given him: and Simon's wife's mother was taken with a great fever. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, with great fevers. The fever is "a diſeaſe, or rather claſs of diſeaſes, whoſe characteriſtic is a preternatural heat felt thro' the whole body, or, at leaſt, the principal parts thereof, attended with other ſymptoms.——One defines a fever, a ſtrenuous endeavour, or effort of nature to throw off ſome morbific matter, that greatly incommodes the body.——Another, an augmented velocity of the blood; others, a fermentation of the blood, accompanied with a quick pulſe, and exceſſive heat.——The cauſes of fevers are innumerable, and the diſeaſe even often ariſes in the ſoundeſt bodies, where there was no previous morbific apparatus, as cachochymia, plethora, &c. but merely from a change of air, food, or other alteration in the non-naturals.——A fever, one obſerves, is an inſeparable companion of an inflammation. The ſymptoms are many: every fever, ariſing from any internal cauſe, is attended with a quick pulſe, and unuſual heat at different times, and in different degrees. Where theſe are intenſe, the fever is acute, where remiſs, ſlow. The diſeaſe begins almoſt always with a ſenſe of chillneſs, and in its progreſs is chiefly diſtinguiſhed by the velocity of the pulſe: ſo that a too quick contraction of the heart, with an increaſed reſiſtance, or impulſe againſt the capillaries, furniſhes the proper idea of a fever [z]." The fever Peter's wife's mother lay ill of, is ſaid to be a great one; which circumſtance is the rather mentioned, to illuſtrate the miraculous cure of it by Chriſt; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 14. And they beſought him for her; either his diſciples Peter, Andrew, James, and John, who were all preſent, or the other relations and friends of the ſick perſon, which were in the houſe; who having heard of his caſting out the unclean ſpirit in the ſynagogue, believed that he had power to heal this diſeaſe; and therefore intreat him, for her ſake, and upon her account, that he would reſtore her health.

Ver. 39. And he ſtood over her, &c.] At her head, as the Perſic verſion reads: he inclined himſelf towards her, to ſee how ſhe did, and to take her by the hand, and lift her up; and rebuked the fever. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, her fever, that which was upon her: and it left her, as Mark ſays, immediately; as ſoon as ever he had touched her hand, and rebuked the fever, and bid it be gone: and immediately ſhe aroſe, and miniſtred unto them; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 15.

Ver. 40. Now when the ſun was ſetting, &c.] And ſo the ſabbath was over; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 16. all they that had any ſick, with divers diſeaſes, brought them unto him; that is, as many of the inhabitants of Capernaum as had ſick perſons in their houſes, let their diſeaſes be what they would, brought them to Chriſt in Simon's houſe; which ſabbath being over, they might do conſiſtent with their laws, and the traditions of the elders, and without any juſt offence to the Scribes and Phariſees, who were tenacious of them; and they were encouraged to do ſo, partly thro' the diſpoſſeſſing the unclean ſpirit in their ſynagogue that day, which many of them had been witneſſes of; and partly thro' the cure of Peter's wife's mother, which they had heard of: and he laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them; without the uſe of medicine, by the mere impoſition of his hands; which was accompanied with ſuch power and virtue from him, as to remove, at once, every diſeaſe; nor did he refuſe any perſon, how unworthy ſoever they might be in themſelves, and how obſtinate their diſeaſe might be.

Ver. 41. And devils alſo came out of many, &c.] Not willingly, nor of themſelves, but at the word and command of Chriſt, who ordered them to depart: crying out, and ſaying; as they left the bodies of men, and not with any good-will to Chriſt: thou art Chriſt; the true Meſſiah, that was of old promiſed and propheſied of, and has been long expected to come: the Son of God; the only-begotten Son of God, poſſeſſed of the ſame perfections with God his Father; and particularly of almighty power, of which they were convinced by his diſpoſſeſſing them: and he rebuking them, ſuffered them not to ſpeak; for he needed not their teſtimony, nor did he chuſe to be made known by them: for they knew that he was Chriſt, or that they knew that he was Chriſt; ſo the Syriac verſion: they certainly did know that he was the Meſſiah, partly by the voice from heaven at his baptiſm, and partly by his power over them: but Chriſt would not ſuffer them to ſay that he was the Meſſiah, or that they knew him to be ſo; either becauſe the time was not come for ſuch a declaration to be made, or they were not the proper perſons to make it; and leſt ſuch a publication, by them, ſhould be made a handle of by the Scribes and Phariſees, to ſay that he had ſociety with devils, and by them caſt them out.

Ver. 42. And when it was day, &c.] The day after, as the Perſic verſion renders it; at the dawning, or break of day, as the Syriac. He roſe a great while before it was day, as Mark ſays, ch. i. 35. but did not go out till it was day, or till day was coming on, when he departed from Peter's houſe, and from Capernaum: and went into a deſert place; for the ſake of ſolitude, that he might be retired from company, and have an opportunity of privately praying to God: and the people ſought, and came unto him: they firſt went to Simon's houſe, and not finding him there, ſought for him elſewhere: and when they underſtood where he was, they came to him, and ſtayed him that he ſhould not depart from them; they laid hold on him, and held him, and did all they could to perſuade him to abide with them conſtantly, and not think of removing from them: tho' perhaps this was not ſo much from love to Chriſt's perſon and preſence, or any regard to his miniſtry, and the good and welfare of their immortal ſouls, as on account of the miracles he wrought, and the corporal benefits he beſtowed on them.

Ver. 43. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] In anſwer to their importunate requeſts: I muſt preach the kingdom of God to other cities alſo; as well as to Capernaum; and tho' they did not expreſs their deſire of his continuance with them, in order to preach the Goſpel to them; yet Chriſt ſignifies, that a principal part of his work lay in preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, the Goſpel-diſpenſation on earth, the doctrines and ordinances of it, as well as the things which relate to the kingdom of glory; as what is the ſaints meetneſs for it, their regeneration, and their right unto it, which lies in his righteouſneſs; and that as he had preached theſe things at Capernaum, there was a neceſſity upon him to preach them in other cities of Galilee and Judea: for therefore am I ſent; as he was by his heavenly father, and had himſelf alſo undertook and engaged to do it.

Ver. 44. And he preached in the ſynagogues of Galilee.] In the ſeveral ſynagogues that were in different cities and towns throughout all Galilee.

CHAP. V.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs, that as the people preſſed upon him, &c.] As Chriſt went thro' Galilee, and preached in the ſynagogues there, great crouds of people attended on him, and they followed him wherever he went; and ſo large were their numbers, and ſo very eager were they to ſee him, and hear him, that they were even troubleſome to him, and bore hard upon him, and were ready to preſs him down, tho' they had no ill deſign upon him, but only to hear the word of God; the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament explained, and the doctrines of the Goſpel preached; and which were preached by him, as never were before or ſince, and in ſuch a manner as were not by the Scribes and Phariſees; and both the matter and manner of his miniſtry drew a vaſt concourſe of people after him: he ſtood by the lake of Genneſareth; the ſame with the ſea of Chinnereth, Numb. xxxiv. 11. Joſh. xii. 3. and xiii. 27. where the Targums of Onkelos, Jonathan, and the Jeruſalem, call it, ימא דגינוסר, the ſea of Genuſar, or Genneſareth: and ſo it is elſewhere called [a], and is the ſame which is called the ſea of Galilee, and of Tiberias, John vi. 1. and xxi. 1. and is, by other writers [b], as here, called the lake of Genneſareth, and ſaid to be ſixteen miles long, and ſix broad. Joſephus ſays [c], 'tis forty furlongs broad, and an hundred long. The Jews ſay [d], that "the "holy, bleſſed God created ſeven ſeas, but choſe "none of them all, but the ſea of Genneſareth." And indeed, it was a place choſen by Chriſt, and honoured, and made famous by him, by his preaching at it, his miracles upon it, and ſhewing himſelf there after his reſurrection.

Ver. 2. And ſaw two ſhips ſtanding by the lake, &c.] Or two fiſhing-boats; which were, as the Arabic verſion renders it, detained by anchors at the ſhore of the lake; the one belonging to Peter and Andrew, and the other to Zebedee, and his two ſons, James and John: but the fiſhermen were gone out of them; that is, either the above perſons, or their ſervants: and were waſhing their nets; on ſhore; they having gathered a great deal of ſoil and filthineſs, but had caught no fiſh; and therefore were cleanſing their nets, in order to lay them up, finding it to be in vain to make any further attempts with them at preſent; and which conſidered, makes the following miracle the more illuſtrious.

Ver. 3. And he entered into one of the ſhips which was Simon's, &c.] Simon Peter's, and Andrew his brother's, who were both together at this time, tho' the laſt not is here mentioned: and prayed him that he would thruſt out a little from the land: as Simon was the owner of the veſſel, Chriſt deſired him; he aſked the favour of him to put off a little way from ſhore; tho' the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, he commanded him, being his Lord and maſter. To which the Syriac and Perſic verſions agree; only they make the orders to be given not to Simon ſingly, but to others, to all in the boat; the former rendering it, and he ſaid, or ordered, that they ſhould carry him a little way from the dry land to the waters; and the latter thus, and ſaid, carry ye the ſhip from dry land a little into the ſea. And which adds, agreeable to the ſenſe enough, tho' it is not in the text, when they had executed his command; had done as he intreated, or ordered, and put off the veſſel a little way from the ſhore: he ſat down and taught the people out of the ſhip; for the boat was not carried neither out of ſight, nor beyond the hearing of the people: this method Chriſt took at another time, and that for conveniency, as now; ſee Matt. xiii. 1, 2, 3. and whereas he ſat while he taught, this was according to the then cuſtom of the times with the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. v. 1.

Ver. 4. Now when he had left ſpeaking, &c.] Teaching the people, and preaching the word of God unto them out of the ſhip, as they ſtood on the ſhore before him. He ſaid unto Simon, launch out into the deep; he ſpoke to Simon Peter, being the maſter of the veſſel, to thruſt it out, or put it off further into deep water, more convenient for fiſhing; and let down your nets for a draught; of fiſhes: his meaning is, that he would give orders to his ſervants, to put out the veſſel to ſea, to take their nets and caſt them into the ſea, in order to take and draw up a quantity of fiſh, which was their buſineſs.

Ver. 5. And Simon anſwering ſaid unto him, maſter, &c.] Or Rabbi, as the Syriac verſion renders it: he knew him to be the Meſſiah, the king of Iſrael, and a teacher ſent from God: we have toiled all the night, and have taken nothing; which carries in it an objection to what Chriſt adviſed and directed to: they had been fiſhing that night, which was the beſt time for catching fiſh; and they had been at it all the night, and had laboured hard; and were even fatigued, and quite wearied out, and what was moſt diſcouraging of all, their labour was in vain; they had catched nothing: nevertheleſs at thy word I will let down the net; which ſhewed faith in Chriſt, and obedience to him: thus the faithful preachers of the Goſpel, ſometimes labour and toil in the miniſtry of the word a great while, with little or no ſucceſs; and are diſcouraged from going on, and would be tempted to leave off, were it not for the commiſſion and word of command they have received from Chriſt, which they dare not be diſobedient to; and for the word of promiſe he has given them, to be with them, on which they depend.

Ver. 6. And when they had done this, &c.] Had put the ſhip out further to ſea, and had let down their net: they incloſed a great multitude of fiſh; in their net, which by the ſecret divine power of Chriſt, were gathered together juſt in that place, where by his order they caſt the net: and their net brake; with the weight and number of the fiſhes, yet not ſo as to let the fiſh out; the Arabic verſion reads, it was within a little that their nets were broke: they were juſt upon breaking, the draught was ſo numerous, the ſtruggling ſo great, and the weight ſo heavy.

Ver. 7. And they beckened unto their partners, &c.] Zebedee, and his two ſons, James and John; ſee ver. 10. who were at ſome diſtance from them, probably lay at anchor near the ſhore, not having put out to ſea when the other veſſel did, and ſo were not within call; but they were obliged to make ſigns to them, and becken with their hands to come to them: which were in the other ſhip; mentioned in ver. 2. which lay by the ſhore: that they ſhould come and help them; take up the net, and take the fiſh out of it: and they came and filled both the ſhips; with the fiſhes they took out of the net, as full as they could hold, and which they were not well able to carry: ſo that they began to ſink; or were almoſt immerſed, as Beza's ancient copy, and another manuſcript, with the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions read; the veſſels were ſo heavy laden, with the vaſt quantity of fiſh that was taken, that they were juſt ready to ſink with their burden.

Ver. 8. When Simon Peter ſaw it, &c.] The multitude of fiſh that was taken, and both veſſels filled with them, and the danger they were in of ſinking, he fell down at Jeſus knees. The Arabic and Perſic verſions read, at his feet; he fell on his knees before him, and threw himſelf proſtrate at his feet, as a worſhipper of him, and a ſupplicant unto him: ſaying, depart from me, for I am a ſinful man, O Lord; this he ſaid, not as though the preſence of Chriſt was burdenſome, or diſagreeable to him; but as one amazed at the greatneſs of the miracle wrought, and ſtruck with the ſenſe of the power of Chriſt, put forth therein; and with the greatneſs of his majeſty ſo near him; and as conſcious to himſelf of his own vileneſs and unworthineſs to be in his preſence; and ſo the Perſic verſion adds, and which may ſerve as a comment, and am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt be with me: he had much the ſame ſenſe of things as the centurion had, Matt. viii. 8. and when it is conſidered how gracious perſons have been ſtruck with awe and fear, and a conſciouſneſs of ſin, weakneſs, and unworthineſs, at the appearance of an angel, as Zacharias, Luke i. 12. and the ſhepherds, ch. ii. 9. yea, at the preſence of an holy man of God, as the widow of Sarepta at Elijah, ſaying much the ſame as Peter does here, 1 Kings xvii. 18. it need not be wondered at, that Peter ſhould ſo expreſs himſelf, in theſe circumſtances.

Ver. 9. For he was aſtoniſhed, and all that were with him, &c.] His brother Andrew, and the ſervants they had with them to manage the veſſel, and caſt the nets: at the draught of the fiſhes they had taken; being ſo large and numerous, as the like was never ſeen, nor known by them before.

Ver. 10. And ſo was alſo James and John the ſons of Zebedee, &c.] Who were in the other ſhip, and had been beckened to them to come and help them, and did come, and were witneſſes of the miracle: which were partners with Simon; were ſharers with him in loſs and gain in the fiſhing-trade; theſe were equally aſtoniſhed at the miracle, as Simon and his brother, and the men that were in the boat with them, where Jeſus was: and Jeſus ſaid unto Simon; who was at his knees, and expreſſed his dread of his majeſty, and the conſternation of mind he was in particularly: fear not; don't be afraid of me, I ſhall do thee no harm, nor ſhall the boats ſink, or any damage come to any perſon, or to the veſſels, nor be ſo much amazed and affrighted, at the multitude of the fiſh taken: from henceforth thou ſhalt catch men; alive, as the word ſignifies, or unto life, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it; thou ſhalt caſt the net of the Goſpel, and be the happy inſtrument of drawing many perſons out of the depths of ſin and miſery, in which they are plunged, into the

the way of life and ſalvation; and which was greatly verified, in the converſion of three thouſand at one caſt, under one ſermon of his, Acts ii. 41.

Ver. 11. And when they had brought their ſhips to land, &c.] Both Simon Peter's, and the other in which his partners were, and which were laden with fiſh: they forſook all; even all their fiſh, which they doubtleſs might have made much money of, and their nets, and their ſhips, and their ſervants, and their relations, and friends: and followed him; Chriſt; and became his diſciples, even all four of them, Peter, Andrew, James, and John.

Ver. 12. And it came to paſs when he was in a certain city, &c.] Or near it, hard by it, very probably Capernaum; ſee Matt. viii. 1, 2, 5. Behold a man full of leproſy; a diſeaſe to which the Jews were very incident, and concerning which, many laws and rules are given, in Levit. xiii. and xiv. The ſymptoms of the ancient lepra, as laid down by Galen, Aretæus, Pontanus, Ægineta, Cardan, Varanda, Gordon, Pharæus, and others, are as follows. The patient's voice is hoarſe, and comes rather through the noſe than the mouth; the blood full of little white ſhining bodies, like grains of millet, which upon filtration, ſeparate themſelves from it; the ſerum is ſcabious, and deſtitute of its natural humidity, inſomuch that ſalt applied to it, does not diſſolve; it is ſo dry, that vinegar poured on it boils; and is ſo ſtrongly bound together by little imperceptible threads, that calcined lead thrown into it ſwims. The face reſembles a coal half extinct, unctuous, ſhining, and bloated, with frequent hard knobs, green at bottom, and white at top. The hair is ſhort, ſtiff, and brinded; and not to be torn off, without bringing away ſome of the rotten fleſh, to which it adheres; if it grows again, either on the head or chin, it is always white: athwart the forehead, run large wrinkles or furrows, from one temple to the other; the eyes red and inflamed, and ſhine like thoſe of a cat; the ears ſwoln and red, eaten with ulcers towards the bottom, and encompaſſed with little glands; the noſe ſunk, becauſe of the rotting of the cartilage; the tongue dry and black, ſwollen, ulcerated, divided with furrows, and ſpotted with grains of white; the ſkin covered with ulcers, that die and revive on each other, or with white ſpots, or ſcales like a fiſh; it is rough and inſenſible, and when cut, inſtead of blood, yields a ſanious liquor: it arrives in time, to ſuch a degree of inſenſibility, that the wriſt, feet, or even the large tendon, may be pierced with a needle, without the patient's feeling any pain; at laſt the noſe, fingers, toes, and even privy members, fall off entire; and by a death peculiar to each of them, anticipate that of the patient: it is added, that the body is ſo hot, that a freſh apple held in the hand an hour, will be dried and wrinkled, as if expoſed to the ſun for a week[*]. Think now what a miſerable deplorable object this man was, ſaid to be full of it. Between this diſeaſe and ſin, there is a very great likeneſs. This diſeaſe is a very filthy one, and of a defiling nature, by the ceremonial law; under which it was conſidered rather as an uncleanneſs, than as a diſeaſe; the perſon attended with it, was pronounced unclean by the prieſt, and was put out of the camp, and out of the cities and walled towns, that he might not defile others; and was obliged to put a covering on his upper lip, and cry unclean, unclean, to acknowledge his pollution, and that others might ſhun him: all mankind, by reaſon of ſin, are by the Lord pronounced filthy; and by their evil actions, not only defile themſelves, but others; evil communications, corrupt good manners; and when they are made ſenſible, freely own that their righteouſneſſes are as filthy rags, and they themſelves as an unclean thing: it is a very nauſeous and loathſome diſeaſe, as is ſin; it is abominable to God, and renders men abominable in his ſight; it cauſes the ſinner himſelf, when convinced of it, to loath and abhor himſelf: David calls his ſin a loathſome diſeaſe, Pſal. xxxviii. 7. it is of a ſpreading nature: this was a ſign of it, if it did not ſpread, it was only a ſcab; if it ſpread, it was a leproſy, Lev. xiii. 5, 6, 7, 8. Sin has ſpread itſelf over all mankind, and over all the powers and faculties of the ſoul, and members of the body; there's no place free of it: and as the leproſy is of a conſuming nature, it eats and waſtes the fleſh, ſee Numb. xii. 12. 2 Kings v. 10. ſo ſin eats like a canker, and brings ruin and deſtruction upon men, both in ſoul and body. This diſeaſe was incurable by medicine; perſons that had it were never ſent to a phyſician, but to a prieſt; and what he did was only this, he looked upon it, and if it was a clear caſe, he declared the perſon unclean; and if it was doubtful, he ſhut him up for ſeven days, and then inſpected him again; and after all he could not cure him; this was the work of God, 2 Kings v. 7. All which ſhews the nature and uſe of the law, which ſhuts men up, concludes them under ſin, and by which they have knowledge of it, but no healing: the law heals none, it is the killing letter, the miniſtration of condemnation and death; Chriſt only, by his blood and ſtripes, heals the diſeaſe of ſin, and cleanſes from it. There is one thing in the law of the leproſy very ſurprizing, and that is, that if there was any quick raw fleſh, or any ſound fleſh in the place where the leproſy was, the man was pronounced unclean; but if the leproſy covered all his ſkin, and all his fleſh, then he was pronounced clean: this intimates, that he that thinks he has ſome good thing in him, and fancies himſelf ſound and well, and truſts to his own works of righteouſneſs, he is not juſtified in the ſight of God; but if a man acknowledges that there is no ſoundneſs in his fleſh, that in him, that is, in his fleſh, dwells no good thing, but that his ſalvation is alone, by the grace and mercy of God, ſuch a man is juſtified by faith in Chriſt Jeſus: the parable of the Phariſee and publican, will illuſtrate this, Luke xviii. 10—14. Who ſeeing Jeſus, fell on his face, and beſought him, ſaying, Lord, if thou wilt, thou canſt make me clean; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 2. Chriſt could cure lepers, and did; and which was a proof of his Meſſiahſhip, and is given among the ſigns of it, to John's diſciples, Matt. xi. 5. and as there is a likeneſs between the leproſy and ſin, ſo between the cleanſing of a leper under the law, and the healing of a ſinner by Chriſt: for the cleanſing of a leper, two birds were to be taken clean and alive, which were both typical of Chriſt, and pointed at the meekneſs of his human nature, his innocence, harmleſſneſs, and purity, and that he had a life to lay down; one of theſe was to be killed, in an earthen veſſel over running water, ſhewing that Chriſt muſt be killed, his blood muſt be ſhed for the cleanſing of leprous ſinners; the earthen veſſel denoted his human nature, his fleſh, in which he was put to death; and the running water, ſignified the purifying nature of his blood, and the continued virtue of it, to cleanſe from all ſin; and the blood and the water being mixed together, may put us in mind of the blood and water which flowed from the ſide of Chriſt, when pierced with the ſpear; which was an emblem of our juſtification and ſanctification being both from him, on account of which, he is ſaid to come both by water and by blood, 1 John v. 6. The other bird after it was dipped with the cedar wood, ſcarlet and hyſſop in the blood of the ſlain bird, was let go alive; which typified the reſurrection of Chriſt, who was put to death in the fleſh, and quickened in the ſpirit; and who roſe again, for the juſtification of his people from all ſin: the cedar wood, ſcarlet, and hyſſop, which were uſed in the cleanſing of the leper, may either relate to the ſufferings, and death, and blood of Chriſt; the ſcarlet wool may denote the bloody ſufferings of Chriſt, thro' which he was red in his apparel; the cedar wood, may ſignify the incorruptibleneſs and preciouſneſs of the blood of Chriſt, and the hyſſop the purging virtue of it; or elſe theſe three may have regard to the three principal graces of the Spirit of God, which have to do with, and are influenced by the ſin-cleanſing blood of Chriſt: the cedar wood may ſignify the incorruptible and precious grace of faith; the green hyſſop, the lively grace of hope; and the ſcarlet, the flaming grace of love, when it is in its full exerciſe: or elſe the grace of faith, by which dealing with the blood of Chriſt, the heart is purified, is only meant; ſignified by cedar wood, for its permanency; by ſcarlet, for its concern with the crimſon blood of Chriſt; by which ſins, though as ſcarlet, are made white as wool; and by hyſſop, for its being an humble and lowly grace: now the cedar ſtick, with the ſcarlet wool, and bunch of hyſſop bound unto it, was uſed to ſprinkle the blood of the bird upon the leper ſeven times, when he was pronounced clean; and expreſſes the inſtrumentality of faith, in the application of the blood of Chriſt for cleanſing: though after this, the leper was to ſhave off all his hair, and waſh himſelf and cloaths in water; ſuggeſting to us, that holineſs of life and converſation which ſhould follow, upon cleanſing through faith in the blood of Chriſt.

[*] Chambers's Cyclopædia in the word leproſy.

Ver. 13. And he put forth his hand and touched him, &c.] Having compaſſion on him, and commiſerating his ſad caſe: ſaying, I will, be thou clean; and immediately the leproſy departed from him; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 3.

Ver. 14. And he charged him to tell no man, &c.] Of his cure, and by whom he received it; but go nd ſhew thyſelf to the prieſt. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, to the prieſts: and offer for thy cleanſing, according as Moſes has commanded, for a teſtimony unto them; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 4.

Ver. 15. But ſo much the more went there a fame abroad of him, &c.] For the more he charged the man to keep ſilence, the more he blazed it abroad, being elated with the cure he received, and filled with gratitude to his benefactor; ſee Mark i. 45. And great multitudes came together to hear; him, or from him, as the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions add; to hear the doctrines of the Goſpel preached by him: and to be healed by him of their infirmities; their bodily weakneſſes and diſorders.

Ver. 16. And he withdrew himſelf into the wilderneſs, &c.] Into a deſart place, that he might have reſt from the fatigues of preaching and healing diſeaſes; and being alone, and free from company, might have an opportunity for private prayer to God, r ſo it follows: and prayed; this is to be underſtood of Chriſt, as man: as God, he is the object prayer, and petitions are often addreſſed unto him; and as mediator, he offers up the prayers of l ſaints, and preſents them to his Father; which are acceptable to him, through the incenſe of his mediation; and as man, he prayed himſelf: what he now prayed for, is not known; ſometimes he prayed for his diſciples, and for all that ſhould believe; for their converſion, ſanctification, union, perſeverance, and glorification; and ſometimes for himſelf, that the cup might paſs from him, and he be ſaved from death; but always with ſubmiſſion to the will of his Father.

Ver. 17. And it came to paſs on a certain day, &c.] When he was at Capernaum, as appears from Mark ii. 1. As he was teaching; in the houſe where ſuch numbers were gathered together, to hear the word of God preached by him, that there was not room for them, neither within the houſe, nor about the door, Mark ii. 2. That there were Phariſees and doctors of the law ſitting by; who were ſometimes called Scribes, and ſometimes lawyers, and were generally of the ſect of the Phariſees: which were come out of every town of Galilee, and Judea, and Jeruſalem: having heard much of his doctrine and miracles, they came from all parts to watch and obſerve him, and to take all opportunities and advantages againſt him, that they might expoſe him to the people: and the power of the Lord was preſent to heal them; not the Phariſees and doctors of the law, who did not come to be healed by him, either in body or mind; but the multitude, ſome of whom came to hear his doctrine, and others to be healed of their infirmities, ver. 15. The Perſic verſion reads the words thus, and from all the villages of Galilee, and from Judea, and from Jeruſalem, multitudes came, and the power of God was preſent to heal them.

Ver. 18. And behold, men brought in a bed a man which was taken with a palſy, &c.] Four men brought him, as Mark ſays, ch. ii. 3. and which the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes here: and they ſought means to bring him in; into the houſe where Jeſus was: and to lay him before him; at his feet, in hope of moving his compaſſion, and to obtain a cure of him: of the nature of this diſeaſe, and of the ſort which this man's ſeems to be, ſee the note on Mark ii. 3.

Ver. 19. And when they could not find by what way, &c.] As by the door, or in at a window of the houſe: they might bring him in; to Jeſus, in the houſe: becauſe of the multitude; which was about the door, and all the fore part of the houſe: they went upon the houſe top; by a ladder, or pair of ſtairs, which uſually were on the outſide of houſes; ſee the note on Matt. xxiv. 17. the houſes of the Jews being flat roofed: and let him down through the tiling with his couch, into the midſt before Jeſus; that is, they untiled the roof, or took away the tiles which were about the trap-door, or paſſage, into the inſide of the houſe; and ſo making it wider, let down the man upon his couch, or bed, into the middle of the room and of the people, juſt before Jeſus, where he was ſitting; ſee the note on Mark ii. 4.

Ver. 20. And when he ſaw their faith, &c.] That is, Jeſus, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it; when he ſaw the faith both of the paralytic man, and of the men that brought him, which was ſhewn in the pains they took, and trouble they were at, in getting him to him; he ſaid unto him. The Vulgate Latin only reads, he ſaid; but the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions, ſtill more fully expreſs the ſenſe, rendering it, he ſaid to the paralytic man; and the Ethiopic verſion, he ſaid to the infirm man; as follows: man, thy ſins are forgiven thee. The other Evangeliſts ſay, he ſaid ſon; perhaps he uſed both words: however, all agree that he pronounced the forgiveneſs of ſins, which were the cauſe of his diſeaſe; and which being removed, the effect muſt ceaſe; ſo that he had healing both for ſoul and body; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 2.

Ver. 21. And the Scribes and the Phariſees began to reaſon, &c.] To think and ſay within themſelves, and it may be to one another, in a private manner: ſaying, who is this which ſpeaketh blaſphemies? what vain boaſter, and blaſpheming creature is this, who aſſumes that to himſelf, which is the prerogative of God? Who can forgive ſins but God alone? Againſt whom they are committed, whoſe law is tranſgreſſed, and his will diſobeyed, and his juſtice injured and affronted. Certain it is, that none can forgive ſins but God; not any of the angels in heaven, or men on earth; not holy good men, nor miniſters of the Goſpel; and if Chriſt had been a mere man, though ever ſo good a man, even a ſinleſs one, or ever ſo great a prophet, he could not have forgiven ſin; but he is truly and properly God, as his being a diſcerner of the thoughts of theſe men, and his healing the paralytic man in the manner he did, are ſufficient proofs. The Scribes and Phariſees therefore, though they rightly aſcribe forgiveneſs of ſin to God alone, yet grievouſly ſinned, in imputing blaſphemy to Chriſt: they had wrong notions of Chriſt, concluding him to be but a mere man, againſt the light and evidence of his works and miracles; and alſo of his office as a Redeemer, who came to ſave his people from their ſins; and ſeem to reſtrain the power of forgiving ſin to God the Father, whereas the Son of God, being equal with him, had the ſame power, and that even on earth, to forgive ſin; ſee the note on Mark ii. 7.

Ver. 22. But when Jeſus perceived their thoughts, &c.] Being God omniſcient; he anſwering ſaid unto them, what reaſon ye in your hearts? This he ſaid, not as being ignorant what their reaſonings were, for it is before ſaid he perceived their thoughts, but to expoſe the wickedneſs of them; in one exemplar of Beza's 'tis added, evil things, as in Matt. ix. 4. ſee the note there.

Ver. 23. Whether is it eaſier to ſay, &c.] Mark adds, to the ſick of the palſy; to whom Chriſt had ſaid that his ſins were forgiven him, which had given offence to the Scribes and Phariſees, imagining that he had aſſumed too much to himſelf: wherefore he propoſes the following caſe to them, which they thought was moſt eaſy for man, or more proper and peculiar to God to ſay, thy ſins be forgiven thee, or to ſay, riſe up and walk? Neither of them could be ſaid by a mere man, with effect, ſo as that ſins would be really remitted on ſo ſaying; or that a man ſick of a palſy, by ſuch a word ſpeaking, would be able to ſtand upon his feet and walk; but both of them were equally eaſy to him, that is truly God; and he that could ſay the one effectually, could alſo ſay the other: or in other words, he that could cure a man of a palſy with a word ſpeaking, ought not to be charged with blaſphemy, for taking upon him to forgive ſin: our Lord meant, by putting this queſtion, and acting upon it, to prove himſelf to be God, and to remove the imputation of blaſphemy from him; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 5. and Mark ii. 9.

Ver. 24. But that ye may know, that the ſon of man, &c.] Whom the Scribes and Phariſees took for a mere man, in which they were miſtaken; for tho' he was really a man, and the ſon of man, yet he was God as well as man; he was God manifeſt in the fleſh: hath power upon earth to forgive ſins; even in the days of his fleſh, whilſt he was in his humble form on earth; for he did not ceaſe to be God by becoming man, nor loſe any branch of his power, not this of forgiving ſin, by appearing in the form of a ſervant; and, that it might be manifeſt, he ſaid unto the ſick of the palſy: theſe are the words of the Evangeliſt, ſignifying, that Chriſt turned himſelf from the Scribes and Phariſees to the paralytic man, and thus addreſſed him: I ſay unto thee, ariſe, and take up thy couch, and go into thine houſe.

Ver. 25. And immediately he roſe up before them, &c.] As ſoon as ever theſe words were ſpoken by Chriſt, the man, before ſick of the palſy, finding himſelf perfectly well, got off of his couch, and ſtood up on his feet before the Scribes and Phariſees, and all the people: and took up that whereon he lay; his couch, or bed: and departed to his own houſe; with it upon his back; and went to his buſineſs, as the Perſic verſion renders it: glorifying God; both for the healing of his body, and for the pardon of his ſins; each of which he knew none but God could do. This circumſtance is only mentioned by Luke, and ſhews the ſenſe the man had of the great favours beſtowed upon him: he glorified God, by aſcribing them to his goodneſs and power; by offering the ſacrifice of praiſe, or giving thanks unto him for them; by publiſhing them among his neighbours, to the honour of his name; and by living a holy life and converſation, to his glory, under a grateful ſenſe of his kindneſs: yea, he glorified Jeſus Chriſt as God, who he knew muſt be God, by forgiving his ſins, and curing his diſeaſe; he proclaimed his divine power, and aſcribed greatneſs to him; he confeſſed him as the Meſſiah, and owned him as his Saviour, and became ſubject to him as his Lord.

Ver. 26. And they were all amazed, and they glorified God, &c.] Not the Phariſees, and doctors of the law, but the common people: and were filled with fear; of the divine being, whoſe preſence and power they were ſenſible muſt be in this caſe: ſaying, we have ſeen ſtrange things to-day; paradoxes, things wonderful, unthought of, unexpected, and incredible by carnal reaſon, and what were never ſeen, nor known before; as that a man, who was ſo enfeebled by the palſy, that he was obliged to be carried on a bed by four men, yet, on a ſudden, by a word ſpeaking, roſe up, and carried his bed, on his back, home.

Ver. 27. And after theſe things he went forth, &c.] After his diſcourſe with the Scribes and Phariſees, and his healing of the man ſick with the palſy, he went forth from the city of Capernaum, to the ſea-ſide; not only for retirement and recreation, after the work of the day hitherto, but in order to meet with, and call one that was to be a diſciple of his: and ſaw a publican named Levi; who is ſaid to be the ſon of Alpheus, Mark ii. 14. and ſo it is ſaid to be in Beza's ancient copy here; and who was alſo called Matthew, ſee Matt. ix. 9. ſitting at the receit of cuſtom; at the place where cuſtom was received, and toll taken, near the ſea-ſide, of ſuch that went over. The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, ſitting among publicans, of which buſineſs he himſelf was; and theſe might be his ſervants under him, or partners with him; ſee the note on Mark ii. 14. and he ſaid unto him, follow me: of all the publicans that were there, he ſingled out Levi, or Matthew, and directed his diſcourſe to him, and called him to be a follower of him: an inſtance of powerful, ſpecial, and diſtinguiſhing grace this; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 9.

Ver. 28. And he left all, &c.] His company, his buſineſs, and all the profits of it: roſe up; directly; ſuch power went along with the words of Chriſt, that he could not withſtand it: and followed him; not only in a literal, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and became a diſciple of his.

Ver. 29. And Levi made him a great feaſt in his own houſe, &c.] At Capernaum, which, very likely, was made ſome time after his call, tho' recorded here; for it is not reaſonable to think there could be time enough that day to get ready ſo great a feaſt, as this is ſaid to be. Levi, it ſhould ſeem, was a rich man, and in gratitude to Chriſt for his ſpecial grace and favour beſtowed on him, made this entertainment for him; and he ſeems to have had alſo another view in it, to bring him into the company of his fellow-publicans, hoping he might be uſeful to them, as he had been to him; for of this nature is true grace, to wiſh for, and deſire the ſalvation of the ſouls of others, as well as a man's own: and there was a great company of publicans, and of others; אחרים, which word is ſometimes uſed in Talmudic writings for Gentiles; ſo אשת אחרים, the wife of others, is interpreted the wife of the Cuthites, or Samaritans[f]: and thus the Jews explain the text in Deut. xxiv. 14. thou ſhalt not oppreſs an hired ſervant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, on which they make this remark, פרט לאחרים this excepts others; that is, as the Gloſs interprets it, it excepts the nations of the world, or the Gentiles: they go on to expound the text, or of thy ſtrangers that are in thy land; theſe are the proſelytes of righteouſneſs: within thy gates; theſe are they that eat things that are torn[g]: ſo that the others are diſtinguiſhed from the Jews, and from both the proſelytes of righteouſneſs, and of the gate; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that publicans and heathens are ſometimes mentioned together: here it means ſinners, as appears from Matt. ix. 10. Mark ii. 15. ſuch the Gentiles were reckoned: that ſat down with them; being invited by Matthew.

Ver. 30. But their Scribes and Phariſees, &c.] Not the Scribes of the publicans and ſinners that ſat down, but the Scribes of the people in general; the Scribes of the Jewiſh nation: all the eaſtern verſions leave out the word their: murmured againſt his diſciples, ſaying; or, murmured, and ſaid unto his diſciples, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it: that is, they either murmured at the publicans and ſinners ſitting down at meat; or againſt him, as the Ethiopic verſion reads: either againſt Matthew for inviting them; or rather againſt Chriſt for ſitting down with them: and not caring to ſpeak to him, addreſs themſelves to his diſciples in theſe words, why do ye eat and drink with publicans and ſinners? The other Evangeliſts repreſent theſe as ſaying, why does he, or your maſter, eat with ſuch? doubtleſs, they included both Chriſt, and his diſciples; tho' they chiefly deſigned him, and to bring an accuſation againſt him, and fix a charge upon him, in order to render him odious to the people.

Ver. 31. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, &c.] Knowing that they aimed at him; though, according to this Evangeliſt, they only mentioned his diſciples: however, he takes up the cauſe, and vindicates both himſelf and them, by obſerving to them the following proverb; they that are whole need not a phyſician, but they that are ſick: ſuggeſting hereby, that as ſuch who are in good health, who are free from all diſeaſes, wounds, bruiſes, and putrifying ſores, ſtand in no need of the advice and aſſiſtance of a phyſician, or chirurgeon, but ſuch who have either diſtempers or ſores on their bodies; ſo they, the Scribes and Phariſees, who, in their own opinion, were free from the diſeaſe of ſin, original and actual, and touching the righteouſneſs of the law, were blameleſs, ſtood not in any need of him, the phyſician, who came to cure the maladies of the ſouls, as well as of the bodies of men; but ſuch perſons, who not only are ſick with ſin, but ſick of it, who are ſenſible of it, and deſire healing: and therefore this was the reaſon of his conduct, why he converſed with ſinners, and not with the Scribes and Phariſees; his buſineſs, as a phyſician, lying among the one, and not the other; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 12. and Mark ii. 17.

Ver. 32. I came not to call the righteous, &c.] Such as the Scribes and Phariſees were in their own apprehenſion, and in the eſteem of others, who truſted in themſelves, that they were righteous, and ſubmitted not to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: theſe Chriſt came not to call by his grace, and therefore did not aſſociate himſelf with them: but ſinners to repentance; ſuch as the publicans, and others, with them, were; and therefore he was chiefly with ſuch, and choſe to be among them: theſe he not only called to repentance by the outward miniſtry of the word, but brought them to it; he having power to beſtow the grace of repentance, as well as to call to the duty of it; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 13. and Mark ii. 17.

Ver. 33. And they ſay unto him, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees, or the diſciples of John; ſee Matt. ix. 14. why do the diſciples of John faſt often, and make prayers? ſet times apart frequently for faſting and prayer. The Ethiopic verſion reads, why do the diſciples of John baptize frequently, faſt, and make prayers? in which the former clauſe is added; and as without any authority, ſo without judgment, ſince it muſt ſuppoſe that the Phariſees did ſo likewiſe, whereas they rejected the baptiſm of John; for it follows, and likewiſe the diſciples of the Phariſees; who faſted often, at leaſt twice in the week, and made frequent prayers in the ſynagogues, and corners of the ſtreets, and in widows houſes. But thine eat and drink? inſtead of faſting and praying; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 14.

Ver. 34. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] The diſciples of John, or the Scribes and Phariſees: can ye make the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bridegroom is with them? ſignifying, that he was the bridegroom, and his diſciples the children of the bride-chamber; and that as it is unreaſonable to expect, and morally impoſſible, that perſons, attending the feſtivals of a nuptial ſolemnity, ſhould be engaged in ſevere faſtings; ſo it was not to be thought, that whilſt Chriſt was corporally preſent with his diſciples, that they ſhould be prevailed upon to live ſuch an auſtere and mortified life.

Ver. 35. But the days will come, &c.] And that in a very little time, as they did: when the bridegroom ſhall be taken away from them; as their maſter, John, was taken away from them, and now in priſon, and therefore it was no wonder they mourned and faſted; ſignifying, that in a ſhort time he, the bridegroom of his church and people, ſhould be taken away by death: and then they ſhall faſt in thoſe days; or mourn, and be humbled, of which faſting was a ſign, for the death of their Lord, and on account of the many afflictions and perſecutions they ſhould endure for his ſake; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 15.

[g] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 111. 2. & Gloſſ. in ib.

Ver. 36. And he ſpake alſo a parable unto them, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees; illuſtrating what he had juſt now ſaid: no man putteth a piece of a new garment upon an old; by a piece of a new garment, meaning the new and upſtart notions and traditions of the elders, which were ſo in compariſon of the law of Moſes; and by the old, the robe of their own righteouſneſs, wrought out in obedience to the moral and ceremonial law: and Chriſt ſuggeſts, that to join theſe together, in order to patch up a garment of righteouſneſs, to appear in before God, was equally as weak and ridiculous, as to put a piece of new and undreſſed cloth into a garment that was old, and wore thread-bare. If otherwiſe, then both the new maketh the rent; that is, much worſe than it was, as it is expreſſed both in Matthew and Mark; the old and new cloth being unſuitable, and not of equal ſtrength to hold together: by this Chriſt intimates, that the Jews, by being directed to the obſervance of the traditions of the elders, were drawn off from a regard to the commandments of God; ſo that inſtead of having a better righteouſneſs, they had one much the worſe, a ragged, and a rent one. And the piece that was taken out of the new, agreeth not with the old; and ſo the ſtatutes of men, and the ordinances of God, or the traditions of the elders, and the commands of God, are no more like one another, than the piece of a new and an old garment, and as unlike is obedience to the one, and to the other; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 16, 17. and Mark ii. 21, 22. where this, and the following parable, are more largely explained.

Ver. 37. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles, &c.] To which the Scribes and Phariſees are here compared, into whoſe hearts the new wine of Goſpel-grace was not put; or to whom was not made known the love of God comparable to new wine; nor the bleſſings of the new covenant of grace, now exhibited; nor the truths of the Goſpel now more clearly and newly revealed. Elſe the new wine will burſt the bottles, and be ſpilled; they not being able to receive and bear theſe things, no, not the relation of them: theſe were hard ſayings to them, of which they ſaid, who can hear them? they could not hear them with patience, much leſs receive them in the love of them; but were at once filled with wrath, and indignation, and rejected them. And the bottles ſhall periſh; their condemnation ſhall be the greater.

Ver. 38. But new wine muſt be put into new bottles, &c.] Such as the diſciples of Chriſt were, and ſinners called to repentance are, who are renewed by the Spirit and grace of God: and theſe are filled with ſpiritual joy and comfort, as with new wine, ariſing from diſcoveries of the love of God, a view of intereſt in the bleſſings of the covenant, and an application of Goſpel-truths and promiſes. And both are preſerved; both theſe renewed ones, who are preſerved unto the kingdom and glory of Chriſt; and the grace that is put into them, which is a well of living water, ſpringing up to everlaſting life; as well as the Goſpel, and its bleſſings.

Ver. 39. No man alſo having drunk old wine, &c.] Wine, though not in the text, is rightly ſupplied by our tranſlators, as it is by the Syriac and Perſic verſions: ſtraightway deſireth new; new wine: for he ſaith, the old is better; old wine is more grateful, more generous, and more reviving to the ſpirits, than new wine is. This is a proverbial expreſſion, and which Luke only records; which may be applied to natural men, who having drunk the old wine of their carnal luſts and pleaſures, do not deſire the new wine of the Goſpel, and of the grace of God, and of ſpiritual things, but prefer their old ſins and luſts unto them: carnal luſts may be ſignified by old wine, both for the antiquity of them, being as old as men themſelves, and therefore called the old man, and for the gratefulneſs of them to them; and who may be ſaid to drink of them, as they do drink iniquity like water; which is expreſſive of their great deſire and thirſt after it, and delight in it: now whilſt they are ſuch, they can't deſire the new wine of the Goſpel, which is inſipid and ungrateful to them; nor the grace of God, to which their carnal minds are enmity; nor any thing that is evangelical and ſpiritual, at leaſt not ſtraightway, or immediately; not until they are regenerated by the Spirit of God, and their taſte is changed, but will prefer their old luſts and former courſe of life unto them: or it may be accommodated to legaliſts, and men of a phariſaical ſpirit, to whom ſpiritual and evangelical things are very diſagreeable: Scribes and Phariſees, who have drank of the old wine of the law, and the traditions of the elders, do not deſire the new wine of the Goſpel, but prefer the former to it: the ceremonial law may be expreſſed by old wine, being originally inſtituted of God, and acceptable to him; and one part of which lay in libations of wine, and was of long ſtanding, but now waxen old, and ready to vaniſh away; and likewiſe the traditions of the elders, which were highly pleaſing to the Phariſees, and which pretended to great antiquity: and of theſe they might be ſaid to drink, being inured to them from their youth, and therefore could not like the new diſpenſation of the Goſpel, neither its doctrines, nor its ordinances; but preferred their old laws and traditions to them: or rather this proverb, as uſed by Chriſt here, may be conſidered, as intimating the reaſon why the diſciples did not give into the practices of the Phariſees, becauſe they had drank of the old wine of the Goſpel; which, as upon ſome account it may be called new, becauſe of the new diſpenſation, freſh diſcovery, and clearer revelation of it; in other reſpects it may be ſaid to be old, being what was prepared and ordained before the world began; and what Adam drank of, in the firſt hint and promiſe of the Meſſiah; and after him Noah, the preacher of righteouſneſs; and Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to whom the Goſpel was preached before; and even Moſes, who wrote and teſtified of Chriſt, and David, and Solomon, and Iſaiah, and all the prophets of the former diſpenſation: and now the diſciples having more largely drank of it, under the miniſtry of Chriſt, could not eaſily deſire the new wine of the faſtings and prayers of the Phariſees, and John's diſciples; for the old wine of the Goſpel was much better in their eſteem, more grateful to the taſte, more refreſhing to their ſpirits, and more ſalutary and healthful, being the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Old wine, with the Jews[h], was wine of three years old, and was always by them preferred to new: ſo they deſcant on thoſe words in Deut. xv. 16. becauſe he is well with thee[i], (i.e. the ſervant) "with thee in food, "with thee in drink; for thou ſhalt not eat bread "of fine flour, and he eat bread of bran; or thou "drink, ישן, old wine, and he drink, ין חדש", new "wine." And ſometimes they uſe this diſtinction of old and new wine proverbially and parabolically, as here [k]. “ Rabbi Joſe bar Juda, a man of a “ village in Babylon, uſed to ſay, he that learns “ of young men, to what is he like? to him that “ eateth unripe grapes, and drinks wine out of the “ fat: but he that learns of old men, to what is “ he like? to him that eats ripe grapes, and drinks, “ יין ישן, old wine:” ſignifying, that the knowledge of old men is more ſolid, and mature, and unmixed, and free from dregs of ignorance, than that of young men: though it follows, that “ Ribbi had uſed to ſay, don't look upon the “ tankard, but on what is in it; for ſometimes “ there is a new tankard full of old wine, and an “ old one in which there is not ſo much as new “ in it:” ſignifying, that ſometimes young men are full of wiſdom and knowledge, when old men are entirely devoid of them.

CHAP. VI.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs on the ſecond ſabbath-day after the firſt, &c.] Or ſecond firſt ſabbath, concerning which interpreters are greatly divided. Some think, that it was either the ſeventh day of the feaſt of unleavened bread, or the eighth day of the feaſt of tabernacles. Others, that it was the ſabbath which fell that year on the day of Pentecoſt; and that as there were three grand feſtivals among the Jews, the feaſts of paſſover, Pentecoſt, and tabernacles; ſo when the ſabbath-day fell on the feaſt of the paſſover, it was called the firſt prime ſabbath, when on the feaſt of Pentecoſt, it was called the ſecond prime ſabbath, and when on the feaſt of tabernacles, the third prime ſabbath. Others have been of opinion, that as the Jews had two beginnings of their year, the one on civil accounts in Tiſri, the other on eccleſiaſtical accounts in Niſan; ſo the firſt ſabbath in Tiſri was called the firſt firſt ſabbath, and that in Niſan, which was this, the ſecond firſt ſabbath: but what ſeems moſt likely is, that this ſabbath was, as it may be rendered, the firſt ſabbath after the ſecond; that is, the firſt ſabbath after the ſecond day of the paſſover, when the ſheaf of the firſt fruits was offered, and harveſt might be begun; which ſuits well with ears of corn being ripe at this time, which the diſciples rubbed. So the Jews reckoned the ſeven weeks from thence to Pentecoſt by ſabbaths; the firſt after the ſecond day they called the ſecond firſt, or the firſt after the ſecond day; the ſecond they called the ſecond ſecond; and the third was named the ſecond third; and ſo on, the ſecond fourth, the ſecond fifth, the ſecond ſixth, and ſecond ſeventh, which brought on Pentecoſt, when the harveſt was ended. So in the Jewiſh liturgies, there are collects for the firſt ſabbath after the paſſover, and for the ſecond ſabbath after the paſſover, and ſo on to the ſabbath before Pentecoſt. The eaſtern verſions, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic, not knowing what ſhould be meant by it, have only rendered it, on the ſabbath-day, as in Matt. xii. 1. ſee the note there. That he went thro' the corn fields; that is, Jeſus, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions: and his diſciples plucked the ears of corn, and did eat, rubbing them in their hands: after they had plucked them they rubbed them in their hands to get clean off the huſk or beard, that were on them, and then eat the grains. And as plucking of the ears of corn was forbidden on a ſabbath-day, ſee the note on Matt. xii. 2. ſo was rubbing them; tho' if they were rubbed before, the chaff might be blown off from them in the hand, and eat on the ſabbath-day: the rule is this [l]; “ he that rubs ears of corn on “ the evening of the ſabbath, (i. e. on the ſixth “ day) may blow them from hand to hand on the “ morrow, and eat.” But the diſciples both plucked them, and rubbed them, and blew away the chaff from them on the ſabbath-day, and therefore were complained of by the Phariſees.

Ver. 2. And certain of the Phariſees ſaid unto them, &c.] Unto the diſciples. The Evangeliſts Matthew and Mark ſay, that they ſaid this to Jeſus: no doubt but they ſaid it to both, firſt to one, and then to the other; probably laſt of all to Chriſt, who returned an anſwer to it: why do ye that which is not lawful on the ſabbath-day; as to pluck ears of corn, and rub them, and eat them; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 2.

Ver. 3, 4. And Jeſus anſwering them, ſaid, &c.] For they brought the charge againſt the diſciples to him, being deſirous to know what he would ſay, and that they might have ſomething to accuſe him of; and who, at once, took up the cauſe of his diſciples, and vindicated them, by obſerving what David did, when he, and his men, were an hungry; how that he went into the tabernacle, and took the ſhew-bread, and eat of it, and gave it to his men, who alſo eat of it; which, according to the law, was only allowed to prieſts; and by taking notice of another inſtance, which this Evangeliſt does not relate; namely, how on the ſabbath-days the prieſts, by doing various ſervile works, profaned the ſabbath-day, and yet were not charged with any blame; ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 3, 4, 5.

Ver. 5. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] He adds this at the cloſe of the inſtances he gave, at the end of his vindication of his diſciples, and diſcourſe with the Phariſees, as a full anſwer to their cavils: that the ſon of man is Lord alſo of the ſabbath; and may do what he will, and ſuffer his diſciples to do whatever he pleaſes on that day; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 8.

Ver. 6. And it came to paſs alſo on another ſabbath, &c.] Whether the following ſabbath, or ſome time after, is not certain, that he entered into the ſynagogue. The Arabic verſion reads, into their ſynagogue, as in Matt. xii. 9. the ſynagogue of the Jews; in what place, whether at Capernaum, or ſome other city of Galilee, is not ſo clear: and taught; explained the ſcriptures to the people, and inſtructed them in the doctrines of the Goſpel: and there was a man whoſe right hand was withered; who was in the ſynagogue, and one of his hearers; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 10.

Ver. 7. And the Scribes and Phariſees watched him, &c.] See the note on Mark iii. 2. whether he would heal on the ſabbath-day; there being ſuch an object before him: that they might find an accuſation againſt him; as they had before againſt his diſciples.

Ver. 8. But he knew their thoughts, &c.] Being the omniſcient God; tho' they had ſaid nothing of their intentions, he knew what they deſigned, ſhould he heal the man with his withered hand, as they expected he would: and ſaid to the man which had the withered hand, riſe up, and ſtand forth in the midſt. The Syriac and Perſic verſions add, of the ſynagogue, and which is the true ſenſe; ſee the note on Mark iii. 3. and he aroſe and ſtood forth; he roſe up from his ſeat, and ſtood up in the midſt of the ſynagogue, and of the people, that he might be ſeen of all.

[l] T. Bab. Betza, fol. 12. 2. & 13. 2. Vid. Maimon. Hilch. Sabbat, c. 21. §. 14, 17.

Ver. 9. Then ſaid Jeſus unto them, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees, who were watching him, and whoſe thoughts, and the reaſonings of their minds, purpoſes, and intentions, he full well knew: I will aſk you one thing; or queſtion, as they had aſked him one before; ſee Matt. xii. 10. is it lawful on the ſabbath-days to do good, or to do evil? to ſave life, or to deſtroy it? ſee the note on Mark iii. 4. to which may be added, that to ſave life on the ſabbath-day was agreeable to their own canons: there were many things which they allowed might be done on the ſabbath-day, when life was in danger, which otherwiſe were not lawful; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 8.

Ver. 10. And looking round about upon them all, &c.] The Scribes and Phariſees, and the reſt of the people in the ſynagogue; ſee the note on Mark iii. 5. he ſaid to the man; who had the withered hand, ſtretch forth thy hand, and he did ſo: he ſtretched it out, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, which he was not able to do before: and his hand was reſtored well as the other; the phraſe, well as the other, is left out in one copy, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion; and ſo is the word well in the Syriac and Arabic verſions; and the word immediately is added in the Ethiopic verſion. And certain it is, that his withered hand was reſtored ſound and well as the other, directly.

Ver. 11. And they were filled with madneſs, &c.] Both at the cure, and becauſe they could not anſwer him; nor properly fix a charge upon him, or accuſe him before the people, without bringing their reſentments on them: and communed one with another what they might do with Jeſus: this they did after they came out of the ſynagogue, and when with the Herodians, as in Mark iii. 6. ſee the note there.

Ver. 12. And it came to paſs in thoſe days, &c.] When Chriſt was teaching by the lake of Genneſareth, or in one or other of the cities of Galilee near that place: that he went out; of the ſynagogue and city where he had been: into a mountain to pray; for the ſake of ſolitude, and which lay near the ſea of Tiberias; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 23. and continued all night in prayer to God; or with God, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; or in the prayer of God, as the phraſe may be literally rendered; not in a prayer of God's making; tho' the Jews[m] ſometimes ſpeak of the prayer of God, and give us a form of it: but either this reſpects the object of his prayer; it was made to God, as our tranſlation ſuggeſts; or the nature, matter, and manner of it: it was a divine prayer, it regarded divine things, and was put up in a very fervent manner, and with great vehemence: ſo the coals of love or jealouſy are ſaid to be coals of fire, which hath שלהבת יה, the flame of Jehovah; that is, as we render it, a moſt vehement flame, Cant. viii. 6. In like manner, prayer of God is a moſt vehement prayer; ſtrong cries ſent up to God with great eagerneſs and importunity, fervency and devotion; and ſuch was Chriſt's prayer, and in which he continued all night: unleſs by the prayer of God ſhould be meant, as is thought by many, an houſe of prayer to God, in which Chriſt lodged all night, and ſpent it in prayer to God in it. Certain it is, the Jews had their proſeuchæ, or prayer-houſes. Philo the Jew[n] often ſpeaks of them, and ſo does Joſephus[o]; and there ſeems to be mention made of them in the Talmudic writings: when R. Jochanan ben Zaccai came to Veſpaſian, in his camp before Jeruſalem, Veſpaſian aſked him, what he ſhould give him; he replied[p], "I deſire nothing of thee "but this Jabneh, (a famous univerſity) that I "may teach in it the diſciples, and fix in it, תפלה, "an oratory, or prayer-houſe, and do in it all the "commandments ſaid in the law." And in another place[q], "R. Judah ſays, that Samuel ſaid it "is free for a man to make water within four cubits, של תפילה; which I ſhould chuſe to render, "of the proſeucha, or prayer-houſe:" though the Gemariſts afterwards, and ſo the Gloſs ſeem to explain it of the time after prayer, in which a man ſhould wait before he evacuates, even as long as he might go the length of four cubits. Juvenal[r] has reference to one of theſe oratories, when he ſays, in qua te quæro proſeucha? and in one of theſe, 'tis very likely, Chriſt was in prayer all night long; for by the ſea-ſide, and by the ſide of rivers, theſe oratories were uſed to be; ſee Acts xvi. 13, 16.

Ver. 13. And when it was day, &c.] Or morning; having ſpent the whole night in prayer to God, no doubt for his diſciples, whom he was about to ſend forth as his apoſtles, to preach his Goſpel, and work miracles, and for their ſucceſs therein: he called unto him his diſciples; the whole company of them, as in ver. 17. all that were his followers, and profeſſed to believe in him, or as many as he pleaſed; ſee Mark iii. 13. And of them he choſe twelve; and ordained them, and ſent them out to preach, heal ſickneſſes, and caſt out devils: whom he alſo named apoſtles; or meſſengers, from their being ſent by him on ſuch important buſineſs; and their names are as follow.

Ver. 14. Simon, whom he alſo named Peter, &c.] Which ſignifies a rock, or ſtone, as Cephas alſo does, ſee John i. 42. from his conſtancy, ſtedfaſtneſs, and ſolidity: and Andrew his brother; who was called at the ſame time with him, and were brethren, both in nature and grace: James and John; the two ſons of Zebedee, who were called next: Philip and Bartholomew; the latter of theſe, is by ſome thought to be Nathanael.

Ver. 15. Matthew and Thomas, &c.] The firſt of theſe was a publican, and who alſo was called Levi; and the latter had beſides, the name of Didymus, and was he that was ſo unbelieving of Chriſt's reſurrection: James the ſon of Alpheus; ſometimes called James the leſs, and the brother of our Lord: and Simon called Zelotes; or the Canaanite; ſee the note on Matt. x. 4.

Ver. 16. And Judas the brother of James, &c.] Of that James, that was the ſon of Alpheus; though the Syriac and Arabic verſions call him the ſon of James, very wrongly: this Judas was alſo called Thaddæus and Lebbæus, and is the writer of the epiſtle that bears his name: and Judas Iſcariot, which alſo was the traitor; both his ſurname and his character are mentioned, to diſtinguiſh him from the other Judas: it is eaſy to obſerve, that theſe twelve are mentioned by pairs, or couples, and ſo they were ſent out, two by two; ſee Mark vi. 7. as were alſo the ſeventy diſciples afterwards; ſee Luke x. 1 There ſeems to be an alluſion to the pairs and couples of the Jewiſh fathers and doctors, who in their ſucceſſion are thus paired: Joſe ben Joezer, and Joſeph ben Jochanan; Joſhua ben Perachia,

Ver. 17. And he came down with them, &c.] With the twelve apoſtles, from the top of the mountain, where he had been praying all night, and where he had been that morning, ordaining and giving inſtructions to, the twelve he had choſen: and ſtood in the plain; in a lower part of the mountain, in a plain place on it; which was large, and capable of holding a great number of people; for it was ſtill upon the mount, that Chriſt taught his diſciples, and ſaid many of the things hereafter mentioned in this chapter; ſee Matt. v. 1. And the company of his diſciples; not only the twelve, but the large number out of which he had choſen twelve: and a great multitude of people; who were hearers of him, and attendants on him, and who had a great eſteem for him, tho' they were not as yet of the number of his diſciples; who came out of all Judea, and Jeruſalem, and from the ſea-coaſt of Tyre and Sidon: drawn from theſe ſeveral parts by the fame of him, ſome for one thing, and ſome another; ſome of which came to hear him: to hear him preach, and that they might know what manner of doctrine he taught: and others of them, to be healed of their diſeaſes; their bodily diſeaſes, and ſome came perhaps for both.

Ver. 18. And they that were vexed with unclean ſpirits, &c.] Were poſſeſſed with devils, and ſadly tormented and afflicted by them: and they were healed; both ſuch that had bodily diſeaſes, and were under diabolical poſſeſſions.

Ver. 19. And the whole multitude ſought to touch him, &c.] That is, the multitude of thoſe that were ſick and poſſeſſed; for they were perſuaded, and they found it true by experience, that if they could but touch any part of his body, or his garments, they ſhould be cured of their diſeaſes: for there went virtue out of him; in great abundance, as water from a fountain; without his ſpeaking a word, or uſing any geſture, ſuch as laying his hands on them: and they were healed; in this ſecret and private way, of whatſoever diſeaſe they were afflicted with.

Ver. 20. And he lifted up his eyes on his diſciples, &c.] Either the whole company of them, or rather the twelve apoſtles, whom he ſaw coming to him, and fixing his eyes on them, he ſat, and ſaid; what follows, with many other things recorded by Matthew: bleſſed be ye poor; not only in the things of this world, having left all for Chriſt, but poor in ſpirit, as in Matt. v. 3. ſee the note there: for yours is the kingdom of God; or heaven, ſo in Matt. v. 3.

Ver. 21. Bleſſed are ye that hunger now, &c.] Not only ſuffer hunger and thirſt in a literal ſenſe, in this preſent life, but who have hunger and thirſt in a ſpiritual ſenſe, after righteouſneſs and eternal life, as in Matt. v. 6. where it is alſo ſaid as here: for ye ſhall be filled; with righteouſneſs and life; ſee the note there: bleſſed are ye that weep now; under afflictions and preſſures of life, and mourn for ſin, their own, and others: for ye ſhall laugh; be filled with ſpiritual joy and pleaſure, and be comforted with the conſolations of the Spirit; ſee the note on Matt. v. 4.

Ver. 22. Bleſſed are ye when men ſhall hate you, &c.] For the ſake of Chriſt, and his Goſpel: and when they ſhall ſeparate you; from their company, either from civil converſation with them, as if they were Gentiles and uncircumciſed perſons; or from their religious aſſemblies, and ſo may have reſpect to that ſort of excommunication in uſe among the Jews, called, נדוי, or ſeparation; by which perſons were not only excluded from the congregation, but from all civil ſociety and commerce: ſuch a perſon might not ſit nearer to another, than four cubits, and this continued for thirty days; and if not diſcharged then, he continued thirty more [t]: and ſhall reproach you; as hereticks, apoſtates, and enemies to the law of Moſes, as the Jews did reproach the chriſtians; and caſt out your name as evil; or as of evil men, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it: this may have reſpect to the greater ſorts of excommunication uſed among them, called Shammatha and Cherem, by which a perſon was accurſed, and devoted to deſtruction; ſo that our Lord's meaning is, that they ſhould be eſteemed and treated as the worſt of men, and ſtigmatized in the vileſt manner they were capable of: for the Son of man's ſake; not for any immorality committed by them, but only for profeſſing and preaching, that the Meſſiah was come in the fleſh, and that Jeſus of Nazareth was he; and that he who was the Son of man, according to his human nature, was the Son of God according to his divine nature.

Ver. 23. Rejoice ye in that day, &c.] When they ſhould be hated, diſcarded, reproached, and anathematized: and leap for joy; as if the greateſt honour and happineſs imaginable, had been conferred on them; and as perſons do, when in the greateſt rapture: for behold, your reward is great in heaven, for in the like manner did their fathers unto the prophets; ſee the note on Matt. v. 12.

Ver. 24. But wo unto you that are rich, &c.] Not in worldly riches and ſubſtance, for ſome of theſe have been, and are happy perſons in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and at moſt, it can only mean ſuch, who truſt in their riches, and place their happineſs in them; but it chiefly regards ſuch, as are rich in their own opinion, and ſtand in need of nothing; who place their confidence in their own righteouſneſs, and do not apply to Chriſt, in whom alone are durable riches and righteouſneſs: for ye have received your conſolation; which they take from their own works, and a very unſtable and ſhort lived one it is; for while they are crying peace, peace, to themſelves, from their own ſervices, ſudden deſtruction comes upon them, and all their comforts vaniſh away: for there is no true ſolid comfort, but in Chriſt, and in his righteouſneſs; that adminiſters conſolation now, and lays a foundation for everlaſting comfort hereafter.

Ver. 25. Wo unto you that are full, &c.] Not ſo much with the plenty and affluence of the things of this life, as of themſelves, and their own righteouſneſs; and ſo with conceit, vanity, and pride, and have no appetite for ſpiritual things; nor do they hunger and thirſt after Chriſt, and the grace that is in him: for ye ſhall hunger: not that they ſhall truly and ſpiritually deſire an intereſt in Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, or heaven and eternal life hereafter; but they ſhall be in ſtarving and famiſhing circumſtances; and whilſt the ſaints are feeding upon the joys and glories of the other world, compared to a banquet, they ſhall be without, and have no ſhare in theſe things; ſee Iſa. lxv. 13, 14. Wo unto you that laugh now; at ſin, rejoice in iniquity, make a mock at it, inſtead of mourning for it; or that glory in themſelves, and in their righteouſneſs, and rejoice in their boaſtings: for ye ſhall mourn and weep;

weep; ſhall be caſt into outer darkneſs, where are weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth; and for all the fire they have kindled, and ſparks they have encompaſſed themſelves with, and danced in and about, this they ſhall have at the hand of God, they ſhall lie down in ſorrow, and ever continue in it.

Ver. 26. Wo unto you when all men ſhall ſpeak well of you, &c.] The word all, is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, and is wanting in many copies, though it is in the Alexandrian copy; and the meaning is, it looks ill in perſons, when the men of the world, wicked men, all of them, or the greater part of them, applaud and commend them; for this can never be, if they are truly religious perſons, and are faithful to their principles, and upright in their practices; and do not connive at, or comply with the errors and evil ways of wicked men; for it is no bad ſign, to have the good word of good men, and therefore theſe muſt be excepted, and the paſſage muſt be limited to bad men; for ſo did their fathers to the falſe prophets; they ſpoke well of them, and heaped favours, riches, and honours upon them, that they might propheſy unto them ſmooth things; ſee 1 Kings xxii. 6, 12, 27. Iſa. xxx. 10.

Ver. 27. But I ſay unto you which hear, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds me, and the generality of interpreters underſtand the paſſage of the hearers of Chriſt, as diſtinct from the diſciples, or together with them, and of the better ſort of them; and of ſuch as had ears to hear, and who heard with a deſire of underſtanding, and of putting into practice what they heard: but I rather think it regards the hearers of the Scribes and Phariſees, then preſent, who had heard and received the traditions of the elders, to which the following rules of Chriſt are oppoſed; and to each of which, with others in Matthew, theſe words are prefixed; ye have heard that it was ſaid by them of old time——but I ſay unto you, &c. Matt. v. 21, 27, 33, 38, 43. with which compare this phraſe, and the ſenſe will appear to be this; to you that hear day by day, the traditions of the elders urged upon you, and the falſe gloſſes the Scribes and Phariſees put upon the word of God; in oppoſition to them, I ſay to you what follows: love your enemies; whereas you have heard them ſay, hate your enemies, keep enmity in your hearts to them, and revenge yourſelves on them: do good to them that hate you; whereas you have heard it ſaid, that you ſhould only do good to your friends, and ſhould keep anger in your boſoms to ſuch who hate you, and do you an injury; ſee the notes on Matt. v. 43, 44.

Ver. 28. Bleſs them that curſe you, &c.] In common diſcourſe, or anathematize you in their ſynagogues: and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe you: ſo Chriſt himſelf did; ſee the note on Matt. v. 44.

Ver. 29. And unto him that ſmiteth thee on the one cheek, &c.] The right cheek: offer alſo the other; the left cheek, by turning it to him, that he may ſmite that likewiſe, if he thinks fit: by which proverbial expreſſion, Chriſt teaches patience in bearing injuries and affronts, and not to ſeek private revenge; but rather ſuffer more, than indulge ſuch a temper; and for the ſame purpoſe, is what follows urged: and him that taketh away thy cloak, forbid not to take thy coat alſo; the phraſe is inverted in Matthew; ſee the notes on Matt. v. 39, 40.

Ver. 30. And give to every man that aſketh, &c.] See the note on Matt. v. 42. And of him that taketh away thy goods; not by force, but by conſent, having either lent them, or ſold them to him: for if they were taken away by force, the perſon ſo taking them, was to be deemed a thief and a robber, and to be treated as ſuch; but one that takes them by agreement, and is not able to make a return of them, or to give a valuable conſideration for them, of ſuch an one aſk them not again; don't exact or demand them, but give him a releaſe, as the law requires, in Deut. xv. 2. which ſeems to be reſpected here; and where the ſame word is uſed by the Septuagint, as here.

Ver. 31. And as ye would that men ſhould do to you, &c.] In matters of juſtice and beneficence, were they in your caſe, and you in theirs; do ye alſo to them likewiſe: a golden rule this, agreeable to the light of nature, and divine revelation, and is the ſum and ſubſtance of the law and prophets; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 12.

Ver. 32. For if ye love them which love you, what thank have ye? &c.] Or, what grace have ye? this is no fruit, nor evidence of grace, nor any exerciſe of the true grace of love; nor is it any favour conferr'd upon the object loved, which deſerves the reſpect ſhown, nor can any reward be expected for ſuch treatment: and thus it is expreſſed in Matthew, what reward have ye? and the Arabic verſion renders it ſo here; for ſinners alſo love thoſe who love them: men that are deſtitute of the grace of God, profligate ſinners, even the worſt of them, ſuch as publicans, do this; ſee the note on Matt. v. 46.

Ver. 33. And if ye do good to them which do good to you, &c.] As one good turn deſerves another: what thank have ye? what grace or goodneſs is there in ſuch an action? what glory or merit is there in it? for ſinners alſo do even the ſame; wherefore no man ſhould conclude himſelf a righteous man, or better than ſinners, on ſuch an account: this is to be found among the worſt of men, and is natural to them, unleſs they are brutes indeed, to be kind to ſuch as are kind to them. And yet, this was the whole of the doctrine of the Jews about doing good to men: for ſo they ſay [u], "an Iſraelite is obliged to do good to an Iſraelite his companion, and to lend without uſury: this is kindneſs and goodneſs, and a greater good it is than a gift; for many men are aſhamed to take a gift, and are not aſhamed to take a loan: but not ſo an Iſraelite to a Gentile; for he is not bound to do good, or ſhew kindneſs to him, or to lend him his money freely; for many of them hate the Iſraelites; but it muſt be owned, that if a Gentile does a kindneſs, or good, to an Iſraelite; the Iſraelite is alſo bound to ſhew kindneſs to him, and do him good." In direct oppoſition to ſuch narrow ſentiments does our Lord deliver himſelf in this, and the following verſes.

Ver. 34. And if ye lend them of whom ye hope to receive, &c.] The ſame again, as from their brethren the Jews; or uſury, as from the Gentiles: what thank have ye? and yet they looked upon this, in the firſt inſtance of it, as a very great kindneſs, and act of goodneſs, as appears from the above citation: for ſinners alſo lend to ſinners, to receive as much again; or what is equal, and anſwerable to what they have lent them; that is, the ſame, or what is equivalent to it.

Ver. 35. But love ye your enemies, &c.] As before urged in ver. 27. and do good and lend; no to your friends only, but to your enemies: hoping for nothing again; either principal or intereſt, deſpairing of ſeeing either; lending to ſuch perſons, from whom, in all appearance, it is never to be expected again. The Perſic verſion renders it, that ye may not cauſe any to deſpair; and the Syriac verſion, that ye may not cut off, or cauſe to ceaſe the hope of men; and the Arabic verſion, that ye do not deceive the hope of any; that is, by ſending ſuch away, without lending to them, who come big with expectations of ſucceeding: and your reward ſhall be great: God will bleſs you in your worldly ſubſtance here, and will not forget your beneficence hereafter: and ye ſhall be the children of the higheſt; that is, of God; one of whoſe names is, עליון, the moſt high; ſee Pſal. lxxxii. 6. the meaning is, that ſuch who from principles of grace, and with right views, do ſuch acts of kindneſs and beneficence to their fellow creatures and chriſtians, ſhall be made manifeſt, and declared to be the children of God; ſince they will appear to be born of him, and made partakers of the divine nature, and bear a reſemblance to him, by their imitating him: for he is kind to the unthankful, and to the evil; by cauſing his ſun to riſe, and his rain to fall on them, as on the righteous and the good; for as Jews [w] obſerve, "there is no difference with him, whether on the right hand or the left; for, he is gracious, and does good, even to the ungodly." And elſewhere they ſay [x], that "he does good, and feeds the righteous and the ungodly."

[u] Kimchi in Pſal. xv. apud Hulſ. Theolog. Jud. par. 1. p. 420.

Ver. 36. Be ye therefore merciful, &c.] Tender hearted, kind, beneficent to all men, friends and foes: as your Father alſo is merciful; that is, your Father which is in heaven; who is good to all, and his tender mercies are over all his works: nothing is more common in Zohar [y], and the Talmud [z], than to expreſs the divine being by no other name, than the merciful; as, רחמנא אמר, the merciful ſaid ſo, and ſo; that is, God: and ſo the Arabians generally begin their books and chapters with theſe words, in the name of God, exceeding merciful, or the merciful commiſerator: a ſaying much like to this in the text, is in the Targum of Jonathan, on Lev. xxii. 28. "O my people, the children of Iſrael as your Father, רחמן, is merciful in heaven, ſo be ye merciful on earth."

Ver. 37. Judge not, and ye ſhall not be judged, &c.] See the note on Matt. vii. 1. Condemn not, and ye ſhall not be condemned; cenſure not men's perſons, and judge not their ſtate, or adjudge them to condemnation, for every offence in practice, or becauſe they differ in principle, leſt you ſhould be treated in like manner by others; and eſpecially, leſt you ſhould fall under the righteous cenſure, judgment, and condemnation of God: forgive; offences and treſpaſſes committed againſt you, bear with, and paſs by injuries and affronts: and ye ſhall be forgiven; of God; ſee the note on Matt. vi. 14.

Ver. 38. Give, and it ſhall be given unto you, &c.] Give liberally of your worldly ſubſtance to indigent perſons, as you have an opportunity, according to your ability, and as caſes require; and it ſhall be returned again to great advantage, with great recompence, either in temporals or ſpirituals, or both: good meaſure, preſſed down, and ſhaken together, and running over, ſhall men give into your boſom. The alluſion is to dry meaſure among the Jews, for to liquids, the terms uſed will not agree; and which, though right and full, which is here called good meaſure, they thruſt and preſſed to make it hold more; and ſhook it alſo for the ſame purpoſe, and then heaped it up as much as they could, till it fell over: of all theſe methods uſed in meaſuring, we have inſtances in their writings, which may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage: it is ſaid of [a] one, that "he meaſured, במדה כפושה, with meaſure preſſed down; and therefore they meaſured to him, with meaſure preſſed down." Some of their meaſures they heaped, and ſome they did not: they ſay [b], "all the meaſures which were in the ſanctuary, נגדושות, were heaped, except the high-prieſt's, and his heap was contained in it." And elſewhere they obſerve [c], that "there were two decimaries (or tithing veſſels) in the ſanctuary, one was, גדוש, heaped, and the other was, מחוק, ſtricken: with that which was heaped they meaſured all the fine flour for the meat-offerings, and with the ſtricken, that which was for the cakes of the high-prieſt." With reſpect to this diſtinction of meaſures, they ſay 'tis a tradition of the Rabbins [d], "that they don't ſtrike in the place where they heap, nor heap in the place where they ſtrike." Between theſe two meaſures there was another, which was full meaſure and juſt, and right, without heaping, or ſtriking [e]. "R. Papa enquired, whether the handful (of ſweet incenſe the high-prieſt took on the day of atonement) which is ſpoken of Lev. xvi. 12. was of ſtricken, or heaped meaſure; R. Abba ſaid to R. Aſe, come, hear, the handful ſpoken of, is neither of ſtricken nor heaped meaſure, אלא טפיפות, but of equal meaſure;" ſufficiently full, and no more. Dr. Lightfoot reads it, מצופות, flowing over; by what authority I cannot ſay; though the Gloſs ſays, the word ſignifies, "flowing over, by reaſon of its heighth." But flowing or running over meaſure, was the ſame with that which was heaped, as appears from the following inſtance [f]: "all thoſe that, המשפיעין במדה גסה, cauſe to abound, or run over with the great meaſure, it is lawful for them to ſell that, of which it is doubted whether it has been tithed or no; and theſe are they, that cauſe to run over, or heap with the great meaſure, as cornfactors and fruiterers." Who buy corn and fruits to ſell again, and which they buy by the large meaſure, and fill it up, add unto it, and heap it up; and ſo get more than what is properly due unto them, as the commentators obſerve [g]: would you know the quantity of the heap, or that which ran over, or the difference between even meaſure, and that which was heaped, learn it from hence: in 1 Kings vii. 26. 'tis ſaid, the molten ſea held two thouſand baths, and in 2 Chron. iv. 5. three thouſand baths; which difficulty the Jewiſh writers ſolve this way, by obſerving, that the former text is to be underſtood of liquid meaſure, and the latter of dry meaſure, which was heaped: hence ſays R. Abai, we learn that, גודשא תלתא הוי, the heap is the third part of the meaſure [h]: now to this ſuperabundant meaſure, Chriſt here refers; and ſignifies, that a large compenſation ſhould be made to ſuch, who give liberally and generouſly to needy perſons; that as they abounded in their acts of beneficence, ſo an overflowing plenty of good things ſhould be returned to them: and, when he ſays, that this ſhould be given into their boſom, he alludes to the long and large garments the Jews wore, into which they were capable of receiving large lapfulls of good things: the words may be read imperſonally, ſhall be given into your boſom; or if perſonally, they may be underſtood of God, angels, and men, in different ſenſes: the phraſe ſhaken together, is not in the Syriac and Perſic verſions: for with the ſame meaſure that ye mete withal, it ſhall be meaſured to you again; a common proverb with the Jews; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 2.

Ver. 39. And he ſpake a parable unto them, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads, he ſpake alſo a parable unto them; beſides what he had ſaid; and the Arabic verſion renders it, another ſimilitude, parable, or proverb, diſtinct from the compariſons, alluſions, and proverbial expreſſions in the preceding verſes. Tho' it ſhould be obſerved, that theſe words were not ſpoken at the ſame time, nor on the mount, as the foregoing were; but this, and what follow, are a collection of various expreſſions of Chriſt at different times, ſome delivered on the mount, and others elſewhere; unleſs it ſhould be rather thought, that theſe proverbs and ſentences were repeated at different places and times, which is not improbable: can the blind lead the blind? they may do ſo, as the blind Scribes and Phariſees led the blind people of the Jews, which is what our Lord intends: but if they do, as they did, ſhall they not both fall into the ditch? yes, verily, what elſe can be expected? ſee the note on Matt. xv. 14.

Ver. 40. The diſciple is not above his maſter, &c.] Or more excellent, as the Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions render it; that is, in learning and knowledge; if the maſter is ignorant, the ſcholar will be ſo too: and thus it is with teachers, and their people under their care; if the leaders are blind and ignorant, thoſe under their inſtructions will remain ſo likewiſe. Theſe words are an illuſtration of the preceding parable, and are uſed to another purpoſe here then in Matt. x. 24. ſee the note there: but every one that is perfect ſhall be as his maſter. The Vulgate Latin reads it, every one ſhall be perfect if he is as his maſter; that is, if his maſter is a man of general learning, and a complete ſcholar, if he is like him, he will be ſo too: the Perſic verſion renders it, every diſciple that deſires perfection ſhall be as his maſter: whoever is ambitious of being a thorough ſcholar, and is diligent and induſtrious, by all ways and means, to obtain ſuch a character, ſhall be even as good an one as his maſter, under whom he learns, and better he can't well expect to be; and this is ſufficient; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, is it not enough that every one be as his maſter? agreeable to Matt. x. 25. ſee the note there. Maimonides[i] has an expreſſion much like this: "he "that learns ſhall not be greater than he of whom he learns, but ſhall be, כמותו, as he." Chriſt, in this laſt clauſe, ſeems to deſign his own diſciples, who, when perfect in knowledge, which is not to be expected in this ſtate, unleſs in a comparative ſenſe, will be like himſelf.

Ver. 41. And why beholdeſt thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, &c.] A leſſer ſin in compariſon of others; for all ſins are not alike, as the Stoicks aſſerted: and tho' none are to be countenanced and indulged, yet ſome are not ſo ſeverely to be animadverted upon as others, the nature, occaſions, circumſtances, and aggravations conſidered; for no man is perfect, or wholly free from ſin; nor are the words preceding to be underſtood of ſuch a perfection; for which reaſon perhaps theſe words, with what follow, are mentioned: but perceiveſt not the beam that is in thine own eye; meaning a greater ſin, ſuch are guilty of, who are inquiſitive ſearchers into the faults of others, and ſevere animadverters on them; and yet are blind to their own iniquities, and take no notice of them. Theſe proverbial expreſſions were delivered by Chriſt on the mount, and are the ſame with thoſe in Matt. vii. 3, 4, 5. ſee the notes there.

Ver. 42. Either how canſt thou ſay to thy brother, &c.] Guilty of the leſſer ſin; brother, let me pull out the mote that is in thine eye; that is, ſuffer me to reprove thee for thy ſin: the word brother is omitted in the Cambridge copy of Beza's, and in the Perſic verſion; nor is it in Matthew; but in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions it is read, my brother; pretending great affection and ſincerity: when thou thyſelf beholdeſt not the beam that is in thine own eye; that is, takeſt no notice of, and doſt not refrain from a greater iniquity continued in: thou hypocrite; as ſuch an one muſt be, that bears hard upon his brother, and ſeverely cenſures him for a ſmall crime, when he indulges in himſelf a far more abominable ſin: caſt out firſt the beam out of thine own eye, and then ſhalt thou ſee clearly to pull out the mote that is in thy brother's eye: the ſenſe is, that a man ſhould firſt reform himſelf, and then others.

Ver. 43. For a good tree bringeth not forth corrupt fruit, &c.] The particle for is left out in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions; and ſo it is in Beza's ancient copy: nor do theſe words ſtand in cloſe connexion with the preceding in Matthew's Goſpel, tho' they may be very well conſidered as an illuſtration of them; for as that cannot be called a good tree, which brings forth bad fruit; ſo ſuch men cannot be accounted good men, let them make ever ſo large pretenſions to ſuch a character, who are very buſy in eſpying, diſcovering, and cenſuring the faults of their brethren; when they take no notice of, nor refrain from, nor relinquiſh their own. Theſe words, with what follow in this, and the next verſe, and the ſimilies in them, are uſed by our Lord in Matthew, on account of falſe prophets or teachers; where he ſuggeſts, that as good and faithful miniſters of the Goſpel cannot, and do not bring forth, and publiſh corrupt notions, and falſe doctrines, uſually and knowingly; even as it is not uſual, nor can it be, that a good tree ſhould bring forth corrupt fruit; ſo, neither doth a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit; or men of corrupt minds deliver good and ſound doctrine, or the wholeſome words of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt: but here they ſeem to be applicable to other perſons, even tru believers and hypocrites: the former are comparable to good trees, and are called trees of righteouſneſs, which being planted by the river of th love of God, and rooted in Chriſt, and filled wit the fruits of righteouſneſs by him, do not brin forth the evil fruit of ſin, as the common and co ſtant courſe of their lives and converſations; f that they never commit ſin, or are entirely witho it, cannot be ſaid; but ſin is not their uſual a common practice, or they do not live in ſin: a the latter, hypocrites, who pretend to a great d of religion, and have none that is true and re theſe are comparable to corrupt trees; which, t they may make a fair ſhew, yet do not bring fo good fruit, or perform works of righteouſ which are truly ſuch; what they do have only the peara pearance of good works, and are not properly ſo; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 16, 17, 18.

[i] In Miſn. Bava Kama, c. 2. §. 5.

Ver. 44. For every tree is known by its own fruit, &c.] Good and bad preachers are known by their doctrines, the one being agreeable, the other diſagreeable to the word of God; and good and bad men are known by their lives and converſations: the grace of God revealed to good men, and wrought in them, teaches them to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; a holy life is the fruit of grace, and an evidence of it; and the wickedneſs that is in the heart of unregenerate men, and even the hypocriſy of formal profeſſors, will ſhew themſelves in the common and ordinary courſe of their converſations: for of thorns men do not gather figs, nor of a bramble-buſh gather they grapes; nor can they be expected from them: and no more can an unregenerate man perform good works, or bring forth fruits of righteouſneſs acceptable unto God; for theſe require a knowledge of his will, obedience to it, a principle of grace, love to God, faith in Chriſt, and a view to the glory of God; all which are wanting in ſuch a perſon.

Ver. 45. A good man out of the good treaſure of his heart, &c.] This, becauſe of its ſuitableneſs and agreement with what goes before, is placed by Luke here; though, according to Matthew, it was ſpoken at another time and place, unleſs it ſhould be a repetition there; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 35. for of the abundance of the heart his mouth ſpeaketh. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, Ethiopic, Syriac, and Perſic verſions, leave out the word his; and the two latter read lips, inſtead of mouth; ſee the note on Matt. xii. 34.

Ver. 46. And why call ye me Lord, Lord, &c.] Or, my Lord, my Lord, as the Syriac verſion renders it; acknowledging, in words, his government over them; claiming an intereſt in him, and making uſe of his name and authority: and do not the things which I ſay, or command; and therefore ſuch words in their mouths would be of no uſe to them, ſince they neither did his father's will, which he taught them, nor obſerved his commands and ordinances which he enjoined them; and therefore ſhould not enter into the kingdom of heaven, nor be owned by him another day, but ſhould be bid to depart from him; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 21, 22, 23.

Ver. 47. Whoſoever cometh to me, &c.] To be a diſciple and follower: and heareth my ſayings, and doth them; ſee the note on Matt. vii. 24. I will ſhew you to whom he is like; or to what thing he is like; ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; tho' what follows ſeems better to agree with perſon than thing.

Ver. 48. He is like a man which built an houſe, &c.] That is, intended to build one, having drawn the ſcheme of it in his mind, and provided materials, and fixed upon the ſpot of ground: and digged deep, and laid the foundation on a rock; that is, he dug deep in the earth, till he came at a rock, and there, and then, he laid the foundation of his houſe; in which he acted the part of a wiſe man, as he is called in Matthew: ſo a ſenſible ſinner, deſirous of building his ſoul, and the ſalvation of it, on a ſure bottom, digs deep into the ſcriptures, diligently ſearches them, till he finds out the ſcheme of ſalvation by Chriſt; which lies deep in God's counſel and covenant, was ordained before the world began, and was hid in God till revealed in the Goſpel: and finding Chriſt to be the rock of ages, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength, and the foundation which God has laid, nor is there another; he makes uſe of him as ſuch, and builds the hope of his eternal ſalvation on him: and when the flood aroſe; an inundation, a multitude of waters, the ſwelling of the ſea; or rather when it was tide, as the word here uſed ſignifies[k]: the ſtream beat vehemently upon the houſe; or the river, up which the tide came, daſhed and broke againſt it; by which may be ſignified the temptations of ſatan, the perſecutions of the world, the corruptions of mens hearts, and the errors and hereſies of falſe teachers: and could not ſhake it; as none of theſe can ſo ſhake as to move a ſoul, thus built on Chriſt, off of him the foundation: for it was founded upon a rock; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 24, 25.

Ver. 49. But he that heareth, and doth not, &c.] Hears Chriſt's ſayings externally, but does not obey his commands: is like a man that without a foundation built upon the earth; that is, without digging for a foundation, built his houſe upon the ſurface of the earth; upon the duſt of it, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or upon the ſand, as Matthew ſays: againſt which the ſtream did beat vehemently, and immediately it fell, and the ruin of that houſe was great; ſee the notes on Matt. vii. 26, 27.

CHAP. VII.

Ver. 1. NOW when he had ended all his ſayings, &c.] That is, when Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, had finiſhed all the above ſayings, doctrines, and inſtructions; not all that he had to ſay, for he ſaid many things after this: in the audience of the people; of the common people, the multitude beſides the diſciples; and that openly, and publickly, and with a loud and clear voice, that all might hear: he entered into Capernaum; Jeſus entered, as the Syriac verſion reads, into his own city, and where he had been before, and wrought miracles.

Ver. 2. And a certain centurion's ſervant, &c.] The ſame that Matthew makes mention of, ch. viii. 5, 6. ſee the notes there: who was dear unto him; to the centurion, being an honeſt, upright, faithful, and obliging ſervant; as Tabi was to Rabban Gamaliel, of whom his maſter ſaid[l], "Tabi my ſervant, is not as other ſervants, כשר היה he is upright." Was ſick; of a palſy; ſee Matt. viii. 6. and ready to die; in all appearance his caſe was deſperate, and there was no help for him by any human means, which makes the following cure the more remarkable.

Ver. 3. And when he heard of Jeſus, &c.] That he was come, as the Ethiopic verſion adds, into the city of Capernaum; or of his miracles, which he had done there, and elſewhere: he ſent unto him the elders of the Jews; in whom he had an intereſt, judging himſelf, being a Gentile, very unworthy and unfit to go himſelf, and aſk a favour of ſo great a perſon as Chriſt was, ſuch was his modeſty and humility. Theſe elders he ſent, were not the more ancient inhabitants of the city, called, זקני עם הארץ, the elders of, or among the common people, as diſtinguiſhed from, זקני תורה, the elders of the law, or thoſe that were old in knowledge; of both which it is ſaid by R. Simeon ben Achaſia,

Achaſia[m], that "the elders of the common people, when they grow old, their knowledge fails in them, as it is ſaid, Job xii. 20. but ſo it is not with the elders of the law; but when they grow old, their knowledge reſts in them, as it is ſaid, Job xii. 12." But theſe were either ſome principal officers of the city, called the elders of the people elſewhere; particularly, who were members of the Sanhedrim; for as elders, when they deſign the elders in Jeruſalem, mean the great Sanhedrim[n] there; ſo elders in other places, intend the Sanhedrim, conſiſting of twenty-one perſons, or the bench of three; and ſuch were theſe, the centurion ſent to Chriſt: beſeeching him that he would come and heal his ſervant: he beſought him moſt earneſtly by theſe meſſengers, that he would come to his houſe, and cure his ſervant of the palſy, by laying his hands on him, or commanding the diſtemper off, by a word ſpeaking; or in what way he ſhould think fit, for he made no doubt that he was able to heal him.

Ver. 4. And when they came to Jeſus, &c.] To that part of the city where he was; either at Peter's houſe, where he uſed to be when in this place; or rather it might be as he was paſſing along the ſtreets, that they came up to him: they beſought him inſtantly; or with great vehemence and importunity; very ſtudiouſly and carefully they urged the caſe, and preſſed him much to it: ſaying, he was worthy for whom he ſhould do this; or for whom thou ſhouldſt do this, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, and ſome copies; and which reading connects the words beſt. This ſpeech of theirs, ſavours of their pharaſaic tenet and notion of merit, and is very different from the ſenſe the poor centurion had of himſelf.

Ver. 5. For he loveth our nation, &c.] The Jewiſh nation, which was Chriſt's nation, as well as theirs, he being a Jew; ſee John xviii. 35. This they mention, as an argument to induce him to have a regard to the centurion, though he was a Gentile; ſince he was a friend of the Jews, and well affected and diſpoſed to them, which was very rare: it was not common for the Gentiles to love the Jews, any more than the Jews the Gentiles; there was an hatred, yea, an enmity between them; but this man very likely, was a proſelyte to their religion, as the following inſtance ſeems to ſhow: and he hath built us a ſynagogue; at his own private charge, and by the aſſiſtance of his ſoldiers under him, whom he might employ in this work: ſometimes a ſingle perſon built a ſynagogue at his own expence, and gave it to the citizens; of which the Jews ſay[o], "if a man builds an houſe, and afterwards devotes it to a ſynagogue, it is as a ſynagogue."

Ver. 6. Then Jeſus went with them, &c.] The elders of the Jews, towards the centurion's houſe, after hearing their requeſt, and their reaſons for it; and that without any reluctancy, he at once complied, made no heſitation, or difficulty about it, but went with them very freely: and when he was now not far from the houſe; of the centurion, where his ſervant lay ſick; he having ſome notice of his coming, and of his being near his houſe, in his great humility, and being conſcious to himſelf of his unworthineſs to have ſuch a perſon under his roof, ſent meſſengers to prevent him: the centurion ſent friends to him, ſaying unto him, Lord, trouble not thyſelf; or do not fatigue thyſelf by coming to the houſe, ſtop, go no further; for I am not worthy that thou ſhouldſt enter under my roof: he might know full well the law of the Jews, that it was not lawful for a Jew to go into the houſe of an uncircumciſed Gentile; and tho' he might be a proſelyte of righteouſneſs, and ſo his houſe was free of entrance; yet conſidering his own meanneſs, and the greatneſs of Chriſt, who was become ſo famous for his doctrines and miracles, he thought it too great a ſtoop for Chriſt to come into his houſe, and too high a favour for him to enjoy.

Ver. 7. Wherefore neither thought I myſelf worthy to come unto thee, &c.] In perſon; therefore he ſent the elders of the Jews to him firſt, and now ſome of his friends, who delivered theſe words in his name: but ſay in a word, and my ſervant ſhall be healed; ſpeak but the word only, rebuke the diſtemper, command it off, and it will be gone; ſo great was his faith in the power of Chriſt.

Ver. 8. For I alſo am a man ſet under authority, &c.] Of the Roman ſenate; or belonging to the emperor, as the Arabic verſion renders it; and under the command of a tribune, as a centurion was: ſo that this is not an amplification, but a diminution of his office; and his ſenſe is, that even he who was but an inferior officer, yet had ſuch power as after related: having under me ſoldiers; an hundred, or more: and I ſay unto one go, and he goeth, and to another come, and he cometh, and to my ſervant, do this, and he doth it; as this his ſervant uſed to do, and whom he may intend, who now lay ſick, and therefore was dear unto him. His meaning is, that Chriſt could as eaſily command, and call off a diſtemper, and it would obey him, as he could command obedience from his ſoldiers and ſervant, and have it, and more ſo.

Ver. 9. When Jeſus heard theſe things, &c.] Which the friends of the centurion related from him, and in his name; or which he himſelf delivered, coming up to Chriſt after them: he marvelled at him; at his great humility and modeſty, and the ſtrength of his faith, and his manner of reaſoning: and turned him about; from him, and his friends: and ſaid unto the people that followed him; from the mount to Capernaum, and as he was paſſing along the ſtreets: I ſay unto you, I have not found ſo great faith, no, not in Iſrael; or among the Iſraelites, as the Syriac; or among the children of Iſrael, as the Perſic; or in all Iſrael, as the Arabic verſions read, as he did in this ſingle Gentile; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 10.

Ver. 10. And they that were ſent, &c.] Both the elders of the Jews, and the friends of the centurion: returning to the houſe; of the centurion, where his ſervant lay, and from whence they came: found the ſervant whole that had been ſick; for he was healed directly, as ſoon as the centurion had expreſſed his faith, and Chriſt had declared that it ſhould be according to it, Matt. viii. 13.

Ver. 11. And it came to paſs the day after, &c.] The Vulgate Latin reads afterward, not expreſſing any day, as in ch. viii. 1. but the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, read to the ſame ſenſe as we, the day after, the next day, on the morrow, after he had cured the centurion's ſervant in Capernaum, where he ſtaid all night: that he went into a city called Naim; which Jerom[p] places near mount Tabor, and the river Kiſon. The[q] Jews ſpeak of a Naim in the tribe of Iſſachar, ſo called from its pleaſantneſs, and which ſeems to be the ſame place with this. The Perſic verſion reads it, Nabetis, or Neapolis, the ſame with Sychem in Samaria, but without reaſon: and many of his diſciples went with him; not only the twelve, but many others: and much people; from Capernaum, and other parts, that followed him to ſee his miracles, or for one end or another, though they did not believe in him; at leaſt theſe were only hearers, and had not entered themſelves among the diſciples.

Ver. 12. Now when he came nigh to the gate of the city, &c.] Of Naim: behold there was a dead man carried out; of the city; for they uſed not to bury in cities, but in places without, and at ſome diſtance: the burying-places of the Jews were not near their cities [r]; and they had different ways of carrying them out to be buried, according to their different ages: a child under a month old was carried out in the boſom of a perſon; if a full month old, in a little coffin, which they carried in their arms; one of a twelve month old was carried in a little coffin on the ſhoulder; and one of three years old on a bier or bed [s], and ſo upwards; and in this manner was this corps carried out: who was the only ſon of his mother; hence the ſorrow and mourning were the greater; ſee Zech. xii. 10. and ſhe was a widow; and if ſhe had been ſupported by her ſon, her loſs was very conſiderable; and having neither huſband, nor ſon, to do for her, her caſe was very affecting: and much people of the city was with her; according to the age of perſons was the company that attended them to the grave: if it was an infant, not a month old, it was buried by one woman, and two men, but not by one man, and two women; if a month old, by men and women; and whoever was carried out on a bier or bed, many mourned for him; and whoever was known to many, many accompanied him [t]; and which was the caſe of this dead man: he ſeems to have been well known and reſpected by the company that attended him to his grave; of theſe ſome were bearers, and theſe had their deputies, and theſe again theirs; for as they carried their dead a great way, they were obliged often to change their bearers; and of the company, ſome went before the bier, and others went after it [u]: beſides, what ſerved to increaſe company at a funeral was, that it was looked upon as an act of kindneſs and mercy to follow a corps to the grave [w]; to which may be added, and what muſt always tend to increaſe the number at ſuch a time, that, according to the Jewiſh canons [x], "it was forbidden to do "any work at the time a dead man was buried, "even one of the common people."

Ver. 13. And when the Lord ſaw her, he had compaſſion on her, &c.] Knowing her caſe, that ſhe was a widow, and had loſt her only ſon: and ſaid unto her, weep not; ſignifying, that he would help her, which he did without being aſked to do it, as uſual in other caſes.

Ver. 14. And he came and touched the bier, &c.] Or bed, as the Syriac verſion renders it; and ſuch was מטה, the bier, or bed, on which one of three years old, and upward, was carried as above mentioned: ſo that on which Herod was carried to his grave is called κλινη, a bed, by Joſephus [y]. As for the bed, or bier, of what ſort it was that they carried out their dead upon, take the following account [z]: "formerly the rich carried out (their dead) "upon a bed called Dargaſh, (which is ſaid [a] to "be a bed that was not platted with ropes, and is "called a bed of fortune [b]) and the poor carried "out (their dead) upon one that was called Celicah (or Celibah, as ſometimes read; and this was "made in the form of an iron horn, on which they "bound the corps, that it might not fall; and it "was called ſo, becauſe it was made like a coup "of birds [c], as the word is uſed in Jer. v. 27.) "and the poor were made aſhamed; and therefore "they ordered that all ſhould carry out (their "dead) on a Celicah, for the honour of the poor." To this Chriſt came near and touched: not that by his touching of that, the dead ſhould be raiſed; but this he did as a ſignal, that the bearers ſhould ſtop. The Jews [d] ſay, one of the charges that Jacob gave to his ſons before his death, was, to "take "care, ſays he, that no uncircumciſed perſon, "יגע במטתי, touch my bed, or bier, leſt the Shekinah remove from me; but, according to this "order, do unto me, carry me, three on the "north, three on the ſouth, three on the eaſt, and "three on the weſt, &c." From whence it ſhould ſeem, that a circumciſed perſon, as Chriſt was, might touch a bier without offence, or hurt, and without contracting any ceremonial pollution: to touch a dead body, or the bone of man, or a grave, was forbidden by the law, Numb. xix. 16. and ſo, according to the traditions of the elders [e], the ſtone that was rolled at the mouth of the ſepulchre, and the ſide of the ſepulchre, defiled by touching; but I don't find that touching a bier was ever forbidden. And they that bare him ſtood ſtill: theſe are they that are called נושאי המטה, the bearers of the bed, or bier: and Maimonides [f] ſays, "they carry the "dead upon their ſhoulders to the grave; and the "bearers of the bier are forbidden to put on their "ſandals, leſt the latchet of any one of them ſhould "fail, and ſhould be found to hinder him doing "his duty." And elſewhere 'tis ſaid [g], "the "bearers of the bed, or bier, and their deputies, "and their deputy's deputies, both before the bier "and after it, and whoever the bier ſtood in need "of were free;" i. e. from reading the Shema, or, hear, O Iſrael, &c. and from prayer: the reaſon of their having ſo many bearers was, becauſe they carried the dead a great way to be buried. King Herod was carried after this manner two hundred furlongs from Jeruſalem to the caſtle of Herodion [h]: and he ſaid, young man, I ſay unto thee, ariſe. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and he aroſe: Chriſt ſpoke as one that had the keys of death and the grave; and divine power went along with his words, which raiſed the dead man to life; and full proof this is of the true and proper deity of Chriſt.

Ver. 15. And he that was dead, &c.] That had been dead, (for he was now alive) as it was a clear caſe to all his relations and friends, or they would never have brought him out to bury him: ſat up; upon the bed, or bier: and began to ſpeak; both which, his ſitting up and ſpeaking, were plain proofs of his being brought to life: and he delivered him to his mother; for whoſe ſake he raiſed him from the dead, commiſerating her caſe: wherefore as Chriſt ſhewed his power in raiſing the dead man, he diſcovered great humanity, kindneſs, and tenderneſs in delivering him alive to his mother; which might be done after he came off of the bier, by taking him by the hand, and leading him to his mother, and giving him up into her arms: think what an affecting ſcene this muſt be!

Ver. 16. And there came a fear on all, &c.] That were there preſent, and heard, and ſaw what was done. Not a fear of dread, and terror, and of puniſhment, as in devils and wicked men; but a fear and reverence of the divine majeſty, whoſe power and preſence they were ſenſible muſt be there at that time: and they glorified God; they praiſed him, and gave thanks to him, aſcribing this amazing action to divine power, and gave God the glory of it; and bleſſed him for the Meſſiah, who was ſent unto them, as they concluded Jeſus to be, from this wonderful inſtance: ſaying, that a great prophet is riſen up among us; even that great prophet Moſes wrote of, and, ſaid ſhould be raiſed up from among the children of Iſrael, Deut. xviii. 15, 18. and that God hath viſited his people. The Arabic verſion adds, for good. For God ſometimes viſits for evil, in a way of wrath and ſore diſpleaſure; but this was a viſitation for good: they concluded that God had looked upon them with a look of love, and had a gracious regard to them, and had ſent them the Meſſiah, who, they hoped, would deliver them from the Roman yoke; as he had formerly looked upon, and viſited their fathers, and ſent a redeemer to them, to deliver them from Egyptian bondage. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and God hath mercy on his people; and the Perſic verſion, God hath looked upon his people, and hath taken care of them.

Ver. 17. And this rumour of him, &c.] Or the report of this ſurprizing miracle in raiſing a dead man to life, that was carrying to his grave, went forth throughout all Judea, and throughout all the region round about; not only Judea, and the ſeveral cities, towns, and villages in it, but all the country round about it, eſpecially Galilee. The Perſic verſion reads, all countries which are round about Jordan; ſee Matt. iii. 5.

Ver. 18. And the diſciples of John ſhewed him of all theſe things.] The miracles that were wrought by Chriſt; particularly the healing of the centurion's ſervant, and the raiſing from the dead the widow of Naim's ſon, and what fame and reputation Chriſt got every where by his doctrine, and mighty works. John was now in priſon, when theſe his diſciples came and related theſe things to him; ſee Matt. xi. 2. and they ſpoke of them, not as commending Chriſt for them; but as envying, grieving, and complaining, that he carried away all the honour and glory from John their maſter, for whom they had the greateſt regard.

Ver. 19. And John calling unto him two of his diſciples, &c.] Which were a ſufficient number to be ſent on an errand, to aſk a queſtion, and report the anſwer, or bear witneſs to any fact they ſhould ſee, or hear done. Sent them unto Jeſus, ſaying, art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another? not that he doubted that Jeſus was the Meſſiah; nor was it for his own ſatisfaction ſo much that he ſent theſe diſciples of his, with this queſtion, but for theirs; and to remove all doubt and heſitation from them about Chriſt.

Ver. 20. When the men were come to him, &c.] To Jeſus; thoſe two men, as the Arabic verſion reads; the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion; the ſame that John ſent from the caſtle of Machærus, where he was now a priſoner, to Chriſt, who was teaching in ſome city or town of Galilee: they ſaid, John the Baptiſt; ſo well known by his being the adminiſtrator of the ordinance of baptiſm: hath ſent us unto thee, ſaying, art thou he that ſhould come, or look we for another? ſee the note on Matt. xi. 3.

Ver. 21. And in that ſame hour, &c.] Or at that ſame time, for a preciſe hour is not intended: one exemplar reads, in that day, in which theſe men came to Chriſt, he, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, cured many of their infirmities; bodily weakneſſes and diſorders: and plagues; which were inflicted on them as ſcourges and corrections for ſin, very ſevere diſeaſes, as epilepſies, leproſies, palſies, &c. and of evil ſpirits; or devils, which he diſpoſſeſſed and commanded out of the bodies of men; tho' ſometimes evil ſpirits with the Jews ſignify ſome kinds of bodily diſeaſes: as when it is ſaid [1], "whoever puts out a lamp becauſe he is afraid of Gentiles, or of thieves, or of רוח רעה, an evil ſpirit, or becauſe of a ſick man that is aſleep, he is free." Upon which Maimonides obſerves, "an evil ſpirit they call all kinds of diſeaſes, which, in the Arabic language, go by the name of melancholy; for it is one kind of the diſeaſes mentioned, which makes a ſick man to fly, and ſeparate himſelf from mankind, as if he was afraid of the light, or of coming into the company of men:" and unto many that were blind he gave ſight; freely, as an act of grace and kindneſs, as the word ſignifies, without any merit, or motive in them.

Ver. 22. Then Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto them, &c.] To the diſciples, as the Perſic; to both, as the Arabic: when he had wrought theſe cures he turned himſelf to the diſciples of John, and made anſwer to their queſtion. The Vulgate Latin leaves out the word, Jeſus, rendering it, and he anſwering; in the following words: go your way, and tell John what things ye have ſeen and heard. They had juſt ſeen many cured of infirmities, plagues, and evil ſpirits, and they had heard the doctrines of the Goſpel preached by him; and the former were in confirmation of the latter, and both were proofs of his being the Meſſiah: the particulars of which follow, how that the blind ſee; that is, they that had been blind, and ſome that were born blind, received their ſight, which was what was never heard of before, from the beginning of the world; and which, as it is an inſtance of Chriſt's almighty power, ſhewing him to be God; ſo it was a fulfilment of a prophecy concerning him as the Meſſiah, who, when he came, was to open the eyes of the blind, Iſ. xxxv. 5. and this was true, not only in a corporal, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe: and generally ſo it was, that when the blind received their bodily ſight, they alſo received their ſpiritual ſight; and both were evidences of the true Meſſiahſhip of our Lord Jeſus. The lame walk: theſe were among thoſe who were cured of their infirmities; and this alſo was propheſied of the Meſſiah, and was now accompliſhed by Jeſus, that the lame man ſhould leap as an hart, Iſ. xxxv. 6. and ſo was to be conſidered by John, and his diſciples, as another proof of his being the true Meſſiah: the lepers are cleanſed; of this ſort were they who were cured of their plagues; the leproſy was called a plague; hence the treatiſe of leproſy, in the Miſna, is, by the Jews, called Negaim, or plagues. The deaf hear; ſo in the above prophecy in Iſaiah, it is predicted, that the ears of the deaf ſhould be unſtopped in the days of the Meſſiah; and which therefore muſt be conſidered as a further confirmation of Jeſus being

he that was to come, and that another was not to be looked for. The dead are raiſed: whether there were any raiſed at this time, or no, is not certain; but certain it is, that there had been one raiſed from the dead, if not in the preſence of theſe diſciples, yet juſt before they came to Chriſt, of which John had been informed by ſome of his diſciples, if not theſe; and of which an account is given before in this chapter, and which is what none but the mighty God can do. To the poor the Goſpel is preached: it was preached both by the poor, the diſciples of Chriſt, and to the poor, mean, baſe, and illiterate among the Jews; and alſo to the poor, meek, and lowly in heart, as was propheſied ſhould be, by the Meſſiah, Iſ. lxi. 1. ſo that put all together, here were undoubted proofs, and a full demonſtration, that Jeſus was the Meſſiah; ſee the notes on Matt. xi. 4, 5.

Ver. 23. And bleſſed is he whoſoever ſhall not be offended in me.] The Arabic verſion renders it, bleſſed is he that doubts not of me. The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions both add to the text, the former rendering the words thus, bleſſed is he that is not brought into offence and doubt concerning me; and the latter thus, bleſſed are they who do not deny me, and are not offended in me: particular regard is had to the diſciples of John, who both doubted of Chriſt as the Meſſiah, and were offended at his popularity and ſucceſs; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 6.

Ver. 24. And when the meſſengers of John were departed, &c.] The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, the diſciples of John; and the Arabic verſion, the two diſciples of John; the two that he ſent, when they were gone back with the anſwer of Chriſt; he, Jeſus, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it, began to ſpeak unto the people concerning John; not caring to ſay any thing about him to the meſſengers, or whilſt they were preſent, leſt he ſhould be charged with flattery; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 7. What went ye out into the wilderneſs for to ſee? a reed ſhaken with the wind? an inconſiſtent, wavering, and unſtable man? if ſo, they were greatly miſtaken; or the motions and geſture of the man? ſee the note as above.

Ver. 25. But what went you out for to ſee? &c.] If not his air and action, what was it? was it his apparel and dreſs? was it to ſee a man cloathed in ſoft raiment? If this was the caſe, their labour was in vain, and they had their walk for nothing; for John was cloathed with camel's hair, rough and undreſſed, and was girt with a leathern girdle; there was nothing in his perſon, mien, and garb, that was attractive: they which are gorgeouſly apparelled; or richly cloathed, as John was not: and live delicately; in the moſt elegant manner, and on the richeſt dainties, as John did not, his food being locuſts and wild honey: are in king's courts; and not in a wilderneſs, where John came preaching.

Ver. 26. But what went ye out for to ſee? &c.] What led your curioſity to go into the wilderneſs after him, ſince it could not be any of the above things? was it to ſee a prophet? which was the caſe; for John was a prophet, and was known to be one; and the fame of him, as ſuch, drew vaſt numbers to ſee and hear him, there not having been a prophet among the Jews, for ſome hundreds of years: yea, I ſay unto you, and much more than a prophet; not that he was the prophet Moſes did ſay ſhould come; nor was he the prieſt that ſhould riſe with the Urim and Thummim, that the Tirſhatha, Nehemiah ſpoke of; nor was he the king Meſſiah; but he was his fore-runner, he ſaw him and baptized him, and ſo was greater than any of the prophets that went before him.

Ver. 27. This is he of whom it is written, &c.] In Mal. iii. 1. ſee the notes on Matt. xi. 10. and Mark i. 2.

Ver. 28. For I ſay unto you—there is not a greater prophet, &c.] The word prophet, is left out in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, as in Matt. xi. 11. ſee the note there.

Ver. 29. And all the people that heard him, &c.] Either Chriſt ſaying theſe things in commendation of John, and gave their aſſent to them, and ſhewed their approbation of them, having been baptized by him; or rather, the people that had heard John preach the doctrines of repentance and faith, and of baptiſm; for theſe words ſeem rather to be the words of Chriſt, relating the ſucceſs of John's miniſtry among different perſons: and the publicans juſtified God; even thoſe wicked men, who were before profligate and abandoned ſinners, when they came under John's miniſtry, were ſo wrought upon by the power and grace of God through it, that they approved of, and applauded the wiſdom, goodneſs, and grace of God, in ſending ſuch a prophet as John; in qualifying him in the manner he did, and in giving him a commiſſion to preach ſuch doctrines, and adminiſter ſuch an ordinance as he did: and this their approbation of the divine conduct, and their thankfulneſs for the ſame, they teſtified by their being baptized with the baptiſm of John; they expreſſed their ſentiments, by their obedience; they declared it was right in God to inſtitute ſuch an ordinance, and for John to adminiſter it; and that it became them to ſubmit to it, as a part of righteouſneſs to be fulfilled; they hereby ſignified, that they thought that it was agreeable to the nature of God, who is holy, juſt, and good, ſuitable to the Goſpel diſpenſation, and very fit and proper for them.

Ver. 30. But the Phariſees and lawyers, &c.] Or Scribes, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; for the Scribes and lawyers were the ſame ſort of perſons. The Ethiopic verſion calls them, the Scribes of the city: theſe rejected the counſel of God againſt themſelves; againſt their own advantage, to their hurt and detriment; ſince by their impenitence and unbelief, and through their rejection of Chriſt and his fore-runner, and the Goſpel and the ordinances of it, they brought ruin and deſtruction, both temporal and eternal, upon themſelves: or towards themſelves, or unto them; that is, they rejected the command of God unto them, as the Arabic verſion renders it: for by the counſel of God here, is not meant his purpoſe, intention, and deſign, with reſpect to theſe perſons, which was not, nor never is fruſtrated; but the precept of God, and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they deſpiſed the command of God: that is, the ordinance of baptiſm, which was of God, and the produce of his counſel and wiſdom, as the whole ſcheme, and all the ordinances of the Goſpel are, and not the invention of men: or they rejected this in themſelves, as it may be rendered, and is by the Syriac and Perſic verſions; not openly and publickly, for they were afraid of the people, but inwardly and privately, and which their actions and conduct declared: being not baptized of him; of John: by their neglect of this ordinance, they teſtified their averſion to it, and rejection of it.

Ver. 31. And the Lord ſaid, &c.] This clauſe is not in the Syriac, Arabic, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, nor in ſome copies, nor in Beza's moſt ancient copy; and being omitted, more clearly ſhews, that the two former verſes are the words of Chriſt, and not an obſervation the Evangeliſt makes, on the different behaviour of Chriſt's hearers, upon the commendation he had given of John: whereunto then ſhall I liken the men of this generation; or to what men ſhall I liken them, as the Perſic verſion: the phraſe men of this generation, is Rabbinical; ſo אנשי דרא ההוא, the men of that generation, are more beautiful in work than theſe, ſays the Targumiſt on Eccl. vii. 11. And to what are they like? To that which follows.

Ver. 32. They are like to children, &c.] The Phariſees and lawyers, who rejected the counſel of God, and the baptiſm of John, were like to children; not for innocence, ſimplicity, meekneſs, and humility; their characters were the reverſe; but rather, for their ignorance, and want of underſtanding, their folly and weakneſs; nor are they here compared to the children that piped and mourned, but to thoſe ſurly and ill-natured ones, who made no anſwer to thoſe that did. They, together with Chriſt, and John the Baptiſt, are in general likened to children, ſitting in the market-place; where children were wont to be, there being a variety of perſons and things to be ſeen; and which may deſign the temple, or the ſynagogues, or any place of concourſe, where the Phariſees met, with John, Chriſt, and their diſciples: and calling one to another, and ſaying; they that were good natured, and more diſpoſed to mirth and innocent diverſions: we have piped unto you, and ye have not danced, we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept: they imitated the pipers at weddings, expecting their companions would have danced, as was uſually done by the others; when the pipe was played upon; and they mimicked the mourning women at funerals, expecting their fellows would have made as though they had wept; whereas they would do neither, ſhewing a diſlike both to the one and to the other. The children that imitated the pipers, repreſent Chriſt and his diſciples, who delivered the joyful ſound of the Goſpel; and the children that acted the part of the mourners, ſignify John the Baptiſt, and his diſciples, who preached the doctrine of repentance; and the children that would not join with, nor make any anſwer to the one, or the other, intend the Scribes and Phariſees, who were not pleaſed with either of them, as the following words ſhow; ſee the notes on Matt. xi. 16, 17.

Ver. 33. For John the Baptiſt, &c.] Who is deſigned by the children that mourned in the above ſimilie, with whom his character and conduct agree; he preached very mournful doctrine, delivered it in a very ſolemn and awful manner, and lived a very auſtere life, and faſted much, as did alſo his diſciples. The word Baptiſt is here added by Luke, which Matthew has not, to diſtinguiſh him from others; and it may be, becauſe he had juſt ſpoke of his baptiſm. The Perſic verſion only reads, the Baptiſt; of him our Lord ſays, that he came neither eating bread, nor drinking wine; which were the common food and drink of men, but his diet were locuſts and wild honey, and from this he often abſtained; nor would he attend feſtivals and entertainments, or be free and ſociable with men: bread and wine are here mentioned, which are not in Matthew: and ye ſay, he hath a devil; is mad, or melancholy; for madneſs and melancholy, or the hypocondriac diſorder, was by them ſometimes imputed to a diabolical poſſeſſion, and influence, as the cauſe of it; and though theſe men pretended to great auſterity of life, and frequent faſtings, yet John was too abſtemious for them, and they could not agree with his doctrine, nor method of living; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 18.

Ver. 34. The Son of man is come eating and drinking, &c.] That is, eating bread and drinking wine, as other people do; and ſhuns no man's company, goes to a wedding, dines with a Phariſee, and eats with publicans and ſinners, and carries it freely and courteouſly to all men: and ye ſay, behold a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber; an epicure, a drunkard, a mere ſot, one that gives up himſelf to ſenſual pleaſures: a friend of publicans and ſinners; a good fellow, a boon companion, that ſits with them, and encourages them in their revellings and drunkenneſs: ſuch an ill uſe did the Jews make of our Lord's free, harmleſs, and innocent converſation with men; and in ſuch a horrid manner did they traduce and vilify him, who was holy in his nature, harmleſs in his life, ſeparate from ſinners, knew no ſin, nor ever committed any.

Ver. 35. But wiſdom is juſtified of all her children.] That is, Chriſt, who is the wiſdom of God, and who acted the wiſe part, in behaving in ſuch a free manner with all ſorts of men, and even with publicans and ſinners, whereby he became uſeful to their ſouls, called them to repentance, converted and ſaved them: and theſe are his children, which were given him by the Father; for whoſe ſake he partook of fleſh and blood, and whom he redeemed, that they might receive the adoption of children; and to whom, believing in him, he gives power to become the children of God: and theſe juſtify him from all ſuch ſcandalous imputations, and by their lives and converſations ſhew, that the doctrine of Chriſt is not a licentious one, or leads to libertiniſm, and indulges men in their carnal, ſenſual luſts and pleaſures; but on the contrary, teaches them to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, and to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly: the word all, is inſerted by Luke, which is not in Matthew; ſignifying, that this is the univerſal ſenſe and practice of all the real offspring of Chriſt, the ſons of wiſdom, who are wiſe to do good.

Ver. 36. And one of the Phariſees, &c.] Whoſe name was Simon, ver. 40, 43, 44. Deſired that he would eat with him; take a meal with him, either a dinner or a ſupper: this he did under a diſguiſe of reſpect, and ſhew of affection to him; though very likely with a deſign upon him to enſnare him, or take ſome advantage againſt him i he could; for it is certain, that he did not trea him with thoſe civilities and ceremonies commonl uſed to gueſts; ſee ver. 44, 45, 46. And he wen into the Phariſees houſe, and ſat down to meat: h made no heſitation about it, but at once accepte of his invitation, though he knew both the ma and his intentions; having nothing to fear fro him, and being willing to carry it courteouſly t all men, and give proof of what he had juſt no ſaid of himſelf, ver. 34.

Ver. 37. And behold, a woman in the city, &c Not Mary Magdalene, ſpoken of in the next cha ter, ver. 2. under another character; and is a di ferent perſon, who had not been taken notice of the Evangeliſt before; nor Mary the ſiſter of Laz rus, who is ſaid to anoint the feet of Chriſt, a wipe them with her hair, John xii. 3. The c racter given of this woman, does not ſeem ſo w to agree with her; at leaſt, the fact here record cannot be the ſame with that; for this was in G lee, and that in Bethany; this in the houſe of Si the Phariſee, that in the houſe of Lazarus; was ſome time before Chriſt's death, for after he went a circuit through every city and villa that was but ſix days before his death, and after which he never went from thoſe parts; nor is this account the ſame with the hiſtory, recorded in Matt. xxvi. 6, 7. Mark xiv. 3. for that fact was done in Bethany alſo, this in Galilee; that in the houſe of Simon the leper, this in the houſe of Simon the Phariſee; that was but two days before the death of Chriſt, this a conſiderable time before; the ointment that woman poured, was poured upon his head, this upon his feet: who this woman was, is not certain, nor in what city ſhe dwelt; it ſeems to be the ſame in which the Phariſees houſe was; and was no doubt one of the cities of Galilee, as Naim, Capernaum, or ſome other at no great diſtance from theſe: which was a ſinner; a notorious ſinner, one that was known by all to have been a perſon of a wicked life and converſation; a lewd woman, a vile proſtitute, an harlot, commonly reputed ſo: the Arabic word here uſed, ſignifies both a ſinner and a whore[k]; and ſo the word, ſinners, ſeem to be uſed elſewhere by Luke; ſee ch. xv. 1, 2. compared with Matt. xxi. 31, 32. Some think ſhe was a Gentile, Gentiles being reckoned by the Jews ſinners, and the worſt of ſinners; but this does not appear: when ſhe knew that Jeſus ſat at meat in the Phariſees houſe; having obſerved it herſelf that he was invited by him, and went with him, or being informed of it by others, brought an alabaſter box of ointment: ointment was uſed to be put in veſſels made of alabaſter, which kept it pure and incorrupt; and this ſtone was found about Damaſcus[l], ſo that there might be plenty of it in Judea; at leaſt it might be eaſily had, and ſuch boxes might be common; and as this woman appears to have been a lewd perſon, ſhe might have this box of ointment by her to anoint herſelf with, that ſhe might recommend herſelf to her gallants. The hiſtorian[m] reports, that "Venus gave to Phaon "an alabaſter box with ointment, with which Phaon "being anointed, became the moſt beautiful of "men, and the women of Mitylene were taken "with the love of him." If this box had been provided with ſuch a view, it was now uſed to another and different purpoſe.

Ver. 38. And ſtood at his feet behind him, &c.] Chriſt lay upon a bed, or couch, as was the cuſtom of the ancients, both Jews and others, at meals, with his feet put out behind; and between the couches and the walls of the room, there was a ſpace for ſervants to wait and ſerve, and ſuch are therefore ſaid to ſtand at the feet; and the phraſe is uſed, as deſcriptive of ſervants in waiting[n]; and in ſuch a ſituation this woman put herſelf, as being alſo aſhamed and afraid to come before Chriſt, and look him in the face; and here ſhe ſtood weeping for her ſins, and melted down with the love of Chriſt to her ſoul, and at his diſcourſe: and began to waſh his feet with tears; which fell from her eyes in ſuch abundance upon his feet, as ſhe ſtood by him, that they were like a ſhower of rain, as the word ſignifies, with which his feet were as it were bathed and waſhed; his ſhoes or ſandals being off, as was the cuſtom at eating ſo to do, leſt they ſhould daub the couch or bed, on which they lay[o]. Her tears ſhe uſed inſtead of water; for it was the cuſtom firſt to waſh the feet before they were anointed with oil, which ſhe intended to do; and for which purpoſe ſhe had brought with her an alabaſter box of ointment: it is ſaid[p] of one, "when he came home, "that his maid brought him a pot of hot water, "and he waſhed his hands and his feet in it; then "ſhe brought him a golden baſon full of oil, and "he dipped his hands and his feet in it, to fulfil "what is ſaid, Deut. xxxiii. 24. and after they "had eaten and drank, he meaſured out oil, &c." And it is a general rule with the Jews[q], "that "whoever anoints his feet, is obliged to waſhing "or dipping." And did wipe them with the hairs of her head; which were long, and hung looſe about her ſhoulders, it being uſual and comely for women to wear long hair, 1 Cor. xi. 15. That which was her ornament and pride, and which ſhe took great care of to nouriſh and put in proper form, to render her deſireable, ſhe uſes inſtead of a towel, to wipe her Lord's feet, and her tears off of them. A like phraſe is uſed of one by Apuleius, "his verbis & amplexibus mollibus decantatus maritus, "lachrymaſque ejus ſuis crinibus detergens, &c.[r]:" and kiſſed his feet. This was no unuſual practice with the Jews; we often read of it[s]: "R. Jonathan and R. Jannai, were ſitting together, there "came a certain man, ונשק רגלוי, and kiſſed the "feet of R. Jonathan." Again[t], "R. Meir "ſtood up, and Bar Chama, נשקיה אכרעיה, "kiſſed his knees, or feet." This cuſtom was alſo uſed by the Greeks and Romans among their civilities, and in their ſalutations[u]: and anointed them with the ointment; which ſhe brought with her.

Ver. 39. Now when the Phariſee which had bidden him, ſaw it, &c.] Simon, who had invited Chriſt to eat with him, when he ſaw what was done by the woman, how ſhe ſtood at his feet, and waſhed them with her tears, and wiped them with her hairs, and then kiſſed and anointed them: he ſpake within himſelf; not openly and publickly, being in good manners, though not in real reſpect to Chriſt, unwilling to affront his gueſt; but turned theſe things over in his mind, and reaſoned upon them within himſelf: ſaying, this man, if he were a prophet; as he was ſaid, and believed to be by many, but queſtioned by this Phariſee: would have known who, and what manner of woman this is, that toucheth him; he took it for granted, that Chriſt did not know this woman perſonally, that ſhe was one of the city; nor her character, or what was her fame, as the Syriac verſion renders it, which was very ill; or her condition, as the Arabic verſion, ſhe being not a religious perſon, but a notorious lewd one: this he concluded, from his admitting her to ſuch nearneſs to him, and familiarity with him; and from hence argues within himſelf, that he could not be a prophet; ſince, according to his notion of a prophet, he muſt know perſons and their characters; though this was not always requiſite in a prophet, nor did the prophetic gift at all times, ſhew itſelf in this way: however, this man reaſoned upon the commonly received notions of the Phariſees, both of the Meſſiah, the prophet that Moſes ſaid ſhould come, and of their own conduct, and of all religious men: their notion with reſpect to the Meſſiah was, that he ſhould be of ſo quick an underſtanding, or ſmell, as in Iſa. xi. 3. that he ſhould know at once who was a wicked perſon, and who not. "Bar Coziba they "ſay[w], reigned two years and a half; he ſaid to "the Rabbans, I am the Meſſiah; they replied to “ him, it is written of the Meſſiah, Iſa. xi. 3. “ that he ſmells, or is of quick underſtanding and “ judges (the Gloſs on it is, he ſmells on a man, “ and judges and knows, מי הח״יב, who is a “ wicked man:) let us ſee whether he ſmells and “ judges; and when they ſaw that he did not ſmell “ and judge, they killed him.” But Jeſus the true Meſſiah, could do ſo; he knew who were ſinners, he knew this woman to be one, as the following account ſhews: and their notion with reſpect to the conduct of religious perſons towards the common people, and thoſe of a bad character, and which the Phariſee here ſuggeſts, was, that the touch of ſuch perſons was defiling, and therefore to be avoided: for they ſay [x], that “ the “ Phariſees, if they touched the garments of the “ common people, they were defiled.” And therefore when they walked in the ſtreets, “ they “ walked in the ſides (of the ways) that they “ might not be defiled, במגע, by the touch of the “ common people [y].” For ſhe is a ſinner; a notorious one; or that ſhe is a ſinner; and the ſenſe is, Chriſt, had he been a prophet, the Phariſee intimates, would have known that this woman was a vile creature; and he would have ſhewn it, by his abhorrence and rejection of her; or as the Perſic verſion adds, would have declared her ſins.

Ver. 40. And Jeſus anſwering ſaid unto him, &c.] Chriſt being God omniſcient, knew not only the character and converſation of this woman, which were publickly known by all, that knew any thing of her, but alſo the ſecret thoughts and reaſonings of the Phariſee, and makes anſwer to them; which ſhows, that he was a prophet, in the ſenſe of this man; yea, more than a prophet: Simon, I have ſomewhat to ſay to thee; this could not be Simon Peter, Chriſt ſpoke to, as ſome have ſuggeſted; for the anſwer is made unto the Phariſee, and he is the perſon addreſſed, by the name of Simon; even he, into whoſe houſe Chriſt entered, and now was, as appears from ver. 44. And he ſaith, Maſter; or teacher, or doctor; or as the Syriac verſion, Rabbi; which was the common ſalutation of doctors: ſay on. This was a way of ſpeaking in uſe with the Jews, giving leave to proceed in a diſcourſe; and as Chriſt was now a gueſt in this man's houſe, he aſks leave of him, and he grants him it: ſo we read of R. Simeon ben Gamaliel [z], that he ſaid to R. Iſhmael ben Eliſhah, “ is it thy pleaſure that I ſhould “ ſay before thee one thing? he ſaid unto him, “ אמור, ſay on.” Again, R. Jochanan ben Zaccai ſaid [a] to a certain governour, “ ſuffer me to ſay “ one thing to thee? he replied to him, אמור, “ ſay on.”

Ver. 41. There was a certain creditor, &c.] All the Oriental verſions premiſe ſomething to this. The Syriac verſion reads, Jeſus ſaid unto him. The Arabic verſion, then he ſaid. The Perſic verſion, Jeſus ſaid; and the Ethiopic verſion, and he ſaid to him; and ſomething of this kind is underſtood, and to be ſupplied in the text: which had two debtors, the one owed five hundred pence, and the other fifty; theſe were, as the word ſhows, Roman denarii, or pence; the former of theſe ſums, reckoning a Roman penny at ſeven-pence halfpenny of our money, amounted to fifteen pounds and twelve ſhillings and ſix-pence; and the latter, to one pound eleven ſhillings and three-pence; the one of theſe ſums was ten times larger than the other. This is a parable: by the creditor, God is meant; to whom men owe their beings, and the preſervation of them, and all the mercies of life; and are under obligation to obedience and thankfulneſs: hence no man can merit any thing of God, or pay off any old debt, by a new act of obedience, ſince all is due to him: by the two debtors are meant, greater and leſſer ſinners: all ſins are debts, and all ſinners are debtors; not debtors to ſin, for then it would not be criminal, but lawful to commit ſin, and God muſt be pleaſed with it, which he is not, and men might promiſe themſelves impunity, which they cannot; but they are debtors to fulfil the law, and in caſe of failure, are bound to the debt of puniſhment: and of theſe debtors and debts, ſome are greater, and others leſs; not but that they are all equally ſinners in Adam, and equally guilty and corrupted by his tranſgreſſion; and the ſame ſeeds of ſin are in the hearts of all men, and all ſin is committed againſt God, and is a breach of his law, and is mortal, or deſerving of death, even death eternal; but then, as ſome commands are greater, and others leſs, ſo muſt their tranſgreſſions be: ſin more immediately committed againſt God, is greater than that which is committed againſt our neighbour; and beſides, the circumſtances of perſons and things differ, which more or leſs aggravate the offence.

Ver. 42. And when they had nothing to pay, &c.] Neither the leſſer nor greater debtor; for though not alike in debt, yet both inſolvent: man has run out his whole ſtock, which the God of nature gave him, in his original creation and primitive ſtate; and is become a bankrupt and a beggar, is poor, wretched, and miſerable; he has no money, he has nothing to offer for a compoſition, much leſs for payment; he has no righteouſneſs, and if he had, it would be nothing to pay with; ſince that itſelf, even in perfection, is due to God, and can't diſcharge a former debt: ſin being committed againſt an infinite being, is in ſome ſenſe an infinite debt, and requires an infinite ſatisfaction, which a finite creature can never give; and he is therefore liable to a priſon, and that for ever: but behold the wonderful grace of God, the creditor! he frankly forgave them both; their whole debts, without regard to any merits of theirs, which they could not have, or any motives in them, or any conditions to be performed by them, but purely of his ſovereign will, free-grace, and rich mercy, though not without regard to the ſatisfaction of his Son; which by no means hinders the frankneſs of the pardon, or obſcures the grace of it, but increaſes and illuſtrates it; ſeeing this ſatisfaction is of God's own finding out, providing, and accepting; and is at his own expence, and without money and price, to the debtors: tell me therefore, which of them will love him moſt; or ought to love him moſt, as the Ethiopic verſion. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, leave out the firſt part of this clauſe, tell me.

Ver. 43. Simon anſwered and ſaid, &c.] Very readily, without any heſitation, not being aware of the application of it, to the inſtance he had been pondering in his mind: I ſuppoſe, that he to whom he forgave moſt; it was his opinion, and to him a plain caſe, that he that owed the largeſt debt, and that being forgiven him fully, and freely, as he was under the greateſt obligation, ſo as he ought, he would ſhew the greateſt love and affection to his kind and gracious creditor: and he ſaid unto him; that is, Jeſus ſaid, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it: thou haſt rightly judged; this is a right and true judgment of the caſe; it is according to the nature and truth of things, and what is obvious and clear at firſt ſight, and which every one muſt agree to.

Ver. 44. And he turned to the woman, &c.] That ſtood behind him at his feet, and ſaid to Simon, ſeeſt thou this woman? and what ſhe has done? pointing to her, and comparing him, and her, and their actions together, whereby he might judge of the preceding parable, and how fitly it might be applied to the preſent caſe: I entred into thine houſe; not of his own accord, but by the invitation of Simon, and therefore might have expected the uſual civilities: thou gaveſt me no water for my feet; to waſh them with, no, not ſo much as water; a civility very common in thoſe hot countries, where walking without ſtockings, and only with ſandals, they needed often waſhing; and which was very refreſhing, and was not only uſed to travellers and ſtrangers, but to gueſts, and was uſually done by the ſervants of the houſe; ſee the note on ver. 38. but ſhe hath waſhed my feet with tears. The Perſic verſion reads, with the tears of her eyes; which made a bath for his feet; and wiped them with the hairs of her head. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read only, with her hair, which ſhe uſed inſtead of a towel, when Simon neither gave him water to waſh with, nor a towel to wipe with.

Ver. 45. Thou gaveſt me no kiſs, &c.] A token of civility among friends, when they met together on any occaſion. The Jews have a ſaying [b], that "all kiſſes are fooliſh, excepting three; the kiſs of grandeur or dignity, as in 1 Sam. x. 1. and the kiſs at parting, as in Ruth i. 14. and the kiſs at meeting, as in Exod. iv. 27. (of which ſort this kiſs may be thought to be) to which ſome add the kiſs of conſanguinity, (or that uſed by relations to one another) as in Gen. xxix. 11." but this woman ſince the time I came in. The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, ſince ſhe came in; and ſo two of Stephens's copies; which ſeems to be the more agreeable reading, ſeeing Chriſt was in Simon's houſe before this woman came; for ſhe knowing that he was there, came thither after him: hath not ceaſed to kiſs my feet; which ſhows, that this action was repeated by her times without number, even ever ſince ſhe came into the houſe.

Ver. 46. Mine head with oil thou didſt not anoint, &c.] No not with common oil, ſo uſually done at feaſts, ſee Pſ. xxiii. 5. but this woman hath anointed my feet with ointment; even with ointment, דבסמא, of ſpices, as the Syriac verſion renders it. There is, throughout the whole account, an oppoſition between the conduct of Simon, and this woman: he gave him no common water to waſh his feet with, ſhe ſhed floods of tears, and with them bathed his feet, and then wiped them clean with the hairs of her head; he gave him not the uſual ſalutation by kiſſing his head or lips, but ſhe kiſſed his feet, and that over and over again; he did not ſo much as anoint his head with common oil, when ſhe anointed his feet with coſtly ointment brought in an alabaſter box. Theſe ſeveral ceremonies to gueſts were uſed by their hoſts, in other nations, ſuch as waſhing, anointing, and kiſſing [c].

Ver. 47. Wherefore I ſay unto thee, &c.] Not for this that ſhe hath done, as the Perſic verſion very wrongly renders it; not becauſe ſhe had waſhed Chriſt's feet with tears, and wiped them with her hairs, and kiſſed and anointed them, therefore her ſins were forgiven; nor upon this account, and for thoſe reaſons did Chriſt ſay, or declare, that they were forgiven; but ου χαριν, for this cauſe, or reaſon, he ſaid this to Simon the Phariſee, to remove his objections, rectify his miſtakes, and ſtop his murmuring and complaining, by obſerving, that tho' ſhe had been a great ſinner, yet ſhe was now not ſuch an one as he took her to be; ſhe was a pardoned ſinner, and not that guilty and filthy creature he imagined; the guilt of all her ſins was removed, and ſhe was cleanſed from all her filthineſs: her ſins, which are many, are forgiven; tho' ſhe was like the largeſt debtor in the parable, which owed five hundred pence, yet the whole ſcore was cleared; tho' her ſins were numerous, and attended with very aggravating circumſtances, which denominated her a ſinner, in a very emphatic ſenſe, a notorious one, yet they were all fully, and freely forgiven: for ſhe loved much; or therefore ſhe loved much: her great love was not the cauſe of the remiſſion of her ſins, but the full and free remiſſion of her many ſins, which had been manifeſted to her, was the cauſe of her great love, and of her ſhewing it in the manner ſhe had done: that this is the ſenſe of the words, is clear from the parable, and the accommodation of it to the preſent caſe, otherwiſe there would be no agreement. Upon relating the parable of the two debtors, Chriſt puts the queſtion to Simon, which of the two it was moſt reaſonable to think would love moſt: his anſwer is, and which Chriſt approved of, he to whom moſt was forgiven; where, 'tis plain, that according to our Lord's ſenſe, and even Simon's opinion of the caſe, that forgiveneſs is the cauſe, and love the effect; and that according as the forgiveneſs is of more or leſs, love is proportionate; and which is applied to the caſe in hand: this poor woman had been a great ſinner; her many ſins were pardoned; and therefore ſhe expreſſed much love to him, from whom ſhe had received her pardon by the above actions, and much more than Simon had done: but to whom little is forgiven, the ſame loveth little; this is an accommodation of the other part of the parable, and has a very ſpecial reſpect to Simon, the Phariſee, whoſe debts, in his own opinion, were few or none, at leaſt ten times leſs than this woman's; and he had little or no ſenſe of the forgiveneſs of them, or of any obligation to Chriſt on that account; and therefore was very ſparing of his love and reſpect, and even of common civilities to him.

Ver. 48. And he ſaith unto her, &c.] Directing his diſcourſe to the woman that now ſtood before him: thy ſins are forgiven; which was ſaid, partly on account of the Phariſee, to let him ſee, that he knew this woman, what ſhe was, and had been; that ſhe had been a ſinner, a great ſinner, one that owed five hundred pence, but was now forgiven, waſhed, cleanſed, ſanctified, and juſtified, and therefore not to be ſhunned and avoided; and partly on the woman's account, that ſhe might have a freſh diſcovery of the forgiveneſs of her ſins, for her comfort under the ſevere cenſure of the Phariſee, and that her faith in it might be ſtrengthened; as alſo on his own account, to ſhew that he was not only a prophet that had extraordinary knowledge of perſons, and their characters, but that he was the moſt high God, to whom belonged the prerogative of pardoning ſin.

Ver. 49. And they that ſat at meat with him, &c.] Other Phariſees that ſat at Simon's table with Chriſt, whom he had invited as gueſts, on this occaſion of ſeeing and converſing with Jeſus; or ſome of Simon's family, that ſat down to eat with him; began to ſay within themſelves; that is, either thought and reaſoned in their own minds, or whiſpered among themſelves: who is this that forgiveth ſins alſo? who not content to tranſgreſs the traditions of the elders, by admitting a ſinful woman to touch him, but aſſumes that to himſelf which is peculiar to God, to forgive ſin: this they ſaid, not as wondering at him, what manner of perſon he muſt be, that with ſuch authority pronounced the forgiveneſs of ſin, as Grotius thinks; but rather as offended with him, and filled with indignation againſt him, and ſo cenſuring and reproaching him for wickedneſs and blaſphemy.

Ver. 50. And he ſaid to the woman, &c.] Notwithſtanding the Phariſees cenſure, both of him and her: thy faith hath ſaved thee; meaning either the object of her faith, himſelf, who was the author of eternal ſalvation to her; or that ſhe, thro' faith in him, had received the bleſſings of ſalvation, pardon, righteouſneſs, and life from him, and the joys and comfort of it; and had both a right unto, and a meetneſs for eternal glory and happineſs: go in peace; of conſcience, and ſerenity of mind; let nothing diſturb thee; not the remembrance of paſt ſins, which are all forgiven, nor the ſuggeſtions of ſatan, who may, at one time or another, preſent them to view; nor the troubles and afflictions of this preſent life, which are all in love; nor the reproaches and cenſures of men of a phariſaic ſpirit: go home to thy houſe, and about thy buſineſs, and chearfully perform thy duty both to God and men; and when thou haſt done thy generation-work, thou ſhalt enter into eternal peace and joy.

CHAP. VIII.

Ver. 1. AND it came to paſs afterwards, &c.] After Chriſt had healed the centurion's ſervant at Capernaum, and had raiſed a widow's ſon that was dead, to life, at Naim; after John's diſciples had been with him, and he had diſmiſſed them, and had ſaid many things in commendation of John, and in vindication both of him, and of himſelf; and after he had taken a meal in a Phariſee's houſe, where he met with a woman that had been a notorious ſinner, who ſhewed great affection for him, which occaſioned much diſcourſe between him and the Phariſee: that he went throughout every city and village; that is, in Galilee, where he now was, as is clear from the foregoing chapter, and from what follows in this, ſee ver. 26. and beſides, it was by the ſea of Galilee that he delivered the following parable concerning the ſower; ſee Matt. xiii. 1. preaching, and ſhewing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God; of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, which was now taking place, and had been long expected; publiſhing the doctrines and myſteries of it, ſuch as free and full remiſſion of ſins for his own ſake, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, acceptance in him the beloved Son of God, and compleat ſalvation by him as the Saviour of his people, than which nothing could be more welcome news, or better tidings; pointing out the ordinances of that diſpenſation, and ſhewing who were the proper ſubjects of them, and directing and encouraging ſuch to ſubmit unto them; as alſo ſignifying what the kingdom of grace lies in, not in meats and drinks, or any outward things, but in inward holineſs, peace, and joy; and what is a meetneſs for entrance into the kingdom of glory, namely, regenerating grace; and what gives a right unto it, even a better righteouſneſs than that of the Scribes and Phariſees, and which was no other than his own: and the twelve were with him; the twelve Apoſtles, whom Chriſt had choſe, and ordained as ſuch: theſe attended him where-ever he went, that they might be witneſſes of his miracles, and learn his doctrines; that ſo they might be thoroughly furniſhed for their future miniſtry, both in Judea, and among the Gentiles.

Ver. 2. And certain women which had been healed of evil ſpirits, &c.] Of devils, who had poſſeſſed them, and were healed by Chriſt, diſpoſſeſſing them; ſee the note on chap. vii. 21. and infirmities; various diſeaſes of body: ſome were diſpoſſeſſed of devils, and others freed from bodily diſorders; of the firſt ſort was Mary Magdalene, out of whom went ſeven devils; by the order of Chriſt, for he caſt them out, Mark xvi. 9. and which ſhews, that this is to be underſtood, in a literal ſenſe, of devils, and the diſpoſſeſſion of them by Chriſt; and not in a figurative ſenſe, of vices, and the expulſion of them by the power of divine grace; for this ſame phraſe is uſed where real diſpoſſeſſions are intended: nor need it be thought ſtrange, that ſeven devils ſhould be in one perſon, when, in this ſame chapter, we read of a legion in one man, and which alſo Chriſt caſt out, ſee ver. 30, 33, 35. This woman ſeems to be a different perſon from her ſpoken of in the latter part of the preceding chapter, ſeeing this looks as if it was the firſt time of her being taken notice of by this Evangeliſt, and is deſcribed by a different character. She is called Magdalene, to diſtinguiſh her from others of the ſame name; the reaſon of which ſee in the note on Matt. xxvii. 56. She is ſaid [d] to be a widow, and ſo not being bound to an huſband, was at leiſure to follow Chriſt.

Ver. 3. And Joanna, the wife of Chuza, Herod's ſteward, &c.] Joanna, or Juchan, as the Syriac verſion calls her, was a name, among the Jews, for a woman, as Jochanan, or John, was for a man. In the Talmud [e] we read of one Jochani, or Joanni, the daughter of Retibi, the ſame name with this. Her huſband's name was Chuza. Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, from a Talmudic treatiſe [f], ſuch a name in the genealogy of Haman, who is called the ſon of Chuza; and Haman being an Edomite, and this man being in the family of Herod, who was of that race, ſuggeſts it to be an Idumean name. But in my edition of that treatiſe, Haman is not called the ſon of Chuza, but בר כיזא, the ſon of Ciza; and beſides, Chuza is a Jewiſh name, and the name of a family of note among the Jews: hence we read [g] of R. Broka the Chuzite; where the Gloſs is, for he was, מבי חוזאי, of the family of Chuzai. And elſewhere [h] mention is made of two ſons of Chuzai; and both the Gloſs, and Piſke Haroſh upon the place, ſay, they were Jews: ſo Abimi is ſaid to be of the family of Chuzai, or the Chuzites [i]; and the ſame is ſaid of R. Acha [k]. This man, here mentioned, was Herod's ſteward; a ſteward of Herod the tetrarch, of Galilee. The Arabic verſion calls him his treaſurer; and the Vulgate Latin, and the Ethiopic verſions, his procurator; and ſome have thought him to be a deputy-governour of the province under him; but he ſeems rather to be a governour, or chief of his houſe, as the Syriac verſion renders it: he was one that preſided in his family, and managed his domeſtic affairs; was an overſeer of them, as Joſeph was in Potiphar's houſe; and the ſame Greek word that is here uſed, is adopted by the Jews into their language, and uſed of Joſeph [l]: and who moreover ſay [m], "let not a man appoint a ſteward "in his houſe; for if Potiphar had not appointed "Joſeph, אפוטרופוס, a ſteward, in his houſe, he "had not come into that matter," of calumny and reproach. It was common for kings, princes, and great men to have ſuch an officer in their families. We read [n] of a ſteward of king Agrippa's, who was of this ſame family. The Perſic verſion is very foreign to the purpoſe, making Chuza to be of the family of Herod. This man might be either dead, as ſome have conjectured; or, if living, might be ſecretly a friend of Chriſt, and ſo willing that his wife ſhould follow him; or, if an enemy, ſuch was her zeal for Chriſt, that ſhe chearfully expoſed herſelf to all his reſentments; and choſe rather meanneſs, contempt, and perſecution with Chriſt, and for his ſake, than to enjoy all the pleaſures of Herod's court without him. And Suſanna; this alſo was a name for a woman with the Jews, as appears from the hiſtory of one of this name with them, which ſtands among the Apocryphal writings. She, as well as Joanna, and perhaps alſo Mary Magdalene, were rich, and perſons of ſubſtance, as well as note, as ſhould ſeem by what follows: and many others; that is, many other women; for the words are of the feminine gender: which miniſtred unto him of their ſubſtance; four ancient copies of Beza's, and five of Stephens's, and the Syriac verſion read, which miniſtred unto them; that is, to Chriſt, and his diſciples, as the Perſic verſion expreſſes it. This ſhows the gratitude of theſe women, who having received favours from Chriſt, both for their ſouls and bodies, make returns to him out of their worldly ſubſtance, in a way of thankfulneſs; and alſo the low eſtate of Chriſt, and his diſciples, who ſtood in need of ſuch miniſtrations; and may be an inſtruction to the churches of Chriſt to take care of their miniſters, and to communicate in all good things to them, of whoſe ſpiritual things they partake; and may be a direction to them to miniſter to them of what is their own ſubſtance, and not another's; and to miniſter a proper part, and not the whole, as theſe women miniſtred to Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, of ſubſtance which was their own, and that not all of it, but out of it.

Ver. 4. And when much people were gathered together, &c.] To Jeſus, as he was by the ſea-ſide, the ſea of Galilee, or Tiberias: and were come to him out of every city; of Galilee, to hear him preach, and ſee his miracles: he ſpake by a parable; the following things.

Ver. 5. A ſower went out to ſow his ſeed, &c.] By whom Jeſus Chriſt is chiefly deſigned; tho' it is true of every preacher of the Goſpel, who goes forth, being ſent by Chriſt, with the precious ſeed of the word: for the phraſe, his ſeed, which only Luke has, beſt agrees with Chriſt, he being the proprietor and ſubject of it. The Alexandrian copy reads, the ſeed of himſelf. The Perſic verſion reads the whole clauſe thus, a ſower choſe ground, and there he ſowed ſeed: he fixed on the ſpot of ground to ſow his ſeed in, as Chriſt did on the people of the Jews, and afterwards the Gentiles. And, as he ſowed, ſome fell by the way-ſide; on the road, which was by the ſide of the field, in which people commonly walked, and ſo was beaten hard, and the ſeed lay upon it, and was not received; which deſigns ſuch hearers of the word, as are not ſuſceptive of it, don't take it in, and have no manner of underſtanding of it. And it was trodden down; by every one that paſſed by, as the Goſpel preached to ſuch hardened and ignorant hearers, is deſpiſed and trampled under foot by them. And the fowls of the air devoured it; who generally flock about places where ſeed is ſowing; and here intend the devil and his angels, that have their dwelling in the air; and frequent places of public worſhip to hinder the uſefulneſs of the miniſtry of the word, as much as in them lies.

Ver. 6. And ſome fell upon a rock, &c.] Which the other Evangeliſts call ſtony places, and ſtony ground; by which are meant ſuch hearers whoſe hearts are hardened thro' the deceitfulneſs of ſin, and continue ſo notwithſtanding the preaching of the word unto them. And as ſoon as it ſprung up; as it did immediately, as the other Evangeliſts ſay; and that for this reaſon, which they give, becauſe it had no depth of earth; only a ſmall cruſt, or ſhell of earth over the rock; and ſignifies, that theſe hearers had only a ſuperficial knowledge of the word, and haſtily made a profeſſion of it, which ſoon came to nothing: it withered away, becauſe it lacked moiſture; the other Evangeliſts ſay, when the ſun was up, it was ſcorched; meaning tribulation and perſecution, the grace of God being wanting to ſupport under fiery trials: the reaſon given in Matthew and Mark why it withered, is, becauſe it had no root; and ſo read the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions here.

Ver. 7. And ſome fell among thorns, &c.] On ground which had within it the roots of thorns and briars; and deſign ſuch hearers who have their hearts filled with worldly cares, and ſenſual luſts and pleaſures: and the thorns ſprang up with it; and grew faſter than that: and choked it; as the above things do the word, and make it uſeleſs and unprofitable; ſo that tho' it took place for a while, and was profeſſed, yet in proceſs of time was neglected and dropped; and, as Mark ſays, it yielded no fruit; at leaſt that came to perfection.

Ver. 8. And other fell on good ground, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, on good and beautiful ground; and ſo the Cambridge copy of Beza's; ground which both looked well, and proved well; and ſignifies ſuch hearers who have good and honeſt hearts, made ſo by the Spirit of God; who receive the word in the love of it, have a ſpiritual underſtanding, and real experience of it: and ſprang up, and bare fruit, an hundred fold; or a hundred for one, as the Syriac verſion renders it; a hundred grains for one that was ſown. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and it was to thirty, and it was to ſixty; that is, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, ſome thirty, and ſome ſixty fold; for the word of God is more fruitfull in ſome of thoſe gracious hearers, than in others: and when he had ſaid theſe things, he cried; with a loud voice, that what he was about to ſay might be attended to: he that hath ears to hear, let him hear; ſee this parable more largely explained in the notes on Matt. xiii. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Ver. 9. And his diſciples aſked him, &c.] That is, as Mark ſays, when he was alone; after the multitude were departed, and they were by themſelves, it may be in ſome houſe with other diſciples: ſaying, what might this parable be? what is the ſenſe and meaning of it? According to Matthew, they aſked why he ſpake in parables to the people; and to ſuch a queſtion the following words are a proper anſwer.

Ver. 10. And he ſaid, unto you it is given to know the myſteries of the kingdom of God, &c.] The doctrines of the Goſpel, which to have ſpiritual knowledge of, is a ſpecial and peculiar gift of God. The Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions read, the myſtery, in the ſingular, as in Mark: but to others in parables; that is, the doctrines of the Goſpel are delivered in a parabolical way to others; to ſuch as are without, as the Evangeliſt Mark expreſſes it, who are ſtrangers and foreigners, and not children, who are not the favourites of heaven, and the diſciples of Chriſt: that ſeeing they might not ſee, and hearing they might not underſtand; what was delivered to them; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 11,13,14.

Ver. 11. Now the parable is this, &c.] Or this is the ſenſe of the parable, as the Arabic verſion renders it: the ſeed is the word of God; the Goſpel, as preached by Chriſt, his apoſtles, and faithful miniſters, which has God for its author, is concerning the grace of God, and is what he bleſſes, and makes effectual to anſwer any good purpoſe.

Ver. 12. Thoſe by the way-ſide are they that hear, &c.] The word of God, tho' only by accident, and very careleſsly, and without underſtanding what they hear: then cometh the devil; ſignified by the fowls of the air: and taketh away the word out of their hearts, or memories; that little of it, which is retained there, and diverts their minds from it by other objects; ſo that they quite forget what they have heard; leſt they ſhould believe, and be ſaved: this clauſe is only in Luke; and with it may be compared 2 Cor. iv. 4. for with true faith in Chriſt the ſum and ſubſtance of the word ſalvation is connected; and ſatan being an enemy to the ſalvation of ſouls, does all he can to hinder their faith in him.

Ver. 13. They on the rock, are they, which when they hear, &c.] The ſeed that fell upon the rock, or ſtony ground, ſignify ſuch ſort of hearers, who receive the word with joy. The Ethiopic verſion reads, with joy of heart. But this ſort of hearers receive not the word into their hearts, or with their hearts believe it, and from their hearts obey it, only into their heads, and have only an hiſtorical faith of it; nor with hearty, ſpiritual, ſolid joy, or joy in the Holy Ghoſt: for their hearts remain like a rock, unbroken by the word; but with a flaſh of natural affection, which quickly goes off. And theſe have no root; neither in themſelves, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, they have no true grace in them; nor have they any root in Chriſt, nor in the love of God: which for a while believe; their faith is a temporary one, like that of Simon Magus; which ſhows it is not true faith; for that is an abiding grace, Chriſt, who is the author, is the finiſher of it, and prays for it, that it fail not. The Perſic verſion renders it, in the time of hearing they have faith; and ſuch ſort of hearers there are, who, whilſt they are hearing, aſſent to what they hear; but when they are gone, either forget it, or, falling into bad company, are prevailed upon to doubt of it, and diſbelieve it. The Arabic verſion renders it, they believe for a ſmall time; their faith don't continue long, nor their profeſſion of it, both are ſoon dropped: and in the time of temptation fall away; or go back, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, they draw back unto perdition; or forſake that, as the Arabic verſion reads, the word, they have heard, and received, their faith in it, and profeſſion of it; and ſoon become apoſtates, as the Perſic verſion renders it. By the time of temptation, is not meant any particular and ſore temptation of ſatan, but a time of affliction and perſecution, as appears from the other Evangeliſts; which is a trying time to profeſſors of religion, and when thoſe who have not the root of the matter in them, fall away.

Ver. 14. And that which fell among thorns are they, &c.] The ſeed that fell among thorns, or were ſown on thorny ground, repreſent ſuch hearers: which, when they have heard, go forth; from hearing the word to their worldly buſineſs; or go on in the purſuit of their worldly luſts and pleaſures notwithſtanding; for the word tranſlated, go forth, belongs to the next clauſe; and are choked with cares, and riches, and pleaſures of this life; and with it to be read thus, and going on in, or under, that is, under the power and influence of, the cares, and riches, and pleaſures of life they are choked; to which agrees the Arabic verſion, which renders it, in which they walk, or which they follow. The Vulgate Latin verſion is, and from the cares, and riches, and pleaſures of life going they are choked: but it is not going from them, but going on in them, which chokes them, or ſuffocates the word they have heard, whereby it becomes of no effect; unleſs it ſhould be rendered, by the cares, &c. they are choked, and bring no fruit to perfection; for what fruit ſuch hearers do bring forth, in a way of profeſſion, ſoon drops off, and periſhes.

Ver. 15. But that on the good ground are they, &c.] The ſeed that fell on good ground deſig ſuch hearers, which in an honeſt and good heart, having heard the word, keep it: who hear with an honeſt and good intention, and faithfully keep it, and hold it faſt: and bring forth fruit with patience; with great conſtancy, ſuffering much for the ſake of it; and the more they ſuffer, the more fruitful they are. See this explanation of the parable more largely inſiſted on in the notes on Matt. xiii. 19,20, 21, 22, 23.

Ver. 16. No man when he hath lighted a candle, &c.] Chriſt by this, and ſome proverbial ſentences following, obſerves to his diſciples, that tho' the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven were delivered in parables for the preſent, that they might not b ſeen and underſtood by ſome; and though he gav to them the explanation of ſuch parables, as of th above, in a private manner; yet his intention wa not, that theſe things ſhould always remain a ſe cret with them; but as they were the lights of th world, they ſhould communicate them to others and that that light of the Goſpel, and the know ledge of the doctrines of it, which he had im parted to them, were not to be retained and con cealed in their boſoms, but to be diffuſed an ſpread among others: even as no man, when h lights a candle, covereth it with a veſſel; any ſo of veſſel, as with a buſhel, Matt. v. 15. ſee t note there; or with a bucket, or with a ſhell, the Perſic verſion here interprets, rather than tran lates: or putteth it under a bed; whether a bed ſleep on, or a couch to ſit or lie upon at meal but ſetteth it on a candleſtick; a veſſel, or inſtr ment made for that uſe and purpoſe, to put a hold a candle in; that they which enter in; to t houſe, or room, where it is, may ſee the light of and be enlightened by it: even ſo it is the will Chriſt, that what evangelical light and knowledge he beſtows on any perſons, they ſhould not hide it, nor their gifts and talents, or keep it back from the view of others, but ſhould hold it forth both in their preaching, and in their practice.

Ver. 17. For nothing is ſecret that ſhall not be made manifeſt, &c.] Meaning, whatever was then wrapped up in parables and dark ſayings, or was ſecretly, and in a private manner, committed to them, ſhould be made manifeſt by them to others hereafter: neither any thing hid, that ſhall not be made known, and come abroad; for what had been whiſpered to them, in the moſt ſecret and ſilent manner, was to come abroad not only in Judea, but in all the world, and to be publiſhed upon the houſe tops; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 26, 27.

Ver. 18. Take heed therefore how ye hear, &c.] That ye hear not in a careleſs and negligent manner, ſince what truths and doctrines ye now hear with the ear, are to be preached by you unto others: for whoſoever hath; that is, hath knowledge of the doctrines of the Goſpel, and hath gifts and abilities to preach them to others: to him ſhall be given; more knowledge, and by uſing his gifts they ſhall be increaſed: but he that hath not; true, ſolid, ſpiritual knowledge of divine things, tho' he has had conſiderable advantages and opportunities of learning it, as the apoſtles eſpecially had: from him ſhall be taken, even that which he ſeemeth to have; or that which he thinks he has, as the Syriac verſion renders it; that which he ſeemed to others to have, or thought himſelf he had: the knowledge he had of truth, and which was rather a ſhew of knowledge than real, ſhall be taken from him; his ſeeming gifts and parts ſhall die, and vaniſh away, and he ſhall be left to fall into ignorance, error, and hereſy. Obſerve, that this is to be underſtood not of internal grace, and experimental knowledge, but of ſpeculative notions of the Goſpel, and of external gifts; and ſo furniſhes out no argument againſt the final perſeverance of real ſaints; ſee the notes on Matt. xiii. 12. and xxv. 29.

Ver. 19. Then came to him his mother and his brethren, &c.] It was when Chriſt was preaching in an houſe at Capernaum, that Mary his mother, and ſome of his near kinſmen with her, came from Nazareth to him: theſe brethren of his were relations according to the fleſh, either by Joſeph, or his mother's ſide: who they were, can't be ſaid with certainty; it may be they were Joſes and Simon; for as for James and Judas, they were among the twelve apoſtles, and with him; and theſe are the four only perſons that are mentioned by name, as his brethren, Matt. xiii. 55. tho' there were others that were ſo called, who did not believe in him, John vii. 5. and could not come at him for the preſs; the multitude of people that were about him, who were ſo thick, that there was no coming near him, much leſs was there an opportunity of ſpeaking privately with him. The Syriac verſion renders it, they could not ſpeak unto him for the multitude.

Ver. 20. And it was told him by certain, which ſaid, &c.] The phraſe, which ſaid, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and in Beza's moſt ancient copy. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions only read, and they ſaid unto him; and the Perſic verſion renders it, a certain perſon ſaid; ſome one perſon, as in Matt. xii. 47. thy mother, and thy brethren, ſtand without, deſiring to ſee thee; and to ſpeak with thee, as in Matt. xii. 47. ſee the note there.

Ver. 21. And he anſwered and ſaid unto them, &c.] Not to his mother and brethren, but to thoſe that told him of them; who either deſigned to reproach him with them, by reaſon of the meanneſs of them, or to interrupt him in his work: my mother, and my brethren are theſe; pointing to his diſciples: which hear the word of God; which he had been preaching, and was meant by the ſeed in the preceding parable: and do it; behave in their lives and converſations agreeable to it; and obſerve the precepts and ordinances in it, elſewhere called the will of God his Father; ſee the notes on Matt. xii. 49, 50.

Ver. 22. Now it came to paſs on a certain day, &c.] The ſame day at even, as Mark ſays, ch. iv. 35. in which he delivered the parables of the ſower, and of the ſeed caſt into the ground, and of the grain of muſtard-ſeed: that he went into a ſhip with his diſciples; they following him into it, as in Matt. viii. 23. and he ſaid unto them, let us go over unto the other ſide of the lake; of Genneſareth, or ſea of Galilee: and they launched forth; into the ſea; they ſet ſail, and proceeded: this clauſe is omitted in the Syriac and Perſic verſions.

Ver. 23. But as he ſailed he fell aſleep, &c.] On a pillow, in the hinder part of the ſhip, as in Mark iv. 38. and there came down a ſtorm of wind on the lake; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 24. and they were filled; with water: not the diſciples, but the ſhip in which they were; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, their ſhip was filled with water. The Syriac and Perſic verſions render it, the ſhip was almoſt ſunk, or immerſed: and were in jeopardy; of their lives, in the utmoſt danger, juſt ready to go to the bottom. This clauſe is left out in the Syriac and Perſic verſions.

Ver. 24. And they came to him, and awoke him, &c.] That is, the diſciples came from ſome part of the ſhip, to the hinder part of it, where Chriſt was aſleep; and by their ſhrieks and cries, and repeated vociferations, awaked him out of ſleep: ſaying, Maſter, Maſter, we periſh. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, only read maſter, without a repetition of the word, as in Matthew and Mark; but the Syriac and Perſic verſions repeat it, and render the words, our maſter, our maſter; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 25. Then he aroſe, and rebuked the wind, and the raging of the water, and they ceaſed, and there was a calm; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 26.

Ver. 25. And he ſaid unto them, where is your faith? &c.] That is, he ſaid ſo to his diſciples, who had profeſſed faith in him, but now diſcovered very little: and they being afraid, wondered; being filled with an awful ſenſe of his majeſty, were amazed at his power and authority, in rebuking the wind and ſea, which at once obeyed him, and were ſtill: ſaying one to another; among themſelves, privately: what manner of man is this? for he commandeth even the winds and water; or the ſea, as the Vulgate Latin. The Syriac verſion reads both, the floods and the ſea: and they obey him: according to Matthew, theſe words ſeem to be ſpoken by the men of the ſhip, the mariners; but here, according to Luke, they ſeem to be the words of the diſciples; ſee the notes on Matt. viii. 27. and Mark iv. 41.

Ver. 26. And they arrived at the country of the Gadarenes, &c.] In Matt. viii. 28. it is called the country of the Gergeſenes, ſee the note there, as it is here, in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; and of the Geraſenes, in the Vulgate Latin; but the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, of the Gadarenes, as in Mark v. 1. ſee the note there: which is over-againſt Galilee; from whence the ſhip launched, and Chriſt and his diſciples came.

Ver. 27. And when he went forth to land, &c.] The Perſic and Ethiopic verſions read, when they went forth to land; when Chriſt and his diſciples came out of the ſhip, and went aſhore: there met him out of the city a certain man; or rather, there met him a certain man of the city; that is, one that belonged to, and was an inhabitant of Gadara, or ſome city thereabout; who had been born and brought up, and had lived there; for certain it is, that he did not now come out of the city, but out of the tombs, as in Matt. viii. 28. Mark v. 2. and to which agrees the account of him, that follows here: in the Vulgate Latin verſion, theſe words, out of the city, are omitted; which the interpreter not underſtanding, might leave out, as carrying in it a ſeeming contradiction, to the accounts of him: which had devils long time. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Arabic verſions, read in the ſingular number, which had a devil; and which agrees with ver. 29. for though more are after mentioned, yet the many might be under one head, and chief of them; but in all the copies 'tis read in the plural number, devils; and to this agrees the name of legion, for there were many devils in him, and they had a poſſeſſion of him a long time, which aggravates the miſerable condition of this man, and illuſtrates the power of Chriſt, in freeing him from them: and wore no clothes; but went naked, and when any were put upon him, would tear them to pieces: neither abode in any houſe, but in the tombs; ſee the note on Mark v. 3.

Ver. 28. When he ſaw Jeſus, &c.] Even afar off; at ſome conſiderable diſtance, he ran towards him, Mark v. 6. He cried out, and fell down before him; that is, the man poſſeſſed with the devil did ſo, under his impulſe, and through his agitation of him: and with a loud voice ſaid; which was the unclean ſpirit in the man: what have I to do with thee, Jeſus, thou Son of God, moſt high? I beſeech thee torment me not; i. e. before the time; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 29.

Ver. 29. For he had commanded the unclean ſpirit, &c.] That had the reſt of the devils under his authority, and power, to come out of the man; this he had done, either before, or juſt as he came up to him; ſee the note on Mark v. 8. For oftentimes it had caught him; poſſeſſed him, and wrought ſo ſtrongly in him, and with ſo much fury, that there was no governing him: and he was kept bound with chains and fetters; attempts were made to bind him, and keep him bound, but in vain: and he brake the bands; ſee Mark v. 4. And was driven of the devil into the wilderneſs; into ſome deſart and deſolate place, where were the tombs and ſepulchres of the dead; this was done by the prince of the legion.

Ver. 30. And Jeſus aſked him, ſaying, what is thy name? &c.] This queſtion was put, not out of ignorance in Chriſt, but for the ſake of thoſe that were with him; and partly, that the miſerable condition of this man might be the more known; and partly, that his own power might be the more manifeſt in the diſpoſſeſſion: and he ſaid, legion, becauſe many devils were entered into him; ſee the note on Mark v. 9.

Ver. 31. And they beſought him, &c.] That is, all the devils, the whole legion of them, intreated Jeſus, under whoſe power, and at whoſe diſpoſe they were: that he would not command them to go out into the deep; meaning, not the deep waters of the ſea, for thither they ran the ſwine at their own requeſt; but the bottomleſs pit of hell, where others of theſe ſpirits lay in chains of darkneſs; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, into hell: they deſired, that when they went out of this man, they might not be ordered thither, or remanded to their former priſon; for they knew that if he gave the word of command, they muſt obey; but that they might be ſuffered to continue in that country, and range about on earth, or be any where, rather than in hell.

Ver. 32. And there was there an herd of many ſwine, &c.] About two thouſand, Mark v. 13. Feeding on the mountain; ſee the note on Mark v. 11. And they beſought him that he would ſuffer them to enter into them; which they could not do, without his leave: and he ſuffered them; ſee the notes on Mark v. 12, 13.

Ver. 33. Then went the devils out of the man, &c.] Being obliged by the power of Chriſt, ſore againſt their wills, having had poſſeſſion of him a long time: and entered into the ſwine; poſſeſſed them: and the herd ran violently down a ſteep place into the lake; that is, of Genneſareth; or the ſea, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions read; that is, the ſea of Galilee, the ſame with the former: and were choaked; in the waters, and died, as the Ethiopic verſion adds.

Ver. 34. When they that fed them ſaw what was done, &c.] That the devils went out of the man poſſeſſed by them, and entered into the herd of ſwine, which becoming mad therewith, ran furiouſly down the precipice into the ſea, and were drowned: they fled; as perſons affrighted, at theſe uncommon and ſurprizing events, and as afraid to ſee their owners: and went and told it in the city; that is, of Gadara, or ſome other city near at hand; the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, in the cities; in all the cities round about, in that country: and in the country; or fields, in the villages adjacent, and in the houſes which were ſcattered about in the fields for conveniency, for rural buſineſs.

Ver. 35. Then they went out to ſee what was done, &c.] That is, the inhabitants of the city, or cities and villages, and houſes in the fields; theſe went out from their reſpective places of abode, to ſee with their own eyes, what the ſwineherds had related to them, concerning the man that had been poſſeſſed with devils, and what was become of the ſwine: and came to Jeſus; where he was, which was not far from the ſea-ſhore: and found the man out of whom the devils were departed, ſitting at the feet of Jeſus; quiet and ſerene, in an humble poſture, and as a diſciple of Chriſt, receiving inſtructions from him: clothed, and in his right mind, and they were afraid; ſee the note on Mark v. 15.

Ver. 36. They alſo which ſaw it, &c.] The diſciples of Chriſt, or the men of the ſhip, or perſons who lived hard by in the fields, who were eye-witneſſes of theſe ſeveral things: told them by what means he that was poſſeſſed of the devils, was healed; ſee the note on Mark v. 16.

Ver. 37. Then the whole multitude, &c.] For it ſeems a very large number of people were preſently gathered together, from all parts of the country, upon the report of the ſwineherds, who fled, 'tis very likely, ſome one way, and ſome another: of the country of the Gadarenes round about; of the country that was round about Gadara. The Vulgate Latin reads, of the Geraſenes; and the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, of the Gergeſenes: and they all with one accord, beſought him to depart from them, for they were taken with great fear: leſt they ſhould ſuffer other and greater loſſes, than the loſs of the ſwine; chuſing rather that the devils ſhould be retained among them, than Chriſt continue with them: and he went up into the ſhip; directly, granted their requeſt at once; not deſirous of ſtaying with ſuch an ungrateful people, that loved their ſwine more than him, yea, than the bodily health and welfare of their countrymen: and he returned back again; to Galilee, at leaſt in a very little time, after ſome ſhort diſcourſe with the diſpoſſeſſed man; having ſtaid but a very ſmall time in that place, juſt landed as it were, and not having proceeded far from the ſea-ſhore.

Ver. 38. Now the man out of whom the devils were departed, &c.] Senſible of the power of Chriſt, and of the favour he had received from him, was of a quite different mind from his countrymen: and beſought him that he might be with him; ſee the note on Mark v. 18. But Jeſus ſent him away; from him, into the country: ſaying; as follows.

Ver. 39. Return to thine own houſe, &c.] Which very likely was in the city of Gadara, whither he went, and throughout the whole of which, he publiſhed the account of the diſpoſſeſſion of the devils from him: Mark adds, to thy friends; relations, acquaintance, and countrymen: and ſhew how great things God hath done unto thee; for none but God could effect ſuch things, tacitly ſuggeſting to him hereby, that he himſelf was God. Mark adds, and hath had compaſſion on thee; ſignifying, that what he had done for him, did not ariſe from merit in the man, but from mercy in himſelf; ſee the note on Mark v. 19. And he went his way; he obeyed the orders of Chriſt, as love and gratitude obliged him: and publiſhed throughout the whole city; of Gadara, and not only there, but in the reſt of the ten cities, called Decapolis, Mark v. 20. one of which, was this of Gadara, as Pliny relates [o]: how great things Jeſus had done unto him; having caſt out a legion of devils from him, cloathed him, and brought him to his right mind; and had not only delivered his body from a diabolical poſſeſſion, but had given him ſpiritual and ſaving inſtructions for his ſoul, on which he had wrought a real work of grace.

Ver. 40. And it came to paſs that when Jeſus was returned, &c.] From the country of the Gadarenes, to the other ſide of the ſea of Tiberias, to Galilee; and particularly to his own city, Capernaum; ſee Matt. ix. 1. The people gladly received him; who were of a different caſt from thoſe he had juſt left; being ſenſible of the benefits they received from him, both by his miniſtry and miracles; and which was the reaſon of their receiving him, with ſo much joy and gladneſs: for they were all waiting for him; on the ſhore, looking out very eagerly for him, being earneſtly deſirous of his ſpeedy return to them; having many that wanted his aſſiſtance, both for their ſouls and bodies, of which the following are inſtances.

Ver. 41. And behold, there came a man named Jairus, &c.] See the note on Mark v. 22. and he was a ruler of the ſynagogue; at Capernaum; and it was the more remarkable, that ſuch an one ſhould come to Chriſt, and expreſs any regard to his perſon, or faith in his power, and therefore a behold, is prefixed to this account; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. And he fell down at Jeſus feet; ſhowing great reverence and humility, and as Matthew ſays, worſhipped him; if not in a religious, yet in a civil way: and beſought him that he would come into his houſe; which was at ſome diſtance from thence, as appears by what follows.

Ver. 42. For he had one only daughter, &c.] And ſo exceedingly dear to him: about twelve years of age; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 18. And ſhe lay a dying; or was near death, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions; or was juſt ready to die, as the Ethiopic verſion. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions render it, ſhe was dead, or now dead, and which agrees with Matt. ix. 18. ſee the note there: but as he went; along the ſtreets of Capernaum, from Matthew's houſe; where he had been entertained with his diſciples, and others, and where he had a converſation with ſome of the Phariſees and John's diſciples, to the ruler's houſe: the people thronged him; ſuch a vaſt multitude followed him to ſee the cure, that he was even crouded, and ſo preſſed on all ſides, that it was difficult to walk along.

Ver. 43. And a woman having an iſſue of blood twelve years, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, there was a woman in that city, &c. in the city of Capernaum; ſee the note on Matt. ix. 20. Which had ſpent all her living upon phyſicians; ſhe had applied to one phyſician and another, and had conſumed all her ſubſtance in this way: neither could be healed of any; though ſhe had followed the directions and preſcriptions of many, who pretended they were able to cure her; ſee the note on Mark v. 26.

Ver. 44. Came behind him, &c.] In the preſs and croud of people, being aſhamed to come before him, and tell him her caſe: and touched the border of his garment; the fringe the Jews were obliged to wear at the bottom of their garments, Numb. xv. 38. Deut. xxii. 12. and which the more religious ſort did, for by this they were diſtinguiſhed from the common people: 'tis aſked [p], “ who “ is a plebeian, or one of the common people? “ every one that does not read Keriat Shema, (i. e. “ hear O Iſrael, &c. Deut. vi. 4.) morning and “ evening, with the bleſſings belonging to it, the “ words of R. Meir: but the wiſe men ſay, who- “ ever does not put on the Tephillin (the frontlets, “ Deut. vi. 8.) Ben Azzai ſays, whoever has not, “ ציצית, the fringe on his garment;” ſee the note on Matt. ix. 20. This woman was perſuaded in her own mind, if ſhe could but touch the cloaths of Chriſt, ſhe ſhould be healed, and accordingly ſhe was: and immediately her iſſue of blood ſtaunched; ſtopped, and was dried up; ſee Mark v. 28, 29.

Ver. 45. And Jeſus ſaid, who touched me? &c.] This he ſaid, not as ignorant of the perſon that had done it, but in order to diſcover her to the people, and the cure ſhe had received, as well as her faith; ſee the note on Mark v. 30. When all denied; both the diſciples and the multitude, as many as were near him, and who might be thought to have done it; all excepting the woman, who afterwards came and declared it; for it is very likely, that as ſoon as ſhe had touched his garment, and got her cure, ſhe drew farther off: Peter, and they that were with him; the reſt of the diſciples, who were in company together, as appears from Mark v. 31. Said, Maſter, the multitude throng thee, and preſs thee, and ſayeſt thou, who touched me? or my garment, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; ſee the note on Mark v. 31.

Ver. 46. And Jeſus ſaid, ſomebody hath touched me, &c.] Not in a common and accidental way, but with deſign, and in the ſtrength of faith: for I perceive that virtue is gone out of me; for the cure of the perſon that had touched him, and that not without his knowledge and will; ſee ch. vi. 19.

[o] Lib. 5. c. 18.

[p] T. Bab. Succa, fol. 22. 1.

Ver. 47. And when the woman ſaw that ſhe was not hid, &c.] From Chriſt, among the crowd, nor the thing that ſhe had done. The Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, that he had not forgot her; ſhe hoping he would be diverted from taking any notice of her and her action, through the crowd of people about him: ſhe came trembling; for fear of the anger and reſentment of Chriſt, and leſt the favour ſhould be revoked, and the penalty of the law inflicted; ſee the note on Mark v. 33. And falling down before him; in the moſt humble manner, at his feet, as the Arabic verſion reads; and worſhipped him, as the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions have it; gave him the glory of the cure, and thanks for it: ſhe declared unto him before all the people; the whole truth of the matter, what a diſeaſe ſhe had laboured under for ſo long a time, what means ſhe had uſed to no purpoſe: for what cauſe ſhe had touched him; namely, in order to have a cure, which ſhe believed ſhe ſhould have in that way: and how ſhe was healed immediately; as ſoon as ever ſhe had touched him.

Ver. 48. And he ſaid unto her, daughter, &c.] Inſtead of frowning upon her, and chiding her for what ſhe had done, he addreſſed her in a very affable and affectionate manner; bidding her, be of good comfort; and not be afraid; this clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin verſion, as in Mark v. 34. but is in the copies, and other verſions: thy faith hath made thee whole, go in peace; ſee the notes on Matt. viii. 2. Mark v. 34. Luke vii. 50.

Ver. 49. While he yet ſpake, &c.] The above words to the woman; there cometh one: Mark ſuggeſts there were more than one, ch. v. 35. ſee the note there; and the Perſic verſion here reads, ſome of the ruler's family came; that is, to him, who was now with Jeſus: from the ruler of the ſynagogues houſe; ſo the word houſe, is ſupplied by the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; otherwiſe the words would be, from the ruler of the ſynagogue; which could not be, ſince he was ſtill with Chriſt: hence ſome verſions, as the Vulgate and Arabic, render them, to the ruler of the ſynagogue; and which give a true ſenſe, and a right view of the caſe; for this meſſenger, both came from his houſe, and to him: ſaying to him, thy daughter is dead, trouble not the maſter; to bring him any further, ſince all hope of help was now gone. The Vulgate Latin verſion, inſtead of maſter, reads him; and the Ethiopic verſion, Jeſus.

Ver. 50. But when Jeſus heard it, &c.] The meſſage that was brought to the ruler, and the hint that was given, that it was needleſs to give him any farther trouble: he anſwered him; not the meſſenger, but the father of the child, as the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read: ſaying, fear not; don't be diſmayed at this meſſage, nor deſpair of help, notwithſtanding ſuch is the caſe: believe only, and ſhe ſhall be made whole; exerciſe faith in me, that I am able to raiſe her from the dead, and I will do it; and ſhe ſhall be reſtored to life, and to perfect health and ſtrength again.

Ver. 51. And when he came into the houſe, &c.] Of the ruler of the ſynagogue; he ſuffered no man to go in: to the room, where the dead body lay: ſave Peter, James, and John; not one of the multitude that followed him, nor any of the diſciples, but theſe three; who were his favourite ones, and were a ſufficient number to be witneſſes of the miracle: and the father and mother of the maiden; theſe alſo were admitted. The Perſic verſion very wrongly joins theſe laſt words, with the beginning of the next verſe, reading them thus, the father and mother of the maiden, with the domeſticks, wept and bewailed her.

Ver. 52. And all wept and bewailed her, &c.] Not only her relations and friends, and the ſervants of the houſe, but the mourning women, that were hired on this occaſion, and employed for this purpoſe: but he ſaid, weep not; neither in ſhow, as the mourning women did, nor in reality, as the friends of the deceaſed: ſhe is not dead, but ſleepeth; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 24. Mark v. 39.

Ver. 53. And they laughed him to ſcorn, &c.] The ſervants, neighbours, and relations, the pipers and mourning women; theſe, from weeping for the dead, fell to laughing at Chriſt, having him and his words in the utmoſt deriſion: knowing that ſhe was dead; ſome of them having been employed in laying her out, and all of them having ſeen her, and were ſatisfied, and thoroughly aſſured, that ſhe was actually dead, as ever any perſon was, as ſhe doubtleſs was; but they were ignorant in what ſenſe Chriſt meant ſhe was not dead, but aſleep; ſee the notes as before.

Ver. 54. And he put them all out, &c.] Of the room, where the maiden lay, all the mourners and pipers; all excepting the parents of the child, and his three diſciples. This clauſe is left out in the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions; nor was it in two of Beza's ancient copies, and in two of Stephens's; but in the reſt, and in the other verſions: and took her by the hand, and called, ſaying; in the Syriac language, Talitha cumi, as in Mark v. 41. Maid, ariſe; ſee the note there.

Ver. 55. And her ſpirit came again, &c.] Her ſoul, which was departed from her, upon the all-powerful voice of Chriſt, returned to her body; and re-entered, as the Ethiopic verſion adds: this ſhows, that the ſoul is immortal, and dies not with the body; that it exiſts in a ſeparate ſtate from it after death, and will hereafter re-enter the body, and be again united to it in the reſurrection, of which this inſtance, was a kind of pledge and emblem: where her ſpirit was during this time of ſeparation, is needleſs, and would be curious and raſh to enquire; it is enough to ſay with the ſcripture, that it had returned to God that gave it, Eccleſ. xii. 7. and by whom it was ſent back to its body again: and ſhe aroſe ſtraightway; from off the bed, and as Mark ſays, walked; for ſhe was at an age capable of it, and which actions of ariſing and walking, clearly proved that ſhe was alive and in health; and he commanded to give her meat; which was done, partly to ſhow, not only that ſhe was alive, but that her diſorder was removed, and her appetite reſtored, and that ſhe could eat and drink, as ſhe had done before her illneſs; and partly, to obſerve that ſhe was raiſed not to an immortal life, as none were before Chriſt, but to an animal life, which was to be ſupported by eating and drinking, and ſo a mortal one; ſee the note on Mark v. 43.

Ver. 56. And her parents were aſtoniſhed, &c.] At the miracle that was wrought, to ſee their child reſtored to life; to ſee her ariſe, walk, and eat, being in perfect health and ſtrength, and no diſorder attending her; but he charged them that they ſhould tell no man what was done. The Ethiopic verſion reads, what he had done, nor any thing that was done; not that the thing itſelf could be concealed, but the way and manner in which, and the means by which it was done, and the circumſtances of it; how that by taking her by the hand and commanding her to ariſe, ſhe forthwith aroſe and walked and eat: Chriſt's meaning is, that he would not have them take any pains to publiſh this affair, or to make it more known than was neceſſary; not to acquaint every perſon with the particulars of it, but keep them as private as they could: his reaſons for this, ſee in the note on Mark v. 43.

CHAP. IX.

Ver. 1. THEN he called his twelve diſciples together, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads, all his twelve diſciples; the other nine, beſides the three that were with him, when he raiſed Jairus's daughter, recorded in the foregoing chapter; the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, the twelve apoſtles, for ſo Chriſt had named his diſciples; ſee ch. vi. 13. The Syriac verſion only reads, his own twelve; and this is agreeable to Luke's way of ſpeaking; ſee ch. viii. 1. and ix. 12. And gave them power and authority over all devils; that is, all kinds of devils, particularly to caſt them out of the bodies of men, poſſeſſed by them: and to cure diſeaſes; of all ſorts.

Ver. 2. And he ſent them to preach the kingdom of God, &c.] The Goſpel, which gives an account of the kingdom of the Meſſiah; of his kingly office and power; of his church, which is his kingdom, and of the government of it, by the miniſtration of the word, and the adminiſtration of ordinances; of the kingdom of grace in the hearts of Chriſt's ſubjects, and the nature of it; and of the kingdom of glory, and what is the ſaints meetneſs for it, and right unto it: and to heal the ſick; of every diſeaſe of body, and thereby confirm their miſſion and commiſſion from Chriſt, to preach the Goſpel, and recommend it to men.

Ver. 3. And he ſaid unto them, take nothing for your journey, &c.] Throughout the towns and cities of Judea, where they were ſent to preach the Goſpel: neither ſtaves. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read in the ſingular number, neither ſtaff, rod, or club; and ſo it was in one of Beza's ancient copies, but in all the reſt in the plural, as in Matthew; which laſt muſt be the true reading, ſince one ſtaff was allowed, according as in Mark vi. 8. though more than one were forbidden: nor ſcrip; or bag to put proviſion in; ſee the note on Matt. x. 10. Neither bread, neither money; gold, ſilver, or braſs, to buy bread with; becauſe they were to have it, wherever they came, given them, as their due, and the reward of their labour: neither have two coats apiece; the word apiece, is left out in one copy, nor is it expreſſed in the Vulgate Latin and the Eaſtern verſions, which read as in Matt. x. 10. though the word does aptly and clearly expreſs the ſenſe of the prohibition, which was not that they ſhould not have two coats among them, but not two a piece; or each man ſhould not have two, or have change of raiment; ſee the note on Matt. x. 10.

Ver. 4. And whatſoever houſe ye enter into, &c.] In any town, or city, they ſhould come to in their journey through Judea, and ſhould enter into for the ſake of lodging, during their ſtay: there abide; don't ſhift quarters, or move from houſe to houſe: and thence depart; the houſe you come into firſt, go out of laſt, when ye leave the town or city. The Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions read, and thence do not depart; and ſo Beza ſays 'tis read in a certain copy, but then the ſenſe is the ſame, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, do not go out from thence, until ye depart; that is, don't leave the houſe, till you depart out of the town or city; agreeable to which is the Arabic verſion, remain in it until the time of your going out; ſee the note on Matt. x. 11.

Ver. 5. And whoſoever will not receive you, &c.] Into their houſes: when ye go out of the city; where lodging and entertainment are refuſed you; ſhake off the very duſt from your feet, for a teſtimony againſt them; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 14. and Mark vi. 11.

Ver. 6. And they departed, &c.] That is, the apoſtles, as the Syriac and Perſic verſions expreſs it: they went from Chriſt, and the place where he was, from Capernaum, at leaſt from ſome place in Galilee: and went through the towns; the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions add, and cities; that is, of Judea, as well as Galilee, even the whole land of Iſrael: preaching the Goſpel; which explains what is meant by the kingdom of God, ver. 2. and healing every where; all ſorts of bodily diſeaſes, wherever they came.

Ver. 7. Now Herod the tetrarch, &c.] Of Galilee, and who is called a king in Mark vi. 14. as he is here in the Ethiopic verſion: heard of all that was done by him; of all the miracles that were wrought by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; the fame of which were the more ſpread through the miſſion of the Apoſtles, and the journey they took thro' all the towns and cities of Galilee, which were in Herod's juriſdiction; by which means he, and his court, came to the knowledge of them, the whole country ringing with the account of the ſame: and he was perplexed; anxious, and diſtreſſed, not knowing well what to think of Chriſt, and the different ſentiments of men about him: he was afraid leſt he ſhould be John the Baptiſt riſen from the dead, whom he had beheaded: he heſitated about it at firſt, tho' he afterwards was fully perſuaded, in his own mind, that it was he, as ſome affirmed; and this gave him great uneaſineſs, and filled him with diſtreſs and horror: becauſe that it was ſaid of ſome that John was riſen from the dead; and he began to fear it was true, tho' willing to diſbelieve it, at leaſt to make a queſtion of it, eſpecially in public; tho' in private, to his own family and ſervants, he was free to tell his mind.

Ver. 8. And of ſome, that Elias had appeared, &c.] Who had been tranſlated, body and ſoul, to heaven, and whom the Jews expected a little before the coming of the Meſſiah: and of others, that one of the old prophets was riſen again; that is, one of the former prophets. It is well known, that the Jews diſtinguiſh the prophets into the former and latter; the books of the prophets of the Old Teſtament are ſo diſtinguiſhed; the writings of the former prophets are thoſe of Joſhua, Judges, 1 and 2 of Samuel, and the firſt and ſecond of Kings: the latter prophets are Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, which are the greater prophets, and the twelve leſſer ones: and in the Talmud [q] 'tis aſked, "who "are נביאים הראשונים, the former prophets? "Says R. Huna, they are David, Samuel, and Solomon—and why are they called former prophets? "to except (or diſtinguiſh) them from Haggai, "Zachariah, and Malachi, who are the latter." So that by one of the old prophets, may be meant one of thoſe that were before the times of Elias, as Samuel or David.

[q] T. Bab. Sota, fol. 48. 2.

Ver. 9. And Herod ſaid, John have I beheaded, &c.] That is, he had ordered him to be beheaded, and which was accordingly done by the executioner; of which he had full proof, ſince the head was brought him in a charger, and which he delivered to the daughter of Herodias: but who is this of whom I hear ſuch things? ſuch wonderful things, ſuch amazing miracles, as were done by Chriſt: he ſeems to have reaſoned after this manner with himſelf, ſurely this can't be John, for I have beheaded him! and yet who ſhould it be? and whereas ſome affirmed, that it was John that was riſen from the dead, he began to fear that it was he: and he deſired to ſee him; that he might be ſatisfied whether it was he or no; for he had had perſonal knowledge of John, and converſe with him, and therefore, upon ſight of him, could tell whether it was he that was riſen from the dead, or no; but we don't find Herod had a ſight of Chriſt, until he was ſent by Pilate to him at Jeruſalem; ſee Luke xxiii. 7, 8.

Ver. 10. And the apoſtles when they were returned, &c.] From the ſeveral parts of the land where they had been ſent, and had been preaching and working miracles, having gone thro' their circuit, and finiſhed the ſervice they were ſent to do: told him all they had done; what doctrines they had taught, how they had been received, and what ſucceſs they met with, what miracles they had wrought, how they had diſpoſſeſſed devils, and healed all ſorts of diſeaſes: and he took them and went aſide privately; by ſhip, over ſome part of the ſea of Galilee; ſee Mark vi. 32. into a deſert place belonging to the city called Bethſaida; the city of Andrew and Peter, John i. 44. and which, as Joſephus[r] ſays, was by the lake of Genneſareth, and by Philip called Julias; and this deſert place was the deſert of Bethſaida, a lonely, wild, uncultivated, and deſolate place, not far from it. Hither Chriſt went with his diſciples, that they might be retired and alone, and have ſome refreſhment and reſt from their labours, and where they might privately converſe together; and he give them ſome freſh inſtructions, directions, and comfort.

Ver. 11. And the people when they knew it, &c.] Having heard of his departure from others, and ſeeing him go off themſelves: followed him; not by ſhip, but on foot, going over the bridge at Chammath of Gadara, and got thither before Chriſt and his diſciples did: and he received them; very kindly, and in a very affectionate manner, and with great reſpect, tho' they had prevented the private interview between him and his apoſtles: and he ſpake unto them of the kingdom of God; of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, now ſetting up, and of the doctrines and ordinances of it, of the governing principle of grace in the hearts of his people, and of the glory of the world to come: and healed them that had need of healing; for their bodies; as well as preached the doctrines of grace for the good of their ſouls; he both taught doctrine and wrought miracles.

Ver. 12. When the day began to wear away, &c.] Or to decline, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions; or to incline, as the Syriac; that is, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, when the ſun was declining towards the horizon, and was almoſt ſet; or when the evening-time was come, as the Perſic verſion: then came the twelve; that is, the diſciples, as the Perſic verſion; or his diſciples, as the Syriac: and ſaid unto him ſend the multitude away, that they may go into the towns and country round about; the place where they were, round about the city of Bethſaida, the ſeveral adjacent houſes in the fields, villages, towns, and cities: and lodge, and get victuals; where they might have lodging for that night, it being too far for them to reach their habitations that evening; and alſo, that they might provide themſelves with proper and ſufficient food, which was not to be had in the place where they were: for we are here in a deſert place; which afforded no conveniency for lodging, nor any ſupply of food.

Ver. 13. And he ſaid to them, give ye them to eat, &c.] Signifying, that it was not his will to diſmiſs the people, and ſend them ſcattering abroad into the adjacent cities, towns, or houſes; and that there was no need of it, but that his will was that they ſhould be ſupplied with proviſions out of their ſtock: and they ſaid we have no more than five loaves and two fiſhes; and theſe loaves were barley loaves, and the fiſhes ſmall, John vi. 9. except we ſhould go and buy meat for all this people; which would at leaſt coſt them two hundred pence; and which they repreſent as impoſſible to be done, either thro' want of ſo much money, or the ſcarcity of proviſion in thoſe parts; where, had they money, it would be difficult, at leaſt to get ſuch a quantity of proviſions at once, which ſo great a number of perſons required.

Ver. 14. For they were about five thouſand men, &c.] Beſide women and children, Matt. xiv. 21. and he ſaid to his diſciples, make them to ſit down by fifties in a company; and by hundreds alſo: ſome companies had a hundred a-piece in them, and others fifty; and which was done partly for the more eaſy numbering of them, and partly and chiefly for the more convenient diſtribution of food to them; ſee Mark vi. 39, 40.

Ver. 15. And they did ſo, and made them all ſit down.] The diſciples did not diſpute the caſe any longer with Chriſt, but obeyed his orders, and ranged the multitude in companies, a hundred in one, and fifty in another; and ordered them to ſit down in their diſtinct companies and ranks upon the green graſs. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, and they all ſat down; and ſo it is read in ſome copies of the Vulgate Latin verſion.

Ver. 16. Then he took the five loaves and the two fiſhes, &c.] Into his hands, being brought him by the diſciples from the lad that had them: and looking up to heaven; to his father there, from whom all the mercies and bleſſings of life come: he bleſſed them; either aſked, or commanded a bleſſing on them, that they might multiply and increaſe, that there might be a ſufficiency for all the people, and that they might be nouriſhing to them. Beza obſerves, that in his moſt ancient copy 'tis read, he bleſſed upon them; which perfectly agrees with the Jewiſh way of ſpeaking, ברך על הפת, he that bleſſeth upon the bread; ברך על היין, he that bleſſeth upon the wine; and ſo upon the fruits of trees, and upon the fruits of the earth, and upon other things[s]: and brake; the loaves, and divided the fiſhes into parts: and gave to the diſciples to ſet before the multitude; as they ſat in ranks, and in their diſtinct companies.

Ver. 17. And they did eat, and were all filled, &c.] Every one had a part, and enough: and there was taken up of fragments that remained to them, twelve baſkets; ſee the note on Matt. xiv. 20.

[r] Antiq. l. 18. c. 3.

[s] Miſn. Beracot, c. 6. §. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7.

Ver. 18. And it came to paſs as he was alone praying, &c.] To his God and Father, for himſelf, as man, and mediator; for the ſucceſs of his Goſpel, and the increaſe of his intereſt; and for his diſciples, that they might have a clearer revelation of him; and which they had, as appears in their after-confeſſion of him by Peter, as the mouth of them all. The place where he now retired for private devotion, was ſome where in the coaſts of Cæſarea Philippi; for he was now gone from the deſert of Bethſaida, as appears from Matt. xvi. 13. and when he is ſaid to be alone, the meaning is, that he was retired from the multitude, but not from his diſciples; for it follows, his diſciples were with him, in this ſolitary place: and he aſked them, being with them alone; ſaying, whom ſay the people that I am? what are the ſentiments of the common people, or of the people in general concerning me? The Alexandrian copy, and the Arabic verſion read, men, as in Matt. xvi. 13. ſee the note there.

Ver. 19. They anſwering ſaid, John the Baptiſt, &c.] This was the opinion of ſome who thought that he was riſen from the dead, as in ver. 7. but ſome ſay Elias; the prophet, and the Tiſhbite; who, according to the Jewiſh notion, was to be the forerunner of the Meſſiah, ſo in ver. 8. and others ſay that one of the old prophets is riſen again; ſee the note on ver. 8. and thus were they divided in their ſentiments about him.

Ver. 20. He ſaid unto them, but whom ſay ye that I am? &c.] Which was the main thing he had in view in this private conference; and in order to introduce which, he puts the former queſtion: Peter anſwering; in the name of the reſt of the diſciples, they aſſenting to it: ſaid, the Chriſt of God; ſee the note on ch. ii. 26. The Perſic verſion reads, Chriſt God; the Meſſiah, who is the Son of God, and God over all, bleſſed for ever. The Cambridge copy of Beza's reads, the Chriſt, the Son of God.

Ver. 21. And he ſtrictly charged them, and commanded them, &c.] Tho' he highly approved of this their confeſſion, and pronounced Peter bleſſed upon it; and ſignified that it was a diſcovery which fleſh and blood could not make, but what was made to him by his father; yet he gave them a ſtrict charge, and laid his commands on them, to tell no man that thing; that he was the Meſſiah, and the eternal Son of God, and the true God, as well as the Son of man, and really man: the reaſons for this ſee in the note on Matt. xvi. 20.

Ver. 22. Saying, the Son of man muſt ſuffer many things, &c.] In his perſon and character, in his ſoul and body, at the hands of God, and of men, and devils: and be rejected of the elders, and chief-prieſts, and Scribes; who made up the grand Sanhedrim of the nation: by theſe he was to be, and was rejected as the Meſſiah; and when put up with another which ſhould be releaſed, that other ſhould be preferr'd, and he rejected; and which was done at the inſtigation of theſe men, who were the builders; of whom it was foretold that they ſhould reject the head ſtone of the corner, Pſ. cxviii. 22. and be ſlain; or put to death, with the death of the croſs: and be raiſed the third day; according to the types and prophecies of the Old Teſtament. This he added for the comfort of his diſciples.

Ver. 23. And he ſaid to them all, &c.] Not only to all the diſciples, but to the multitude, as the Arabic verſion renders it, who were now called unto him, with his diſciples, as is clear from Mark viii. 34. if any man will come after me, let him deny himſelf, and take up his croſs daily, and follow me; the ſame is ſaid here, as in Matt. xvi. 24. Mark viii. 34. ſee the notes there; only here the word, daily, is added: and which, tho' as Beza obſerves, is not in the Complutenſian edition, nor in five ancient copies; yet is in others, and in the Vulgate Latin, and in all the Oriental verſions; and to be retained, as having a very conſiderable emphaſis in it; ſhewing that afflictions, trials, and perſecutions of one ſort or another, are to be expected every day by the people of God, and to be continually ſubmitted to, and bore with chearfulneſs.

Ver. 24. For whoſoever will ſave his life, &c.] See the note on Matt. xvi. 25.

Ver. 25. For what is a man advantaged if he gain the whole world, &c.] Or what profit will it be unto him? all the honours, riches, and enjoyments of it will be of no uſe and ſervice to him if he himſelf is loſt: and loſe himſelf; or his own ſoul; for he that loſes his ſoul, which is his better and immortal part, loſes himſelf: or be caſt away; finally, and eternally, or ſuffer loſs of eternal happineſs and glory; that is, periſhes, and is deſtroyed with an everlaſting deſtruction; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 26.

Ver. 26. For whoſoever ſhall be aſhamed of me, &c.] Of my perſon and offices, of me, as the Meſſiah, Saviour, and Redeemer, of my grace, righteouſneſs, blood, and ſacrifice: and of my words; of the doctrines of the Goſpel, one and another of them. In Mark 'tis added, in this adulterous and ſinful generation; having a peculiar reſpect to the people of the Jews, and the age in which Chriſt lived; but is true of any other people and age in which men live: of him ſhall the Son of man be aſhamed when he ſhall come in his own glory; in the glory of his human nature, when his glorious body, as now, in heaven, ſhall be ſeen by all; and in the glory of his office, as mediator, and the judge of all the earth; and in the glory of his divine nature, which will appear in the reſurrection of the dead, in the gathering of all nations before him, in ſeparating one ſort from another, and in paſſing and executing the definitive ſentence on them; particularly the glory of his omnipotence and omniſcience will be very conſpicuous: and in his father's; which is the ſame with his own, as he is the Son of God, and the brightneſs of his glory; and which, as mediator, he has from him, and will be the object of the ſaints viſion to all eternity: and of the holy angels; who ſhall attend him at his ſecond coming, and be employed in various offices under him. The Syriac verſion renders theſe laſt clauſes as they are in Matt. xvi. 27. Mark viii. 38. in the glory of his father, with his holy angels; ſee the notes there.

Ver. 27. But I tell you of a truth, &c.] And let it be received as ſuch; you may aſſure yourſelves of it, that not only at the laſt day, the ſon of man will come in this glorious manner, and ſhew his reſentment to all ſuch as have been aſhamed of him; but alſo there be ſome ſtanding here, which ſhall not taſte of death till they ſee the kingdom of God; the Goſpel diſpenſation viſibly taking place, both among Jews and Gentiles, upon the reſurrection of Chriſt, and the pouring forth of his Spirit; and when it ſhould come in power both in the converſion of God's elect in great numbers, and in the deſtruction of the Jewiſh nation, for their rejection of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Matt. xvi. 28.

Ver. 28. And it came to paſs about an eight days after theſe ſayings, &c.] About a week after he had declared the above things, at, or near Cæſarea

Philippi. The other Evangeliſts, Matthew and Mark ſay, it was ſix days after: the reaſon of this difference is, becauſe Luke takes in the day in which he delivered thoſe ſayings, and that in which he was transfigured, and they only reckon the intermediate days: he took Peter, and John, and James; the ſame that he admitted to be with him at the raiſing of Jairus's daughter, and in the garden afterwards: and went up into a mountain to pray; to his God and Father, that his diſciples might have a viſible diſplay of his glory, as an emblem and pledge of that in which he ſhall hereafter appear: it was uſual with Chriſt to go up into a mountain to pray; ſee Matt. xiv. 23. Luke vi. 12. ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 1.

Ver. 29. And as he prayed, the faſhion of his countenance was altered, &c.] It became exceeding bright and glorious, it ſhone like the ſun, Matt. xvii. 2. and hereby his prayer was anſwered; and thus, as Chriſt was heard and anſwered, whilſt he was yet ſpeaking, ſo are his people ſometimes; and even their countenance is altered, when they are favoured with communion with God, and inſtead of a ſad and dejected countenance, they have a chearful one. And his raiment was white and gliſtering; it was as white as the light, as ſnow, and whiter than any fuller on earth could whiten, as the other Evangeliſts ſay, and ſo gliſtered exceedingly; ſee the notes on Matt. xvii. 2. and Mark ix. 3.

Ver. 30. And behold there talked with him two men, &c.] Of great note and fame: which were Moſes and Elias; the one the giver of the law from God to the people of Iſrael, as well as the redeemer of them from Egyptian bondage, and who led them through the wilderneſs, to the borders of Canaan's land; and the other a prophet famous for his zeal for God, and his worſhip, and who was tranſlated, ſoul and body, to heaven: theſe appeared and talked with Chriſt on the mount; and what they talked of is mentioned in the following verſe; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 3.

Ver. 31. Who appeared in glory, &c.] In a very glorious manner, in moſt divine and beautiful forms to Chriſt, and to his diſciples: and ſpake of his deceaſe, which he ſhould accompliſh at Jeruſalem; the word, rendered deceaſe, is Exodus, the name of the ſecond book of Moſes; ſo called from the departure of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, it gives an account of; and which departure is expreſſed by this word, in Heb. xi. 22. and to which the alluſion is here. Death is a departure out of this world, and goes by this name, 2 Pet. i. 15. and ſo here it ſignifies Chriſt's death, or exit, which he was to make at Jeruſalem; and Moſes and Elias talk with him about this; the nature, manner, uſe, and near approach of it; and to which they might encourage him, as man. The ſufferings and death of Chriſt were what Moſes and the prophets had foretold; and theſe two ſpeak of the ſame things now; and which muſt ſerve to confirm what Chriſt a few days ago had ſhewed his diſciples, that he muſt go to Jeruſalem, and there ſuffer and die. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, that the aſcenſion of Chriſt to heaven is contained in the word Exodus, which was his final departure out of this world, as well as his ſufferings and death; and eſpecially if there is any alluſion to the Iſraelites departure out of Egypt, which was in victory and triumph; and the rather, becauſe the time of his receiving up, ver. 51. may be thought to refer to this; and ſo Moſes and Elias converſed with him, not only about his ſufferings and death; but his aſcenſion, and of which alſo the Exodus, or going of Elias out of this world to heaven, which was by a tranſlation and aſcenſion, was a figure. Some render this word, Expedition, and think it refers to the whole affair of the redemption of Chriſt's people by him, from the bondage of ſin, ſatan, and the law, by his ſufferings and death; of which the deliverance of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt was a lively repreſentation; an expedition which Moſes was ſent upon, and accompliſhed: but now the diſcourſe turns upon an expedition of greater importance, which ſhortly was to be accompliſhed at Jeruſalem, where Chriſt was to be arraigned, and condemned, and then ſuffer without the gates of it, in order to obtain eternal redemption for the whole Iſrael of God.

Ver. 32. But Peter, and they that were with him, &c.] The other two diſciples, James and John: were heavy with ſleep; as they afterwards were in the garden, while Chriſt was praying, as he had been now; being weary with the labours of the day paſt, and it being now night, as is very probable, ſince that was an uſual time Chriſt ſpent in prayer: and when they were awake. The Syriac verſion reads, ſcarcely awake; they were ſo heavy with ſleep, that it was with difficulty they were awaked out of it, even by the rays of light and glory that were about them. The Ethiopic verſion adds, ſuddenly; ſuch a luſtre darted from theſe glorious forms, eſpecially from the body of Chriſt, as at once ſurprized them out of their ſleep; and being thoroughly awake, they ſaw his glory; the brightneſs of his countenance, and the whiteneſs of his raiment: and the two men that ſtood with him; Moſes and Elias, and the glory in which they appeared.

Ver. 33. And it came to paſs as they departed from him, &c.] That is, as Moſes and Elias departed from Chriſt; or when they began to depart, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or would depart, as the Arabic and Perſic verſions; ſeemed deſirous of going, or made ſome ſignal or other by which the diſciples perceived they were about to go; for, as yet, they were not gone: Peter ſaid unto Jeſus, maſter, it is good for us to be here, let us make three tabernacles, one for thee, and one for Moſes, and one for Elias; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 4. not knowing what he ſaid; nor what to ſay, as Mark obſerves, being in a ſurprize, and not in a ſituation to conſider and weigh things well, whether what he ſaid was right and proper, or not; ſee the note, as before.

Ver. 34. While he thus ſpake there came a cloud, &c.] While Peter was making the above requeſt, before an anſwer was returned, a cloud appeared, a very uncommon one, as a ſymbol of the divine preſence: and overſhadowed them; Jeſus, Moſes, Elias, and the diſciples: and they feared as they entered into the cloud; either as they themſelves entered into it, that coming gradually over them, becauſe of the glory of it, and the ſolemnity that attended it; or as Moſes and Elias entered into it; and ſo the Syriac and Perſic verſions read, they feared when they ſaw Moſes and Elias enter into the cloud; which took them out of their ſight; juſt as the cloud received Jeſus out of the ſight of his diſciples, when he aſcended to heaven, Acts i. 9.

Ver. 35. And there came a voice out of the cloud, &c.] See the note on Matt. xvii. 5.

Ver. 36. And when the voice was paſt, &c.] The above words were delivered, and it was heard no more: Jeſus was found alone; by his diſciples; Moſes and Elias being gone, and he in the ſame form in which he was before his transfiguration. And they kept it cloſe; as Chriſt ſtrictly charged them, when coming down from the mount with them; Matt. xvii. 9. And told no man in thoſe days, any of thoſe things which they had ſeen; no, not any of their fellow diſciples, until that Chriſt was riſen from the dead.

Ver. 37. And it came to paſs that on the next day, &c.] For Jeſus and his diſciples ſtaid all night on the mountain: when they were come down from the hill; to the bottom of it: much people met him. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions read, met them.

Ver. 38. And behold, a man of the company, &c.] One that was in the company, and among the multitude, that met him: cried out; with great vehemence and earneſtneſs: ſaying, Maſter; doctor, or Rabbi: I beſeech thee; moſt humbly, for he was now on his knees: look upon my ſon; with pity and compaſſion, and help him: for he is mine only child; wherefore he was dear unto him, and he was greatly concerned for him, and earneſtly deſirous of his being reſtored to health; and this he mentions, to move the compaſſion of Chriſt.

Ver. 39. And lo, a ſpirit taketh him, &c.] An evil ſpirit, the devil, as in ver. 42. ſeizes and poſſeſſes him at once: and he ſuddenly crieth out; in a moſt terrible manner, giving dreadful ſhrieks, as ſoon as he perceives that he is ſeized by the dæmon: and it teareth him, that he foameth again; throws him into convulſions, ſo that he foams at the mouth: and ſo we read [t] of a ſon of a certain Jew, that "a certain ſpirit paſſed before him and hurt him, "convulſed his mouth, and his eyes, and his hands "were convulſed, and he could not ſpeak." And bruiſing him; by daſhing him againſt the wall, or throwing him to the ground: hardly departeth from him; is very loath to leave him, even after he has diſtreſſed, convulſed, and bruiſed him in this dreadful manner, ſuch was his cruelty and malice; ſee the notes on Matt. xvii. 15. and Mark ix. 18.

Ver. 40. And I beſought thy diſciples, &c.] The nine diſciples that were left behind, whilſt Chriſt and the other three, were gone up to the mountain: to caſt him out; the devil out of his child: and they could not; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 16.

Ver. 41. And Jeſus anſwering, ſaid, &c.] To the father of the child, and thoſe that were with him; and with a particular view to the Scribes and Phariſees, who had been inſulting the diſciples, and triumphing over them, becauſe of their inability to caſt out this evil ſpirit: for the words are not ſpoken to the diſciples, as they might ſeem at firſt view to be, and as the Perſic verſion renders them, and Jeſus turned his face to the diſciples, and ſaid; but to the unbelieving Jews, O faithleſs and perverſe generation, how long ſhall I be with you, and ſuffer you? bring thy ſon hither; ſee the note on Matt. xvii. 17.

Ver. 42. And as he was yet a coming, &c.] Whilſt he was in the way bringing to Jeſus, before he came to him: the devil threw him down, and tare him; knowing who Jeſus was, and that he was able to diſpoſſeſs him; and having reaſon to believe he would, was reſolved to do all the miſchief he could, and give him all the pain and diſtreſs he was able, whilſt he was in him; and therefore threw him to the ground, and convulſed him in a terrible manner at the ſame time: and Jeſus rebuked the unclean ſpirit; for his malice and cruelty, and ordered him to depart: and healed the child; by diſpoſſeſſing the ſpirit: and delivered him again to his father; free from the poſſeſſion, and in perfect health, and which muſt be very pleaſing and acceptable to him.

Ver. 43. And they were all amazed at the mighty power of God, &c.] Or at the greatneſs, or majeſty of God; which was diſplayed in this cure: for the great power of God was manifeſtly ſeen in it, to the aſtoniſhment of the diſciples, who could not cure this child, and of the parent and friends of it, and of the whole multitude; and to the confuſion of the Scribes and Phariſees: but while they wondered every one, at all things which Jeſus did; and were applauding him for them, and ſpeaking in his praiſe on account of them: he ſaid unto his diſciples; privately, when they were alone together, the following words, that he might not ſeem to be lifted up with the praiſe of men; and alſo to ſhew their inconſtancy, that thoſe who now admired him, would one day crucify him; and to take off the thoughts of the diſciples from a temporal kingdom and glory, they were ſo much in expectation of, and which every miracle of Chriſt, and the applauſe he got thereby among men, ſtrengthened them in.

Ver. 44. Let theſe ſayings ſink down into your ears, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, in your hearts: Chriſt's ſenſe is, that they would diligently attend to them, ſeriouſly conſider them, and carefully lay them up in their memories; and what he refers to, are not the words he had ſpoken, but what he was about to ſay; namely, as follow: for the Son of man ſhall be delivered into the hands of men; by whom he ſhould be killed, though he ſhould riſe again the third day; ſee Matt. xvii. 22.

Ver. 45. But they underſtood not this ſaying, &c.] What was meant by being betrayed into the hands of men, and by his being put to death; they knew not how theſe things could poſſibly be, for they could not by any means reconcile them with the notions they had of a temporal Redeemer, and victorious Meſſiah: and it was hid from them, that they perceived it not; the true meaning of this ſaying was hid from their underſtanding, which was veiled with the above notion of the worldly grandeur of the Meſſiah, that they did not take it in: and they feared to aſk him of that ſaying; of the meaning of it; imagining that he had a ſecret, myſtical meaning in it, which they could not reach; leſt he ſhould reproach them with their dullneſs and ſtupidity; or ſhould rebuke them with the like ſharpneſs and ſeverity he had reproved Peter not long ago, upon the ſame head.

Ver. 46. Then there aroſe a reaſoning among them, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, a thought entered into them; ſuggeſted very likely by ſatan, which broke out into words, and iſſued in a warm diſpute among them; and this was in the way, as they were travelling from Cæſarea Philippi, to Capernaum; ſee Mark ix. 33. Which of them ſhould be greateſt; that is, in the kingdom of heaven, as in Matt. xviii. 1. in the kingdom of the Meſſiah, which they expected would be a temporal one: wherefore the diſpute was not about degrees in glory, nor in grace; nor who ſhould be the greateſt apoſtle and preacher of the Goſpel; but who ſhould be prime miniſter to the king Meſſiah, when he ſhould ſet up his monarchy in all its grandeur and glory.

Ver. 47. And Jeſus perceiving the thought of their heart, &c.] Not by any words he had heard; for the diſpute was on the road, as they came along behind him; but as the omniſcient God, who is the diſcerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart, he was privy to all their ambition, and the vanity of their minds, and to all their reaſonings and debates; though he was before them, and out of the reach of hearing of them: and when he came to Capernaum, after having aſked them what they diſputed about by the way; he took a child and ſet him by him. The Ethiopic verſion reads, before them, the diſciples; and Matthew and Mark ſay, he ſet him in the midſt of them; all which were true, Jeſus ſitting in the midſt of them; ſo that the child he ſet by him, was in the middle of them, and before them; ſee the note on Matt. xviii. 2.

[t] Zohar in Lev. fol. 21. 4.

Ver. 48. And ſaid unto them, whoſoever ſhall receive this child, &c.] Or one ſuch little child, as in Matt. xviii. 5. and ſo the Syriac verſion here, a child like to this; and the Arabic verſion, one like to this child; not in age, but in meekneſs and humility; one that is not proud and haughty, ambitious of worldly honour, and envious at the ſuperior ſtate of others: whoever receives ſuch an one into his houſe and heart, and the Goſpel he preaches, in my name; becauſe he belongs to me, is ſent by me, and repreſents me, and delivers my meſſage: receiveth me; perſonated by him, and will be ſo taken: and whoſoever ſhall receive me, receiveth him that ſent me; ſee the note on Mark ix. 37. For he that is leaſt among you all; that is ſo in his own opinion, and behaves as ſuch in his conduct, who is lowly and meek, and humble; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion rather interpreting than tranſlating, renders it, for he that makes himſelf humble, who is leſſer than all; who conſiders himſelf as the leaſt of the apoſtles, and unworthy to be one, as did the apoſtle Paul: the ſame ſhall be great; ſhall be highly honoured with gifts, and made greatly uſeful, as the above-mentioned apoſtle was: a ſaying like this, the Jews have[u]; "every one, המקטין עצמו, that "makes himſelf little, for the words of the law in "this world, נעשה גדול, ſhall be made great in "the world to come;" that is, in the days of the Meſſiah: and again 'tis ſaid by[w] them, "worthy "is he that makes himſelf little in this world, how "great and high ſhall he be in that world!—— "whoever is little ſhall be great, and he that is "great ſhall be little."

Ver. 49. And John anſwered and ſaid, Maſter, &c.] The Syriac and Perſic verſions read, our Maſter: we ſaw one caſting out devils in thy name, and we forbad him; ſee the note on Mark ix. 38. Becauſe he followeth not with us; the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, becauſe he followeth not thee with us; did not join in company with them, and follow Chriſt along with them, and as they did.

Ver. 50. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, forbid him not, &c.] Or forbid not him, or any other ſo doing: for he that is not againſt us, is for us: in two exemplars of Beza's 'tis read, for he is not againſt you; the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, inſtead of us, in both clauſes read you, and ſo likewiſe the Perſic and Ethiopic verſions; ſee the notes on Mark ix. 39, 40.

Ver. 51. And it came to paſs when the time was come, &c.] Or days were fulfilled, an uſual Hebraiſm; when the period of time fixed for his being in Galilee was come to an end; when he had fulfilled his miniſtry, and finiſhed all his ſayings, and wrought all the miracles he was to work in thoſe parts; when he was to quit this country, and go into Judea, and up to Jeruſalem, ſignified in the next clauſe: that he ſhould be received up; or as all the Oriental verſions rightly render the words, when the time, or days of his aſcenſion were fulfilled; not of his aſcenſion to heaven, as interpreters generally underſtand the paſſage, becauſe the word is uſed of that, in Mark xvi. 19. Acts i. 2, 11, 22. 1 Tim. iii. 16. much leſs as others, of his being taken and lifted up from the earth upon the croſs, and ſo ſignifies his crucifixion, and ſufferings, and death; for of neither of theſe can it be ſaid, that the time of them was come, or the days fulfilled, in which either of theſe ſhould be: for if Chriſt was now going to the feaſt of tabernacles, as ſome think, it muſt be above half a year before his death, and ſtill longer before his aſcenſion to heaven; and if to the feaſt of dedication, it was above three months to his aſcenſion: hence interpreters that go this way, are obliged to interpret it, that the time drew near, or was drawing on, or the days were almoſt fulfilled; whereas the expreſſion is full and ſtrong, that the time was come, and the days were fulfilled; and which was true in the ſenſe hinted at, that now the time was up, that Jeſus muſt leave the low-lands of Galilee, having finiſhed his work there, and go into the higher country of Judea, and ſo up to Jeruſalem; for of his aſcenſion from Galilee to Jeruſalem, are the words to be underſtood; ſee Matt. xix. 1. Mark x. 1. And it is obſervable, that after this, he never went into Galilee any more: and this ſenſe is confirmed by what follows; he ſtedfaſtly ſet his face to go to Jeruſalem; or ſtrengthened his face, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; ſet his face like a flint, as in Iſa. l. 7. denoting not impudence, as hardening of the face is uſed in Prov. xxi. 29. but boldneſs, courage, conſtancy, and firmneſs of mind: or he prepared his face, as the Syriac; or turned his face, as the Arabic, he looked that way, and ſet forward; or as the Perſic verſion renders it, he made a firm purpoſe, he reſolved upon it, and was determined to go to Jeruſalem, his time being up in Galilee: and though he knew what he was to meet with and endure; that he ſhould bear the ſins of his people, the curſe of the law, and wrath of God; that he ſhould have many enemies, men and devils to grapple with, and undergo a painful, ſhameful, and accurſed death; yet none of theſe things moved him, he was reſolutely bent on going thither, and accordingly prepared for his journey; ſee 2 Kings xii. 17.

Ver. 52. And ſent meſſengers before his face, &c.] Who very likely were his two diſciples, James and John; ſince they ſo highly reſented the ill-treatment their maſter met with, from the Samaritans: and they went; before him: and entred into a village of the Samaritans; or city, as the Vulgate Latin, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions read, and ſo one of Stephens's copies; which lay in the way from Galilee to Judea, where the diſciples had been forbid to enter, that is, in order to preach, Matt. x. 5. To make ready for him; to prepare a lodging, and proper food for him and his diſciples, as they paſſed on in their journey, for his intention was not to make any ſtay there.

Ver. 53. And they did not receive him, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads them, the meſſengers; but it ſhould rather ſeem, that they did receive the meſſengers, and promiſed them lodging and entertainment; being glad that ſo great a perſon would honour them with his preſence, hoping that miracles would be done by him, among them; and that he would ſtay with them, and ſhew ſome approbation of them, and their worſhip; but when Chriſt came in perſon, with his diſciples and the multitude, they would not admit him; the reaſon follows, be cauſe his face was as though he would go to Jeruſalem: by all circumſtances, by his words and looks, and geſtures; by all that they could ſee and hear, and learn from him, his determination was to make no ſtay with them, but proceed on to Jeruſalem, after he had took a night's lodging with them, and had refreſhed himſelf and company, and therefore they would not receive him: it had been of a long time a controverſy, between the Jews and Samaritans, which was the right place of worſhip; whether at the temple at Jeruſalem, or whether at their temple on mount Gerizzim? Now if Chriſt would have intereſted himſelf in this conteſt, in favour of them, and would have ſtaid with them, and worſhipped where they did, they would have gladly received him; but they perceived he was going to Jeruſalem, either to keep the feaſt of tabernacles there, or the feaſt of the dedication of the temple; and if the latter, it muſt be ſtill more provoking to them, becauſe it ſhewed, that he preferred that temple to theirs: and however, it ſeems to be on this account that they would not admit him, becauſe he favoured the temple worſhip at Jeruſalem; otherwiſe his bare going thither, could not give the offence.

[u] T. Bab. Bava Metzia, fol. 85. 2.

[w] Zohar in Num. fol. 70. 1. & Toſaphta in Zohar in Gen. fol. 76. 2.

Ver. 54. And when his diſciples James and John ſaw this, &c.] The Perſic verſion reads thus; when James and John, and the diſciples ſaw this; that is, the other diſciples beſides them, ſo making all the diſciples ſay what follows; whereas only thoſe two are intended, who having been the meſſengers, were the more provoked at this indignity to their Lord and maſter: they ſaid, Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and conſume them; being enraged at this conduct of the Samaritans towards Chriſt, and burning with love to him, and zeal for his honour; being Boanerges's, ſons of thunder, they were for puniſhing of them in a moſt terrible manner, even with fire from heaven; by which Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities of the plain, were deſtroyed: this they doubted not of doing, knowing what miraculous power was conferred upon them; but did not think proper to attempt to exert it, until they had aſked leave of Chriſt to do it: even as Elias did; upon the two captains of fifties, with their fifties, as recorded in 2 Kings i. 9, 10, 11, 12. This clauſe was wanting in a certain copy of Beza's, and is not in the Vulgate Latin verſion; but is in other copies and verſions, and by all means to be retained.

Ver. 55. But he turned and rebuked them, &c.] He turned himſelf about to them, and looking upon them with a ſtern countenance, ſharply reproved them for their intemperate zeal, their paſſion of wrath and anger, and deſire of revenge: and ſaid, ye know not what manner of ſpirit ye are of; or do not conſider that this is not the true ſpirit of zeal, but of anger and revenge; and is not agreeable to the ſpirit of the meek and humble followers of Chriſt, or to the Spirit of God, and thoſe gifts of his beſtowed on them, nor to the ſpirit of the Goſpel-diſpenſation: ſo good men, for want of attention, may not know ſometimes from what ſpirit they act; taking that for a good one, which is a very bad one; being covered with ſpecious pretences of love and zeal, and the examples of former ſaints; not obſerving the difference of perſons, times, and things.

Ver. 56. For the Son of man, &c.] Meaning himſelf, in his ſtate of humiliation: is not come to deſtroy mens lives; the word mens, is omitted in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Perſic verſions; and both words, mens lives, are left out in the Arabic verſion: but to ſave them; as they might eaſily obſerve, by his caſting out devils from the bodies of men, and healing all ſorts of diſeaſes: and therefore, though it was agreeable to the legal diſpenſation, and the times of Elijah, to puniſh offenders in ſuch a manner, it was not agreeable to the Goſpel-diſpenſation, and to the ends of the Meſſiah's coming into the world: ſo far in this verſe, and the latter part of the former verſe, are left out in five ancient copies of Beza's, and in the Ethiopic verſion, but are in the reſt of the Eaſtern verſions, and in other copies, and are rightly retained: and they went to another village; in Samaria, more civil and courteous, and leſs prejudiced, and where they got lodging and entertainment.

Ver. 57. And it came to paſs as they went in the way, &c.] From one village of the Samaritans, to the other; though if this is the ſame hiſtory related in Matt. viii. 19. it was as Chriſt went from Capernaum to the ſea-ſide, in order to go to the other ſide of it; and muſt be inſerted here, without regard to the order of time: a certain man ſaid unto him; if the ſame as in Matthew, he is there ſaid to be a Scribe; Lord, I will follow thee, whereſoever thou goeſt. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, read theſe words by way of queſtion, Lord, ſhall I not follow thee whereſoever thou goeſt? ſee the note on Matt. viii. 19.

Ver. 58. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, foxes have holes, &c.] Both the words of this man to Chriſt, and Chriſt's anſwer to him, are exactly the ſame as in Matthew, which makes it look as if it was the ſame hiſtory; though it is not improbable, that Chriſt might be accoſted in the ſame manner by another perſon, at another time and place, and return a like anſwer to each; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 20.

Ver. 59. And he ſaid unto another, follow me, &c.] According to Matthew, one of his diſciples, who had attended him ſome time, and whom he now called to the miniſterial work; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 21. The Ethiopic verſion reads, another ſaid to him, ſhall I not follow thee? but without any foundation: they are certainly the words of Chriſt, directed to another perſon, at the ſame time he met with the former: but he ſaid, Lord, ſuffer me firſt to go and bury my father; ſee the note on Matt. viii. 21.

Ver. 60. Jeſus ſaid unto him, let the dead bury the dead, &c.] See the note on Matt. viii. 22. but go thou and preach the kingdom of God; that the kingdom of heaven is at hand, the Goſpel-diſpenſation is now uſhering in, and the kingdom of the Meſſiah is ſetting up; go and publiſh the things concerning the kingdom of grace, which lies not in outward rites and ceremonies, but in righteouſneſs and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghoſt; and declare the things relating to the kingdom of glory, and eternal life and happineſs; aſſert, that unleſs a man is born again, and has a better righteouſneſs than his own, he is neither fit for, nor has he a right unto everlaſting bliſs.

Ver. 61. And another alſo ſaid, &c.] To him, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions add, that is, to Chriſt; the Ethiopic verſion reads, and a third ſaid to him; for this is the third perſon mentioned in this relation of Luke's; only two are ſpoken of by Matthew, but a third is added here: Lord, I will follow thee; he moves it himſelf, to be a diſciple of his, and a preacher of his Goſpel, only with this condition: but let me firſt go bid them farewel, which are at home at my houſe; as Eliſha deſired Elijah, that he might go and kiſs his father and his mother, and and then he promiſes he would follow him, 1 Kings xix. 20. The Syriac verſion adds, and I will come; and the Perſic, and give commands, and then will I come: and the phraſe not only ſignifies, that he deſired to take leave of his friends, but to compoſe and ſet in order his family affairs, and diſpoſe of his worldly effects among his domeſtics, relations, and friends, in the beſt manner he could; and then he ſhould have leiſure, and be at liberty to follow Chriſt, and attend his ſervice.

Ver. 62. And Jeſus ſaid unto him, &c.] The copulative and, is left out in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Perſic verſions: no man having put his hand to the plough; or plough-ſhare, as reads the Syriac verſion; or plough-handle, as the Perſic; referring, as Beza thinks, to the buſineſs of Eliſha, in 1 Kings xix. 19. And looking back; behind him; for the ploughman ought to look before him, on his plough, and the ground he is ploughing, or he is not fit to be a ploughman; nor will he make proper furrows, or do his work well; and ſo he that enters upon the miniſterial work, and looks back, and engages himſelf in the affairs of the world, ſets his heart on them, and ſpends his time in them, is not fit for the kingdom of God: that is, to preach the kingdom of God, as in ver. 60. He cannot ſerve God and mammon, his own intereſt, and the intereſt of Chriſt; he can't rightly perform the work of the miniſtry, whilſt his thoughts and time are taken up in the affairs of the world.

CHAP. X.

Ver. 1. AFTER theſe things, &c.] After the calling and miſſion of the twelve apoſtles, and giving them their powers, commiſſions, and inſtructions, with other things that followed thereon; ſee ch. ix. 1. the Lord appointed other ſeventy alſo; not that he had appointed before ſeventy, and now made an appointment of ſeventy more; but as the Syriac verſion renders it, Jeſus ſeparated out of his diſciples, ſeventy others: that is, beſides the twelve, whom he choſe and called out, from among the multitude of the diſciples, and ordained them apoſtles, he ſelected and ordained ſeventy others, in alluſion to the ſeventy elders of Iſrael, Numb. xi. 16, 24, 25. The Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions read, ſeventy-two, and ſo does Epiphanius [x]. The Jewiſh Sanhedrim, is ſometimes ſaid to conſiſt of ſeventy-one [y], and ſometimes of ſeventy-two [z]; though commonly ſaid to be of the round number ſeventy, as theſe diſciples might be. The above mentioned ancient writer, gives the names of ſome of them, as the ſeven deacons; Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas; together with Matthias, Mark, Luke, Juſtus, Barnabas, Apelles, Rufus, and Niger. The names of all theſe diſciples, according to ancient traditions, though not to be depended on, are given in an alphabetical order, with the places where they afterwards preſided as biſhops, or paſtors, by a late learned writer [a], and are as follow, viz. Agabus, the prophet; Amphias, of Odyſſus, ſometimes called Amphiatus; Ananias, who baptized Paul, biſhop of Damaſcus; Andronicus, of Pannonia, or Spain; Apelles, of Smyrna, or according to others, of Heraclea; Apollo, of Cæſarea; Ariſtarchus, of Apamea; Ariſtobulus, of Britain; Artemas, of Luſtra; Aſyncritus, of Hyrcania; Barnabas, of Milain; Barnabas, of Heraclea; Cæſar, of Dyrrachium; Caius, of Epheſus; Carpus, of Berytus, in Thracia; Cephas, biſhop of Konia; Clemens, of Sardinia; Cleophas, of Jeruſalem; Creſcens, of Chalcedon, in Galatia; Demas, a prieſt of idols; Epænetus, of Carthage; Epaphroditus, of Andriace; Eraſtus, of Paneas, or, according to others, of the Philippians; Evodus, of Antioch; Hermas, of Philippi, or Philippolis; Hermes, of Dalmatia; Hermogenes and Phygellus, who followed Simon Magus; Hermogenes, biſhop of the Megarenes; Herodion, of Tarſus; James, the brother of our Lord, of Jeruſalem; Jaſon, of Tarſus; Jeſus Juſtus, biſhop of Eleutheropolis; Linus, of Rome; Luke, the Evangeliſt; Lucius, of Laodicea, in Syria; Mark, who is alſo John, of Biblopolis, or Byblus; Mark the Evangeliſt, biſhop of Alexandria; Mark, the ſiſter's ſon of Barnabas, biſhop of Apollonia; Matthias, added to the apoſtles; Narciſſus, of Athens; Nicanor, he died when Stephen ſuffered martyrdom; Nicolaus, of Samaria; Olympius, a martyr at Rome; Oneſiphorus, biſhop of Corone; Parmenas, of the Soli; Patrobulus, the ſame with Patrobas, in Rom. xvi. 14. of Puteoli, or as others, of Naples; Philemon, of Gaza; Philemon (in the Acts he is called Philip) by whom the eunuch of the queen of Ethiopia was baptized, of Trallium, of Aſia; Philologus, of Sinope; Phlegon, biſhop of Marathon; Phygellus, of Epheſus; Prochorus, of Nicomedia, in Bithynia; Pudens; Quartus, of Berytus; Rhodion, a martyr at Rome; Rufus, of Thebes; Silas, of Corinth; Sylvanus, of Theſſalonica; Soſipater, of Iconium; Soſthenes, of Colophon; Stachys, of Byzantium; Stephen, the firſt martyr; Tertius, of Iconium; Thaddæus, who carried the epiſtle of Jeſus, to Edeſſa, to Abgarus; Timon, of Boſtra, of the Arabians; Trophimus, who ſuffered martyrdom with the apoſtle Paul; Tychicus, biſhop of Chalcedon, of Bithynia; Tychicus, of Colophon; Urbanus, of Macedonia; and Zenas, of Dioſpolis. According both to this account, and Epiphanius, Luke was one of theſe ſeventy, and he is the only Evangeliſt that makes mention of the appointment of them: and ſent them two and two before his face; as he did the twelve before, to be his harbingers and forerunners; into every city and place, whither he himſelf would come; which he intended to viſit: he ſent them before-hand to acquaint the inhabitants of it; and prepare them by their miniſtry, for the reception of him; as John the Baptiſt, who was in a more eminent ſenſe, the harbinger and fore-runner of Chriſt, went before him in his miniſtry, and prepared the way for him.

Ver. 2. Therefore ſaid he unto them, &c.] That is, the Lord Jeſus, as the Ethiopic verſion expreſſes it; he ſaid to the ſeventy diſciples, what he had before ſaid to the twelve Apoſtles in Matt. ix. 37, 38. where are the ſame words as here: the harveſt truly is great, but the labourers are few, pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt that he would ſend forth labourers into his harveſt; for tho' there was ſuch a number of diſciples called to the miniſterial work, and ſent out, there was ſtill need of more; ſo great was the harveſt of ſouls, or number of hearers, that the labourers were yet but few; and therefore the Lord of the harveſt, and whoſe all ſouls are, was to be prayed unto to ſend forth more laborious preachers; ſee the notes on Matt. ix. 37, 38.

[a] Fabricii lux Evangelii, p. 115, 116, &c.

Ver. 3. Go your ways, &c.] Into all the villages, towns, cities, and places, where he directed them to go, to make ready for him. Behold, I ſend you forth as lambs among wolves; as harmleſs, innocent, profitable, and defenceleſs creatures among ſpiteful, malicious, cunning, and cruel men; ſee the note on Matt. x. 16.

Ver. 4. Carry neither purſe, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads, purſes, to put money, gold, ſilver, and braſs in; and the prohibition regards the money in the purſe chiefly: nor ſcrip; the Syriac verſion here alſo reads in the plural number, ſcrips, to put victuals in, proviſions of any ſort for their journey, which they were not to carry with them, any more than money to buy food with. Nor ſhoes; any more than thoſe they had upon their feet; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 9, 10. and ſalute no man by the way; that they might not be retarded, and hindered in their journey by tedious ceremonies, and long enquiries into the health of perſons and friends, and the buſineſs they were going about, and places where; and by diſcourſes and confabulations, drawn out to great length, as was often the caſe at meeting on the road: and, for the ſame reaſon, a like charge is given to Gebazi, 2 Kings iv. 29. and which, as the Jewiſh commentators on the place obſerve [a], was, that he might not multiply words with perſons he met with, and might not be ſtopped by the way; and that his intention might be in his work, and his mind might not turn to any other thing, either by word or deed. So our Lord's intention, by this order, was, not to teach them incivility, or to be moroſe and uncourteous; but that they might diſpatch their buſineſs with the utmoſt expedition, and rather forego ſome common civilities and ceremonies, than to neglect, or, in the leaſt, to hinder a work of ſo much importance they were ſent about: and this was the more neceſſary, ſince, according to the Jewiſh maxim [b], "prevent every man with a ſalutation;" they ſaluted all that they met, which took up time, and hindered buſineſs. Some ſorts of perſons indeed were excuſed, as thoſe who were mourners [c] for the dead, and ſuch as kept faſts for rain [d]: but ſuch were not theſe diſciples; they neither mourned, nor faſted, nor could they, ſo long as the bridegroom was with them.

Ver. 5. And into whatſoever houſe ye enter, &c.] When ye come into any city, town, or village, firſt ſay, peace be to this houſe: ſalute the inhabitants in the uſual form, ſaying, peace be to you; wiſhing them all happineſs and proſperity, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal. This ſhows our Lord did not diſapprove of civil ſalutations.

Ver. 6. And if the ſon of peace be there, &c.] If there be any elect perſon or perſons in the houſe, whom God has choſen to partake of peace by the blood of Chriſt, and the benefits ariſing from it; and of a conſcience-peace in their ſouls, upon the beſt foundation; and of eternal peace in the world to come tho' yet in a ſtate of nature; and which may be known by this ſign; your peace ſhall reſt upon it: the ſalutation, or wiſh of peace, ſhall be well taken, and gratefully received; and upon this you'll be kindly invited into the houſe, and uſed well by thoſe of the family; if not, it ſhall turn to you again: if there are no ſons of peace, no elect perſons there, your ſalutation, or wiſh of peace and proſperity to the family, will be deſpiſed and rejected, and will return to you without any good effect upon them.

Ver. 7. And in the ſame houſe remain, &c.] Where the ſons of peace are, and the peace reſts, and into which you are invited, and kindly received and uſed: eating and drinking ſuch things as they give; or rather, ſuch things as are with them, as the Vulgate Latin renders it; or of that which is theirs, as the Syriac verſion; all one, and with as much freedom, as if they were your own: the reaſon follows, for the labourer is worthy of his hire; what you eat and drink is your due; what you ought to have; your diet is a debt, and not a gratuity; ſee the note on Matt. x. 10. go not from houſe to houſe; as if fickle and unconſtant, as if not ſatisfied with your lodging and entertainment, and as ſeeking out for other and better, or as if burdenſome where they were; ſee the note on Matt. x. 11. The Jews have a proverb, expreſſing the inconvenience and expenſiveneſs, and the danger of moving from place to place: "he that goes, מבית לבית, from houſe to houſe, (loſes his) ſhirt (i. e. comes to diſtreſs and poverty) from place to place (his) life [e];" or he is in great danger of loſing his life.

Ver. 8. And into whatſoever city ye enter, &c.] Into whatſoever houſe in it ye go, and apply to for lodging and entertainment, and they receive you, readily and chearfully, eat ſuch things as are ſet before you; tho' ever ſo mean, accept of them, and don't object to them on that account, leſt it ſhould be thought you ſerve your own bellies, and ſeek to gratify your appetites; nor, on the other hand, don't think any thing too good for you, or that you are burdenſome and chargeable, but eat as if it were your own; nor aſk queſtions about the cleanneſs and uncleanneſs of it, or whether it has been tithed or not; but feed upon it without any ſcruple.

Ver. 9. And heal the ſick that are therein, &c.] Of all their bodily diſeaſes, which would not only ſhow their power, and warrant, their miſſion and commiſſion, but alſo their goodneſs and beneficence to men; and would be a ſufficient return for what they eat and drank: and ſay unto them; not only to the ſick that are healed, and thoſe in the houſe in which they were, but to all the inhabitants of the city; the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you: the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the kingdom of the Meſſiah, and even the Meſſiah himſelf, as might be concluded from the miracles they wrought; and thus by their miniſtry and works, were they to go before Chriſt, and prepare his way.

Ver. 10. But into whatſoever city ye enter, &c.] On the other hand Chriſt here directs how to behave towards other cities they ſhould come to, and be rejected: and they receive you not; refuſe to admit them into their houſes, or provide in any ſhape for them, nor hear their meſſage: go your ways out into the ſtreets of the ſame. The Ethiopic verſion reads, caſt the duſt off your feet into the ſtreets of it: and ſay; aloud, in the moſt public manner, in the ears of all the people, as follows.

Ver. 11. Even the very duſt of your city, which cleaveth on us, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, to our feet; and ſo in Beza's moſt ancient copy, and the Arabic and Perſic verſions read, which cleaves to our feet; which agrees with Matt. x. 14. Mark vi. 11. we do wipe againſt you; for a teſtimony againſt them, that they had been with them, and were rejected by them; ſee the notes on Matt. x. 14. Mark vi. 11. notwithſtanding be ye ſure of this; they might aſſure themſelves of this, and which will be an aggravation of their guilt, and increaſe their puniſhment another day: that the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you; was at their very doors, ſince the miniſters of it, of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, the harbingers of the Meſſiah, who were ſent to publiſh his Goſpel, to proclaim him as king, and declare that his kingdom was at hand, had been with them, and they had deſpiſed them.

Ver. 12. But I ſay unto you, &c.] The ſame that he ſaid to the twelve Apoſtles, when he ſent them out, Matt. x. 15. that it ſhall be more tolerable in that day for Sodom than for that city. By that day is meant, the famous day to come, the laſt day; the day of judgment, as it is expreſſed in Matthew; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads here, it ſhall be better in the day of judgment. Sodom was a very wicked city, and was deſtroyed by fire from heaven for its iniquity, and its inhabitants ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire: and there was alſo Gomorrha, a neighbouring city, guilty of the ſame crimes, and ſhared the ſame fate; and which is mentioned along with Sodom in Matthew; and is here read in the Perſic verſion. And the ſenſe of the whole is, that tho' the iniquities of Sodom and Gomorrha were very great, and their puniſhment very exemplary; yet, as there will be degrees of torment in hell, the caſe of ſuch a city, which has been favoured with the Goſpel, and has deſpiſed and rejected it, will be much worſe than the caſe of thoſe cities, which were devoured by fire from heaven; and than that of the inhabitants of them in the future judgment, and to all eternity; ſee the note on Matt. x. 15.

Ver. 13. Wo unto thee Chorazin, &c.] See the note on Matt. xi. 21. Wo unto thee Bethſaida; a city of Galilee, a fiſhing town, from whence it has its name, and was the native place of thoſe two fiſhermen, Peter and Andrew: very likely Chorazin was near it, ſince they are here, and in Matthew, mentioned together; and wo is pronounced upon them both for their impenitence and unbelief, which were attended with aggravating circumſtances: for if the mighty works had been done in Tyre and Sidon, which have been done in you; meaning both the miniſtry of the word by Chriſt, which was with power and authority, and the miracles of Chriſt, which were the works of almighty power, and ſhewed him to be the mighty God: theſe were not done in Tyre and Sidon, cities in Phœnicia; for tho' our Lord was on the borders of thoſe places, yet not in them, they being Gentile cities, to which he was not ſent, and in which he did not preach, nor do miracles; but he did both in Bethſaida and Chorazin, and they repented not of their ſins; nor did they embrace his doctrine, tho' confirmed by miracles; whereas, in all likelihood, humanly ſpeaking, had the inhabitants of Tyre and Sidon had the like advantages, they had a great while ago repented: they would have repented immediately, it would have been ſoon viſible in them, of which they would have given proof, by ſitting in ſackcloth and aſhes; which was an outward token of repentance, uſed by penitent ſinners, as by the Ninevites, and others. The ſame things are ſaid at another time, and on another occaſion, as here; ſee the notes on Matt. xi. 21, 22, 23, 24.

Ver. 14. But it ſhall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the judgment, &c.] Or in the day of judgment, as read the Syriac, Perſic, Ethiopic, and Gothic verſions; and as it is in Matt. xi. 22. than for you; the inhabitants of Chorazin and Bethſaida, who will be more ſeverely puniſhed than theſe Gentile cities; for by how much greater were their light, privileges, and advantages againſt which they ſinned, by ſo much will be their ſeverer puniſhment.

Ver. 15. And thou Capernaum, which art exalted to heaven, &c.] Referring either to the ſituation of it, which was on a very high hill; or to its privileges, thro' the miniſtry and miracles of Chriſt; or the phraſe may be expreſſive of the pride and loftineſs of the inhabitants of it, who were elated with the mercies they enjoyed, it being a moſt delightful, pleaſant, and comfortable place to live in, as its name ſignifies. It was a famous port, commodiouſly ſituated by the ſea of Tiberias; and, as Joſephus[f] ſays, was in an excellent temperament of the air, and watered with a moſt choice fountain, called by the ſame name. Shalt be thruſt down into hell; meaning either the low condition to which it was to be, and has been reduced in a temporal ſenſe, and continues in to this day; there being nothing of it now remaining, as travellers, who have been eye-witneſſes of it, ſay[g], but a few little houſes and cottages; or elſe the ſad and miſerable condition of the inhabitants of it hereafter: and ſo it is, that ſuch who have lived in great plenty and pleaſure in this life, and have thought themſelves to be the favourites of heaven, and that they ſhould enter there, ſhall be thruſt down to hell by the arm of vengeance, with the utmoſt indignation in God, and ſhame to themſelves: it follows in Matthew, for if the mighty works which have been done in thee, had been done in Sodom, it would have remained until this day; but I ſay unto you, it ſhall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom, in the day of judgment, than for thee.

Ver. 16. He that heareth you, heareth me, &c.] This is ſaid for the encouragement of the ſeventy diſciples, that tho' they would be rejected by ſome, they would be received by others, who would hear them, and embrace their doctrine, as if the Meſſiah himſelf had been among them; they looking upon them as perſonating him: and ſo Chriſt himſelf conſiders them as embaſſadors in his name, and as repreſenting his perſon, taking what is done to them, as done to himſelf; ſee the note on Matt. x. 40. and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me: every degree of contempt caſt upon them by words or actions, Chriſt looked upon as caſt on himſelf, and will reſent it another day, and puniſh for it. The deſpiſing of wiſe men, or doctors, and their diſciples or ſcholars, was accounted with the Jews a very heinous crime, and was ſeverely puniſhed both by excommunication and fines: for thus it is ſaid[h], "a great iniquity it is to deſpiſe the wiſe men, or to hate them. Jeruſalem was not deſtroyed until the diſciples of the wiſe men were deſpiſed in it, as it is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16. but they mocked the meſſengers of God, and deſpiſed his words, and miſuſed his prophets: as if he ſhould ſay, they deſpiſed thoſe that taught his words: and thus ſaith the law, if ye deſpiſe my ſtatutes; they that teach my ſtatutes ye will deſpiſe; and every one that deſpiſeth the wiſe men, hath no part in the world to come; and lo! this is included in that general rule, for he hath deſpiſed the word of the Lord. Altho' he that deſpiſeth the wiſe men hath no part in the world to come, if witneſſes come (and depoſe) that he hath deſpiſed them even in words, he is guilty of excommunication: and the Sanhedrim excommunicate him publickly, and fine him a pound of gold in every place, and give it to the wiſe men: and he that deſpiſeth a wiſe man by words, [h] Maimon. Hilch. Talmud Tora, c. 6. §. 11, 12.

“ even after his (the wiſe man's) death, the Sanhedrim excommunicate him; and they free him “ when he returns by repentance: but if the wiſe “ man is alive, they don't free him till he pleaſes.” And he that deſpiſeth me, deſpiſeth him that ſent me: this is ſaid to aggravate the ſin of the deſpiſers of Chriſt's miniſters, and to deter from it; ſince the contempt does not terminate in them, nor even in Chriſt, but reaches his Father alſo. The Ethiopic verſion adds, and he that heareth me, heareth him that ſent me: but is not ſupported by any copy, or any other verſion.

Ver. 17. And the ſeventy returned again, &c.] The Syriac verſion adds, whom he had ſent: theſe diſciples having received orders and inſtructions from Chriſt, went as he directed them; and when they had finiſhed their embaſſy, they returned again to him, and gave him an account of their journey and ſucceſs. The Vulgate Latin and Perſic verſions read here, the ſeventy-two, as they do in ver. 1. with joy; with great joy, as read the Syriac and Perſic verſions; notwithſtanding the difficulties that had attended them, the reproaches caſt upon them, the ill treatment they might have met with in ſome places, and the labours and fatigues of their journey, and the dangers they had been expoſed to: ſaying, Lord, even the devils are ſubject unto us thro' thy name: they found the miraculous power conferr'd on them was greater than they at firſt imagined, or could collect from what Chriſt ſaid to them, who only bid them heal the ſick, ver. 9. but when they came to make uſe of it, they found they had a power of caſting out devils; not in their own name and ſtrength, but in the name, and thro' the power, and by the authority of Chriſt; and this had thrown them into an extaſy of joy, and in a ſort of a rapture: they expreſs themſelves as men aſtoniſhed at the powers beſtowed on them.

Ver. 18. And he ſaid unto them, &c.] In order to abate their ſurprize, and reduce their tranſport of mind: I beheld ſatan as lightning fall from heaven; meaning, that this was no news to him, nor any ſurprizing event, that devils ſhould be caſt out of men, and be in a ſtate of ſubjection; for as he exiſted as the eternal Son of God before his incarnation, he was preſent, and ſaw him and his angels fall from heaven, from their firſt eſtate, their habitation of bliſs and glory, down to hell, upon their ſin and rebellion, as violently, ſwiftly, and ſuddenly, as the lightning falls from heaven to earth; and when he ſent out theſe his diſciples, as ſoon as they began their work, and all along in it, he, by his divine omniſcience, ſaw the powers of darkneſs falling before their miniſtry and miracles; and he alſo foreſaw how ſatan hereafter, in a more conſpicuous manner, would fall before the preaching of his Goſpel by his Apoſtles, not only in Judea, but eſpecially among the Gentiles, where he, the prince of this world, would be caſt down from his throne, and out of his kingdom; ſo that what they related, as it was what he knew before, it was but little in compariſon of what he himſelf had ſeen long ago, and of what he foreſaw would be; and even he would give them power to do other miraculous works beſides theſe.

Ver. 19. Behold, I give you power to tread on ſerpents and ſcorpions, &c.] Which may be literally underſtood, as in Mark xvi. 18. Acts xxviii. 3, 5. or figuratively of the devil, and his principalities and powers, and all his emiſſaries, who, for their craft and cunning, and for their poiſonous and hurtful nature and influence, may be compared to ſerpents and ſcorpions: and over all the power of the enemy; of mankind in general, and of the ſeed of the woman, Chriſt and his people in particular. Chriſt has a power over all his power, his whole poſſe of devils, even the power of the air, of which he is prince; and he communicated this power to his diſciples, even to the ſeventy: adding, and nothing ſhall, by any means, hurt you; not the moſt hurtful and poiſonous animals, nor the moſt malicious perſecutors on earth, nor all the devils in hell: as the former venemous creatures, when took up in their hands, ſhould not hurt their bodies; ſo the other, whatever they might be permitted to do with reſpect to their lives, and outward eſtate, ſhould never hurt their ſouls, and the eternal welfare of them; nor even hinder the work of God proſpering in their hands.

Ver. 20. Notwithſtanding in this rejoice not, &c.] That their power was enlarged, or that they had, the ſame as before: that the ſpirits, evil ſpirits, devils, are ſubject unto you; and come out of men at your command; rejoice not ſo much in this, or chiefly and principally; not but that it was matter of joy, both with reſpect to the gift beſtowed upon them, and the benefits men received by it, and the glory that was brought to Chriſt thro' it: but rather rejoice, becauſe your names are written in heaven; in the book of life, called the lamb's book of life, written from the foundation of the world; in divine predeſtination to everlaſting glory and happineſs: which ſhows that God's election to eternal life is of particular perſons, of perſons by name; that it is ſure, and certain, and immutable, being in oppoſition to what is written in earth, Jer. xvii. 13. that the knowledge of this may be attained to, thro' the grace of God, the revelation of Chriſt, and the witnneſſigs of his Spirit; and that this is matter of the greateſt joy, ſince it is the foundation and ſecurity of all the bleſſings of grace and glory.

Ver. 21. In that hour Jeſus rejoiced in ſpirit, &c] In his human ſoul: his heart was filled with joy, not ſo much at the ſucceſs of the ſeventy diſciples, and the ſubjection of the devils to them, as in the view he had of the ſpread of the Goſpel, and of the revelation and application of the truths of it to multitudes of mean and deſpicable perſons, while it was rejected by the wiſe and learned; and particularly at the ſovereign and diſtinguiſhing grace of God towards the elect, whoſe names are written in heaven; upon the mention of which his ſoul was ſo affected, that he broke out in an exulting ſtrain, into thankſgivings to God, in the following manner, and ſaid, I thank thee, O father, &c. ſee the notes on Matt. xi. 25, 26. in three ancient copies of Beza's, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions 'tis read, in the holy ſpirit; and the Perſic verſion reads, he ſpake, or confabulated with the holy ſpirit: but the former reading and ſenſe are beſt.

Ver. 22. All things are delivered to me of my father, &c.] In ſome ancient copies, and in the Syriac, Perſic, and Ethiopic verſions, before theſe words, are read, and turning to his diſciples he ſaid, all things, &c. and no man knoweth who the Son is; what is his name, his nature, his perfections and glory; and how he is the Son of God, his only-begotten Son: but the Father; who begat him, and whoſe own, and proper Son he is: and who the Father is; what are his perfections, purpoſes, grace, greatneſs, mind, and will: but the Son; who is of him, and lay in his boſom: and he to whom the Son will reveal him; in himſelf, by his Spirit; ſee the note on Matt. xi. 27.
